The existence of the partnership between them placed them in confidential relations toward each other, with respect to the property which was the subject of the agreement. Each occupied the position of a trustee to the other with regard to all the partnership transactions, including the transactions contemplated by the firm, and constituting the object or purpose for which the partnership was formed. When Willmon undertook to accomplish for the firm the purchase of lot 14, he was acting as agent and trustee of the plaintiff, and, in contemplation of law, the plaintiff was the beneficiary of that trust, with relation to his portion of the property. "In all matters connected with his trust, a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary." Civ. Code, § 2228. He cannot "use or deal with the trust property for his own profit, or for any other purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner." Civ. Code, § 2229. When Willmon succeeded in procuring the option to purchase lot 14, he was acting for the firm, and the right to purchase the property became trust property in his hands, or under his control. Under the principles above stated, he could not thereupon appropriate the trust property to his own use, nor deal with it otherwise than for the benefit of the partnership. The trust arising upon this transaction was not technically a resulting trust, and the decisions to the effect that a resulting trust does not arise unless the beneficiary has paid the price, or some other valuable consideration on the faith of the transaction, do not apply to the case. The trust imposed upon the defendant here is of the class known as "constructive trusts." It may be created in property, although the person sought to be charged as trustee bought and paid for it with his own means, as where a guardian buys directly from his ward, or an administrator purchases from an heir the property of the estate. In such cases the beneficiary of the constructive trust may tender to the defendant and offer to pay into court for the trustee whatever may be found just and equitable, and demand a reconveyance from the trustee, to be delivered on payment of the money. The fact of a previous tender or payment is usually important only to the determination of the question whether the plaintiff or the defendant shall recover costs. Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 282. At the time Willmon obtained this lot, the other property had been purchased and paid for by the firm, and the plaintiff had assisted in obtaining information about the ownership of the lot in question, and had paid the railroad fare for the trip of Willmon to find the person holding the option, and had otherwise contributed to that part of the proposed purchase. The relations were such that Willmon could not take the property without allowing the plaintiff to share therein according to the partnership agreement. It was gained by the violation of a trust. Civ. Code, § 2224; Rose v. Hayden, 35 Kan. 106, 10 Pac. 556, 57 Am. Rep. 145; Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y. 388; Manning v. Hayden, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,043.

Under the rules governing the consideration of evidence on a motion for nonsuit, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the plaintiff's case. The testimony of the plaintiff was to the effect that the parties decided to buy the whole of the property because of its frontage on the Bay of San Pedro and its supposed advantages for wharfage purposes, and lot 14 was necessary, as it enabled them "to control the situation there"; that they thereupon agreed to buy all the property for their joint use, and each should pay one-half the price; that they bought and paid for the other lots and had the title taken, as agreed, in the name of Lydia B. Shields; that there was some difficulty in finding the name of the owner of lot 14, but plaintiff ascertained it, and Willmon thereupon wrote to her at plaintiff's suggestion, and obtained an answer from her saying that she had given an option on it to some one in San Pedro, but not disclosing his name; that thereupon Willmon, at plaintiff's request, and at plaintiff's expense for railroad fare, made two trips to San Pedro for the purpose of finding the person holding the option; that upon the second trip he succeeded in finding the man, bought the property, paid for it with his own funds, took title thereto in his own name; and that he thereupon reported the fact to plaintiff, and declared that it was his own property, and that the plaintiff had no interest in that part of the transaction. Plaintiff thereupon "made it plain to Mr. Willmon that (he) wanted the property, and that (he) was ready to pay for it"; but Willmon told him he need not say anything more about it, that he was going to keep the property, and walked out of the office where the conversation took place. The conduct of the defendant above recited made it unnecessary for the plaintiff to go further and make a formal tender of one-half the purchase money in furtherance of his claim, as a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action to enforce his rights. It is claimed that the decision of the court below was justified by the testimony of the plaintiff on cross-examination. At the close of the cross-examination, as it appears in the record, the plaintiff testified as follows: "The defendant and I were not partners during any of these transactions, but during all of said time Mr. Sherwood was and still is my partner in the real estate business." It is evident that the plaintiff was here speaking of a general partnership, and not of the special agreement with regard to the property in controversy, and that this testimony was not contradictory of, or inconsistent with, his previous testimony as to the facts concerning the agreement between himself and Willmon. The fact that he had a general partner, with whom he was engaged in the real estate business, did not prevent him from entering into a particular partnership with Willmon relating to a particular lot, or lots, of land, to buy and sell the same for their joint benefit, or to engage in any other joint enterprise concerning such lands. The motion for a nonsuit should have been denied.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below for further proceedings.

FELLOWS v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 1,652.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 5, 1907.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—ACTIONS—SUPPLY TO PRIVATE CONSUMERS.

Const. art. 14, § 1, and Act March 12, 1885, pp. 95, 97, 98, c. 115, §§ 1, 8, 10, declare that the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental or distribution is a public use. Under sections 8 and 10 of such act, corporations or persons engaged in furnishing water to the inhabitants of any county which have appropriated water to that use (other than to the inhabitants of a city, or town, or city and county), are required to distribute such water at the rates fixed by the board of supervisors of the county or as fixed by the corporations or persons, and, upon tender of such rates and demand therefor by any inhabitant who is entitled to water from such system, such person or corporation must furnish the inhabitant with water to the extent of his reasonable share of the available supply. Held, that if the place of distribution and use is outside of any city or town or city and county, the statute applies to the system, though the supply may be obtained from a natural source situated within the limits of some city.

2. ABATEMENT—GROUNDS—IMPROPER JOINDER OF REMEDIES—WAIVER.

In a proceeding to enjoin defendants from cutting off plaintiff's water supply and to compel them to furnish water to certain other premises belonging to plaintiff, where the facts are sufficient to justify relief by injunction as to one lot and by writ of mandamus as to the other, and the proper parties defendant are before the court for both kinds of relief and the demurrer to the complaint is upon the sole ground that it does not state a cause of action and hence does not present the objection that there is a misjoinder of causes, the superior court has jurisdiction to give relief by injunction and mandamus.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Abatement and Revival, § 505.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—ACQUIREMENT OF WATERWORKS BY CITY.

Where a city purchases land and water rights previously reduced to private ownership, the property is not relieved from the burden upon it by virtue of the appropriation of the water to public use, to which it was subject at the time of the purchase.

4. SAME.

A city after acquiring a water system cannot discontinue its operation, cease to furnish water to the persons theretofore receiving and entitled to receive it, retain title, possession, control, and management of all the property, and allow the water previously devoted to the public use to run to waste, unless there are circumstances which absolve it from the duty to furnish water.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by William Fellows against the city of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hazard & Harpham, for appellant. W. B. Mathews and Herbert J. Goudge, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to enjoin the defendants from cutting off the water flowing in a certain pipe to the plaintiff's premises, and to compel the defendants to furnish water to certain other premises belonging to the plaintiff. The court below sustained a general demurrer to the complaint, and thereupon gave judgment in favor of the defendants, from which plaintiff appeals.

The facts upon which plaintiff relies are as follows: The city of Los Angeles was the owner of a tract of land inside the city limits near the east boundary thereof, and nearly two acres in extent, on which were flowing springs and which was permeated with water. In 1858 it sold and conveyed this land to one Elijah Moulton without reservation of any water rights. In 1887 Henry T. Hazard was the owner of about 200 acres of land outside of the city boundary, but adjacent thereto, which he had subdivided into blocks, lots and streets, known as "Hazard's East Side addition to the city of Los Angeles." Hazard agreed with certain other persons that he and they would incorporate a water company to buy the Moulton land and the waters thereof, construct a pumping plant thereon and a reservoir near by, and that they would pump and store said waters and lay pipes for and operate a water system for the distribution and sale of said water for public uses; that Hazard should superintend the work of construction and operation of said plant until it became profitable, and should furnish one-third of the money necessary to purchase the Moulton land, in consideration whereof it was further agreed between them that said corporation, when formed, would lay a pipe line from said reservoir or pumping station through said East Side addition, and would thereafter, by means thereof, furnish water from said system to purchasers of lots in said addition, at the regular rates to be fixed. In the year 1887 the corporation was formed under the name of the "East Side Spring Water Company," and it proceeded to purchase the Moulton land, construct the proposed water system, and lay the pipes to and through the said addition in certain streets thereof, and Hazard advanced from $12,000 to $15,000 to the corporation for that purpose and superintended the work of constructing and operating the water system, all in pursuance of the agreement aforesaid. It is not alleged that the $15,000 constituted one-third of the cost of the Moulton land. In 1888 the plaintiff purchased of Hazard lot 19 of block 20 of said East Side addition, built a residence thereon, in which he has ever since resided, and for which he requires water for domestic use. He has no other means of supply except by and through said water pipes. At the time he purchased the lot the East Side Spring Water Company, at his request, connected the lot with its pipe line, and thereafter furnished plaintiff with said water from said system. In 1892 a company known as the "Los Angeles City Water Company" became the owner of the entire capital stock of the East Side Spring Water Company, and was consequently in control of its action, but it did not technically acquire title to any of its property except as the owner of said capital stock. On February 3, 1902, the East Side Spring Water Company sold and conveyed to the city of Los Angeles all its property, including the pumping plant, reservoir, and pipe line aforesaid, and the city has ever since that time had the possession and management thereof. The East Side Spring Water Company thereupon dissolved and ceased to exist as a corporation. After the Los Angeles City Water Company obtained the capital stock of the other company, as aforesaid, and until the sale of the plant to the city by the other company in 1892, the Los Angeles City Water Company "furnished the plaintiff with water upon said lot," and since said sale of the plant the city has furnished it. It does not appear from the complaint whether the water furnished to the plaintiff's lot by the Los Angeles City Water Company, through said pipe, was water obtained from said Moulton land, or was from some other source; the allegation in that respect being in the ambiguous language above quoted. It is alleged that the water "in, on and flowing from" the Moulton land is now unused and going to waste, and that the said plant is lying idle and has not been used since the city came into possession of it, and, inferentially, that the city supplies water for said system from some other source than from the Moulton land. In 1900 the plaintiff purchased from Hazard lot 18 of block 20 in said East Side addition, upon which he now desires to build a house, and whch he desires to have connected with said water pipes for that purpose, in order to get water therefrom for the building operations.

Shortly before the complaint was filed, the plaintiff tendered to the city the legal charges for a water connection, offered to pay the established monthly rate in advance, and demanded that his said lot 18 of block 20 be connected with said pipe and be furnished with water by means thereof. The city refused to comply with said demand and refused to allow the plaintiff to make the connection himself. It also gave notice that it would cut off the supply of water for his residence on lot 19. It is alleged that it intends to and will, unless enjoined, cut off said supply, and that it claims that, because of the fact that said lots lie outside of the city, it is under no obligation to furnish water to them. It is alleged also that there is sufficient water available from the Moulton land to supply all the consumers of water along the pipe lines of the East Side Spring Water Company's system. It is to be observed that the Moulton land, and the reservoir in which the water therefrom was stored, were within the city limits, but that the East Side addition, including plaintiff's residence, was adjacent to, but outside, the city.

Under the provisions of the Constitution (article 14, § 1), and of sections 1, 8, and 10 of the act of March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, pp. 95, 97, 98, c. 115), the use to which the water obtained by the East Side Spring Water Company from the Moulton land was devoted was a public use, and its sale and distribution were subject to public control as in the act provided. Under sections 8 and 10 of the act corporations or persons engaged in furnishing water to the inhabitants of any county, which have appropriated water to that use (other than to the inhabitants of a city, or town, or city and county), are required to distribute such water at the rates fixed by the board of supervisors of the county, or as fixed by the corporation or person, and, upon tender of such rates and demand therefor by any inhabitant who is entitled to water from such system, such person or corporation is under an obligation and duty to supply such inhabitant with water to the extent of his reasonable share of the available supply belonging to the system. Hildreth v. Montecito Cr. W. Co., 139 Cal. 26, 72 Pac. 395; Merrill v. South Side I. Co., 112 Cal. 433, 44 Pac. 720; Price v. Riverside, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431.

The respondents claim that by reason of the language of section 10 of the act, this provision does not apply to the present case. The section declares that "every person, company, association and corporation, having in any county in the state (other than in any city, city and county, or town therein) appropriated waters for sale, rental, or distribution, to the inhabitants of such county," shall be obliged, upon tender and demand, to distribute the water as above stated. It is argued that this language imposes the duty only where the appropriation of the water is made elsewhere than in a city, city and county, or town, and that, as the Moulton land, from which this water was derived, was situated in the city, the water was appropriated within the city, and hence that the case falls within the exception. The statute quoted, when properly considered, is not to be thus interpreted. At the time it was enacted the Constitution had provided for the fixing of water rates in cities and towns, but there was no law providing for such control or regulation in the case of water supplied for public use in places outside of cities and towns. The act of 1885 was intended to supply this omission. In the first clause of the title it is designated as "An act to regulate and control the sale, rental and distribution of appropriated water in this state, other than in any city, city and county, or town therein." The entire act relates to water supplied outside of cities and towns. In section 8 there is a clause inclosed in parentheses in the same words as the exception inclosed in parentheses in the above quoted part of section 10, but it occurs at a part of the sentence which leaves no doubt that the purpose of the exception in section 8 was to confine its operation to the subject expressed in the title; that is to say, to water sold, rented, or distributed for public use outside of any city, town, or city and county. In section 10 the exception is so placed in the sentence as to render its meaning in this respect somewhat ambiguous. According to the rules of statutory construction the ambiguity must, if possible, be so construed as to put the section in which it occurs in harmony with the title of the act and with the other sections on the same branch of the subject. Thus interpreted, the meaning is clear; and there is no difficulty in the interpretation. Its effect is that the place of the "appropriation," mentioned in the part of the section quoted, is the place where the water is used, and not necessarily the place where the source of supply, the pumping plant and waterworks, or the diverting dam, may be situated. Consequently, if the place of distribution and use is outside of any city, town, or city and county, the provisions of sections 8 and 10 apply to the system, although the supply of water may be obtained from a natural source situated within the limits of some city. It is the settled doctrine of this state that a water company engaged in the administration of the public use of distributing water to the inhabitants of a community or neighborhood, whether inside or outside of a city or town, is not only under a duty and obligation to supply the water in proper proportion to the persons composing the class for which the use was created, but, further, that if such company, upon proper demand and tender of the established rates, refuses to furnish the water, or threatens to cut off the supply, a proceeding in mandamus may be maintained, or an injunction issued, to compel the service, or prevent the deprivation thereof. See cases last cited. The facts alleged show that the plaintiff belongs to the class of persons to whose use the water from the Moulton land was appropriated. The predecessor of the defendant had agreed to furnish the water to the tract of land subdivided into lots in which plaintiff's lots were situated, and had laid pipes and established the water system for that purpose and for the sale of the water to any others who might desire it. It is not necessary to hold that the agreement above mentioned established a private obligation to supply water to these particular persons. Aside from that the case shows that the East Side Spring Water Company was under obligation, as the administrator of a public use, to furnish the plaintiff's lots with water.

It is unnecessary to determine whether or not a mandatory injunction could be issued, under the equity powers of the court, to compel the continuous operation of a pumping plant, or the establishing of a connection to the lot No. 18 which had not been previously connected. The superior court has full jurisdiction to give any relief warranted by the facts alleged and within the scope of the prayer of the complaint, whether that relief be equitable, or legal, or relief appropriate only in a special proceeding. It has such jurisdiction in this case, even if the relief asked is, in a certain sense, multifarious as, for instance, in part by injunction and consequently equitable, and in part by mandate, and therefore authorized under a special proceeding in mandamus. The demurrer is upon the sole ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The facts are sufficient to justify relief by injunction as to one lot, with additional relief by writ of mandate as to the other, and the proper parties defendant are before the court for both kinds of relief. The objection that there is a misjoinder of causes, even if well taken, which we do not decide, is not made by the demurrer, and it is therefore for the purposes of the demurrer waived. Code Civ. Proc. § 434. Therefore, if a mandamus or injunction, or both, would give complete relief, it is within the power of the court to give it in this action.

We perceive no ground upon which the right to the injunction as to one lot, and to the mandamus as to the other, can be denied, unless it be by reason of the fact that the source of the water supply is in the city of Los Angeles and the premises to be supplied lie without its limits, or by reason of the fact that the city of Los Angeles is now in charge of the property devoted to the public use, or that the plant or system whereby this water was formerly distributed has been allowed to become idle and its operation discontinued.

So far as the East Side Spring Water Company and the Los Angeles City Water Company were concerned, there can be no reasonable doubt that the respective locations of the source of supply and the place of use, as stated, would be wholly immaterial. They were both, so far as appears, corporations organized under the laws of this state for the purpose of distributing water for public use. There is nothing to indicate that their powers or duties were limited to the administration of such public use within the city of Los Angeles. They each, in turn, undertook to supply, and did supply, the particular public use of which the plaintiff, as the owner of the described lots, was the beneficiary. If either of them had continued in charge of the use and continued the operation of the plant, and had cut off or refused to supply water to the plaintiff's lots, an appropriate action would lie in favor of the plaintiff for the proper relief. The fact that the water was obtained within the city, or even that it was taken from the Los Angeles river, which by the special dedication created by the Spanish law for the founding of pueblos was set apart for the exclusive use of the city of Los Angeles, would be no defense in their behalf to such an action, so long as they were able to obtain the water from that source for that use. If the city had prevented them from taking the water for such use, or if, without their fault, from any cause, their supply for such use had been cut off, or had failed, it would perhaps have been a defense; but not so with the mere fact of the different relative situations of the source of supply and the place of use.

The defendants claim exemption from the obligations and liabilities of their predecessors in interest on the ground that all the waters existing within the city of Los Angeles are dedicated to the exclusive use of the inhabitants of the city; that these waters are held by the city subject to the public trust of continuously distributing the same to such inhabitants in just proportion, and that the corresponding duty rests upon the city; that the city is not authorized to make concessions of the perpetual or exclusive use of any part of such waters to individuals, nor to communities outside the limits of the city; and that, whatever may have been the acts, obligations, and liabilities of the East Side Spring Water Company and the Los Angeles City Water Company, with respect to the waters of the Moulton land, while the city suffered these companies to take these waters and devote them to uses outside the city limits, the municipality itself, now that it has possession and control of them, is bound to hold them in accordance with the original trust upon which it received them and devote them only to the use of the urban inhabitants to whose use they were dedicated. In support of these contentions they cite Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 329, 10 Pac. 674; Vernon I. Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 247, 39 Pac. 762; and Feliz v. Los Angeles, 58 Cal. 73. They also cite the provisions of the city charter to the effect that the city shall not in any wise dispose of its rights in the waters of the Los Angeles river, nor grant or lease to any person or corporation any right or privilege to use or control the same, or any part thereof, for any purpose, public or private, nor, without the consent of the electors of the city, dispose of any other water or water rights owned by the city, except for the ordinary uses of the city and its inhabitants, as elsewhere defined in the charter.

It does not appear that the water of the Moulton land composed a part of, or was tributary to, the Los Angeles river. The respondents do not claim that it is, and, for the purposes of this case, we assume that it is not, and that, if it is impressed with a trust for the exclusive use of the inhabitants of the city at all, it is because it comes within the description of "fuentes—springs of water appropriated to the supply of a town" —which, as is stated in Vernon I. Co. v. Los Angeles, supra, were by the Spanish law considered as communal property. But this class of pueblo property, unlike the rivers, was subject to sale to private persons by the pueblo. The case just cited contains a full discussion of the Spanish and Mexican law upon the subject of pueblo property and rights. In the course of his opinion in that case, Justice Temple says with regard to this class of property—that is, public land used in common by the inhabitants for its waters, its wood, and its pastures—"I do not understand that these properties were commons in the common-law sense. They were communal property, subject to be administered by the pueblo authorities. The public could be dispossessed, and the character of the lands changed. They might be sold or converted into solares or suertes, which could be reduced to private ownership. They were not dedicated to the public." (Page 247 of 106 Cal., page 765 of 39 Pac.) Concerning the river, he proceeds to say in contradistinction: "Now the waters of all rivers were, under the Spanish and Mexican rule, public property, to be administered and distributed for the use of the inhabitants." And in the succeeding part of the opinion it is shown that the pueblo of Los Angeles was located near the river and its waters dedicated to the public use for the inhabitants of that pueblo. Of this the court takes judicial notice. Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 641, 57 Pac. 585. From the complaint it appears that the Moulton land was sold by the city nearly 50 years ago without reservation of any water or water right pertaining thereto, that some 20 years ago, and for several years thereafter, the water thereon, or a part of it, was devoted to public use outside the city, and that the city, after it again acquired the land, allowed the waters thereof to go to waste. This sufficiently shows, prima facie at least, that the water upon this land had been reduced to private ownership and was not owned by the city, nor subject to the public use as part of the public waters of the city, prior to and at the time of its purchase of the land and water system from the East Side Spring Water Company. Its purchase from that company did not free the property conveyed from the burden put upon it by virtue of the appropriation of the water to public use, to which it was then subject in the hands of that company. If it is claimed that this water is tributary to the river, or necessary to its support as a part of its underground supply, or that it has otherwise become free from the burden to which it was previously subject, the facts must be shown in defense. The charter of Los Angeles gives it power to acquire water and water rights, within or without the city, for the use of its inhabitants. St. 1889, pp. 457, 458, c. 1, § 2, subds. 7, 15. In the exercise of this power, it would have the right to buy from any corporation or person engaged in supplying water for public use outside the city any surplus water which such corporation or person might possess. If it were necessary in order to obtain such surplus, the city might, under this power, purchase the entire water supply of such person or corporation and the water plant or system used in connection with it, so that, after operating the system and supplying the persons entitled to use the water, it could devote the surplus to the use of the inhabitants of the city. Hewitt v. San Jacinto Irr. D., 124 Cal. 192, 56 Pac. 893. The acquirement of this water plant and the operation of the system, if necessary, was not beyond the power of the city, and for the purposes of this decision we must presume that the necessity existed.

The question thus presented is whether or not, under the circumstances of this case as presented in the complaint, the city, after thus acquiring this water system, can now discontinue its operation, cease to furnish the water, or any water, to the persons theretofore receiving and entitled to receive it from said system, retain title, possession, control, and management of all the property composing the system, and allow the water previously devoted to the public use to run to waste. It is clear that this cannot be allowed. If there are facts or circumstances which absolve it from the duty to continue the water service, they must be shown in defense. The water, as we have seen, was appropriated to a public use, of which plaintiff was and is a beneficiary. The city cannot thus continue to hold and control property so appropriated to public use and at the same time refuse to perform the public duty which such possession and control imposes.

We do not mean to say that a corporation engaged in the distribution of water to public uses may not abandon its property and quit the business, without being subject to mandatory proceedings to compel it to continue to carry it on. It may find it impossible to go on. Its supply may become exhausted or be insufficient for paramount needs; the rates fixed by law may be too small to enable it to operate at a profit, or without substantial loss; or, it may conclude, without reason which the law would consider sufficient, that it will not continue. In case of a natural person it might become physically impossible. We do not intend to declare that in any such case mandatory process would be issued to compel the personal performance of the duty. These questions are not now involved, and we express no opinion concerning them. But in such a case it cannot continue in absolute control of the water and waterworks appropriated to the public service. If a proper demand, by a person entitled, is made upon it for the continuance of the service, it must either comply or permit the use of the property and plant in previous use and necessary for the service by the demandant, or by the persons beneficially interested, to the end that he, or they, may continue to devote the property to the public service to which it is dedicated. If such permission has been given, or if the city is willing to make an effectual tender of such use in court, or if the service has become impossible from failure of the supply, or if a part only of the property is required for the administration of the service and the necessary part has been offered, or if any other lawful reason exists to excuse the city from continuing the performance of the water service, it will be necessary for it to state the facts in its answer by way of defense. Upon the face of the complaint the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction against the cutting off of the water from his residence lot, and to a writ of mandate to compel the city to connect the other lot with the pipes and supply it with water from said system, or to an injunction to prevent the city from interfering with his own reasonable efforts to establish such connection therewith.

The judgment is reversed.

HUNTINGTON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Cr. 353.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 28, 1907.)

1. HOMICIDE—TRIAL—VERDICT—OPERATION.

Where defendant was tried for the crime of murder and convicted of manslaughter, this amounted to an acquittal of the crime of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 682, 689; vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 394.]

2. Criminal Law—Former Jeopardy—New Trial.

Where an information charged the accused with the crime of murder, and he was convicted of manslaughter and on appeal a new trial was ordered, on the second trial he could only be tried upon the charge of manslaughter, since he had been acquitted of the charge of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 394; vol. 26, Homicide, § 689.]

3. Homicide — Manslaughter — Statutory Provisions.

Pen. Code, § 192, defines manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, first, voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; second, involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner or without due care and circumspection. Held, that the causing of death while attempting to commit a felony, to wit, an abortion, does not constitute manslaughter under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 89.]

4. Prohibition—Acts of Courts—Want of Jurisdiction—Criminal Proceedings.

Where an information charged the accused with murder, and he was convicted of manslaughter, and on appeal a new trial was ordered, the trial court has no jurisdiction to try accused for any other crime than that of manslaughter, and a writ of prohibition will lie to prevent his trial on the charge of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Prohibition, § 15.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Application by Ralph A. Huntington for a writ of prohibition against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and Honorable William P. Lawlor, judge thereof, to prohibit the superior court from proceeding with the trial of petitioner for the crime of murder. Respondents allowed 10 days in which to show cause why the writ should not be made peremptory, and in default thereof the writ to become absolute.

Peter F. Dunne and Robt. Ferral, for appellant. John O'Gara, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and Hon. William P. Lawlor, judge thereof, for the purpose of prohibiting the said superior court from proceeding with the trial of petitioner for the crime of murder. The facts as stated in the petition, and which must be taken as true for the purposes of this case, are substantially as follows:

In December, 1900, an information was filed in said superior court charging petitioner with the crime of murder, in having feloniously killed one Jennie McKown with malice aforethought on the 27th day of October, 1900. The defendant was tried before a jury in said superior court, and the trial resulted in a verdict finding petitioner guilty of manslaughter, upon which judgment was accordingly entered, and the defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin for the term of 10 years. Thereafter the case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and on the 3d day of January, 1903, that court rendered its decision, reversing the case and remanding it to the superior court for a new trial. People v. Huntington, 138 Cal. 261, 70 Pac. 284. In the opinion in said case the court said: "The opening statement of the district attorney to the jury was that the deceased was pregnant, and that appellant, while knowingly and intentionally attempting to produce an abortion, caused her death. Counsel for the appellant in his opening statement, denied that appellant knew deceased was pregnant, or had any intent to produce abortion, but was treating her for supposed disease, and that she died under a surgical operation, probably from the effect of an anæsthetic which had been administered. The issue thus presented was the only one suggested at the trial, and the evidence introduced was to the one or the other side of that issue; the only contention of the prosecution being that death occurred while the defendant was trying to produce the abortion. * * * Under the circumstances of the case at bar there should have been no instruction on the subject of manslaughter. The only question legitimately before the jury was whether the appellant had caused death while attempting to produce abortion. If that was the fact, he was guilty of murder, and there was no element of manslaughter present; but the jury, under the instruction, found him guilty of manslaughter, and he was therefore tried for one crime, and convicted of an entirely different crime." The remittitur duly issued from the Supreme Court, and was filed in the superior court and spread upon its minutes. Thereupon, in the regular course of proceedings, said cause was set for trial for Monday, the 4th day of March, 1907, in said department No. 11 of the superior court, before the Honorable William P. Lawlor. Upon calling the case for the second trial in the superior court the district attorney answered that he was ready to proceed with the trial, and then and there stated and announced that he would proceed under the information and try the defendant upon the charge of murder in the second degree; and upon his theory being so announced, and upon objection being made by the defendant, the court then and there announced, ruled, and determined that the former verdict of the jury in this case did not curtail the power and the jurisdiction of the court to subject petitioner to a second trial upon the information for murder in the second degree, the court holding that the effect of the former verdict was limited to the penalty only, and that the defendant could be tried for murder in the second degree, but, if convicted, could only be sentenced for the crime of manslaughter. The petition further states that the said Hon. William P. Lawlor "announced, ruled, and determined that this petitioner would and should be proceeded against on his said second trial under said information for the crime of murder by abortion as aforesaid, and that evidence of his guilt thereof would be admitted by this court; the jury would be instructed that the issue as to his guilt or innocence of said murder by abortion as aforesaid was triable and determinable by them; that, in the event that they should determine him to have been guilty of said offense, it would be their duty, by force of the former verdict in this case, to return a verdict of guilty of manslaughter." Is is further alleged in the petition that, by reason of the former verdict and judgment in this case, the defendant has been acquitted of the crime of murder either in the first degree or in the second degree, and that the court will exceed its jurisdiction and power in proceeding against this defendant, and trying him for the crime of murder. To the above petition the district attorney, on behalf of the respondents, has filed a demurrer, alleging that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute any ground for the issuance of the writ, and that it does not show want of jurisdiction, or excess of jurisdiction, in the superior court, and therefore the writ should not issue. While the case is thus presented upon the demurrer to the petition, it is evidently the intention of the parties to have the gist of the matter determined on the demurrer.

The theory of the prosecution in the former trial was that defendant was guilty of murder in the second degree by causing the death of deceased while he was feloniously performing the operation of abortion upon a pregnant woman. The effect of the former verdict of manslaughter was to acquit the defendant of the crime of murder. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376, 60 Am. Dec. 620; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 275; People v. Apgar, 35 Cal. 391; People v. Smith, 134 Cal. 454, 66 Pac. 669. We are therefore confronted with the proposition as to whether or not the superior court has jurisdiction to try the defendant for a crime of which he has been acquitted in that court and in the same proceeding. We apprehend that, if the crimes included in the information in this case had been charged separately—that if the law required it, and there had been three informations filed against defendant, one charging him with murder in the first degree, one with murder in the second degree, and one with manslaughter—the matter would not be contested by the district attorney. Or if defendant had been charged in three several counts in one information with murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, and manslaughter, and had been acquitted on the counts charging murder, and convicted on the count charging manslaughter, and a new trial granted, that no lawyer would contend that he could be again tried except on the charge of manslaughter. If the information charged manslaughter only, the court would have no power to try defendant for any other or different crime, whether it be murder, arson, larceny, or any other crime mentioned in the Penal Code. It is conceded that defendant cannot be convicted of any other crime than manslaughter under the law in the present status of the case. If he cannot be convicted of any other crime than manslaughter, he should not be tried for any other crime. Evidence should not be received of any other crime than the one under investigation. It is an old rule that the evidence should be confined to the point in issue. A man should not be tried for one crime and found guilty of another and different crime, unless the different crime is included in the charge for which he is being legally tried. Now in the charge of murder is included the lesser offense of manslaughter, and in a proper case, where the defendant is being tried for the crime of murder, a jury may find the lesser offense of manslaughter; but it does not follow that a defendant can be tried for the same murder of which he has been acquitted. The lesser offense is included in the greater, and may be by the jury carved out of the greater where the trial is legally conducted and for the greater offense; but we know of no case in which it has been held that the court could proceed to try a defendant for an offense of which he has been acquitted. If the contention of the respondents is correct, the evidence in this case might be such as to show beyond doubt that defendant is guilty of murder in the second degree, of which he has been acquitted, and that he is not guilty of manslaughter, but yet the jury may be told that they can find him guilty of manslaughter. He may be convicted of a crime which the evidence shows he did not commit, for the reason that the evidence shows he did commit another crime of which he has been acquitted. Such is not the law.

In People v. Apgar, supra, in which the Supreme Court were discussing the question as to the conviction of a lesser offense being an acquittal of a higher one, the court said: "Upon the principle of these cases the defendant is acquitted of the higher offense charged, and cannot be again tried for it, so that the case as to that offense is wholly ended. He was only convicted of the lower offense embraced in the indictment, and if the judgment were reversed he could only be tried for that offense." In the case of People v. Bennett, 114 Cal. 56, 45 Pac. 1013, which is relied upon by the respondents, the Chief Justice filed a dissenting opinion, in which the authorities are very fully and logically reviewed, and to which attention is called. The dissenting opinion is not reported in the California Reports, but is found in 50 Pacific Reporter, p. 704. The Chief Justice, in discussing the question that a defendant, having been convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, could not upon a new trial be tried for the higher offense of assault with intent to commit murder, said: "As an original proposition it would seem to be beyond dispute that a court of record and of superior jurisdiction ought to be held to know what the issue is which it has empaneled a jury to try, and that it is its duty to confine the trial to that issue. The only authority for a new trial is the order made in that very case for a new trial. When that order is limited, either in terms or in legal effect, to one issue, it seems absurd to say that the court must shut its eyes to its own order, and open the case for trial upon all the issues. If this view is correct—as I shall show that it is both upon principle and authority—it follows that there was not upon the second trial of this defendant any question of former jeopardy involved. He was only on trial for assault with a deadly weapon. The charge of assault for murder, of which he had been acquitted, was out of the case as much as if it never had been in the indictment, and so the jury should have been instructed. * * *" And in commenting upon People v. Gilmore, supra, the Chief Justice said: "An examination of the whole opinion and of the authorities cited in support of the conclusion reached shows that the language in which the questions for decision were stated was carefully and advisedly chosen; that the point decided was not that the plea of former acquittal should be accepted, and evidence allowed to go to the jury in support of it at the new trial which was ordered, but that the new trial must be confined to the charge of manslaughter." And the learned Chief Justice in conclusion states: "And from it are deduced the effect and consequence of an order for a new trial in such case, viz., that such order extends only to so much of the issue as is embraced in the charge of which there was a conviction." While the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice in the Bennett Case did not become the law of that case, the views and reasoning were afterwards adopted, and became the law, in People v. Smith, supra, where the opinion was delivered by the Chief Justice, and it was held that where defendant was charged with murder and convicted of manslaughter he was as thereby acquitted of the crime of murder, and, upon the conviction of manslaughter being reversed, he could only on the second trial be tried upon the charge of manslaughter, and was only entitled to 10 peremptory challenges, and not to 20, which he would have been allowed in a trial where the charge was murder. Attention is called to the many cases cited in this later opinion, and to the language of the Chief Justice, in which he said: "The information had, as above stated, originally charged the crime of murder, which, of course, included a charge of the lesser grade of homicide—manslaughter. But the verdict and judgment convicting the defendant of manslaughter was in legal effect an acquittal of the crime of murder, and eliminated that part of the charge from the information, leaving only the accusation of manslaughter pending; and, when a new trial was ordered by this court, it was only a new trial of the pending issue that was intended, and its only effect was to subject the defendant to a new trial on the charge of manslaughter." If the law as stated by the court, speaking through the Chief Justice, is correct, it is difficult to conceive upon what theory a defendant can be tried for a crime which has been eliminated from the information.

Reliance is placed upon the later case of People v. McFarland, 138 Cal. 481, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245, in which the opinion was delivered by Mr. Commissioner Chipman. There are some expressions in that opinion that, taken by themselves, are in conflict with what has here been said; but it will be noted in that case that the opinion commences by stating that the defendant pleaded "not guilty," a former acquittal of the offense of murder, and also that he had been once in jeopardy. The opinion further states that the circumstances show a conflict as to who was the aggressor, and the facts are divergent as to whether the deceased or the defendant fired the first shot. In such case it is very clear that the facts and circumstances connected with the homicide would have to be given in evidence, whether the defendant was charged with murder or manslaughter, which plainly distinguishes the case from the case at bar. In the case at bar the defendant, as stated in People v. Huntington, supra, which has become the law of this case, is charged with murder by reason of causing death while attempting to commit a felony, to wit, an abortion. We think that causing death in such manner would not come within the definition of manslaughter as contained in the Penal Code, § 192. Manslaughter is there defined to be the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and is divided into two kinds: First, voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; second, involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due care and circumspection. As the charge of murder in the second degree includes that of death caused by a defendant while committing or attempting to commit a felony, it does not necessarily include death caused in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act in an unlawful manner without due care or circumspection, or inflicted in a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. It was accordingly held in People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 Pac. 1017, that the lower court in the trial of the case, which was a charge of murder claimed to have been committed in performing an abortion, did not err in refusing to give an instruction to the effect that the jury could convict of manslaughter. The court by holding the refusal of the instruction not to be error in effect held that manslaughter was not included in the charge under consideration.

It is contended that the writ of prohibition will not lie because the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco has jurisdiction to try the defendant for the crime charged in the information. This is true as to the crime of manslaughter which is now charged in the information. As to that charge, and the evidence and the rulings to be made by the court, we cannot and will not interfere by the writ of prohibition; but the court has no jurisdiction to try the defendant for any other or different crime than that of manslaughter. In Hayne v. Justice's Court, 82 Cal. 284, 23 Pac. 125, 16 Am. St. Rep. 114, it was held that a writ of prohibition would lie to prevent the justice's court from proceeding to the trial of a cause against the express prohibition of a statute. The justice's court in that case had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter; but the statute provided that an order of adjudication in insolvency should stay proceedings in all actions pending in the justice's court. The court held that the prohibition of the statute extended to the justice's court, notwithstanding the fact that it had jurisdiction of the person and of the cause of action. The court said, in speaking of the statute: "This is a plain and direct prohibition against any further proceedings in the justice's court." Equally mandatory is the language in People v. Smith that the "only effect was to subject the defendant to a new trial on the charge of manslaughter." In North Bloomfield G. M. Co. v. Keyer, 58 Cal. 315, it was held that the writ of prohibition would lie to restrain a judge from proceeding in an action in which he is disqualified by reason of interest, although the court over which he presided had jurisdiction of the cause. The case was decided upon the theory that the judge, by reason of his interest, was prohibited by the statute from trying the case.

By analogy we conclude that the superior court is prohibited by reason of the law from trying the defendant for any other offense than that of manslaughter. It follows that the demurrer to the petition must be overruled, and it is so ordered.

The respondents will be allowed 10 days in which to show cause by answer why the writ should not be made peremptory, and in default of such answer on the part of the respondents the writ to become absolute.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

5 Cal. App. 296

KNIGHT v. COHEN et al. (Civ. 332.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 29, 1907.)

1. INJUNCTION—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION.

The purpose of a preliminary injunction is to preserve a subject in controversy in its then existing condition, and, without determining any question of right, merely to prevent a further perpetration of wrong, or the doing of an act whereby the right in controversy may be materially injured or endangered, until a full and deliberate investigation of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, § 302.]

2. SAME — DISSOLUTION — JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

Where defendant admitted the existence of a pipe line, the use of the water for irrigating purposes, and its necessity to plaintiff, but claimed that it existed under a license which had been revoked, and it appeared that the vacation of an order restraining defendants from removing the pipe or interfering with its use would be far more detrimental to plaintiff than the refusal of the vacation would be to defendant, the court properly refused to dissolve the restraining order before hearing the case on the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 347-359.]

3. SAME.

Where, subsequent to a temporary restraining order, an injunction is granted or refused, an order dissolving or discharging the restraining order is not necessary; the same falling with a denial of the motion for an injunction, or becoming merged in the latter, if granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Jesse Knight, trustee, against Emilie G. Cohen and another. From certain orders, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. J. Scrivner, Alfred H. Cohen (Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, of counsel), for appellants. Munson & Barclay, W. S. Wright, and Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. An appeal from four orders relating to applications for provisional injunctions made by both plaintiff and defendants, to wit: (1) From an order denying defendants' motion to dissolve a temporary restraining order issued on plaintiff's ex parte application; (2) from an order denying defendants' motion to discharge said restraining order; (3) from an order denying defendants' application for an injunction pendente lite; and (4) from an order granting plaintiff a preliminary injunction pendente lite.

Plaintiff is the owner of certain lands lying in Snover Canyon, immediately above and adjoining certain lands owned or claimed by defendants. In his verified complaint plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of and holds in trust for certain persons named said lands and a certain pipe line used in conducting waters from his said lands over and across the lands of defendants to the farming neighborhood in and about La Canada, there to be used by plaintiff and other beneficiaries of said trust and to be sold for irrigating purposes and domestic uses to the farmers and ranchers of that place; and that he has maintained said pipe line across defendants' land, adversely to them, for more than six years. That plaintiff and the other parties for whom he holds said land, pipe line, and water in trust own orange groves in and about La Canada, and the use of said water is essential to the proper care and growth of said orange groves and the maturing of the fruits thereof. That defendants threaten to and will, if not restrained, cut said pipe line and prevent the said waters from flowing through the same to the said orange groves, thus causing the destruction of the latter. On this verified complaint and an affidavit of plaintiff the superior court issued a temporary restraining order and an order to defendants to show cause why a preliminary injunction restraining them from interfering with plaintiff's said pipe line during the pendency of the litigation should not issue from said court. Prior to the hearing on the order to show cause, defendants filed and served a notice of motion to dissolve the said restraining order and to grant defendants an injunction pendente lite enjoining plaintiff from maintaining the pipe line across defendants' land or using the waters on plaintiff's land, which were being conducted through said pipe line, or entering upon defendants' land to repair or remove said pipe line therefrom. In support of these motions, defendants served and filed an answer and cross-complaint on behalf of said defendant Emilie G. Cohen. By the answer the ownership of the pipe line on defendants' land and the adverse maintenance thereof by plaintiff are denied, and it is averred that the carrying of said waters through said pipe line by plaintiff was by license and permission of defendants, which license and permission have been revoked. That the said waters are carried to nonriparian lands to the injury and detriment of defendants' riparian rights to the waters of said Snover Canyon. By her cross-complaint said defendant Emilie G. Cohen sets up an ownership of the waters of the spring upon plaintiff's land (being the waters conducted by him through his said pipe line) by virtue of a prior appropriation made while said lands were unoccupied lands of the United States government, and that the same are necessary for the irrigation of her agricultural lands and for her domestic use. That plaintiff acquires the said waters by diverting the same from the said spring by means of a tunnel projected into the formation underneath said spring. That plaintiff's said pipe line across defendants' land was constructed and maintained under a license and permission from said defendant and her predecessors in interest, and that on the 15th day of April, 1905, defendant revoked said license and notified plaintiff that he might remove said pipe line if removed before April 22, 1905. That plaintiff did not so remove said pipe line or cease to use such right of way across the lands of cross-complainant, but threatens to continue to maintain the pipe line and use the right of way without consent or permission of defendant. That the further maintenance of said pipe line by said plaintiff and his associates is highly detrimental and injurious to the riparian rights of the cross-complainant. An injunction is asked restraining plaintiff from maintaining the pipe line, carrying away the waters of the spring, or removing the pipe line from defendants' land. A number of affidavits accompany the answer and cross-complaint setting out cross-complainant's source of claim to said waters; and statements, proceedings, occurrences, and conditions tending to show that plaintiff never claimed any right to maintain said pipe line adverse to cross-complainant. Plaintiff answered said cross-complaint and filed certain affidavits contradictory of the material averments in the affidavits filed by defendants in support of their motion for a temporary injunction.

These matters and motions were all presented to the superior court at one hearing, the pleadings, affidavits and papers were read and submitted to the court, and the act of the court assigned as error is thus set out in the record: "Counsel for the defendants proceeded to argue said cause upon its merits, both as to the fact and the law of the case, and that, after defendants' counsel had proceeded at some length, the court interrupted counsel for the defendants in his said argument, and stated that, after the reading of said papers, it appeared to the court that it was not necessary or expedient that he should consider and determine the merits of the case, either as to the law or the fact, for that it appeared to him that the plaintiff would be damaged in a far greater degree by the granting of the motion to dissolve the restraining order, or by discharging the order to show cause, or by refusing to grant plaintiff's temporary injunction pendente lite, than the defendants would be if the motions of the defendants and the relief sought by them were granted," and thereupon made the ruling excepted to and appealed from.

That the course pursued by the superior court and the reasons assigned by it for its acts show a proper exercise of discretion does not require the citation of authority to sustain. Provisional remedies of all kinds are intended by the law to be used for the maintenance and preservation of the status of the property or person involved in the litigation, so that the judgment of the court when given or made may be effectually carried into execution. A preliminary injunction is no exception to the rule. It was not necessary for the court to decide the merits of the controversy in favor of the plaintiff to support its order granting him a preliminary injunction. Cases are not tried on their merits upon pleading and affidavits. A preliminary injunction is granted before a hearing on the merits has been had, and its purpose and sole object is to preserve the subject in controversy in its then existing condition, and, without determining any question of right, merely to prevent a further perpetration of wrong or the doing of any act whereby the right in controversy may be materially injured or endangered until a full and deliberate investigation of the case is afforded to the party. 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 345.

Here the defendant admits the existence of the pipe line, the use of the water, and its necessity to plaintiff, but says it all existed under her license, and that she has revoked this. Whether the right exists by adverse user or by permission is the question at issue, and its destruction preliminary to a hearing on the merits by regular trial in court would have been an abuse of discretion by the trial court. Therefore, the rulings of the trial court on the motions made should be affirmed. We do not by this ruling, however, desire to be understood as holding, even impliedly, that an appeal will lie from the order denying the motion to dissolve the temporary restraining order, or that the order which is designated as an order denying defendant's motion to discharge said restraining order is appealable. Neither of these are expressly made appealable by the Code. Upon the hearing of the order to show cause and the action of the court thereon, the restraining order ceased to have any effect. An order dissolving or discharging a restraining order in such a case is not necessary, and it falls with a denial of the motion for a preliminary injunction, or becomes merged in the latter, if granted. San Diego W. Co. v. Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 218, 35 Pac. 651.

Orders appealed from affirmed.

SARTHOU et al. v. REESE et al. (S. F. 4,723.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1907.)

APPEAL—STAY—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—JUDGMENT OF RESTITUTION.

Where, in an action of unlawful detainer, defendant by cross-bill sues for specific performance of a contract for a new lease, and decision is against him on the cross-bill as well as on the issues tendered by the original complaint, and there is judgment for immediate restitution, there can be no stay on appeal by defendant without direction therefor by the trial court; this being necessary under Code Civ. Proc. § 1176, on appeal from a judgment of restitution, and there being nothing to stay so far as any judgment on the cross-bill is concerned.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Marie Jeanne Sarthou and others against C. T. Reese and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant A. A. McCoy appealed, and he now petitions for supersedeas. Petition denied.

Samuel M. Shortridge and W. C. Sharpstein, for appellant. P. A. Bergerot and Edward Lander (S. A. Riley, of counsel), for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action of unlawful detainer after default in payment of rent. The appellant McCoy, in addition to denials of the matters alleged in the complaint, filed a cross-bill claiming affirmative relief upon equitable grounds. The decision was against him upon the matters alleged in his cross-complaint, as well as upon the issues tendered by the original complaint, and judgment was entered for immediate restitution of the demised premises. He has appealed from the judgment, but the judge of the superior court before whom the action was tried has refused to fix the amount of an undertaking to stay proceedings pending his appeal. He now applies to this court for such an order and for a supersedeas.

There can be no stay of proceedings upon an appeal from a judgment of restitution in an action of unlawful detainer unless the trial judge so directs. Code Civ. Proc. § 1176; Cluness v. Bowen, 135 Cal. 660, 67 Pac. 1048.

But appellant contends that this is not an appeal from a judgment of restitution in unlawful detainer, because the plaintiffs, without objection to his right to interpose an equitable defense by cross-complaint, joined issue upon the matters therein alleged, and thereby changed the nature of the action—changed it, that is to say, into an action in equity for the specific performance of a contract to make a new lease, in which a stay of proceedings pending appeal is a matter of right.

We do not find it necessary to decide the question whether defendant had a right to interpose the cross-complaint, or whether the plaintiff has waived the right to object at this stage of the proceedings that an equitable defense is inadmissible in this class of actions. Conceding that in unlawful detainer there is the same right to set up equitable defenses by cross-complaint as in ejectment, the fact remains that when the court has found against the defendant on the matters alleged in his cross-complaint, and in favor of the plaintiff on the issues tendered by his complaint, a judgment of restitution of the demised premises necessarily follows and execution of that judgment cannot be stayed without the consent of the trial judge. If it be said that there is also a judgment in the cross-action, and that as to that judgment a stay of proceedings pending appeal is matter of right, the answer is that so far as that judgment or that part of the judgment is concerned there is nothing to stay. By it the defendant has simply been denied the affirmative relief which he sought. The judgment may be erroneous, it may be reversed, and he may ultimately secure the relief which he prays, but until there is a judgment in his favor upon his cross-complaint there can be no process for its enforcement, and, when that time comes, it will be the plaintiff, and not he, that will be in need of a stay of proceedings.

In the meantime, the plaintiff having prevailed in her action in unlawful detainer, and the trial court having refused a stay of execution, this court cannot interfere.

Petition for supersedeas denied.

MARSTON v. KUHLAND. (Sac. 1,459.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1907.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE—EQUITABLE REMEDIES.

A life policy was made payable to insured's son, with the understanding, shown by writing signed by insured and son, that the son on collecting the insurance should pay a certain part of it to insured's daughter. Afterwards the insured and the son modified this by provision that $500 of the insurance directed to be paid the daughter should be paid the son, on condition of his erecting a monument. The son made payment to the daughter as directed by the modified instrument, and erected the monument. At the time of the payment, the daughter, knowing all the facts, acknowledged in writing receipt from the son in full of all demands all money due her on account of her father's life policy, and he stated to her: "Now, you and I are released in this and our business is ended." Held, that an action, commenced by her seven years thereafter, to recover the $500, on the ground that the original direction as to payment could not be modified without her written consent, was barred; the trust relation being ended by the writing given by the daughter and the statement made by the son at the time of payment, and any ordinary action founded on the former relation being barred, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 338, subds. 1, 4, and section 343, in at most four years thereafter.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Marston against Louis W. Kuhland. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. J. Hasman and Alexander & Church, for appellant. Frank R. Devlin and Mr. Goodwin, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant.

Plaintiff is the sister of the defendant, and the two are children of William Kuhland, now deceased. In his lifetime, and on or about February 18, 1892, the said William Kuhland procured several life insurance policies on his life to be issued and made payable to the son, Louis W., defendant herein. They were made payable to defendant, however, with the understanding that, upon the death of the father, defendant was to collect the amounts due on the policies and pay a certain named part thereof to the plaintiff herein, a certain part to a couple of grandchildren of the insured, and to retain the balance for himself; and on February 18, 1892, said father, William, and the son, defendant herein, executed a written instrument, in which the duties of defendant with respect to the policies, as above stated, were fully declared. Afterwards, on November 1, 1895, the father and son executed in writing a modification of said written instrument of February 18, 1892, in which the father recited that he had "made certain advances in money to my daughter, Mary Marston," and directed that $500 of the insurance money directed to be paid her by the first instrument should be paid to the defendant herein on condition that he should place a suitable monument on the grave of two deceased daughters. William Kuhland died on or about December 5, 1895. Thereafter the defendant collected the amounts due on said policies, and paid to plaintiff the part thereof given to her under the instrument of February, 1892, less the said $500 directed by said modification, and he erected the monuments mentioned therein, which cost about $500. Upon the payment of said money to plaintiff, she, on June 3, 1897, executed to defendant the following instrument in writing: "Received from L. W. Kuhland, in full of all demands, all moneys due me on account of life insurance policies of my father, William Kuhland." And plaintiff testified that at the time she executed that instrument her brother said: "Now, you and I are released in this, and our business is ended." Nothing more was done by either party touching the matter of the insurance money until seven years afterwards, when plaintiff brought this action to recover the $500 and interest, upon the theory that the original instrument of 1892 could not be legally modified without the written consent of plaintiff as beneficiary therein. She avers in her complaint that she did not discover the facts of the execution of said instrument of 1892 and its modifications until within a short time, less than three years, before the commencement of this action. The court found, however—and upon sufficient evidence to sustain the finding—that plaintiff "was present when said direction was given for said modification being made in writing, and consented to such modification and alteration relating to the amount of money to be paid her from said funds." The court also found that "it is not true that plaintiff never discovered the true facts in this case until on or about the 1st day of September, 1903; but immediately after the death of said William Kuhland, to wit, on or about the 5th day of December, 1895, defendant informed plaintiff, and plaintiff has ever since had full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances in connection with this trust."

Defendant pleaded, among other things, various sections of the statute of limitations, and particularly section 337, subdivisions 1 and 4 of section 338, and section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and this plea of the statute of limitations constituted a perfect defense to this action. The giving of the written instrument by plaintiff to defendant on June 3, 1897, and the statement then made by defendant, as above set forth, clearly ended the trust relation, and any ordinary action by plaintiff founded on the former relation was barred unless brought within at least four years thereafter. Of course, when there is a good cause of action founded upon a recent discovery of fraud or mistake, it may be brought within three years after such discovery; but in the case at bar the court found, upon sufficient evidence, that there was no such recent discovery of mistake, and that plaintiff knew all the facts of the case more than seven years before the commencement of this action.

The foregoing facts make it unnecessary to consider other points made by appellant; and certain exceptions taken by her to rulings of the court touching the admissibility of evidence are of no importance.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GATES v. GREEN et ux. (L. A. 1,739.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 5, 1907.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser—Enforcement of Lien.

Where the vendee in a contract for the sale of land secured payment of his note for the price by a chattel mortgage, in an action to compel performance of the contract, by requiring the vendee to pay the balance of the price, the vendee was entitled to have the security afforded by the mortgage exhausted before resort was had to his interest in the land.

2. Payment—Part Payment Pending Suit—Waiver of Cause of Action.

The fact that, pending the action, the vendor accepted certain payments on account from the vendee, did not amount to a waiver of the cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Payment, § 142.]

3. Vendor and Purchaser—Vendor's Lien—Enforcement—Judgment.

Where, in an action by a vendor to compel performance by requiring the vendee to pay the balance of the price, a judgment was entered for a sale of the property and application of the proceeds to the debt, the judgment was not erroneous, in that it did not allow a reasonable time before sale within which the vendee might perform.

4. Judgment—Conformity to Previous Proceedings.

Where, at the conclusion of the trial, the court announced orally that it would make certain provisions in the decision and judgment, the fact that the court failed to insert such provisions did not affect the correctness of the decision and judgment rendered.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by W. W. Gates against G. R. Green and wife. Appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

See 84 Pac. 37.

Will D. Gould and E. C. Oggel, for appellants. Flint & Barker, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The action is one brought by the vendor in an executory agreement for the sale of real estate, under which the vendee went into and continues in possession, to compel the performance of his contract by the vendee, by requiring him to pay the balance of the agreed purchase price. As a means to this end, foreclosure of a chattel mortgage given as a part of the transaction to secure the payment of a promissory note evidencing the indebtedness, and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the payment thereof, was sought, as was also a sale of the vendee's interest in the land under the contract, if necessary, and personal judgment was asked for any deficiency remaining after the application of the proceeds of sale. The trial court granted substantially this relief, finding the amount due under the contract on September 21, 1904, to be $3,310, and directing, for the payment of this amount with interest from that date at 7 per cent. per annum, costs, expenses, and attorney's fees: (1) The sale by the sheriff of the personal property covered by the chattel mortgage and the proper application of the proceeds; and (2) if any deficiency then remained, the sale by the sheriff of the interest of the vendee in the land, and the application of the proceeds so far as necessary; and (3) personal judgment for any deficiency remaining after such sales. It was further provided that any surplus of proceeds remaining after satisfying the claim, costs, etc., should be delivered to the vendee.

1. It is claimed by defendants that the action is one for specific performance, and, for the purposes of the decision, this may be conceded. See White v. Sage (Cal. Sup.) 87 Pac. 193. It is not contended that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in this behalf, or that the facts found by the court do not entitle plaintiff to have what is practically a decree of specific performance, unless the existence of the chattel mortgage given as security for the balance of the purchase price precludes any such action until separate and independent proceedings shall have first been had upon the chattel mortgage, and the security thereby afforded exhausted. This appears to be the main contention of plaintiff on this appeal. It may be conceded that the vendee was entitled to have the security afforded by the mortgage exhausted, before resort was had to his interest in the land, and this is fully accomplished by the judgment, which directs the sale of the land only in the event that the sale of the personal property does not bring enough to satisfy the claim. We can see no other merit in defendants' claim. The existence of the mortgage in no degree affected the right of the vendee to specific performance. It was purely ancillary to the contract of sale, standing simply as security for the performance of his contract by the vendee. In an action to compel such performance, it was entirely proper, and probably incumbent on the vendor, to have a foreclosure of this mortgage before resorting to the vendee's interest in the land, or other property owned by him. This, as we have seen, was had, and we are unable to understand the contention of defendants' counsel to the contrary.

2. It is claimed that, in ascertaining the amount due, the trial court failed to credit certain amounts paid by the vendee. A careful examination of the record in this regard shows that the evidence was entirely sufficient to sustain the conclusion as to the amount remaining due from the vendee.

3. It is urged that specific performance will not be decreed where it would produce hardship or injustice, but we see no place herein for the application of this rule. It was both alleged and found upon sufficient evidence that the defendants received an adequate consideration for the contract; that, as to them, it was just and reasonable; that their assent was not obtained by misrepresentation, concealment, or unfair practice of any party thereto, or by any promise of such party which has not been substantially fulfilled, nor given under the influence of mistake, misapprehension, or surprise; and that plaintiff has fully and fairly performed all of the conditions of said contract upon his part.

4. After the commencement of this action, the vendee made certain payments on account of the amount due, all of which were duly credited and taken into consideration in determining the balance due at the time of judgment. It is claimed that the acceptance of these payments operated as a waiver of the cause of action. It was alleged in the amended answer that these payments were made in part satisfaction, and the trial court found, upon sufficient evidence, that they were accepted by plaintiff without any agreement to waive his cause of action. In the absence of some agreement to that effect, the acceptance of these partial payments by plaintiff cannot be held to have constituted a waiver of any of his rights as to the balance still due.

5. Citing Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113, and Odd Fellows Sav. Bank v. Brander, 124 Cal. 255, 56 Pac. 1109, defendants claim that the judgment is erroneous, in that it did not allow a reasonable time before sale, within which they might perform their agreement and avoid a sale. Those, and other cases of like character to be found in our reports, were cases where it was sought simply to obtain a decree barring and foreclosing the right of the vendee to obtain a conveyance under his contract; no sale of the premises being sought or directed. In such cases, it is settled by our decisions that the judgment should fix a reasonable time within which the vendee may pay the balance due on the contract, before he is forever foreclosed of all right or interest in the hands, or to a conveyance thereof. Keller v. Lewis, supra. No reason for the application of any such rule is apparent in a case where the vendor is simply seeking to recover the money due under the contract, and in aid thereof obtains a judgment for a sale of the property upon which he has a lien for the unpaid purchase money. No case has been cited which holds this rule applicable under such circumstances, and we know of no principle that would justify its application.

6. At the conclusion of the trial, the trial court orally announced that it would make certain provisions in its decision and judgment thereafter to be given, and complaint is made that the court failed to insert such provisions in the written decision and judgment subsequently given. Obviously, the correctness of such decision and judgment can, in no degree, be made to depend upon such oral statements by the court as to its intention.

7. The allowance of attorney's fees was fully authorized by the express provisions relative thereto contained in the contract and in the chattel mortgage.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ZOBEL v. ZOBEL. (L. A. 1,737.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—OPENING — STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Where a defendant who was personally served with summons outside of the state appears by attorney prior to the rendition of judgment, he is not afterwards entitled to have the judgment set aside under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, which provides that, where summons has not been personally served on a defendant, the court may within one year after judgment set it aside and allow him to answer on the merits, since the purpose of the provision is to afford one who has only constructive notice an opportunity to defend upon the merits of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 253.]

2. APPEARANCE—PROCEEDINGS CONSTITUTING APPEARANCE.

Where defendant appeared by attorney and asked for a continuance of a motion by plaintiff to strike from the files pleadings of the defendant which had not been served on plaintiff's attorney, such appearance was equivalent to personal service, since the relief could only be asked on the theory that defendant was submitting to the general jurisdiction of the court.

4. SAME—ORAL MOTION.

The fact that a motion for a continuance is made orally does not affect the question of its constituting an appearance.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Leanna Zobel against Fred Zobel. From an order setting aside a judgment at default and permitting defendant to file an answer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. J. Mossholmes, for appellant. Mills & Hizar, M. B. Anderson, and Reese M. Ling, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order vacating a judgment entered upon default and granting defendant leave to answer.

The record shows that on May 28, 1904, plaintiff commenced an action in the superior court of San Diego county to quiet title to a lot of land in the city of San Diego. An affidavit and order for publication of summons were thereafter made and service of summons had on defendant by giving him a copy of the summons and complaint in Prescott, Ariz., on June 13, 1904. On June 24, 1904, defendant filed a general demurrer and answer to the complaint, but omitted to serve copies thereof upon counsel for plaintiff. Thereafter, on November 4, 1904, and upon 18 days' notice thereof served on defendant in Prescott, plaintiff moved the court to strike said demurrer and answer from the files, on the ground that no service of the same was made on plaintiff. When said motion came up for hearing, J. C. Hizar, Esq., one of the attorneys for defendant herein, appeared in court, and on behalf of defendant asked the trial court to postpone the hearing of said motion, which the court refused to do, but proceeded to hear the same and made an order striking such pleadings from the files. On the same day the default of defendant was entered, and on the 10th of November, 1904, the cause was brought on before the court for hearing and a decree rendered in favor of plaintiff. After the entry of the decree and on December 23, 1904, the defendant moved the court to set aside said decree on the ground that the summons in the action had not been personally served on him, and that he had a good and meritorious defense to the action. The answer, profert of which accompanied the motion, set up as such defense that he had a valid and subsisting lien upon the premises described in the complaint, consisting of the mortgage claim for $3,000. The court granted the motion and made an order setting aside and vacating the judgment and default, and allowing defendant to file the answer he presented on the motion. The validity of this order is the only question presented on this appeal.

It is provided by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure that, when for any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on a defendant, the court may, at any time within one year after the rendition of judgment, upon such terms as are just, set it aside and allow him to answer upon the merits of the original action. The obvious and sole purpose of this particular provision of section 473 is to afford one who has only constructive notice of a suit brought against him an opportunity within the time designated to invoke the benefit of the section and defend upon the merits. Where, however, at any time prior to the judgment, the defendant personally appears in the action, this, of course, establishes his personal knowledge of its pendency, and so removes him from the class to which the section affords relief. Now, the motion made by defendant was based solely upon the ground that present service of the summons had not been made upon him; that he had only constructive notice of the action brought against him. The discretion of the court was not invoked upon any other ground; no showing or suggestion that the judgment was taken against defendant through mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. He based his application solely on want of personal service, and the validity of the order is to be determined by considering whether the evidence sustained that claim. We are satisfied that it did not, because it appears from the record that the defendant, notwithstanding he was originally served outside of the state, personally appeared in the action prior to the rendition of judgment, and hence was not entitled to have the judgment set aside under the provision of the section upon which his application was based.

Without at all considering whether the filing of the demurrer and answer by defendant constituted personal appearance in the action by him which was unaffected by the order of court striking them from the files, still we think that when defendant appeared at the hearing of the motion to strike these pleadings out, and asked for a continuance of the hearing, it was a general personal appearance in the action under which the court acquired jurisdiction of the person of defendant as effectually as if he had been actually served within the state with a copy of the summons and complaint. Such appearance was equivalent to personal service. The general rule is that an appearance for any other purpose than to question the jurisdiction of the court is general. 2 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 632. It is difficult to perceive how the application of the defendant for a continuance of the hearing could operate other than as a personal appearance in the case. He was invoking the action of the court in his behalf, and that his application was unsuccessful was immaterial as far as his voluntary appearance therein was concerned. He could not consistently apply for the relief asked on any other theory than that he was submitting himself to the general jurisdiction of the court in the action. While the application made by him for a continuance was oral, this could not affect the question of its constituting an appearance. Had a written motion in that behalf been made based on affidavits, no question could possibly arise, but that it constituted a personal appearance in the action, and the fact that it was made orally only rendered the method of appearance different. It did not affect the fact that it was an appearance. We hardly think it necessary to cite authorities on this proposition. The general rule is laid down in Security, etc., Co. v. Boston, etc., 126 Cal. 422, 58 Pac. 942, 59 Pac. 296, where authorities are collated and discussed that "the principle to be extracted from the decisions on the subject is that, where the defendant appears and asks some relief which can only be granted on the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction, it is a submission to the jurisdiction of the court as completely as if he had been regularly served with process. * * * If a party wishes to insist upon the objection that he is not in court, he must keep out for all purposes except to make that objection. * * * If he appears and asks for any relief which could only be given to a party in a pending case, it is a general appearance." The rule that the appearance is general applies in all cases where some action or relief is applied for, and it is just as effectually made when the appearance is to make application for a continuance or postponement of some matter pending before the court as when invoking the action of the court in other matters concededly constituting an appearance. In Honeycutt v. Nyquist, 74 Pac. 90, 12 Wyo. 183, 109 Am. St. Rep. 975, it is said: "It has frequently been held, and we think it is the recognized rule, that a request for a continuance of a cause or an agreement to that effect either orally in open court or by a writing filed in the cause operates as a voluntary appearance."

We think, therefore, that when the defendant appeared and applied for a continuance of the hearing on the motion to strike out his pleadings it was a general voluntary personal appearance in the cause, and hence he was not entitled to apply to have the judgment entered against him set aside upon the ground that he had not been personally served with summons in the action. By personally appearing he lost any right which he might otherwise have had under the section had he not so appeared.

Under the circumstances the order setting aside the judgment was not warranted, and is reversed.

In re PLUMEL'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,616.)

1. Wills—Not Attested—Validity.

An unattested will is not admissible to probate.

2. Same—Holographic Will.

Under the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 1277, a will not entirely written, dated, and signed by the testator is not admissible to probate as a holographic will.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 341, 343.]

3. Same—Incorporation by Reference.

Where a will leaving property to the wife was unattested and invalid as a holographic will because not entirely written, dated, and signed by testator, but upon the back of the same sheet of paper there was a properly executed codicil providing that, in the event of his death and his wife's at the same time, the property should go to his sisters, the codicil incorporated the terms of the will by reference, and both documents were properly admitted to probate as testamentary acts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 234.]

4. Same—Evidence.

That a codicil is written upon the same piece of paper as a purported will, and that no other will is produced, may be considered as tending to identify the purported will as the one referred to by the codicil.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of J. F. Plumel, deceased. From an order admitting decedent's will to probate, certain heirs appeal. Affirmed.

C. A. Bergerot and W. I. Brobeck, for appellants. Bradley & McKinstry, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. J. F. Plumel, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, died on July 11, 1905, leaving an estate consisting of his separate property. His sole heirs at law were three sisters, the appellants here, and his widow, Annie Plumel, the respondent. Two instruments, written respectively on the obverse and reverse sides of a single sheet of paper, were offered for probate as the will and codicil of the decedent, and both were admitted to probate. From the order admitting the alleged will to probate, the sisters prosecute this appeal.

The will was dated January 12, 1904. By its terms, the residue of the estate, after certain bequests to the sisters and others, was given to the respondent, who is named as executrix. This instrument was not attested. It was entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the decedent, with the exception of the figures "190" in the date 1904. The figures "190" were printed. Upon the back of the same sheet of paper the codicil was written. It complied with the requirements of the law regarding holographic wills, being entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator, and read as follows: "Codicil. Jan. 14, 1904. In case of railway or steamship disaster in which both myself and wife should be killed, I will and bequeath all property real or personal to my sisters resident in France, share and share alike. J. F. Plumel." The will of January 12, 1904, being unattested and being invalid as a holographic will, because not entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator, was not, standing alone, entitled to be admitted to probate. Civ. Code, § 1277; Estate of Billings, 64 Cal. 427, 1 Pac. 701. But the contention of the respondent is that the codicil incorporated in itself the terms of the will, and that, on proof of the due execution of the codicil, both documents were properly admitted to probate as the testamentary act of the decedent. This position is not, as the appellants assume, based on section 1287 of the Civil Code, which provides that "the execution of a codicil, referring to a previous will, has the effect to republish the will as modified by the codicil." It is not necessary here to consider whether this section has any application to the facts of this case. Apart from its terms, it has long been settled that a will or codicil executed in accordance with the requirements of statute may, by an appropriate reference, incorporate within itself a document or paper not so executed. 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 578; Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 204, 228; Smart v. Prujean, 6 Id. 560; Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moore's P. C. 427; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369. In Estate of Willey, 128 Cal. 1, 60 Pac. 471, this court quoted with approval the following language from 1 Redfield on the Law of Wills, page *264: "The cases already referred to show very clearly that a will required to be witnessed by two or more persons, or executed with any other prescribed formalities, may nevertheless adopt an existing paper by reference. * * * This 'incorporation' of the paper referred to into the will so makes it a part of the instrument that no distinct proof of the paper is required, or even filing, in the probate court. The proof of the will sets up and establishes the paper, as a portion of itself, by proof of the reference to the consequent incorporation." And the court went on to say: "The principle is also substantially declared in the case of In re Soher, 78 Cal. 481, 21 Pac. 8. Of course, the reference must be certain, and to an instrument then in existence."

It is no doubt true, as is stated in the Willey Case, that in order to make out a case for the application of the doctrine of incorporation by reference, the paper referred to must not only be in existence at the time of the execution of the attested or properly executed paper, but that it must be referred to in the latter as an existent paper, so as to be capable of identification. But we think that in the present case there was a sufficient reference in the codicil to identify the will upon the obverse of the same sheet of paper as the instrument referred to. The later paper is designated by the testator as a "codicil" a term which in itself implies that it is an addition to or modification of some existing testamentary paper. "A codicil is some addition to or qualification of a last will and testament. A codicil is part of a will to which it is attached or referred, and both must be taken and construed together as one instrument." Proctor v. Clarke, 3 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 445, 448. By its very definition, the word "codicil" imports a reference to some prior paper as a will. And the fact that the codicil is written upon a sheet of paper containing a writing which purports to be testamentary in character is sufficient to justify the inference that such writing is the will referred to by the codicil.

In Jarman on Wills, *153, it is said: "It seems to have been considered, in the ecclesiastical courts at least, that the fact of the codicil being written on the same piece of paper as the prior will (though it does not in terms refer to such will) sufficiently indicates an intention to treat that as the subsisting will." In Hobart v. Hobart, 39 N. E. 581, 154 Ill. 610, 45 Am. St. Rep. 151, the court said: "Where the codicil is written on the same paper as the will, or clearly and unmistakably refers to the will, so as to preclude all doubt of its identity, proof of the codicil establishes the will without further proof, except such portions thereof as are revoked or altered by the codicil." In Goods of Heathcote, 6 P. D. 30, an invalid will was offered, together with a codicil upon the same sheet of paper, beginning with the words: "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me." There was no further or other reference to any will, and there was no later will than the one contained upon the same sheet of paper as the codicil. It was held that there was a sufficient reference to allow the will to be probated. In view of the meaning of the word "codicil," the language of the testatrix in the case just cited has no greater force as a reference to a prior will than has the single word "codicil" in the case at bar. In Harvy v. Chouteau, 14 Mo. 588, 55 Am. Dec. 120, where the paper incorporated was particularly described in the codicil, but not attached to it, the court said: "If the codicil had been attached by a wafer, * * * I presume there would have been no room for doubt. A list of decisions for more than 130 years sustains this point. What is the difference between this wafer annexation of a codicil, which may not mention the previous will, otherwise than by reciting that 'this is my codicil to my last will,' and the case before us?"

We are referred to no case holding that the fact that a codicil is physically attached to, or is written upon a paper containing a prior attempted testamentary disposition, is not to be considered as tending to establish that this prior writing is the one referred to in the codicil. It is urged that the reference must be certain so as to enable the identification of the paper sought to be incorporated without the aid of evidence outside of the codicil itself, and that parol evidence is required to show that the will and the codicil are written on the same sheet of paper. It is true that there is some language in Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011, which, taken literally, tends to sustain the view that the identification of the paper to be incorporated must be possible from the face of the will or codicil alone. In that case the reference in the will was merely to "two deeds" which were not described in any way. Any two deeds, whenever executed, would have satisfied the reference. It was held, and beyond question rightly, that parol evidence was not admissible to show that the testatrix had two particular deeds in mind. But it is to be remembered that no reference, however explicit on its face, can identify a separate paper without the production of evidence to show that the particular paper offered does correspond to the descriptive particulars named in the will. We think the correct rule was stated by this court in Re Shillaber, 74 Cal. 144, 15 Pac. 453, 5 Am. St. Rep. 433, quoting from Allen v. Maddock, supra: "A reference in a will may be in such terms as to exclude oral testimony as where it is to papers not yet written, or where the description is so vague as to be incapable of being applied to any instrument in particular; but the authorities seem clearly to establish that, where there is a reference to any written document, described as then existing in such terms that it is capable of being ascertained, parol evidence is admissible to ascertain it, and the only question is, whether the evidence is sufficient for the purpose." Similarly, in Brown v. Clark, supra, the Court of Appeals of New York said: "It is established by a long line of authorities that any testamentary document in existence at the execution of a will may, by reference, be incorporated into and become a part of the will, provided the reference in the will is distinct and clearly identifies, or renders capable of identification, by the aid of extrinsic proof, the document to which reference is made." See, also, Dickenson v. Stidolph, 11 C. B. (N. S.) 341.

As we have said, the use of the word "codicil" imports a reference to some already existing document, regarded by the testator as his will. To identify that instrument, and to interpret the reference as applying to it, the surrounding circumstances may be shown. We think there is nothing in the decision in Estate of Young which conflicts with the conclusion drawn from the authorities above cited—i. e., that the facts (1) that the codicil is written upon the same piece of paper as a writing purporting to be a will; and (2) that no other will is produced—may be considered as tending to identify the purported will as the one referred to.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

2. SAME — LACHES — ATTACK ON EXECUTION SALE.

Where corporate stock was sold under execution levy November 12th, the writ was not returned until February 18th, and the debtor did not learn of the levy and sale for several months thereafter, his ignorance being excusable, he was not estopped by laches July 23d to sue to vacate the sale.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by J. H. Odell against W. J. Cox. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Daly, E. W. Freeman, A. B. McCutchen, and A. D. McLaughlin, for appellant. H. T. Gordon and J. S. Chapman, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. On August 5, 1901, in an action for damages pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county, defendant, Cox, recovered judgment against plaintiff, Odell, for $480.65, and $103.35 costs. One John E. Daly was the attorney for Cox in the bringing of said action, and has ever since continued to act as attorney for Cox therein, although another attorney has been associated with him. A motion for a new trial was regularly made by Odell. On October 15, 1902, the motion for new trial was heard and ordered denied. On November 12, 1902, Odell served and filed his notice of appeal from said order, and on November 15, 1902, filed an undertaking on appeal and stay bond. In the meantime Daly, for Cox, had on October 24, 1902, caused a writ of execution to be issued on the judgment, which on October 27, 1902, was placed in the hands of the sheriff of Los Angeles county, with instructions from the attorneys of Cox to levy the same upon 15 shares of the corporate stock of the Glendora-Azusa Water Company and $2^3/_{10}$ shares of the corporate stock of the Azusa Valley Bank, belonging to Odell. The first mentioned of these corporations had its principal place of business in the town of Glendora, some 28 miles from the city of Los Angeles, and the place of business of the Azusa Valley Bank was in the town of Azusa, 25 miles from said city, neither of which places was in the township including such city. Odell, Cox, and Daly at the time of the levy all resided in the vicinity of the towns of Azusa and Glendora; Odell and Cox owning and residing upon adjoining tracts of land. The certificates evidencing the shares of stock owned by plaintiff were at such time and ever since have been in his possession. For a long time prior to such levy and ever since, this stock has had a market value of over $100 per share, being worth in the market $2,000. Daly was the secretary of the Glendora-Azusa Water Company, and a director and the attorney of the Azusa Valley Bank, and Cox was a director of the water company. The execution was levied in the manner prescribed by statute (section 542, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc.) by leaving copies of the writ with a notice of attachment with the secretary of the water company, Daly, and with the cashier of the bank. Daly, as secretary, of the water company, gave to the sheriff a written statement that he had under his control the 15 shares of stock of said company. The levy having been made, the sheriff gave notice on November 6, 1902, that he would sell the property on November 12, 1902, at public auction, at the Broadway entrance of the county courthouse in the city of Los Angeles. The only notice given was by posting notices at three of the doors of the said courthouse, the law providing that notice of sale in such cases shall be given by posting notice in three public places in the township or city where the sale is to take place, for not less than five nor more than ten days. Code Civ. Proc. subd. 2, § 692. Neither Daly, Cox, nor any one else ever notified or informed Odell of the levy or proposed sale, and he was entirely ignorant of any of the proceedings had until long after the sale. At the time fixed for the sale no one was present but the deputy sheriff who made the sale, Cox, and an attorney associated with Daly in the case. The sale was then made, Cox being the only bidder, and offering what he himself testified was a nominal sum only, $1 per share for the water company's stock and $5 per share for the bank stock, making a total of $26.50. The stock was thereupon sold to him for that amount, $14.66 was paid to the sheriff for his fees, etc., and the remainder credited on the judgment. The writ of execution was not returned by the sheriff until February 18, 1903. Odell did not learn of the proceedings until several months after the sale, and after investigating the matter consulted attorneys with reference to his remedy and employed them to proceed in the matter, and they on July 23, 1903, instituted this proceeding, which is an action to vacate said execution sale against Cox and the two corporations. In his complaint Odell declared his willingness to pay Cox the sum of $14.66 paid to the sheriff, and consented to the cancellation of the credit made on the judgment by reason of said sale, as a condition to the vacating of the same, and deposited with the clerk of the court the $14.66. No transfer of said stock has ever been made on the books of either of the corporations.

All the facts hereinbefore set forth were substantially alleged in the complaint, and either admitted by the evidence or found by the trial court, upon sufficient evidence, to be true. Plaintiff further alleged that the writ was issued and the levy and sale were made in the manner described with the intent to prevent all knowledge thereof on the part of Odell until after the sale, and that all of said things were intentionally concealed from Odell for the purpose of depriving him of his property for a mere nominal sum, but the trial court found against this allegation. Doubtless, the specific facts hereinbefore enumerated would have supported, if they did not compel, a contrary conclusion, but we deem it unnecessary to discuss this matter, as we are satisfied that such facts amply warranted the vacating of the sale, even if the actual intent to defraud did not exist to the extent alleged. The trial court gave judgment vacating the sale, enjoining the corporations from making any transfer of such stock upon their books under said sale, enjoining Cox from claiming any title to said stock under said sale, and directing the clerk of the court to pay to Cox the $14.66 deposited at the commencement of the action, and to cancel the credit of $11.84 upon the judgment in favor of Cox against Odell, made on account of said sale.

This is an appeal by Cox from said judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is apparent that the price for which the stock was sold was grossly inadequate. The amount bid, $26.50, when considered in connection with property having a cash value of $2,000 in the market, was a mere nominal sum, and the purchaser acquired this valuable property for practically nothing. It is true that it has been said over and over again by the courts that mere inadequacy of price is not a sufficient ground for refusing to confirm or vacating an execution sale. Although declarations to the contrary are to be found in some cases, this is the general rule, supported by the great weight of authority (see Freeman on Executions, §§ 304i and 309) and it has often been announced by this court, though never in a case of such glaring inadequacy as is here presented (see Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47, 65 Am. Dec. 475; Connick v. Hill, 127 Cal. 162, 59 Pac. 832; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf, 142 Cal. 303, 75 Pac. 902; Summerville v. March, 142 Cal. 558, 76 Pac. 388, 100 Am. St. Rep. 145; Lacy v. Gunn, 144 Cal. 511; Mayberry v. Whittier, 144 Cal. 322, 327, 78 Pac. 16; C. P. R. R. v. Creed, 70 Cal. 497, 11 Pac. 772). By the term "mere inadequacy of price" is meant simply an inequality in value between the subject-matter and the price. The effect of this rule is that where such inadequacy stands alone, unaccompanied by any unfairness or other inequitable incident, it will not authorize the vacating of the sale. But it is universally recognized that inadequacy of price is a circumstance of greater or less weight to be considered in connection with other circumstances impeaching the fairness of the transaction as a cause of vacating it, and that, where the inadequacy is palpable and great, very slight additional evidence of unfairness or irregularity is sufficient to authorize the granting of the relief sought. In fact, according to very respectable authority, inadequacy of price may be so gross as in itself to furnish satisfactory evidence of fraud or misconduct on the part of the officer or purchaser, and justify the vacating of the sale. Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 180, 6 Sup. Ct. 686, 29 L. Ed. 839; Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 927; Freeman on Executions, § 309. In the section last cited, Mr. Freeman also says: "Where the inadequacy is palpable, the purchaser can retain his advantage only by showing that the proceedings are free from fault or irregularity. If the inadequacy can be connected with or shown to result from any mistake, accident, surprise, misconduct, fraud, or irregularity, the sale will generally be vacated, unless the complainant was himself in fault, or the rights of innocent third parties have become dependent on the sale." Numerous cases are there cited in support of the text. In Griffam v. Burgess, supra, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that if, in addition to gross inadequacy, the purchaser has been guilty of any unfairness or has taken any undue advantage, or if the owner of the property or party interested in it has been for any reason misled or surprised, the sale will be regarded as fraudulent and void, and the party injured permitted to redeem; and said: "Great inadequacy requires only slight circumstances of unfairness in the conduct of the party benefited by the sale to raise the presumption of fraud." The same court in the later case of Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 334, 6 Sup. Ct. 512, 40 L. Ed. 721, after saying that courts are not slow to seize upon other circumstances impeaching the fairness of the transaction as a cause of vacating it, especially if the inadequacy be so gross as to shock the conscience, said: "If the sale has been attended by any irregularity, as if several lots had been * * * sold in such manner that their full value could not be realized; if bidders have been kept away; if any undue advantage has been taken to the prejudice of the owner of the property, or he has been lulled into a false security; or if the sale has been collusively or in any other manner conducted for the benefit of the purchaser, and the property has been sold at a greatly inadequate price—the sale may be set aside, and the owner may be permitted to redeem." (The italics are ours.) We think there can be no doubt under the authorities that where, in addition to gross inadequacy of price, the purchaser has, in the language of the United States Supreme Court, "been guilty of any unfairness or has taken any undue advantage," resulting in such gross inadequacy and consequent injury to the owner of the property, he will be deemed guilty of fraud warranting the interposition of a court of equity in favor of the owner who is himself without fault.

In the case at bar we have an absolute lack of knowledge on the part of the owner of the property of any levy or proposed sale. This lack of knowledge on his part was entirely excusable. Probably neither he nor his attorneys had any reason to anticipate, in view of his solvency and the appeal about to be taken, that an execution would be obtained to enforce the judgment. The manner of levy, while authorized by law, was such that the owner of the property could learn of the levy in time only from such information as might be given him by the officers of the respective corporations, or the notices of sale, or casually by some one who did know the fact. No one saw fit to enlighten the owner. It may be conceded, as contended by Cox, that the notices of sale were given in the manner required by the letter of the law.

It is not surprising, however, that they did not come to the knowledge of Odell, or, so far as appears, to any one else of those best acquainted with the property and its value, except Cox. No notice at all was posted in the town or neighborhood where all the parties lived, and where the corporations did their business and were thoroughly well known, but all were posted in a large city, at a point over 20 miles away from the legal situs of the property and the home of the parties. Again, it may be conceded that the sale of the property might, under the strict letter of the law, be had at such place, so far removed from the situs of the property, and the neighborhood of the parties and likely bidders. These circumstances, however, even if they do not warrant the inference of an intent to suppress, as far as the mere forms of law would permit, all notice to Odell of the proposed sale, furnish satisfactory reasons for his actual ignorance thereof.

We also have the judgment creditor taking advantage of the absence of the owner of the property, caused by his excusable ignorance of the levy and proposed sale, and the absence of other bidders, by attempting to finally take such property from the owner for what is and what he knows to be a mere nominal consideration. It must be borne in mind that in the case of such property as is here involved, there is no right of redemption in the owner, and the sale, if valid, effectually cuts off all his rights in regard thereto. It is urged in the brief of one of the counsel for Cox that it was not alleged in terms in the complaint that Cox knew the value of this stock, but the specific facts therein alleged in regard to the water stock were such as to clearly indicate such knowledge, so far as that particular stock was concerned. Cox in his testimony acknowledged that he bid a nominal sum only, and the trial court found very clearly and specifically as to his knowledge of the value of all the stock. We think there can be no doubt that this amounted to unfairness and the taking of an undue advantage on the part of Cox, and constituted sufficient ground, under the authorities, for the vacating of the sale, unless the plaintiff was guilty of laches in seeking this remedy. Under the circumstances appearing it devolved on Cox, if he proposed to purchase the stock at this practically secret sale, in the exercise of that degree of fairness which both law and common honesty required, to offer a price bearing some semblance to what he knew to be its value, or at least to refrain from taking it for what he knew to be practically nothing. Using the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Schroeder v. Young, supra, "it would be a reproach to a court of equity, if it could not lay hold of such a transaction as this is shown to be, and set aside a sale of property acquired under the forms of law and in defiance of natural rights." Upon the plea of laches, the finding in favor of plaintiff is sufficiently supported by the evidence.

Much of appellant's argument for reversal is based upon the assumption that there can be no question of fraud in the case, in view of the finding against the allegation of the complaint as to an intentional concealment by Cox and Daly of the proceedings for the sale on execution, for the purpose of obtaining the property for a mere nominal sum. This finding, however, although negativing the existence of the actual fraud alleged, did not entirely dispose of all questions of fraud. Other findings of fact, taken in connection with admitted allegations of the complaint, showed, as already indicated, unfairness and undue advantage constituting constructive fraud. See Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 922 et seq.

The complaint sufficiently stated a cause of action as against a general demurrer for want of facts.

HAIGHT v. HAIGHT. (Sac. 1,467.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1907.)

1. TRIAL — FINDINGS OF COURT — CONSTRUCTION.

Findings are to be liberally construed in support of the judgment, and all of the findings are to be considered together, and, if possible, reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on material points.

2. PARTNERSHIP—ACCOUNTING—FINDINGS.

In an action for a partnership accounting, a finding that there was a partial settlement as to a portion of the personal property was not in conflict with a finding that there was no settlement, made in answer to the question that, if there was a settlement of the partnership affairs and a division of the property, was one of the partners at the time afflicted with weakness of mind, it appearing from all the findings together that the question and finding in answer thereto referred only to a full and complete settlement.

3. SAME.

In an action for a partnership accounting, findings that certain conveyances by one partner to another were made solely for partnership purposes were not in conflict with findings, made in answer to questions as to whether any consideration or any adequate consideration was received, that there was "No adequate consideration," "No," and that the consideration, if any, "was grossly disproportionate to its real value," since, assuming that, if there was a consideration, that fact would be in conflict with the findings that the conveyances were solely for partnership purposes, yet the language of the findings would not warrant the inference of the fact of consideration for the purpose of creating a conflict.

4. SAME.

In an action for partnership accounting, findings, in answer to questions whether one partner was afflicted with "great or any weakness of mind," etc., "Yes," and "Yes, to some extent," were not in conflict with a finding that a partial settlement was made of the partnership affairs; the fact that there was some slight weakness of mind not precluding a valid settlement.

5. SAME.

In an action for a partnership accounting a finding of "No," in answer to the question whether one of the partners "at his death" owned any real estate in his own right, and, if he did, to state what improvements were placed thereon and paid for with partnership funds, and whether the same were repaid, was not in conflict with a finding that at a previous date such partner erected a house on a tract of land owned by him at an expense of about $1,500, which was paid for with partnership funds; nor, assuming that it was material, was there any conflict with the further findings that this money was never directly repaid, but that this property had an annual value of at least $150, and had been used for more than 10 years both for the family of such partner and the benefit of the partnership.

6. SAME—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Where, in an action for a partnership accounting, while it was claimed that conveyances made by one partner to another were solely for partnership purposes, it was sought simply not to set the conveyances aside, but to have the property subjected to the purposes for which it was so conveyed, the rule relative to the restoration of the consideration of a conveyance sought to be set aside was inapplicable.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action by George E. Haight as administrator of the estate of Cornelius Haight, deceased, against Charles Haight. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. S. Taylor and G. A. Teblee, for appellant. Gillis & Tapscott, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action for an accounting of the affairs of an alleged partnership existing between plaintiff intestate and defendant.

The allegations of the complaint were substantially as follows: The deceased and defendant were at the time of the death of deceased, January 2, 1902, partners in the business of farming and stock raising, and had been such for 30 years next preceding such death. Defendant kept the partnership accounts and handled the partnership funds. They acquired as such partners both real and personal property, the legal title thereto standing, however, in the name of either one or the other of the partners for long periods of time, until, finally, by deeds dated February 15, 1901, and March 23, 1901, deceased, for the better management and control of the partnership affairs, conveyed to defendant the legal title of all his undivided one-half of certain of the real property. On October 14, 1901, he conveyed to defendant his undivided one-half of some 848 acres of land, upon the representation of defendant that it was necessary for him to have such title in order to make suitable arrangements to pay the indebtedness of the firm. No settlement of the partnership affairs was ever had, and at the time of the death of deceased all the land described in the complaint was in the name of defendant on the records, and this, with certain personal property, also described in the complaint, constituted the property of such partnership. The claim of defendant, as asserted by his answer, was substantially that, while there had been a partnership, it had been finally dissolved by mutual agreement on October 14, 1901, at which time there had been a full settlement between the partners, and a delivery to each of the property belonging to him; that the property conveyed to defendant by the deeds of February 15 and March 23, 1901, was conveyed in exchange for certain real estate conveyed to deceased by defendant, and that the deed of October 14, 1901, was made in the settlement of the partnership affairs and upon a consideration; that all of the real and personal property described in the complaint was at the time of the death of deceased his own property. The findings and decree were in favor of plaintiff upon these matters. The decree adjudges the partnership to be the owner of all said property, and the plaintiff as the representative of the deceased to be entitled to a full accounting from defendant, and requires defendant to so account, and further directs that he render and file within 30 days an itemized statement of the partnership transactions, and that upon the final settlement thereof the balance remaining on hand shall be divided equally between plaintiff and defendant. Defendant has appealed from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The trial court called in an advisory jury, and submitted to it certain issues of fact for determination; the questions submitted to the jury numbering 25. The court adopted as its own the findings of the jury upon the questions submitted, making also certain additional findings of its own.

It is contended that the findings are inconsistent in several particulars. In considering this claim, we must continually bear in mind the well-settled rule that the findings are to be liberally construed in support of a judgment; that all of the findings are to be read and considered together, and, if possible, are to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on material points, and that, unless the conflict is clear and the findings incapable of being harmoniously construed, a judgment will not be reversed on the ground of a conflict in the findings. See Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 395, 35 Pac. 1005; Murray v. Tulare Irr. Co., 120 Cal. 311, 315, 49 Pac. 563, 52 Pac. 586; People's Home Sav. Bank v. Rickard, 139 Cal. 285, 291, 73 Pac. 858; Mitchell v. Hutchinson, 142 Cal. 404, 409, 76 Pac. 55; Heaton, etc., v. Arper, 145 Cal. 282, 285, 78 Pac. 721.

The jury explicitly found, in response to four questions, that the only settlement between the partners was on October 14, 1901, and that such settlement was only a partial settlement, and covered only a portion of the personal property, and that at this settlement the personal property affected thereby was divided between the partners and the respective portions assigned to the partners delivered to them. In answer to the final question submitted to it, which was substantially, if you find that there was a settlement of partnership affairs, and a division of the partnership, was Cornelius Haight at such time afflicted with weakness of mind, etc., the jury answered: "We find there was no settlement." It is urged that this answer is inconsistent with the others before noted. It is clearly apparent, taking all the findings together, that the last question and answer had reference solely to the full and complete settlement alleged in the answer, and, under these circumstances, there is no inconsistency whatever.

In answer to certain other questions the jury found that the real property conveyed to defendant by the deeds of February 15 and March 23, 1901, was so conveyed for the purpose of enabling defendant to manage the affairs of the partnership and to be used as partnership property, and that it was not conveyed to him for his sole use or benefit, or in exchange for real estate conveyed to Cornelius by defendant, and that the property conveyed by the deed of October 14, 1901, was intended to be used as partnership property at all times until a final settlement should be had. It further explicitly found that, at the time of death of Cornelius, all of the property described in the complaint, both real and personal, was owned by the partnership. In answer to certain other questions asked as to whether Cornelius received any consideration, or any consideration proportionate to its value, for any of the property so conveyed to defendant, the jury answered, "No adequate consideration," "No," and the consideration, if any, "was grossly disproportionate to its real value." It is urged that this presents a material conflict. It is apparent that the latter questions and answers were material only in the event that it was found that the allegations of the complaint as to the property being transferred to defendant solely as partnership property for partnership purposes were not sustained. As suggested by learned counsel for defendant, if those allegations were true, there was no room for any question as to consideration. The findings upon the questions as to the purposes and objects of the conveyances are clear and explicit in support of the allegations of the complaint, and fully cover the issues in that behalf. There is nothing in the other findings referred to that necessarily conflicts with these findings. There is no finding in terms of any consideration moving from defendant to Cornelius for any of these conveyances, and such a conclusion is not necessarily inferable from the findings made. Assuming that, if there was a consideration moving from defendant to Cornelius for the making of these conveyances, that fact would be in conflict with the other findings as to the objects and purposes of such conveyances, we would not be warranted in drawing an inference of the fact of consideration from the language of the findings for the purpose of creating a conflict. See Paine v. San Bernardino, etc., 143 Cal. 654, 656, 77 Pac. 659. It is, however, entirely consistent with the fact of a transfer of property to the partnership solely for partnership purposes that a consideration should have been given to the grantor by the other partner or partners.

Certain answers of the jury, adopted as findings, relate to the mental condition of Cornelius on February 15, 1901, March 23, 1901, and October 14, 1901, the question in each case being as to whether he was afflicted with "great or any weakness of mind either from old age, sickness, disease, use of morphine, or other cause or causes," and the answer was in one case, "Yes," and in the others, "Yes, to some extent." There is absolutely nothing in this that is in conflict with any other finding. It is suggested that the finding of a partial settlement on October 14, 1901, is in conflict with these answers, but, of course, the mere fact that there was some slight weakness of mind on the part of Cornelius, which is all that the answers show, would not preclude a valid settlement. The jury was asked to state whether Cornelius, at the time of his death, owned any real estate in his individual right, and, if he did, to state what improvements, if any, were placed thereon and paid for from the funds of the partnership, and, if so, whether the same were repaid or refunded. The answer was simply "No," being evidently to the first part of the question, viz., as to whether Cornelius owned any property in his individual right at the time of his death, January 2, 1902. The court, in its additional findings, found that in 1890 Cornelius had erected a dwelling house upon a tract of land of 30 acres owned by him in his individual right at an expense of about $1,500, which was paid from partnership funds, and had never been directly repaid, but that this separate property had an annual value of at least $150, and had been used for more than 10 years both for the support of his family and the benefit of the partnership. There is no conflict between the answer of the jury and the additional finding of the court, the answer of the jury having reference solely to the question of ownership at the time of the death of Cornelius in 1902. Nor, assuming that the matter is at all material, do we see any conflict in the additional findings of the court as to the purposes for which the income of this property was used.

In view of the claim made by the complaint and upheld by the findings that the conveyances were made solely for the better management of the partnership affairs, and for partnership purposes, and that the property was at all times thereafter purely partnership property, we fail to perceive the applicability of the rule relative to the necessity of restoring or offering to restore whatever of value one has received for a conveyance, before relief against a conveyance made by reason of fraud, mistake, etc., will be allowed. This is not an action to set aside a conveyance. Plaintiff is acquiescing in the conveyances made, seeking simply to have the property, thus put for the sake of convenience in the name of one of the partners, subjected to the uses and purposes for which it was so placed.

As we have seen, it is not the effect of the findings that there was a consideration moving from defendant to Cornelius for any of the conveyances thus made, and, in view of the issues and findings upon the questions as to the sole objects and purposes of these conveyances, we deem the allegation as to want of consideration contained in the complaint immaterial and superfluous. The findings are in all material respects sufficient to cover the allegations of the answer upon the subject of the purposes of the conveyances.

Upon the record before us, we see no ground for interfering with the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

151 Cal. 83

SHORT v. FRINK. (Sac. 1,419.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1907.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — ACTION FOR MALPRACTICE—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

In an action for malpractice, it appeared that defendant had been discharged by plaintiff and another physician called. The second physician did not continue in charge of the case, but his deposition was taken for the plaintiff, and, in response to a question as to why he did not call again, answered that defendant had told the witness that he (defendant) had not been discharged from the case, and had not received payment for his services. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible.

2. APPEAL—PRESERVING QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW—SCOPE OF OBJECTIONS—GENERAL OBJECTIONS.

A general objection to a question, on the ground that it is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, is sufficient to preserve the question for review, if the question is objectionable from every standpoint, and if on its face there appears no purpose for which the evidence asked could be admissible.

3. SAME—NECESSITY OF MOTION TO STRIKE.

The rule that a motion to strike out is essential to preserve the right to complain of a ruling admitting an answer to a question, over a general objection, is applicable only when it is not apparent from the question alone that the answer thereto will not be admissible, and the inadmissibility is disclosed for the first time by the answer itself.

4. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR—OBJECTION SUBSEQUENTLY REMOVED.

Where evidence had been improperly admitted, over defendant's objection, the error was not cured by defendant giving testimony materially differing therefrom on the same matter, purely in self-defense to meet and explain the objectionable evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4173.]

5. SAME—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT OF EVIDENCE IN GENERAL.

Where the tendency of evidence was to prejudicially affect defendant, by placing him in an unfavorable light, it will be presumed to have that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4038.]

6. SAME—PRESERVING QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW — OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE — NECESSITY OF SPECIFIC OBJECTION.

If the objection to a question in a deposition which is susceptible of a proper answer is based on the answer given and recorded, the objector must frame his objection so as to specifically call the matter to the attention of the court, or he cannot take advantage of the ruling on appeal, since the court is no more called upon to heed a mere general objection to testimony read from a deposition than when the witness is testifying viva voce.

7. SAME — METHOD OF SAVING EXCEPTION AFTER ANSWER IS READ.

Where a general objection to a question in a deposition susceptible of an answer that may be properly given in evidence has been overruled, the objector's only remedy, after the answer is read, is a motion to strike out, and, in the absence of such motion, the question will not be considered on appeal, since, in the absence of actual knowledge, specific objection, or intimation to the contrary, a trial court has the right to assume that a question in a deposition susceptible of an answer properly admissible in evidence has been so answered.

8. DEPOSITIONS — REQUISITES OF CERTIFICATE —MATTERS CERTIFIED—CORRECTION BY WITNESS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032, providing that a deposition when completed must be read to the witness and corrected by him in any particular, if desired, and then signed by the witness and certified by the officer, a certificate of a notary to depositions, stating that the testimony was read over to the witness, "and being by him corrected, and was by him subscribed in my presence," is sufficient, if not otherwise objectionable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Depositions, §§ 166, 167.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Charles M. Head, Judge.

Action by B. J. Short against George K. Frink. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Goodfellow & Eells, Sweeny & Tillotson, and Braynard & Shanahan, for appellant. Walter E. Herzinger, Bush & Perry, and Reid, Dozier & Carr, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant, a physician and surgeon, from a judgment for $8,000 given in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to recover damages for alleged malpractice. The only matters presented for our consideration on this appeal are certain rulings of the trial court in the admission of evidence.

Plaintiff sustained a compound fracture of the tibia bone of his right leg on December 8, 1901. Defendant was immediately employed to treat plaintiff for this injury, and continued to attend him until December 31, 1901, when plaintiff became dissatisfied with him, and, having called in Dr. Bradshaw, discharged defendant, without, however, paying him for his services. Some days later, Dr. Pratt was called in, and he continued to attend plaintiff for some 15 months. On plaintiff's cross-examination, he was asked how many days he was without a doctor after Dr. Frink left, and said "something like six or seven days." The deposition of Dr. Bradshaw was taken without the attendance of any one on the part of the defendant. All the testimony given was elicited by questions asked by plaintiff's attorneys. It showed the results of his examination of the wound on December 31, 1901, and his opinion as to the treatment plaintiff had received. It also showed that he did what he could with the implements at hand to properly care for and relieve his suffering, and that he left with the intention of returning the following day. He stated, in reply to a question of plaintiff's attorney, that he did not again call on plaintiff. He was then asked: "Why did you not return or go back to see the plaintiff the following day?" When the deposition was read on the trial, defendant objected to this question, on the ground "that the same was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and not responsive to any issue in the case." The objection was overruled. The plaintiff then read the answer from the deposition as follows: "Because in a conversation with Dr. Frink the following morning over the telephone he informed me that he had neither been discharged from the case nor received payment for his services." Having further testified that he never returned to plaintiff, that he met Dr. Frink the following summer, and that Dr. Frink had a conversation with him in regard to plaintiff, he was asked: "What was that conversation, as near as you can give it, or the sum and substance of it?" This was objected to on the same general grounds, and the objection overruled, whereupon the answer was read as follows: "We did not discuss the plaintiff's injuries or the treatment of the same by Dr. Frink, but Dr. Frink thanked me for not interfering with his case or going to treat the plaintiff." There was no motion to strike out either of these answers. Dr. Frink, when subsequently testifying in his own behalf, said, on direct examination, that, after being discharged and told by plaintiff that Dr. Bradshaw had visited him, he told plaintiff that he would like to have his bill satisfied, and that thereafter he called up Dr. Bradshaw on the telephone, and told him that he would expect the courtesy extended from one physician to another, and would like to have the bill settled before Dr. Bradshaw took charge of the case, but that he also told him that he had been discharged. The only claim made by plaintiff's complaint was that defendant had been negligent in his treatment during the time he was attending plaintiff. There was no allegation of any act done by defendant to the injury of plaintiff subsequent to his discharge from the case, and no allegation of oppression, fraud, or malice on the part of defendant.

It is earnestly contended that the trial court erred, to the prejudice of defendant, in allowing the answers quoted from Dr. Bradshaw's deposition to be read in evidence. As to the first of these answers, we see no escape from the conclusion that the claim of defendant is well based. The question upon its face called for matter that was not within the issues made by the pleadings, and that was wholly immaterial and irrelevant. No possible answer favorable to plaintiff has been suggested, and none has occurred to us, that would be proper evidence, in view of the issues made by the pleadings and the evidence contained in the record, and certainly the trial court was not justified in assuming that the plaintiff was seeking matter unfavorable to his cause. We must assume that all the evidence in any way material to the ruling on this matter is contained in the record. That Dr. Bradshaw did not make any subsequent call on plaintiff, and his reasons for not doing so, were apparently matters entirely foreign to the controversy. If a question is objectionable from every standpoint, if on its face there appears no purpose whatever for which the evidence asked could be admissible, a general objection of irrelevancy, incompetency, and immateriality is sufficient. See 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 18c [1]; Swan v. Thompson, 124 Cal. 193, 56 Pac. 878. We are satisfied that it must be held that the court erred in overruling the objection.

That the matter elicited by the question was of a nature most prejudicial to defendant cannot be doubted. Its inevitable tendency was to create a belief in the minds of the jurors that the defendant had attempted to prevent plaintiff from procuring necessary medical attendance, and to accomplish this had not only told Dr. Bradshaw that he had not as yet been paid for his own services, but had gone to the extent of falsely representing to him that he had not been discharged from the case, or, in effect, that he was still the regular attending physician therein. Such a statement, if believed, would naturally have the effect of restraining Dr. Bradshaw from interfering with his brother physician's case, until such time as defendant had abandoned the same or had been finally discharged. If the jury believed that defendant had endeavored to prevent a former patient, sorely in need of medical attendance, from procuring the same, such belief would naturally prejudice them against him, and, if they further believed that he had resorted to falsehood in order to accomplish this result, such belief could but enhance that prejudice and most unfavorably affect his cause. While defendant denied that he told Dr. Bradshaw that he had not been discharged, and said that he told him that he had been discharged, no one could tell which witness the jury believed, except in so far as the verdict against defendant may indicate. It was not necessary for defendant, in order to save this point, to make a motion to strike out the testimony after it was read. It is only where it is not apparent from the question itself that the response thereto will, upon any theory of the case, be inadmissible, and the inadmissible evidence is for the first time disclosed by the answer that the rule declared in People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 148, 155, 76 Pac. 893, 68 L. R. A. 193, is applicable, and a motion to strike out is essential to preserve the right of the objector to complain. Where the question upon its face shows that the testimony called for is necessarily inadmissible, the rights of a party are fully preserved by his objection to the proposed evidence, and his exception to the ruling admitting the same. In fact, this is the only way in which he can preserve his objection where the question is of such a character, and the answer is strictly responsive to the question. See People v. Long, 43 Cal. 444; People v. Scalamiero, 143 Cal. 345, 76 Pac. 1098.

Nor can we hold that the error was cured by the testimony subsequently given by defendant upon this matter, under the rule declared in Treat v. Reilly, 35 Cal. 129, that a party cannot be held to be injured by the admission or refusal to strike out objectionable testimony, if the same party afterwards introduces the same testimony. See, also, People v. Marseiler, 70 Cal. 98, 11 Pac. 503. In addition to the fact that what was said by plaintiff on this subject was said by him purely in self-defense solely to meet and explain the objectionable evidence as far as possible, and cannot well be held to have been voluntary (see 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 18d, note), the testimony of defendant in relation to the interview between himself and Bradshaw differed materially from that given by Bradshaw, in that he said that he told Bradshaw that he had been discharged from the case, thus telling him the truth in the matter, instead of a falsehood.

It is impossible for us to say to what extent this objectionable evidence influenced the jury in rendering their verdict. Its direct tendency was to prejudicially affect defendant by placing him in a most unfavorable light, and we must presume that it had that effect. See Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 460, 74 Pac. 35; Lathrope v. Flood, 135 Cal. 458, 461, 67 Pac. 683, 57 L. R. A. 215; San José, etc., Co. v. San José, etc., Co., 126 Cal. 322, 324, 58 Pac. 824; Helling v. Schindler, 145 Cal. 303, 314, 78 Pac. 710.

This error necessitates a reversal of the judgment.

For the purposes of a new trial, it is proper to state that the portion of the second answer of Dr. Bradshaw relative to the defendant thanking him for not interfering with the case, or going to visit the plaintiff, was clearly improper testimony tending to prejudicially affect defendant's cause. We think, however, that the court did not err in overruling the merely general objection made to the question, for it is not apparent from the question itself that the response would be inadmissible. As suggested by the Court of Appeal in the opinion heretofore filed herein, the answer to this question "might have shown a direct admission of culpability by defendant." It was only after the answer was brought to the knowledge of the court that the court could determine as to whether the evidence was proper. Under such circumstances, it is the well-settled rule applicable in a case of a viva voce examination of a witness that a party must move to strike out the objectionable evidence when it is disclosed, or he is precluded from subsequently complaining. People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 148, 155, 76 Pac. 1116, 68 L. R. A. 193. See, also, People v. Williams, 127 Cal. 212, 216, 59 Pac. 581; O'Callaghan v. Bode, 84 Cal. 495, 496, 24 Pac. 269; Elliott on Evidence, §§ 884, 891. We do not think that the mere fact that the answer to be given was already recorded in a deposition, and therefore available for examination by the court when the objection was made, and in advance of the ruling, made it incumbent on the trial court, in the absence of request in that behalf by defendant, or specific objection showing the inadmissibility of the evidence, to examine the answer before ruling. The trial court cannot be called upon to know the contents of depositions on file, and it devolves on the party objecting to any portion of the deposition to make it appear to the court wherein any valid objection exists. If objection to a question susceptible of a proper answer contained in the deposition is based on the nature of the answer given and recorded, it is the duty of the objector to so frame his objection as to specifically bring the matter to the attention of the court. The court is no more called upon to heed a mere general objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality, where the testimony is being read from the deposition, than it is where the witness is testifying viva voce, as to which the well-settled rule has already been stated. In the absence of actual knowledge, specific objection, or intimation to the contrary, the trial court has the right to assume that a question in a deposition susceptible of an answer that may properly be given in evidence has been so answered, and the objector's utmost remedy, in the event that the answer is read, is, as stated in People v. Lawrence, supra, a motion to strike out objectionable evidence given in response to the question. Defendant should have moved to strike out this evidence, if he had desired to subsequently urge error in regard thereto, and, in the absence of such motion, we would not consider the matter on appeal.

It should further be stated that the trial court did not err in overruling the objection to the reading in evidence of the deposition of Dr. Bradshaw. The only objection specified thereto was that the certificate of the notary did not in terms state that the deposition, when completed and read to the witness, was corrected by the witness in every particular desired; the statement in the certificate being as follows: "That said deposition, and the testimony given by said witness, was reduced to writing by me, and, when completed, was by me carefully read to said witness, and, being by him corrected, was by him subscribed in my presence." The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032) provides that the deposition, when completed, "must be carefully read to the witness and corrected by him in any particular, if desired," and then subscribed by the witness and certified by the officer. The precise form of the certificate to be made by the officer is nowhere prescribed by our law, and doubtless any certificate showing substantial compliance with the statutory provisions as to the mode of taking and certifying depositions is sufficient. See Higgins v. Wortell, 18 Cal. 330. It appears hypercritical to suggest that the certificate here did not show a substantial compliance with the provision as to the correction of the deposition by the witness. The statement that, after it was carefully read to the witness it was "by him corrected," necessarily implies to the reasonable mind that the witness was given full opportunity to correct the deposition, so as to make it truly set forth his testimony, and that he did correct it in every particular desired by him.

There is no other matter requiring attention.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

5 Cal. App. 301

WELLS, FARGO & CO. v. McCARTHY et al.

(Civ. 264.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 30, 1907. Rehearing Denied May 29, 1907.)

1. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—PLEADING—DERAIGNING TITLE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1517, provides that no sale of the estate of a decedent is valid unless made under order of the superior court, except as otherwise provided in the chapter. All sales must be under oath and confirmed by the court. A complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage alleged that under an order in the matter of the estate of decedent the executrix of the estate executed and delivered to plaintiff an instrument, assigning a certain note and mortgage belonging to the estate, and that plaintiff was the owner and holder thereof. There was no allegation of a confirmation of the sale. Held, that in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 475, providing that the court must disregard any error or defect in the pleadings, which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, the complaint was sufficient as against a general demurrer.

2. PLEADING—AMENDMENTS.

Where an action to foreclose a mortgage had been pending for five years, an amendment to the answer setting up an agreement of which defendants had all the time known and had failed to plead, the effect of which would be to defeat plaintiff's claim, and which the court was justified in treating as an application to amend in order to plead the statute of limitations, was properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 766, 767.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Wells, Fargo & Co., a corporation, against James P. McCarthy and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bishop, Wheeler & Hoefler, for appellants. E. S. Pillsbury, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage. There were over 100 defendants. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for nearly $200,000 and for the sale of the property. The pleadings are numerous and quite voluminous, covering about 450 pages of the transcript. Certain of the defendants, not including McCarthy, the maker of the note, moved for a new trial on a bill of exceptions. The motion was denied. They appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial and also from the judgment.

By appellants two points are urged for reversal. One relates to the sufficiency of the complaint, and must therefore be considered on the appeal from the judgment. Swift v. Occidental Mining, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 164, 74 Pac. 700; Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 Pac. 62; Jensen v. Will & Finck Co., 89 Pac. 113. The order point is involved in a ruling of the trial court made during the progress of the trial, denying the application of appellants to file an amended answer. We shall endeavor, as far as practicable within reasonable limits, to notice the suggestions and citations of counsel in support of their respective contentions. There was a demurrer to the complaint, general and special. The special demurrer, however, was not addressed to the particular defect herein ably and vigorously assailed by appellants. The portion of the complaint which is the "storm center" of the contention of the parties is as follows: "On or about the 1st day of February, 1894, pursuant to an order theretofore duly made by the said superior court in the matter of the estate of said Leland Stanford, deceased, the said Jane L. Stanford, as executrix of the last will and testament of Leland Stanford, deceased, for and in consideration of the sum of $121,030.36 paid to her by this plaintiff on the said 1st day of February, 1894, executed and delivered to this plaintiff an instrument in writing, whereby she assigned to this plaintiff the said fourth promissory note, and all moneys due and to grow due thereon, and the said mortgage executed and delivered to the said Leland Stanford on the 5th day of January, 1891, by the said James P. McCarthy, as aforesaid. Thereafter, to wit, on the same day, the said Jane L. Stanford, as such executrix, acknowledged the said assignment before Eugene W. Levy, a notary public in and for the city and county of San Francisco, so as to entitle the said assignment to be recorded, and thereafter, to wit, on the 13th day of February, 1894, the said assignment was recorded in the office of the county recorder of the said city and county, in Liber 16 of Assignments of Mortgages, beginning at page 330. At the same time with the execution and delivery to this plaintiff by the said Jane L. Stanford of the said assignment, as aforesaid, she also indorsed and delivered to this plaintiff the said fourth promissory note, without recourse, and this plaintiff ever since then has been, and now is, the holder and owner thereof."

It is contended by appellants that the facts alleged do not show that the estate of Stanford ever parted with the title to the obligation, and hence that no cause of action is stated in behalf of plaintiff. The proposition is sound and will not be gainsaid that there must be some allegation sufficient, according to the rules of pleading, to show title in plaintiff or else the general demurrer should have been sustained. The difficulty is in making an application of the elementary principles to the particular facts of the case. To be more specific, appellants urge that "where title to a chose in action is deraigned through a transfer alleged to have been made by an executrix, the complaint must show (1) a power of sale conferred by will, or by an order of sale; (2) a sale pursuant to the power; (3) a confirmation of sale." Assuming that the order of court to which reference is made in the complaint refers to the order of sale, then it follows, according to appellants' argument, that there is no allegation whatever of the order of confirmation and that therefore one of the essential links in the chain of title is lacking. Section 1517, Code of Civil Procedure, is involved, which provides: "No sale of any property of an estate of a decedent is valid unless made under order of the Superior Court, except as otherwise provided in this chapter. All sales must be under oath reported to and confirmed by the court before the title of the property sold passes." It is not controverted that the case at bar does not fall within the purview of the exception mentioned in said section.

In Lindsay v. McInerney, 41 Atl. 701, 62 N. J. Law, 524, it is declared: "With certain exceptions, not now pertinent, title and estate must always be pleaded with fullness and particularity. When claim is made by the assignee of a chose in action assignable at law by suit thereon in his own name, the fact of the assignment must be pleaded by direct averment." But, as well pointed out by respondent, in the Lindsay Case, the fact was as stated by the court in its opinion: "No assignment of the bond is averred or can be gathered even by inference. In the stating part of the pleading there is, generally, but not always, added to the name of Murphy, where occurring, the designation 'assignor as aforesaid,' and to that of the plaintiff the designation 'assignee as aforesaid,' but there is no averment direct or indirect of any assignment of the bond. * * * For want of such averment this declaration must fall." The principle of the case is undoubtedly sound, but the situation was manifestly different from what is disclosed by the complaint herein. The scope of Stevens v. Bowers, 16 N. J. Law, 16, is shown by the following quotation: "The plaintiff declares on a bond made to two and sets out a title to it derived from one of them only, without showing how he became the sole owner, or by what authority be undertook to assign the whole bond." In Smith et al. v. Dean, 19 Mo. 63, it is held that in an action upon a bond by an assignee a general allegation that the plaintiff is the legal holder is insufficient. The court said: "The plaintiff must state facts that give him the title to the bond, when, upon its face, the title appears to be in another." White v. Brown, 14 How. Prac. 282, is somewhat similar. It was an action upon a promissory note. The payee in the note was William Rork and the only allegation connecting the plaintiff with the obligation was that he was then the bona fide owner and holder of the said note. The court said: "The complaint in this action does not show any title in the plaintiff to the note set up in it, as an indorser, or a party to the note or any right as such to maintain an action upon it." Hence the demurrer was sustained. The last two cases are more directly in point than some of the others, but the allegations of the complaint in each were manifestly not so comprehensive as in the case at bar.

In this connection it is contended that the allegation of the execution of the assignment by the executrix is not sufficient because such execution by the executrix in the absence of an order of confirmation conveys no title. This doctrine is clearly established and must follow from the provisions of said section 1517, Code of Civil Procedure, and it has been so declared by the Supreme Court in Horton v. Jack, 115 Cal. 29, 46 Pac. 920: "No sale of any property of the estate of a deceased person passes any title unless it is confirmed by the probate court. * * * Whether or not, then, this sale was in fact made to satisfy a debt of the estate, it is clear that neither the sale nor the supposed payment was sanctioned by the probate court, and that, therefore, the title to the property remained in the estate." See, also, Wickersham v. Johnston, 104 Cal. 407, 38 Pac. 89, 43 Am. St. Rep. 118; Bovard v. Dickenson, 131 Cal. 162, 63 Pac. 162. Again, it is urged that the allegation as to the order—admitting it to refer either to the order of sale or of confirmation—is utterly insufficient because it is not a positive averment, but at most presents the facts by way of recital or as a legal conclusion. Certain cases are cited to show the insufficiency of this method of disclosing a material fact. In Christy v. Dana, 42 Cal. 178, the court said: "On examining the answer, we find no new matter which was material. It avers, it is true, that the plaintiff's debt was barred by the discharge in insolvency, but that is only a conclusion of law and not a fact." It is manifestly so, but that it was immaterial in that particular case is shown by the following declaration of the court: "It is evident the plaintiff was entitled to enforce his mortgage as against the land, notwithstanding the personal liability of Dana for the debt may have been barred by the discharge." In Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 127, 11 Pac. 871, the answer, among other things, averred: "That these defendants * * * were actually engaged in working and mining said part of said claim, pursuant to a contract and agreement between plaintiffs and themselves." In support of this averment, over the objection of plaintiffs, evidence was received of a verbal contract between the parties. The objection was made upon the ground "that no contract was pleaded in the answer, and no issue raised on any contract." The court said: "A contract relied upon as a cause of action or defense to an action should, where opportunity is afforded, be pleaded either in hæc verba or according to its legal intendment and effect. The attempted plea of the contract by defendant was by way of confession and avoidance of the wrongful acts charged in the amended complaint, and as pleaded amounted to no more than a conclusion of law. The objection to the evidence should therefore have been sustained." The circumstance that objection was made to the evidence differentiates that case from this. In the case at bar, all intendments being in favor of the judgment and the bill of exceptions not purporting to give the testimony or the proceedings except as bearing upon the question of amendment, hereafter considered, it must be presumed, if required to uphold the judgment, that it was shown without any objection whatever that an order of sale and an order confirming the sale were properly made by the superior court. It is true appellants filed a demurrer, but they should have objected to the evidence, in view of the nature of the defect complained of in the complaint, in order that plaintiff, if so advised, might have amended its pleading. Considering the condition of the record, it must be assumed that the cause was tried upon the theory that the complaint was sufficient, and it is proper to invoke the rule to the effect that technical objections raised for the first time on appeal must be disregarded. Greiss v. State Investment Co., 98 Cal. 242, 33 Pac. 195; Abner Doble Co. v. Keystone, 145 Cal. 490, 78 Pac. 1050. Appellants earnestly contend that this consideration injects into the case a false quantity, that the presumption, if indulged, is utterly without importance because nothing can aid a complaint which fails in a material and necessary averment. It is true that it is of no consequence whether such evidence was admitted without objection or not if there is an absolute failure and no attempt to allege some material fact; but it is held by the authorities that it does become of moment when there is an imperfect exhibition in the complaint of such fact, which is the case here.

In Burkett v. Griffith, 90 Cal. 532, 27 Pac. 527, 13 L. R. A. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 151, the rule is stated as follows: "Argumentative pleading is no more permissible under the Code than it was at common law. Matters of substance must be alleged in direct terms, and not by way of recital or reference. Whatever is an essential element to a cause of action must be presented by a distinct averment and cannot be left to an inference to be drawn from the construction of a document attached to the complaint." In that case the demurrer was both general and special. It was sustained by the trial court and upheld by the Supreme Court. The complaint was radically defective in several respects and the ruling was undoubtedly correct. In People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 299, 55 Pac. 992, it is declared: "It is a rule of pleading, both in civil and criminal actions, that the lack of direct and positive averments of a fact cannot be supplied by intendment or implication, and, where the fact is stated only argumentatively, or by way of recital or reference, it is insufficient." In that case the recital condemned was: "R. A. Jones, acting as the agent of said Kempling and wife." No doubt the court stated the general rule correctly, but it seems that it was not necessary to the decision, because the court proceeds: "But, aside from this view of the matter, we cannot regard the answer of defendant as constituting perjury." So that the demurrer was, in view of the court, properly sustained independently of the formal defect in the allegation of the agency.

In the case of Knox v. Buckman Contracting Company, 139 Cal. 598, 73 Pac. 428, the Supreme Court enforces the rule in reference to the allegation of nonpayment of promissory notes which was held controlling in former cases. It is there stated: "The action is upon several promissory notes, but the only averment in the complaint as to a breach of appellant's contract to pay any one of the notes is this: 'That the whole of said note is owing from said defendants to said plaintiff.' It has been frequently held by this court that such an averment is not an averment of the fact of nonpayment, and that a complaint in such a case which contains no other averment as to nonpayment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." No doubt the court felt constrained by its former decisions in that particular class of cases, although it must be admitted that the rule is greatly relaxed in the case of Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 289, wherein, as stated in the syllabus, it is held that: "In an action to foreclose a mortgage, an averment in the complaint that a specified sum is 'now due and owing,' though the statement of a legal conclusion, in which the material fact of nonpayment is implied, is sufficient to sustain a judgment by default." And, furthermore, in the discussion of that case by the learned Chief Justice, he submits some reflections directly applicable to the case at bar: "The second objection to the judgment is that the complaint shows the note and mortgage to have been given to John S. Craig, described in both instruments as the guardian of Ora and Rebecca Eiler, minors, etc.; that this shows that Craig had the legal title to the note, and there is no allegation of an assignment to plaintiff. This objection, I think, is answered by the same reasoning that answers the objection that there is no allegation of nonpayment. It is true there is no direct allegation of an assignment, but there is an allegation which implies an assignment. It is alleged that the plaintiff, as the guardian of said minors, and as successor of Craig, etc., is now the lawful owner and holder of the note and mortgage. If an assignment was necessary to make plaintiff the lawful owner and holder of the mortgage, then he has alleged a legal conclusion which implies an assignment, and this after judgment by default is sufficient to support the judgment. It may be added that the objection last considered would come with more force from the maker of the note and mortgage than from the appellant." The logic of the opinion and of some others which will be considered is that under certain circumstances the allegation of what is usually regarded as a legal conclusion supplies the want of an averment of a material fact and renders the judgment "safe" from attack on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. What difference in this respect can there be between a default judgment and a judgment after trial? It needs no citation of authorities to support this proposition, and, indeed, it is so implied in section 434, Code of Civil Procedure, that the objection of insufficiency of facts can be made at any time. The defendant is not required to appear in the trial court and file a demurrer in order to make the objection available, and, if the objection can be made at any time while the cause is in the course of adjudication, it can be made with equal force after judgment in the trial court as before. And, if the allegation of a legal conclusion is an answer to the objection when made after judgment by default, it must be a sufficient answer when the objection is raised by a general demurrer before trial. Mr. Justice McFarland was undoubtedly correct in his dissenting opinion in the Penrose Case, supra, in the following statement: "And, of course, the objection that a complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action may be taken at any time. Such an objection is not waived by default." Again, in the case at bar, it would seem to be sacrificing the spirit of the law to the letter to hold that the allegation that the plaintiff is the owner and holder of the note is simply a conclusion of law and must be entirely disregarded, because, perchance, the plaintiff has attempted, although ineffectually, to allege certain facts by virtue of which he has become such owner and holder. That course would be rather to allow technical objections to the judgment "to prevail against its substantial justice." Every purpose of orderly and correct procedure would be subserved by holding that the allegation of ownership is that of an ultimate fact, notwithstanding an attempt to deraign title. If necessary to inform the antagonist of the source or grounds of plaintiff's title, more specific allegations should be required when the complaint is challenged by a special demurrer or a motion to make more certain if the latter pleading is to be countenanced. The reason for holding that an allegation of ownership is sometimes regarded as a conclusion of law, as stated in Gruwell v. Seybolt, 82 Cal. 7, 22 Pac. 938, is as follows: "Where, however, the pleader sets forth specifically the links in his chain of title, a general allegation of ownership will be treated as a mere conclusion from the facts stated, and will not cure any defect in the chain relied upon. It will be presumed that every fact has been alleged which can be proven." If, when an attempt is made to deraign title the reason for holding that an allegation of ownership is a legal conclusion is based upon the presumption that every fact has been alleged which can be proved, the reason of the rule fails, and therefore the rule itself does not apply when, instead of facts, conclusions of law are alleged in the deraignment of title. There is here an attempt to allege the orders of the court. If the allegation respecting them should be considered a mere legal conclusion, then the allegation of ownership should be construed as an averment of a fact and sufficient to uphold the judgment.

The case of Marsh v. Superior Court, 88 Cal. 596, 26 Pac. 962, cited by appellants, is manifestly different. There it is held that "the averment that the petition filed in the superior court asking for the removal of the said Whiteside 'contained no allegation of any legal cause why said Whiteside should be removed' is but the statement of a conclusion of law, and is not equivalent to a direct allegation that said petitioner did not charge that said Whiteside had violated or was unfit to execute the duties of trustee under said deed of assignment." "Legal cause" is necessarily the deduction from some act, event, or circumstance, while "owning," and especially "holding" describe and imply an act, event, and circumstance. Can it be said here that there is an entire absence of averment of the transfer of title from the estate of Stanford to plaintiff so that no evidence could be received of that fact at the trial? We must answer that question in the affirmative to reverse the judgment on the ground of the insufficiency of the complaint. Respondent, in its opening brief, claims that "pursuant to an order therefor duly made," etc., does not refer to the order of sale, "but concisely pleads the ultimate fact of the order pursuant to which the transfer was and alone could be made, that is to say, the order of confirmation. In its supplementary brief the position is shifted, and it is contended that it refers to the order of sale. But it only illustrates the element of uncertainty involved in the form of expression. It is uncertain whether it refers to one or the other, and for that reason is subject to a special demurrer. But does the fact that it is in the form of a recital, or in the nature of a legal conclusion, preclude the court from considering it in order to uphold the judgment as against a general demurrer?

In Hill v. Haskin, 51 Cal. 177, it was contended by appellant that the complaint was radically defective because it did not aver an offer to account, on the ground that this was a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action. The Supreme Court said: "But, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not legally demand payment of the defendant until he had first offered to account, the averment that 'he made due demand' is a sufficient allegation, in the absence of a special demurrer, to let in proof of the offer to account. It was but a defective statement of a material fact. Instead of alleging the fact directly, it was stated only inferentially, and might have been demurred to on this ground. * * * But having proceeded to trial, without interposing the objections, it was too late afterwards for the defendant to raise the point that the offer to account ought to have been averred with greater precision and directness." It is somewhat difficult to see how an allegation that he made due demand is even an imperfect attempt to state that he "offered to account," but the decision indicates a just and wise purpose of the higher court to avoid technicalities in furtherance of justice. In Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 352, an allegation that "the claim was duly verified by the oath of plaintiff in the form prescribed by law" was held to be sufficient as against a general demurrer. In Grant v. Sheerin, 84 Cal. 198, 23 Pac. 1094, it was alleged that "plaintiff as such executrix has demanded from defendant an accounting of said sale and the payment to her of the purchase price of said monument. And defendant has refused and still refuses to account for or pay the same or any part thereof." There was no allegation, except inferentially, of nonpayment. The Supreme Court, however, said: "In our opinion, the complaint in this case stated a cause of action, and it was sufficient when tested only by a general demurrer." From Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 29, 41 Pac. 25, we make this quotation: "Thus, while a judgment will not relieve from the entire absence of a necessary averment, it will cure defects in all such averments as may by fair and reasonable intendment be found to have been pleaded although defectively. The gravamen of the charge against the complaint is that it fails to make the necessary averment of assignment to plaintiff. * * * Assignment of it [the note], therefore, became necessary to convey title. But such an instrument may be assigned by indorsement as fully as may a negotiable instrument. The assignment is pleaded in the complaint with Cæsarian brevity by the single word 'indorsed,' followed by the quotation ["Pay to Jules Alexander. Levy and Alexander"]. This, however, is aided by the subsequent statement that the principal and interest are due from defendant to plaintiff. By fair, if not by necessary, implication, we learn from this that Levy and Alexander assigned the instrument by indorsement and delivered it to plaintiff, and that plaintiff then became and now is the owner and holder of it. So construed, the complaint will support the judgment, although," Mr. Justice Henshaw somewhat facetiously, but significantly, remarks, "it must be added that the weight is about all it is capable of sustaining." The last statement, with equal propriety, might be addressed to the case at bar.

And in City of Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 108 Cal. 297, 41 Pac. 410, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Temple, states the rule as follows: "The action was brought to collect a municipal tax and to the complaint a general demurrer was interposed. It was overruled and defendant answered. He now specifies a great many alleged defects in the complaint. Many of them are, in effect, that the complaint is ambiguous or uncertain. Such objections cannot be reached on general demurrer. Nor can the other objections, which merely amount to criticisms upon the sufficiency of the statement, as that the essential facts appear only inferentially, or as conclusions of law or by way of recitals prevail on such demurrer. There must be a total absence of some material fact to justify us in sustaining a demurrer of this character." This decision is severely criticised by appellants. They declare it to be against every other authority in England or America in holding that a conclusion of law may protect a complaint from the attack of a general demurrer. It may be that other decisions do not so hold in so many words, but there are well-considered cases holding in effect that, where there is an ineffectual attempt to deraign title, the allegation of "holding and ownership" may be regarded in the determination of the question whether the complaint states a cause of action. We have already cited two of those cases from this state. There is, no doubt, some inconsistency shown in the judicial literature upon this subject, but the later cases hold as we have stated. In Estate of Behrens, 130 Cal. 416, 62 Pac. 603, as stated in the syllabus, it is held that, "upon the contest of the probate of a will, the description of the contestants as 'brother and sister and heirs at law' of the deceased, in the introducing sentence of their opposition to the probate, without any direct averment of their heirship, constitutes an inferential averment thereof, which, in the absence of a demurrer to the opposition, will be held sufficient after judgment." It is true there was no demurrer to the opposition, but the same result must have been reached in the presence of a general demurrer.

There are many other cases to the same effect. Admittedly, none of the decisions cited—and they have all been examined—presents identically the same phraseology as we find in the complaint before us. But a fair consideration of the authorities, keeping in view that "the court must," as provided in section 475, Code of Civil Procedure, "in every stage of an action, disregard any error, improper ruling, instruction, or defect, in the pleadings or proceedings which, in the opinion of said court, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties," leads to the conclusion that the complaint is not so defective as to be insufficient to support the judgment. In view of the technical nature of the objections urged and the manifest justice of the determination of the cause reached by the lower trial judge, if deemed necessary to support the judgment, any appellate court should and could hold, without doing violence to any rule of pleading or principle of equity, that, as against a general demurrer, there was either a sufficient attempt to allege the orders of the probate court, or that, if the form of pleading adopted in that behalf constitutes simply a legal conclusion and such legal conclusion must be disregarded, then the defect is supplied by the averment of the ultimate fact that plaintiff is the owner and holder of the note in controversy. Any other view, it seems to us, would be a reproach to the law and almost a wanton infraction of the principles of equity.

To understand the significance of the other objection, the following facts must be observed: The complaint contains the usual allegation that certain defendants, including the appellants, claim some right or interest in the property, but that it is subsequent and subordinate to plaintiff's lien. Appellants answered this allegation as follows: "Defendants admit that they have and claim, and that each of them has and claims, an interest in certain portions of the property described in the said complaint, but deny that their said interest, or that the interest of any of them is subsequent or is subordinate or is subject to the lien of the said mortgage." The allegation of the indorsement and delivery of the promissory note contained in the complaint was denied in said answer as follows: "Defendants deny that on or about February 1, 1894, or at any other time, or at all, Jane L. Stanford indorsed and delivered or indorsed or delivered to the said plaintiff the said fourth promissory note, described and set forth in paragraph 15 of the said complaint, and that the said plaintiff ever since has been and now is the owner and holder or owner or holder of said note." The answer further denies "that there is any sum or amount whatever now due, unpaid or owing upon the said promissory note." By reason of the foregoing allegations and denials, appellants claimed the right at the trial to introduce evidence of a novation, or, as it appears in the bill of exceptions, "that while plaintiff was putting in its case the defendants hereinafter named repeatedly endeavored upon cross-examination to introduce in evidence the agreement set out in the proposed amended answer hereinafter contained, but objection being made by plaintiff on the ground that said matter was not cross-examination, the same was ruled out. That, after the close of the plaintiff's case, said defendants hereinafter named proceeded to and did offer in evidence, without any objection, their respective chains of title and claims to, in or upon the property involved in this action." Thereupon said defendants offered in evidence the agreement set out in said proposed amended answer, which was offered, so counsel stated, "for the purpose of showing that said note had been supplemented, changed, and modified and that the same is no longer a valid or existing obligation of any kind or character; that being a new and different agreement substituted in this suit." In response to a question by the court counsel for appellants stated that the paper in question constituted an agreement of the parties in interest whereby the amount due is $121,000 instead of $112,500, as provided in the note upon which the suit was brought, and that it was to bear a greater rate of interest and that the amount due was to be paid in two installments instead of one, etc. In other words, the instrument is one which shows a complete novation as to this promissory note. "First, as to the change in the amount of the note; and, second, as to the times of payment, and the payments, and the rate of interest which it shall bear, and as to the terms upon which this mortgage shall be released, and providing that the mortgage as modified shall stand as security for the new amount, and in the event of foreclosure interest shall be given at the rate indicated." Upon objection being made upon the ground that it was not addressed to any issue in the case, the court declined to admit the evidence, holding that it was not admissible under the pleadings and should be specially pleaded. Subsequently appellants asked leave to file an amended answer setting up this agreement and alleging in appropriate phraseology that it was executed as a novation and also setting up the bar of the statute of limitations against the enforcement of this new obligation. The court sustained plaintiff's objections.

Appellant Henshaw then made application to file an amended answer setting out the same agreement as a novation and alleging that by virtue of the novation his own mortgage became a first lien upon the premises, and that any claim, lien, or demand of the plaintiff was subsequent and subordinate thereto, and also "that on the 14th day of January, 1896, the defendant duly commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against the plaintiff above named and against the defendants, James P. McCarthy and William Fitzhugh and others, for the purpose of foreclosing his aforesaid mortgage; that said action is still pending and undetermined." In support of the opposition to the application counsel for plaintiff stated: "This is the first time that this instrument has been brought into this action. The answer of these defendants was filed on the 2d day of April, 1899. This action was begun on the 4th day of January, 1898. Their answer was filed more than four years ago. In the meantime, if there has been a novation of this original obligation by reason of the execution of this agreement, any cause of action stated in this amendment on that new obligation has become barred by the statute of limitations." Besides, it was contended that it was unconscionable on their part—never having apprised the plaintiff of it—to set up a defense which would deprive plaintiff of its cause of action. The court, in sustaining the objection, stated: "Mr. Henshaw is not in privity with this contract, or with any of the parties to the contract. Whatever rights he acquired were acquired before this was executed. If a suit was brought upon this agreement and he was made a party, and he alleged that he had a mortgage prior to the making of the agreement, he would plead himself out of court. If the defense were allowed, it would have the effect of making his mortgage previous to the plaintiff's, and it would defeat the rights of all of the defendants. Now, here is a party who has known of this agreement and has not pleaded it, and now to ask to plead it would have the effect of giving him a prior lien, and I think it would be an inequitable thing to do." It would seem that any judge would take the same view of it. It is true, as contended by counsel, that courts should be liberal in allowing amendments for the purpose of aiding and facilitating the trial of causes upon their merits. Ordinarily an application to amend a pleading to present more fully or accurately a cause of action or a defense should be granted upon such terms as shall appear just. In Farmers' Nat. Gold Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 396, it is said: "An amendment of pleadings should be allowed at any stage of the trial when it is necessary for the purpose of justice." See, also, Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786; Crosby v. Clark, 132 Cal. 1, 63 Pac. 1022; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 155, 64 Pac. 278; Marr v. Rhodes, 131 Cal. 267, 63 Pac. 364; Carter v. Lothian, 133 Cal. 451, 65 Pac. 962. But it is clearly established by the authorities that the appellate court will not reverse an order denying leave to amend except for abuse of discretion. As said in San Joaquin Valley Bank v. Dodge, 125 Cal. 84, 57 Pac. 689: "Amendments to pleadings are left much to the discretion of the court below, and it is presumed that such discretion will always be exercised in furtherance of justice and with the end in view of disposing of cases upon their merits. We cannot interfere except in cases where such discretion is abused." Such amendments, as well observed, are allowed in the interests of justice and not simply to give the party a technical advantage. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc.

In Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 412, 56 Am. Dec. 348, in discussing the refusal of the court below to allow an amendment to set up the bar of the statute of limitations, it is said: "If the statute of limitations had been pleaded in the first instance, there would have been no ground to have objected to it, and the court would have had no legal discretion to have ordered it to be stricken out. But, having been omitted when the application to amend was made, the first question certainly presented was: Will it be in furtherance of justice? Such is the language of the statute. Such clearly was the intent of the law. But we take it that the judge below was not bound to allow the amendment, unless it would further the ends of justice. He refused it, doubtless believing the contrary, and we think he did right." In Page v. Williams, 54 Cal. 563, the defendant in an action upon certain promissory notes, after the plaintiff had rested his case and the defendant had given some evidence, offered to show that the notes were given without consideration; and, upon the court refusing to hear such proof under the pleadings, defendant asked leave to file an amended answer alleging want of consideration. The court refused to permit it, on the ground that the case had been at issue nearly two years and the trial had already commenced and new issues would be tendered by the amendment. The Supreme Court said: "In our opinion, the court properly exercised its discretion in refusing to allow this amendment." See, also, Harding v. Minear, 54 Cal. 502; Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 122 Cal. 108, 54 Pac. 537. In the case at bar the effect of allowing the amendment, if supported by the evidence, would have been to defeat plaintiff's claim, and the court was justified in treating it as an application to amend in order to plead the statute of limitations.

Appellants contend that "the idea of administering rules of pleading with a view of reaching an end different from that attained by the substantive law and thus working out an indefinable justice, is illogical and absurd." But the vice of the statement is in the implication that the degree and quality of justice are determined by the method adopted in its pursuit. That there is a difference between legal and equitable rights and that a distinction is properly made between purely statutory and moral considerations in the enforcement of obligations and in the application of remedies no one will probably deny. If no such distinction exists, the judges will have to recant many errors and our whole judicial system will need reconstruction.

Appellants invite us to a discussion of the phrase "furtherance of justice." Obviously it is "such justice as the law administers when correctly applied." Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 322. But that description does not and cannot prescribe what proceeding shall be taken by a trial court in every case where an amendment of a pleading is sought. In fact, the term "undefined" is probably defined the best as "beauty unadorned is adorned the most." Each particular case must be left to the wise discretion and enlightened conscience of the chancellor. Appellants seem to think that it is "in furtherance of justice" to promote their interest at whatever cost to some one else. They have apparently forgotten the qualification of the rule that amendments should be allowed in furtherance of justice when it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of others. Assuredly, after an action had been pending for five years, it was no abuse of discretion to refuse to allow an amendment and thereby preserve to plaintiff the right to enforce a just obligation to the amount of nearly $200,000 and to subject to the prior claim of plaintiff a mortgage executed subsequently, when the effect of granting the amendment might be to defeat plaintiff's claim altogether and to give appellants an advantage which the evidence does not show they needed. The ability and industry of counsel for appellants compel admiration, but to uphold their contention, in our opinion, would be a travesty of justice rather than in furtherance thereof.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

WUTCHUMNA WATER CO. v. POGUE.

(Sac. 1,421.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 2, 1907.)

1. EVIDENCE—SCOPE OF ADMISSION AT TRIAL.

Where plaintiff diverted water from the K. river by ditch, applied part of it to land from the ditch, conducted the rest by said ditch to the S. river, and at a point lower in the S. river took therefrom by another ditch less water than he had taken into it, and applied it to land, but some time afterwards, instead of turning such water into the S. river, took it by a flume across it, and applied it to land, and by reason of these facts was claiming, in the action to determine priority of rights, a right to the water taken into the S. river and again taken from it by the lower ditch, as against one who, after such ditches were constructed, but before the construction of the flume, took water from the K. river by a ditch above that of plaintiff, the statement of plaintiff's counsel, made while a witness was testifying as to the condition of things after the construction of the flume, but many years before the action, that in such action plaintiff was not claiming any water from the S. river, will be held to apply only to the condition of affairs at the time of the action, when no water was being taken through the ditch from the S. river.

2. PLEADING—MATTERS OF EVIDENCE—ULTIMATE FACTS—WATERS—APPROPRIATIONS.

Where plaintiff constructed a ditch from the K. river, and thereby conducted water into the S. river, took from it less water than he had taken into it, and used it on land, but some time afterwards, instead of turning it into the S. river, took it by a flume from the lower end of the ditch from the K. river across the S. river and there used it on land, plaintiff, in an action to determine the rights of the parties to waters of the K. river, need not allege all these evidential facts, but may prove them under its allegations of the ultimate facts as existing at commencement of the action, its ownership of the ditch from the K. river, and its appropriation and diversion from such river by such ditch of a certain amount of water.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 31.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—APPROPRIATION—DITCHES OVER GOVERNMENT LAND.

An appropriation of water may be made by a ditch over vacant government land.

4. SAME—MANNER OF APPROPRIATION.

One may appropriate water from a river by a ditch from it to another river, letting it flow down the latter, and then diverting it therefrom by a ditch.

5. SAME—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—PLEADING.

To authorize an award to defendant of the right to take water from a stream as a riparian owner, in an action by a lower appropriator against an upper appropriator to determine the rights of the parties to the use of the waters of the stream, defendant must properly plead his riparian rights, the amount of his irrigable riparian lands, and the amount of water reasonably necessary for his use thereon.

6. SAME—RIGHT TO DISPOSE OF WATER.

One may not, by reason of being a riparian owner on a stream, take water from the stream and sell it.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by the Wutchumna Water Company against J. W C. Pogue. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. O. Larkins, for appellant. Alfred Daggett, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. In 1899 plaintiff and one Hyde filed their complaint against the defendant J. W. C. Pogue and others. The action was to determine the respective rights of the parties to the use of the waters of the Kaweah river. The differences as to the plaintiff Hyde were adjusted, and he is not before this court. The differences between the appellant and certain of the defendants were satisfactorily adjusted, and these defendants likewise disappear from the case. The conflicting claims of right of the plaintiff and of the defendant Pogue were tried and determined. So far as the parties here before the court are concerned, it is sufficient to state that as between them the court gave the plaintiff the first four cubic feet of water per second flowing in the river; to the defendant the next six cubic feet of water per second; after which plaintiff was allowed the remainder. Plaintiff appeals, contending that, not only under the evidence, but that under the findings as well, it is clearly entitled to more water than the court allowed, and that the defendant Pogue's use is, and should be decreed, subordinate in right to the appellant's prior claim to a vast amount more of water than the court awarded it.

The geographical situation, an understanding of which is necessary for a comprehension of the findings, is as follows: The Kaweah river, having its source in the Sierra Nevada mountains, flows down and across the plains as a single stream, until at a point some miles above the city of Visalia it divides, the left-hand branch or fork continuing under the name of the "Kaweah River" until near the city of Visalia, where it is known as "Mill Creek"; the right-hand branch being known as the "St. Johns River." For a long time prior to the year 1871, one Dillon had, by ditch constructed over unoccupied government land, appropriated four cubic feet per second of the waters of the Kaweah river, taking it at a point above the forks of the stream. In 1871 Barton and his associates, having acquired the Dillon rights, commenced the construction of a ditch, and afterward of a second ditch, which two ditches the court finds carried the waters of the Dillon appropriation "in addition to other waters" and devoted "the whole thereof to useful and beneficial purposes and for irrigating lands and watering live stock along the lines of said ditches." These Barton ditches, while devoting these waters to these useful purposes, carried other waters (just how much the court does not find) beyond the fork of the Keweah river and into the St. Johns branch thereof, a short distance below the point of the river's division. These waters, so carried out of the Kaweah river into the St. Johns fork thereof, commingled, of course, with such other waters as the stream carried, and flowed down to another ditch which the court finds was constructed in 1873, which ditch is known as the "Barton Cut." Through this Barton cut a large amount of water was taken and used for beneficial purposes near the city of Visalia. Thus, by the evidence, it is indisputably established that in the year 1874 59.4 cubic feet per second were used for mill purposes, after which the water was still further used for purposes of irrigation, and, in addition to this, some 8 cubic feet per second were used for irrigating lands along the course of the Barton cut. All of the water which the St. Johns river carries comes originally from the Kaweah river. The water taken out of the Kaweah river by the Barton ditch and afterward by the Wutchumna ditch, and which was carried below the point of division of the Kaweah and into the St. Johns channel, was so carried to increase the flow of the St. Johns channel, to prevent this water from going down the Mill creek channel, and thus to feed the Barton cut, the ultimate place of diversion. To whatever may have been the rights of Dillon, Barton, and his associates, the plaintiff has succeeded; the plaintiff being a corporation organized for the purpose of supplying water for useful purposes to its stockholders owning lands in the neighborhood of the city of Visalia. Barton cut was thus supplied with water as early as 1873, and the water from the upper Barton or Wutchumna ditch was thus turned into the St. Johns channel until 1879. In this year, the plaintiff, for the more economical conservation and distribution of its waters, ceased to allow them to flow down the channel of the St. Johns river these 12 or 13 miles, but impounded them and carried them in a flume across the St. Johns river, and so to the neighborhood of Visalia, where they were distributed. This being the condition of the affairs at the time of the commencement of the action, the complaint alleged: "That the Wutchumna Water Company is now, and ever since its incorporation, has been, the owner of that certain ditch known as the 'Wutchumna Ditch' which leads out of the Kaweah River at a point thereon," etc., "and runs thence westerly and southwesterly to a point about five miles southwest of the city of Visalia, * * * and that the plaintiff has appropriated and diverted from said Kaweah River, through said ditch at its head on section 34, about 133 cubic feet per second of the waters thereof," etc.

The significance of this is that it does not declare, nor does the complaint anywhere declare, any of the facts touching the Barton cut and the use thereof, which use, at the time of the commencement of this action, had been abandoned. Upon this respondent insists, and it would seem that the trial court must have adopted his view, that because of the absence of a pleading upon the earlier use made of these waters through the Barton cut, plaintiff was not entitled to recover under the allegations of its complaint, even if it established this use. Respondent reinforces its argument upon this point by an admission contained in the record. A witness was testifying to the condition of affairs in 1882 and as to water which was then discharged into the St. Johns river. This, it appears, was surplus waters which the plaintiff permitted to flow down the channel after its needs were supplied, and it will be remembered that at this time plaintiff was conducting the water which it used, by flume across the St. Johns river. The admission to which counsel for respondent refers took place when the witness was testifying as to this condition of affairs existing in 1882, and the record discloses the following: "A. About the 1st of May, I think it was, I turned the water in, and it ran until September, near the first of July, maybe a little before or after. The Court: Q. You turned the water in from the St. Johns? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Larkins (counsel for plaintiff): In this suit we are not claiming any water from the St. Johns. The Court: I understand." This admission is without force. It obviously had to do with the condition of affairs existing at the time of the filing of the complaint and at the trial of the action, at which time plaintiff was not taking any water through the Barton cut, and was using only the water which it took out of the Kaweah river above its point of division. In this sense, and in this sense only, is the statement of plaintiff's counsel to be understood, when he says that plaintiff is not claiming any of the waters of the St. Johns. For it is apparent that it was claiming—strenuously and assiduously claiming—that by reason of its having carried from the upper Kaweah some hundred or more cubic feet per second of water and emptied it in to feed the channel of the St. Johns, and permitted it to flow down the St. Johns to Barton cut, where it again appropriated it and devoted it to useful purposes, it was entitled to claim all such water; that the only change which it had made in its appropriation was a change in the method of lower diversion and use; that touching its upper ditch, from and through which its original appropriation was made, the conditions and plaintiff's rights remained the same. Nor is respondent correct in arguing that evidence concerning the use of the water through the Barton cut was foreign to the pleading. Plaintiff, in its complaint, pleaded, as it should have pleaded, the ultimate facts as they existed at the time of the commencement of its action. The change in use, the original mode of conveyance, and the story of the abandonment of the Barton cut, were all probative matters in the establishment of the title and method of diversion of the plaintiff as they stood at the time when the litigation was begun. It was not only unnecessary, but it would have been surplusage, for plaintiff to have pleaded the historical deraignment of its title and the varying methods of its use. Heeser v. Miller, 77 Cal. 192, 19 Pac. 375; McCaughey v. Schuette, 117 Cal. 223, 46 Pac. 666, 48 Pac. 1088, 59 Am. St. Rep. 176.

It was in the spring of 1875 that respondent Pogue and his associates commenced the construction of their ditch, which also took water from the Kaweah river above the point of its diversion, and of the diversion of plaintiff, and of this water so taken the court finds and decrees, as has been said, that Pogue was entitled to divert six cubic feet per second, which right was superior to the plaintiff's right to divert any more than four cubic feet per second through its ditch. To sum up as to the findings, the court finds that the plaintiff, long prior to defendant's appropriation, was conducting through the Barton ditch four cubic feet of water per second (the Dillon right) in addition to other waters (quantity not mentioned), all of which were devoted to beneficial purposes. The court further finds that the predecessors in interest of the plaintiff connected the Barton ditches with the channel of the St. Johns river, and did in 1873 construct a ditch known as the "Barton Cut" from the St. Johns channel below and on the opposite side of the river, to the city of Visalia. The court does not find how much water the Barton ditches emptied into the St. Johns channel, nor how much of this water was taken out by the Barton cut. But the evidence shows that at least 67.4 inches were beneficially used through the Barton cut before defendant took the first step toward his appropriation, and it likewise shows that water in excess of this amount was carried by the Barton ditches into the St. Johns channel, and that the waters so carried into the St. Johns channel flowed down it until impounded at the intake of the Barton cut. Yet the court does find that the Wutchumna Water Company "did not divert or appropriate, as required by law, any further quantity of water from said river in addition to said four cubic feet of water per second, until the year 1879." The italicized excerpt from the findings just above quoted would seem to indicate that the trial court meant to convey the idea that the plaintiff did divert and appropriate more than four cubic feet of water per second, and this view certainly has the support of the evidence, from which it appears that from the year 1871 on the Barton or Wutchumna ditch turned into the St. Johns channel more water than was taken out through the Barton cut. The finding, therefore, must mean that this excess of water over four cubic feet per second was not appropriated as required by law. Wherein this finding derives support, excepting from the theory above adverted to, that the waters taken from the Barton cut could not be considered because of the alleged defect in the pleadings, we are unable to perceive. Because, as to plaintiff's title to the water, it is indisputable that the Wutchumna ditch was constructed over vacant government land prior to the time that Pogue acquired any of his rights either as an appropriator or as an owner of riparian lands, and, consequently, upon well-settled principles, the plaintiff's earlier rights of appropriation are superior to Pogue's later rights either as an appropriator or as riparian landowner. Osgood v. Eldorado Water Co., 56 Cal. 571; Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 500, 47 Pac. 454; San Jose L. & W. Co. v. San Jose Ranch Co., 129 Cal. 673, 62 Pac. 269.

Moreover, plaintiff had the undoubted legal right to adopt and use its original method of appropriation, that is to say, to carry the water out of the Kaweah river and down to the St. Johns branch thereof, there permitting it to flow down the natural channel to its point of diversion. Such a right is recognized in Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 47; Paige v. Rocky Ford Canal Co., 83 Cal. 85, 21 Pac. 1102, 23 Pac. 875; Long on Irrigation, § 43; Black's Pomeroy on Water Rights, § 49. Nor can it be said, in view of the evidence, that the diversion by Barton cut was a mere appropriation of the natural waters flowing down the St. Johns river; because it is shown by the evidence, not only that more water was turned into the St. Johns river from the Kaweah than was taken out by the Barton cut, but additionally the reason is made plain why this was done. It was to preserve for use at the Barton cut this water, which otherwise, by lower owners and appropriators, might and would have been diverted into the other branch of the Kaweah, or taken out at the fork, and so lost entirely to the St. Johns channel. Nor do the pleadings and findings touching Pogue's title in and interest to the water serve to elucidate the difficulty. Pogue in his answer alleges both his right as appropriator through the Pogue, Wallace, and Crocker ditch—a ditch which defendant and his associates constructed and first drew water through in 1875—and also his ownership of certain lands riparian to the Kaweah river. The court awards him six cubic feet per second, without limitation upon its use, and it is unquestioned that he is carrying this water away from his riparian lands and there selling and disposing of it—a use, which, as a riparian owner, he is, of course, not entitled to make. Moreover, considering Pogue's claim as resting upon his riparian ownership, he nowhere properly pleads his riparian rights, nor the amount of his irrigable riparian lands, nor the amount of water reasonably necessary for his use upon such lands. Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 89 Cal. 420, 26 Pac. 889; Wiggins v. Muscupiable L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 194, 45 Pac. 160, 32 L. R. A. 667, 54 Am. St. Rep. 337; San Luis Water Co. v. Estrada, 117 Cal. 182, 48 Pac. 1075. As the pleadings exist, it must be concluded that the court's award is based upon his claim as an appropriator through the Pogue, Wallace, and Crocker ditch. But, as an appropriator, the evidence leaves no doubt that he is later in time, and, therefore, subsequent in right to plaintiff, who, as has been said and shown, was certainly putting to beneficial use some 67 cubic feet of water per second in addition to the four cubic feet awarded long before the defendant ever commenced the construction of his ditch.

It follows herefrom that a new trial must be ordered, to the end that the court shall find upon these omitted matters, and determine the respective rights of the plaintiff and defendant as appropriators, for it is only as an appropriator that, in the present state of his answer, the defendant Pogue can be heard to assert any rights at all.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

5 Cal. App. 344

HALE BROS. v. MILLIKEN et al. (Civ. 258.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1907. On Rehearing, May 3, 1907. Denied by Supreme Court May 31, 1907.)

1. APPEAL — REVIEW — VERDICTS — SETTING ASIDE.
Before a verdict may be set aside or the findings of the trial court disturbed upon the evidence on appeal, the evidence must be so plainly and palpably insufficient to support the verdict that it may be so declared as a matter of law.

2. CONTRACTS — ACTION FOR BREACH — EVIDENCE.
In an action for damages caused by delay in delivery of building material, evidence examined, and held sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiffs.

3. EVIDENCE — EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING TRANSACTION.
Where there were peculiar circumstances surrounding the transaction leading up to the making and the manner of the execution of the contract which were fully made known to the other party, it was proper, in a suit against it for breach of the contract, to place the peculiar facts before the court and jury.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE OF CUSTOM—EFFECT OF STATUTE.
Pol. Code, § 3209, prescribes a standard of weights and measures. Section 3222 provides that "all contracts made in this state for work to be done, or for anything to be sold or delivered by weight or measure, must be construed by that standard. Held that, where the terms of a contract for the sale of structural steel at a certain price per pound were unambiguous, it was to be conclusively presumed that the parties made their contract in reference to the statute, and extrinsic evidence to show the existence of a usage among dealers in structural steel as to the manner of computing weight was inadmissible.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 2104-2106.]

5. SAME—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—LETTERS.
Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, provides that when a "detached * * * writing is given in evidence any other * * * writing which is necessary to make it understood" may also be given in evidence. Held that, when a letter had been introduced in evidence, it was proper to reject a letter in reply, offered by the opposite party, which was not necessary to make the original letter understood.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1498, 1676.]

6. APPEAL — REVIEW — STRIKING OUT EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.
In an action for breach of a contract, under which it was understood by the parties that building material should be delivered in any event so that the building could be occupied by the first of July, it was harmless error to strike out evidence offered by defendant's agent that in a conversation with one of the plaintiffs the latter had said that they would not hold defendants down strictly to February shipments.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4187-4193.]

7. TRIAL—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.
It was not error to sustain an objection to a question asked a witness where the fact sought to be brought out by the question had been stated by the witness before.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 131; vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 827, 828.]

8. WITNESSES — RE-EXAMINATION — EXPLANATION OF TESTIMONY ON CROSS-EXAMINATION.
Where, in an action for damages caused by delay in furnishing building material, on cross-examination of one of the plaintiffs defendant introduced a letter received from plaintiffs fixing the time of delay at less than that claimed in the suit, it was proper to allow the witness on redirect examination to explain that the letter had fixed the time of delay at the minimum in an attempt to effect an amicable settlement.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1000.]

9. APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS—RIGHT TO OBJECT.
Where defendants had obtained an instruction in which it was stated that they do not deny the making of the contract as alleged in the complaint, except that they denied that they agreed to deliver the goods anywhere except in New York, they cannot complain of an instruction for the plaintiff setting out a provision of the contract that delivery was to be made during the month of February.
[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3591-3610.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; W. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Action by Hale Bros. against Edward F. Milliken and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See 75 Pac. 653.

P. F. Dunne and W. H. Linforth, for appellants. Campbell, Metson & Campbell (Thomas H. Breeze, of counsel), for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff corporation brought this action to recover from the defendants the sum of $13,973 for damages alleged to have been sustained by it on account of the failure of defendants to deliver within the time agreed upon certain steel to be used in the erection of plaintiff's building in the city of San Francisco. The alleged damages consist of the following items: (1) The sum expended by plaintiff in the preparation of the steel for use after its delivery, $577.65, the pleaded agreement being that it should be delivered in condition so that it could be placed as received in the building; (2) ground rent at the rate of $1,400 per month for a period of three months; (3) interest on the money expended by plaintiff in the building independent of the steel work during the time of the delay, aggregating the sum of $396.32; (4) the loss to plaintiff of the use of the building for three months, alleged to be of the value of $3,000 per month, or a total of $9,000. On the 12th day of October, 1899, plaintiff leased from one David R. Jones, for a term of 10 years and 9 months, the said lease to commence and take effect on the 1st day of October, 1899, at a monthly rental of $1,400, a certain lot or piece of real property, situated in said city of San Francisco, and upon which it contemplated the erection of a large building to be used for carrying on and conducting its commercial business. Ground rent was not, however, to become payable under the lease until from and after the 1st of July, 1900. It is alleged by plaintiff that, with a knowledge of this lease and of its terms, defendants entered into a contract with plaintiff to furnish the steel necessary for the erection of said building and to deliver the same during the month of February, 1900. It is claimed by plaintiff that, if the steel had been delivered during said month of February, the building could have been "erected and completed so as to admit of occupancy on July 1, 1900, but that the building was not completed and ready for occupancy before the 1st of October, 1900, and that the delay was occasioned through the failure of the defendants to deliver the steel within the contract time and to deliver in such condition as to be immediately set up in the building upon its arrival in San Francisco." The complaint further alleges that during the negotiations between plaintiff and defendants for the furnishing of the steel for said building "defendants submitted to plaintiff two lists of prices at which they agreed to sell and deliver to plaintiff the steelwork required in said building. One of said list prices was for the delivery of said steelwork during the month of February, 1900, and the other for the delivery of said steelwork during the month of May, 1900; that the prices on the latter list were much lower than those on the other, and both lists of prices provided for f. o. b. delivery." In order to secure the delivery of the steel in the month of February, it is alleged, plaintiff, on the 10th day of January, 1900, agreed to pay defendants the prices demanded for the February delivery of the steel, the same being a sum in excess of that of the May delivery to the extent of $4,105.22. The complaint was verified. The answer specifically denies the averments of the complaint and pleads a counterclaim, and prays, among other things, for judgment against the plaintiff for the sum of $6,884.50, alleged to be the balance due defendants from plaintiff for the structural steel so furnished it by defendants. It may be here stated that the original balance claimed to be due defendants from plaintiff was the sum of $7,042.65, but that the sum of $156.15 was deducted by defendants from their claim because of extra labor imposed upon the steel setter by reason of "shop errors" imputed to the oversight or negligence of defendants in arranging the steel, preparatory to its erection as a part of the building. The cause was tried by jury, and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $186.41, "after deducting the amount of defendants' counterclaim." Thereupon and in accordance with said verdict the court entered its judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $186.41. Defendants appeal from said judgment and from an order refusing them a new trial.

Much space in the briefs of counsel is devoted to a discussion of the evidence; appellants attempting by a minute examination and analysis thereof to demonstrate that the jury awarded damages in favor of plaintiff far in excess of what the facts adduced justified. The contract for the purchase and sale of the steel for the building was made and entered into between Reid Bros., architects and agents of plaintiff, and N. L. Bell, the Pacific Coast agent of defendants. The place of business of defendants was at the time of the transaction in the city of New York, and the headquarters and office of their agent, Bell, were at the time of the making of the contract in the city of San Francisco.

The record consists of a transcript of 490 pages, of which the evidence takes up approximately 400 pages. It would be useless, we think, to undertake to discuss in detail the entire mass of evidence, or to attempt to present a satisfactory synopsis thereof, for the purpose of showing reasons why the verdict should or should not be disturbed. The record discloses the fact that most of the evidence is from witnesses produced by plaintiff, and that it points almost all one way. There is no dispute that a contract for the sale and purchase of the structural steel required for the erection of the building of plaintiff was made by the parties. The only questions in the case are, so far as the facts are concerned, whether there was on the part of the defendants a breach of the terms of the contract, and, if so, whether or not the damages awarded are excessive.

The plaintiff, having leased for a long term the ground upon which the building was to be erected at a monthly rental of $1,400, to become payable on and after the 1st day of July, 1900, was quite naturally anxious to secure the steel materials necessary for the construction of the structure at as early a date as possible, so as to enable the contractors to complete and have it in readiness for occupancy by the time at which payment of the ground rent was to begin. That this purpose was uppermost in the mind of plaintiff and well understood by defendants at the time of the making of the contract is, in our opinion, indubitably evidenced by the several conversations shown to have taken place between the parties relative to the steel contract. These conversations are testified to not alone by witnesses friendly to plaintiff, but by Mr. Bell himself. The telegraphic dispatches from Bell to the defendants concerning the contract also sustain this conclusion. Another significant circumstance bearing out the contention of respondent upon this point is the fact that the plaintiff was willing and agreed to pay for the steel the sum of a trifle over $4,000 demanded for February shipments in excess of the prices asked for May shipments. In other words, it agreed to pay $4,000 more for the steel in order to secure early shipments and delivery thereof than it would have been compelled to pay for the same material delivered in the month of May. The lease of the ground and the time at which the payment of the rent, by the provisions of said lease, was to commence, and the consequent anxiety of plaintiff to be in actual occupancy of the premises by the time the payment of the rent was to begin, were matters of full and frequent discussion between the parties, not only before the agreement of sale and purchase between them was reached, but throughout the entire course of the relations established between them by virtue of the contract. Telegrams were sent to defendants by their agent, explaining the circumstances under which the contract was made. While it may be correct to say that nothing was expressly said in these telegrams about the lease, the defendants nevertheless knew that haste and prompt delivery of the steel were important features of the contract, as is clearly shown by their replies to their agent. But whether the defendants themselves knew or did not know the reason for the requirement of prompt delivery, the fact is undisputed that their agent did know the reason and knew that that was the principal consideration controlling plaintiff in awarding the contract for the steel to the defendants. After the defendants, in response to a telegram from Bell, sent by wire the "February prices" for the steel required, the plaintiff, through its agents, Reid Bros., in a letter addressed to Bell, accepted the same, and requested the latter to inform defendants that the plans, specifications and drawings were with P. C. Hale, at 256 Church street, New York, and, in order (quoting from the letter to Bell) "to save time, to please ask your firm to call on P. C. Hale for the drawings and specifications * * * to look over carefully and wire you if everything is complete to proceed at once." In pursuance of this suggestion Bell sent the following telegram to defendants: "Get plans P. C. Hale, 256 Church street. Have secured contract. Prices quoted February delivery. Examine plans and wire immediately if everything is clearly shown thereon." The evidence shows that defendants, upon receipt of the last quoted dispatch, at once obtained from P. C. Hale the plans and specifications mentioned. On the following day Milliken Bros. wired their San Francisco agent as follows: "Plans received and are being carefully examined. * * * The specifications call for Carnegie sections. Our bid of course was not based on their sections. * * * We suggest, in order to secure prompt delivery required [italics are ours], that we be allowed to substitute equivalent areas of angles and plates, or channels and plates, whichever can be secured quickest, in column schedule." Reid Bros., having been notified by Bell of this telegram and the proposed substitution of "equivalent areas of angles and plates," etc., for the Carnegie sections called for by the plans and specifications, addressed the following letter to the agent of the defendants: "There is no objection to your people substituting equivalent areas of equal strength and not exceeding in weight those shown of Carnegie Steel Company. * * * Prompt delivery has secured you this work, and is a very essential feature of the contract, so do not fail to impress upon your people the importance of it, and also the importance of shipping in the regular order called for in the specifications." The order of shipments, contained in the specifications, provides: "In order to avoid delay in erection, material must be shipped in the order in which it is to be placed, i. e., beginning at the basement, each story and floor must be shipped in such complete manner as to allow each of said stories or floors to be entirely completed in its erection, and ready for immediate reception of masonry and walls." A few days after the 10th of January, according to the testimony of Mr. Bell himself, Mr Reid informed him that the first shipment of steel would be required the last of February or the 1st of March. This shipment was to include all the material necessary to complete the first tier, and Reid requested Bell to have the steel shipped "tier by tier at intervals approximately one week apart." By "tier" was meant a floor complete; that is, one story. The foundation work was finished during the month of February, and the construction had so far progressed that by the 1st of March the builders were prepared to begin the erection of the steel work.

The evidence shows that the building was not completed so that it could be occupied until about the 1st of October, 1900—approximately, if not actually, three months after the payment of ground rent, under the lease, had commenced. Witnesses for plaintiff, real estate dealers in San Francisco, testified as to the rental value of the premises from July 1, 1900, to October 1, 1900, and such value was by them variously estimated at from $2,500 to $3,200 per month. Witnesses for the defendants placed the rental value at a considerably lower figure.

The delay in the erection and completion of the building was occasioned, according to the testimony of Reid, the architect, Lang, the brick and wood contractor, and Arthur, the steel setter, to so-called "shop errors" (that is, errors made at the manufactory in the numbering of the columns and the adjustment of the connections of the steel), and to misshipments (that is to say, shipments out of order and in a haphazard manner). For illustration, it was stated by Mr. Reid that the first tier or floor was, as shipped, incomplete, and that tiers were shipped for floors not prepared or ready for steel erection in advance of those floors ready for the steel material. The delay thereby occasioned had, it is shown, and as would necessarily follow, a reactionary effect upon the work of masonry and carpentry. In other words, the brick and wood contractors were necessarily delayed by reason of the delay due to the misshipments. The building is not what is known strictly as a steel structure. Mr. Reid testified that the delay, caused by the manner in which the steel was shipped, covered a period of three months. Mr. Lang, the brick and wood contractor, stated that the delay in brick and carpentry work, occasioned by the nonarrival of the steel at the time and in the manner and order in which the contract called for its shipment, was 2 months and 18 days. There is no evidence in the record offered by the defendants directly contradictory of that of which we have presented a recapitulation. Counsel for defendants, however, undertake to show by an extensive argument based upon certain apparent discrepancies developed through the cross-examination of some of the principal witnesses for the plaintiff that the amount of damages assessed by the jury is unwarranted by the evidence. But, under the well-understood rule, where there appears a substantial conflict in the evidence (and, we think, as we have before suggested, that the testimony was pretty much all one one way upon the important points), we are precluded from going into the question thus presented. The evidence must be so plainly and palpably insufficient to support the verdict that it can be said that such is the case as a matter of law before this court is justified in setting aside a verdict upon the evidence or disturbing the findings of the trial court. The record here does not authorize us to make any such ruling. The discrepancies or inconsistencies which may have been brought out by an examination or by cross-examination of the witnesses are also matters for the jury to pass upon and settle to their own satisfaction. Their verdict, finding the facts in a particular way, forecloses us from any inquiry into the question as to whether certain witnesses declared the truth or otherwise, or whether inconsistent statements which may have been shown by their cross-examination were sufficient to have discredited their testimony or not. The statement thus made of this proposition is only a trite declaration of the rule by which appellate courts are uniformly governed in this country with respect to their power of reviewing questions of fact. It is enough to say, however, that we have given the record careful and painstaking examination, and our conclusion is, upon this point, that the verdict and judgment are abundantly supported by the evidence.

There were numerous objections interposed against the admission of certain evidence, some of which are not discussed in the briefs, and therefore not urged here. As to some of the objections, it may be said generally that in a case of the character of the one at bar, as disclosed by the pleadings, it is proper to show all the circumstances surrounding the transaction leading up to the making and the manner of the execution of the contract. The circumstances which led to the making of this contract were fully made known to the defendants, or their agent, who was acting within the scope of his authority as such in all his dealings with plaintiff, and it was, as we have declared, proper to place them before the court and jury. The lease between plaintiff and Jones, which explained the reason of the requirement of an early and prompt and proper delivery of the steel, and to the admission of which into the record objection was made, not only constituted relevant but important testimony. It, in fact, became a part of the contract, through other testimony, to the extent of fixing the time at which the steel should be delivered. Evidence of consequential delay —that is, the delay occasioned to the contractor of the masonry and woodwork and the delay caused to the steel setter—was proper to be received and considered by the jury in the determination of whether or not the contract was, in fact, broken through the negligence of defendants, and as finally aiding in the ascertainment of the amount of damages, if any, to which plaintiff was entitled by reason of the alleged breach of the contract. It would seem to require the citation of no authorities to uphold the position that special circumstances, if any, which might have entered into the making of the contract, or those attending its breach, if known to both parties, may be shown. The principle authorizing such evidence is quite elementary, and the books are replete with authorities illustrating its application. "If the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated by the plaintiffs to the defendants, and, thus known to both parties, the damages resulting from the breach of such contract, which they would reasonably contemplate, would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from a breach of the contract under the special circumstances so known and communicated." Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341. See, also, Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 Pac. 882, 60 Am. Rep. 529; Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159 et seq., 25 Pac. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; Booth v. Mill Co., 74 N. Y. 15; Long Island R. Co. v. Verree, 69 N. Y. 487; Richardson v. Chynoweth, 26 Wis. 656.

But the most important point presented is raised by the contention that the court below erred in refusing to permit defendants to show that there prevailed, and for many years had existed, in the city of San Francisco, "a general well-known usage among manufacturers of and dealers in structural iron and steel, similar to that furnished by defendants, as to the manner and way by which the weight of the material was determined and arrived at." The contract is silent, so far as express language is concerned, as to how the weight of the steel was to be determined—whether by what is known as "figured" or estimated weight, or by "scale" weight. The former, as we understand it, is the means of ascertaining the weight by a standard fixed and adopted by dealers in structural steel. For example, steel columns, girders, and other connections necessary for the steel part of the structure, according to their dimensions, are given a standard weight by manufacturers and dealers in such materials. "Scale weight" is the determination of the weight by what the material actually weighs in pounds. It is contended by appellants that if there existed in San Francisco at the time of the making of the contract among dealers in such material a custom, according to which the manner or method of ascertaining the weight of structural steel was determinable, then the contract is to be presumed to have been made with reference to such custom, and that it therefore became a part of said contract. Several California cases are cited in support of this view, but we do not think that they are exactly in point, or, at least, ought to be held applicable to the case here. The contract is evidenced by conversations, telegrams, letters, and the plans, specifications, and drawings. There is no controversy between the parties that the prices offered by defendants and accepted by plaintiff were for "so much per pound"; but it is claimed by appellants that the word "pound" "is of technical significance when used in connection with the sale of structural steel." But appellants first make the claim that their contention for figured weight is sustained by a certain clause in the specifications. The clause referred to reads: "Figured dimensions in all cases to be taken in preference to scale measurements, and no important dimensions shall at any time or under any circumstances be determined by scale, but should drawings not show all required dimensions in figures, the contractor is to apply to the architects for such figures, and shall all conform to them as a part of the contract." According to the interpretation of that clause by appellants, the contract itself, of which the specifications became a part, expressly points out that the quantity of steel furnished shall be determined by figured or dimension weight. But that clause is not open to such a construction. If it were, then certainly, as pertinently suggested by counsel for respondent, the court's ruling in excluding the proffered testimony relative to the alleged custom could not be error, since to prove by parol what in terms the contract already provides for would be the work of supererogation or the assumption of an unnecessary burden by defendants. The clause is manifestly addressed to the contractor for his guidance in the erection of the building. The real meaning of it is so clearly explained in the brief of respondent that we shall adopt the language of counsel in the statement of what we conceive to be its true construction: "The clause plainly means that lengths are not to be calculated from the lines of the plans which obviously were drawn on a reduced scale. If dimensions are noted on the plans in figures, they shall prevail over scale or measured dimensions. If on any line the length is not noted in figures, the contractor must not calculate its length by scale, but must apply to the architect for the figures." The contention as to the meaning of that clause being thus disposed of, the question remains: Did the court err in disallowing the testimony offered to prove the alleged usage?

The Legislature of this state has established a standard of weights and measures, according to which, by the provisions of section 3222 of the Political Code, "all contracts made in this state for work to be done or for anything to be sold or delivered by weight or measure," must be construed. The standard of weights and measures is thus fixed by section 3209, supra: "The standard of weights * * * now in charge of the Secretary of State, being the same that were furnished to this state by the government of the United States, and consisting of * * * nine avoirdupois weights of one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, twenty-five and fifty pounds, respectively, * * * are the standards of weights * * * throughout this state." There is no allegation in the answer, either in the denial of the averments of the complaint or in the paragraphs setting out the counterclaim that the word "pound," as used in the contract as pleaded, was understood by the parties in any other sense than its ordinary and primary and legal signification. It will, of course, be conceded that the phrase "avoirdupois pound," as used in the statute, and as commonly understood, means 16 ounces in weight. Section 3215, Pol. Code.

The case of Higgins v. Cal. Petroleum Co., 120 Cal. 629, 52 Pac. 1080, so much relied on by defendants, was where the plaintiff brought an action to recover "certain royalties on certain bituminous rock and liquid asphaltum mined by defendants," for which the latter agreed to pay "the sum of fifty cents per ton for each and every gross ton." The question there was: What did the parties mean by the word "gross"? Evidence was admitted at the trial for the purpose of showing that by usage at the place where the contract was made the word "gross" as used in the contract means a "long ton," or a ton consisting of "two thousand two hundred and forty pounds," and the court made a finding accordingly. The Supreme Court sustained the ruling, saying: "The contention of appellant is that the statute defines the meaning and use of the word 'ton' [Pol. Code, § 3222], and that the lease is unambiguous and cannot be explained or contradicted by parol evidence. Therefore, there could have been no evidence at the trial justifying the finding of the court that the phrase 'gross ton' used in the lease meant a long ton of 'two thousand two hundred and forty pounds.' Some decisions are cited apparently holding that a contract of this nature must be conclusively presumed to refer to the statutory weights and measures, at least, in the absence of a direct and express reference in the contract to a different standard, and in this connection it is argued that the adjective 'gross' does not refer to the measure—that is, to the number of pounds in the ton—but to the condition of the commodity when weighed, to wit, that the crude and unrefined asphalt is to be weighed, and not the refined product. I think the question is entirely settled by section 1861 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows: 'The terms of a writing are presumed to have been used in their primary and general acceptation, but evidence is nevertheless admissible that they have a local, technical or otherwise peculiar signification, and were so used and understood in the particular instance, in which case the agreement must be construed accordingly.'" The same question was presented in the case of Higgins v. Cal. Petroleum Co., 109 Cal. 310, 41 Pac. 1087. There no evidence had been offered or received relative to the meaning of the word "gross." The court, in the latter case, held that "gross ton" meant the usual ton of 2,000 pounds avoirdupois, and that the word "gross" as used signified and was intended to describe the crude or unrefined product. In the case in 120 Cal., 52 Pac., subsequently tried, evidence was therefore admitted to show what must have been really intended by the use of the word "gross." It will thus be seen that the whole question in the Higgins Case turned upon the meaning of the word "gross" as employed.

The very purpose obviously of laws establishing standards of weights and measures is to render certain and unequivocal the meaning of the language of contracts involving matters to which such laws relate by a comparison of the language of the contracts to that of the law, and thus relieve the courts, in some measure at least, of the perplexing difficulties which must often confront them in seeking the actual intention of the parties to such contracts. The Legislature has wisely declared that it is the better policy that there should be a general law, effective and operative throughout the whole state, regulating such matters, and of which all persons are conclusively presumed to have knowledge, and through the assistance of which all contracts pertaining to the subject-matter of the statute may be satisfactorily construed. Viewed thus by the light of the written law, it is manifest that the opportunity for mistakes in an effort to ascertain what parties mean by the language of such contracts is at least minimized, if not altogether obviated. "If," as is well said in Evans v. Myers, 25 Pa. 114, "every section of the country may have its own weights and measures, to be established by its own customs, strangers would be entrapped into liabilities which they never intended to incur, and no one could know with precision the extent of his obligations." See, also, Green v. Moffett, 22 Mo. 529; Harris v. Rutledge, 19 Iowa, 399, 87 Am. Dec. 441. The Legislature certainly meant something by the enactment of the law regulating weights and measures, and the rule involved in section 1861, Code Civ. Proc., should not be so applied as to operate practically to repeal or nullify the entire chapter upon the subject of weights and measures. The law is founded upon experience and the soundest policy, and is, like all such enactments, designed for the better protection of the rights of parties acquired under such contracts. Is it to be doubted that the courts, in the construction of contracts, may feel an infinitely greater degree of assurance that they will arrive at a correct conclusion where, in the exercise of that all-important judicial function, they may be guided by the unflickering light of the written law rather than by some alleged usage of trade, proved, it may be, by conflicting evidence? We think the rule of construction of such contracts ought to be, as contemplated by the Legislature, that they are to be conclusively presumed to have been made in reference to the statute, unless the parties themselves have agreed or indicated in their contracts that their execution is to be governed by some usage of trade or custom prevailing in the community where they were made, or their terms are to be performed. Such a construction would give force and effect to the statute, and could not interfere with the operation in appropriate cases of section 1861 and other Code provisions established for the interpretation of contracts whose terms are expressed in doubtful or ambiguous language. And when we use the term "doubtful or ambiguous language" we mean language whose true meaning can find no exposition by reference alone to the language of the law itself, an end which we think can be attained in the cases of contracts of the kind under consideration.

Section 3222 of the Political Code is garbed in language as clear as a cloudless day, and, as observed, provides that "contracts made within this state for work to be done or for anything to be sold or delivered by weight or measure, must be construed according to the foregoing standards," referring to the preceding section establishing the standards of weights and measures. Is it to be held that that section means nothing? Is there to be found any enacted proviso qualifying the provisions of the law as to weights and measures in any particular so that they may be disregarded with impunity? In Rogers v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 1 Story, 603, 608, Fed. Cas. No. 12,016, Judge Story uses the following language: "I own myself no friend to the indiscriminate admission of evidence of supposed usages and customs in a peculiar trade and business, and of the understanding of witnesses relative thereto, which has been in former times so freely resorted to; but which is now subjected by our courts to more exact and well-defined restrictions. Such evidence is often, very often, of a loose and indeterminate nature, founded upon very vague and indefinite notions of the subject; and therefore it should, as I think, be admitted with a cautious reluctance and scrupulous jealousy, as it may shift the whole grounds of the ordinary interpretation of policies of insurance and other contracts."

At page 656 of the second volume of his work on Contracts, Judge Parsons says: "Where certain things are to be done by the contract which the law has regulated in whole or in part, the contract will be held to mean that they should be so done as would be either required or indicated by the law." "The true office of usages of trade," says Greenleaf in section 251, volume 2, of his work on Evidence, "is to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intentions of parties, and to ascertain the nature and extent of their contracts, arising not from express stipulation, but from mere implications, and acts of a doubtful and equivalent character; and to fix and explain the meaning of words and expressions of doubtful or various senses." "* * * But, although evidence of custom and usage may be introduced in a case to show what the meaning of the parties was in regard to the subject-matter of the contract, or to explain the meaning given in particular trades or occupations to certain words, yet evidence cannot be introduced of the custom when the same contradicts the plain and unambiguous words of the contract, or violates a settled legal rule of construction." Bigelow v. Legg, 102 N. Y. 652, 6 N. E. 107. The "settled legal rule of construction" in this state as to such contracts is to be found in the provisions of the law fixing the standard of weights and measures. The Legislature has said so in section 3222 of the Political Code. The word "pound," whose meaning is sought to be modified or changed, does not and cannot render the contract ambiguous, because it is a statutory word. "Evidence cannot be introduced of the custom when the same contradicts the plain and unambiguous words of the contract," says the court in Bigelow v. Legg, supra. There is no claim here, either expressly made, or deducible from the pleadings, the evidence or the briefs, that during the negotiations of the parties there was any discussion by or understanding between them that the word "pound" should be used in the contract in any other sense than the usual or statutory one. The contract, as pleaded, is clear and unambiguous. There is no obscurity in its language, and there can be shown no just reason why the word "pound" should be subjected to an interpretation by one of the parties peculiar to himself or his own views.

We are not to be understood as questioning the ruling in the Higgins Case, 120 Cal. 629, 52 Pac. 1080, in so far as it concerns the application of section 1861, Code Civ. Proc., to the peculiar circumstances of that case. But we do think that the decision unnecessarily lays down the rule too broadly, and we have no hesitation in declaring that if the language of the opinion is to be interpreted as holding the rule to be of such indiscriminate and universal application in the matter of the interpretation of express contracts as to embrace all manner of such instruments, regardless of the language in which they are expressed, and including those which, in certain respects, the Legislature has provided must be construed according to other rules adopted by it for that purpose, then we feel constrained to say that we cannot subscribe to it.

There is, however, no attempt made in the opinion in the Higgins Case, 120 Cal. 629, 52 Pac. 1080, to combat the authorities which it is therein stated were "cited apparently holding that a contract of this nature must be conclusively presumed to refer to the statutory weights and measures, at least in the absence of a direct and express reference in the contract to a different standard." Nor is there anything suggested in that case as to what disposition is to be made of section 3222 and the other sections of the Political Code fixing the standard of weights and measures. The conclusion we have reached, after a careful examination of the question under discussion, is that all contracts involving "work to be done, or anything to be sold or delivered by weight or measure," must be as required by section 3222, supra, construed by the light of the statute establishing in this state a standard of weights and measures, unless the parties have expressly agreed to, or used language fairly indicating an intention to be governed by, a different standard; that, if there ever existed anywhere in this state a custom or usage of trade in conflict with the sections of the Political Code referred to, it has been abrogated by those sections to the extent that the law shall prevail over such custom or usage of trade where the parties have not otherwise stipulated in their agreement. But we think that there are features in the Higgins Case which distinguish it from this. The word "gross" is not used in the statute, and has therefore acquired no legal signification, whereas, as shown, the word "pound" is so used and is defined. That the phrase "gross ton" has a peculiar meaning in commercial usage is shown by the declaration of Justice Temple in the Higgins Case "that the phrase 'gross ton' is often used in lieu of the phrase 'long ton' with which we are all familiar in commercial reports, and which always indicates a ton containing two thousand two hundred and forty pounds." The adoption of any other principle of construction than that by which we have been governed in reaching the conclusion here would, it seems to us, result in wiping off our statute books by judicial interpretation legislative provisions, against the wisdom of which no objection in our opinion can be made.

During the direct examination of James M. Reid the plaintiff offered, and the same was received in evidence by the court, a letter, under date of March 17, 1900, addressed to Bell, and written and signed by Reid Bros. This letter called to the attention of Bell the fact that the steel setters had experienced some difficulty in placing the steel columns, "the trouble resulting either from the improper placing of the brackets on the side columns, or the incorrect numbering of them." The inference from the letter was that the trouble and consequent delay was due to "shop errors" in adjusting the steel connections, or mistakes made in marking the plan numbers by which the steel setter should be governed in setting the steel, and for which errors and mistakes defendants were responsible. Testimony had been given on behalf of plaintiff that the steel materials had been marked with a shipping number which was plainly visible, and it also appeared that the plan numbers had been marked on the steel, but had been painted over so that they were somewhat obscure. The setter had undertaken to set the columns, etc., by the shipping number and thus had made the mistakes which caused the delay in this particular. During the cross-examination of Reid counsel attempted to put in evidence a letter from Bell to Reid Bros., dated April 6, 1900, upon the ground that it was a reply to the letter above referred to and explanatory thereof. The court sustained an objection to the admission of this letter. It is contended that the court erred in its ruling excluding the letter. The letter begins with, "I herewith return to you Mr. Arthur's bill of March 31st, and in reply will say that I have submitted a copy of this bill to the New York office, but, in the meantime, I do not consider Messrs. Milliken Brothers responsible for the mistake of Mr. Arthur in setting up the columns by the shipping number in place of the plan number." And then follows an explanation of how Mr. Arthur must have made the mistakes, and that the writer had pointed out the fact to him. The objection was that the letter was hearsay and self-serving. The offer was made, of course, under section 1854, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that "when a detached act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation or writing which is necessary to make it understood, may also be given in evidence." The letter to which the one rejected is claimed to have been a reply is dated, it will be remembered, March 17th. The reference in the rejected letter to Mr. Arthur's "bill of March 31st" might indicate that it was not directly in reply to the letter of the 17th of March. There is, however, nothing in the excluded letter "which is necessary to make" the letter of March 17th "understood." There is but one theory upon which we can perceive that the letter might have been properly admitted, and that is that Reid Bros. in their 17th of March letter, having at least by insinuation charged defendants with the delay due to the mistakes of the steel setter, the refutation by the latter in the letter of April 6th of the charge would prevent the inference of acquiescence by apparent silence. But upon this theory the ruling is without prejudice to defendants, because Mr. Bell in his testimony (page 415, transcript) declared to the jury that the mistakes were due to the carelessness of the steel setter; that Arthur had set up the steel according to the shipping numbers, instead of the plan numbers; that the plan numbers were placed upon the materials so that they could easily be seen; that the shipping numbers upon the columns did not correspond with the setting numbers upon the plans, and that he had pointed these facts out to Mr. Arthur. Thus, it will be seen, defendants presented to the jury all that could by any possibility have been shown upon that question by the rejected letter.

The witness Bell, in detailing a conversation he had with one of the Reid brothers, said, among other things, "that they would not hold us down strictly to February shipments." Upon motion of plaintiff the quoted portion was stricken out by the court, on the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial testimony." The claim of plaintiff is that the statement is only a conclusion of the witness. The part stricken out appears with an extended statement made by the witness of a conversation with Reid, and is presented in narrative form in the transcript, and it is somewhat difficult from the manner in which it thus appears to definitely say whether the language used by the witness was intended to represent what Reid actually said, or was only the witness' conclusion from what he said. The trial court was, of course, in a position to determine whether the part stricken out was a conclusion or not. But the ruling was harmless in any view, because, whether or not the shipments were to be made under the contract in the month of February, was immaterial, if, as we think the evidence conclusively shows, the understanding of the parties was that shipments were in any event to be so made that the building could be completed and occupied by the 1st of July, 1900.

Nor do we think the court committed error in sustaining the objection to the question propounded to the witness Arthur: "The amount of the bill which you rendered for all of this riveting and reframing amounted to $189, did it not?" The witness had already testified that the amount of the bill for the work referred to was the sum of $189, and therefore no injury could have resulted to defendants by the refusal of the court to allow a repetition of the statement. The fact was before the jury for all the purposes for which it might be pertinently used in the case.

While Mr. Reid was testifying, a letter, written by his firm to the defendants, under date of June 8, 1900, was called to his attention on cross-examination by appellants, and on their motion admitted in evidence. The letter related to the differences arising between plaintiff and defendants by reason of the delay in the completion of the building, and the causes thereof. On redirect examination, the witness, over the objection of counsel for defendants, was permitted to explain to the jury "under what circumstances that letter was written." The question elicited a statement to the effect that plaintiff was anxious to settle the trouble, and that witness had in view the purpose of "getting the lowest amount Hale would want to settle for, irrespective of figuring the damages, which it was impossible to do at that time." The letter fixed "the total time of delay at the minimum for the sake of amicable settlement, namely, one month and a half." As the time of delay suggested as the basis of settlement in said letter was considerably less than that to which the witness had testified in the case, it was important to present the reasons why and circumstances under which the letter was written. The objection was, we think, without merit. Defendants introduced the letter into the record, and, if there were any inconsistencies or apparent inconsistencies between the statements contained in the letter and the testimony previously given by the witness on any material point in the controversy, it was proper for the witness, who was the author of the letter, to explain them. A witness who has made at another time statements at variance with his testimony would have the undoubted right to explain or reconcile them with his evidence as given in the case, if he could do so. There can be no reason why the same principle should not apply where the explanation is as to a letter written by the witness, where, of course, there is not imported into such explanation a statement of extraneous matters, or facts foreign to a legitimate explanation. The explanation seems to have been well within the purpose for which it was offered, introducing nothing which could serve any other end than to show the reason why the proposition submitted in the letter was made.

The following instruction was given by the court at the request of plaintiff: "The contract of sale is admitted in the pleadings. It is admitted that on or about the 10th of January, 1900, the plaintiff, Hale Bros., purchased from the defendants, Milliken Bros., and Milliken Bros. sold to Hale Bros., certain steel for their building to be erected in San Francisco, at certain prices per pound. That said steel was to be delivered f. o. b. New York City, during the month of February, 1900. That said steel was to be prepared and shipped according to the plans and specifications prepared by Hale Bros.'s architects. One of the specifications which became a part of the contract was as follows. * * *" It is insisted by appellants that this instruction is erroneous for the reason that, as they contend, while the answer does not deny the contract for the sale of the steel, it does put in issue the allegation that such steel was to be delivered during the month of February, 1900, or during any specified month.

At the request of defendants the following instruction was given by the court: "Defendants, in their answer, do not deny the making of the contract, as alleged in the complaint [the italics are ours], other than they deny that they agreed to deliver the steel at any other place than the city of New York, in the state of New York."

The contract, as alleged in the complaint, is as follows: "Plaintiff agreed to purchase and defendants agreed to furnish and deliver all the steelwork required by the plans, specifications, and drawings made by the architects employed by plaintiff, to be used in the construction of a building to be erected by plaintiff on the lot of land leased, as aforesaid, by plaintiff from David R. Jones, at the following prices: * * * All of said steelwork to be delivered f. o. b. to plaintiff during the month of February, 1900, to enable plaintiff to complete and occupy said building on or before the 1st day of July, 1900, and all of said steelwork to be made and completed in conformity with the plans, specifications, and drawings prepared by the aforesaid architects and delivered in such condition as to be immediately set up in said building." The court submitted for determination by the jury the question as to the place at which the steel was to be delivered. The complaint nowhere by direct averment declares that the steel was to be delivered at any other place than New York City. We are of the opinion that the instruction complained of contained a fair statement of the contract admitted by the answer, and concerning the existence of which there was no controversy at the trial. The question at issue was not whether a contract had, in fact, been made by the parties, but whether or not there had been a breach of the terms thereof by one of the parties. The criticised instruction contains practically nothing more than was embraced in the instruction, from which we have presented an excerpt, given by the court at defendants' own request. It is true the answer denied that delivery was to be made in the month of February, but, even so, the appellants are not in a position to complain of an instruction which, in effect, only harmonizes with one given by the court upon their own suggestion. Besides, as we think we have shown, it is clear from the evidence that haste in the completion of the building was the controlling feature of the contract, as understood by both parties, and as pleaded. The complaint avers that the parties entered into the contract of sale with a plain understanding of the terms of the lease between Jones and plaintiff, and thus discloses the importance to the latter of the completion of the building so that it could be occupied by the 1st day of July, at which time payment of the rent for the ground was to begin. What we have said with reference to the ruling striking out certain portions of witness Bell's testimony applies with equal pertinency and force to the point under discussion. The important element of the contract was haste in the delivery of the steel; that is, such prompt delivery thereof as would insure the completion of the building by the time desired. Of what moment, then, could it be whether the steel was delivered in February or at a subsequent time, if the object sought by prompt delivery were nevertheless accomplished? Under the circumstances of the case as developed by the evidence the instruction could not have prejudiced the defendants.

There are many other errors assigned, some of which are referred to in the briefs of counsel as worthy of notice, but we deem it unnecessary to give them special attention. We have examined them all with care, and can see nothing in them impinging upon the substantial rights of defendants.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HART, J. We have given the petition for a rehearing of this cause careful consideration, and are unable to discover any reason for changing our views, as expressed in the main opinion, upon the questions discussed. It may be suggested that, since filing the original opinion in this case, there has come to our notice the recent case of Leonhart v. California Wine Association, Cal. App. Decs., vol. 12, No. 172 (Feb. 23, 1907), 89 Pac. 847, in which the court of the first appellate district discusses at some length the question of the resort to a custom or usage of trade for the purpose of interpreting the language of a written or other express contract. The authorities cited therein were not called to our attention by the attorneys in the case before us. We think some of them are applicable here. It appears to be the settled rule in this state, and ought to be, that where the contract is certain in its terms, parol proof of a usage is inadmissible. Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 591, 74 Pac. 159. We not only think that the rule thus stated is applicable here, but also reiterate our adherence to the position that, where a statute itself furnishes a rule of interpretation of certain contracts, as we think is the case here, that rule should be the sole guide of the courts in the interpretation of such contracts, unless the parties thereto, by said contract, have themselves interpreted the same, or furnished a rule by the stipulations of the contract for an interpretation different from that prescribed by the statute. The necessary effect of the application of the rule involved in section 1861 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to all cases of the interpretation of contracts, as contended for by counsel and as he insists is authorized by the opinion in the case of Higgins v. California Petroleum & Asphalt Co., 120 Cal. 629, 52 Pac. 1080, would be to provide easy means of varying the terms of any written contract by parol, however plain and well understood the language of such contract might be. We cannot conceive of a more dangerous application of a rule of construction or interpretation, and hardly think the court intended that section 1861, supra, should be pressed, in its application, to the extent to which the language in the Higgins Case may be construed as carrying it.

We feel satisfied with the conclusion reached upon all points made by counsel, and the petition for a rehearing will, therefore, be denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

151 Cal. 181

In re DOMINICI'S ESTATE. (Sac. 1,442.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1907.)

1. Wills—Construction—Ambiguities—Evidence.

Testator gave his residuary estate to his sister J. and to his nephew S. "and his sister, my niece, all residing in" L., Germany. By codicil he recited that his sister J. was dead, and gave her share to "the other two residuary legatees therein named, S., and to his sister, my niece, whose name is K. and whose residence is S., Germany, share and share alike." S. had an only sister, who, at the time of the making of the will and codicil, was a resident of L., and the testator had a niece, the married daughter of another sister, whose name was K., and whose residence was S. Held, that the will presented a latent ambiguity within Civ. Code, § 1340, permitting extrinsic evidence to correct imperfect descriptions in wills, etc., and not a patent ambiguity within section 1318, requiring the court to ascertain the intention of a testator from the words of his will and the circumstances under which it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 1033–1036.]

2. Same.

Though extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain latent ambiguities in a will, and to perfect imperfect descriptions of beneficiaries or subject matter of gifts, no evidence is admissible to vary the testator's express intent; which must be decided from the will itself, assisted by such extrinsic evidence, and, where the evidence is to be employed merely as an aid to the court in determining the intent and that intent cannot be found, the gift must lapse.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 1033–1036.]

3. Same—Statutes—Construction.

Civ. Code, § 1340, providing that, where in a will there is an imperfect description or no personal property answers the description, mistakes and omissions may be corrected, but the declarations of the testator as to his intentions cannot be received, is a limitation on the general rule that, in case of a latent ambiguity in a will, the same may be removed by any evidence or declarations of testator, and it will not be extended beyond its actual language, and applies only to the incidental utterances or declarations of intent as distinguished from specific instructions given to an attorney in drawing a will.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 1023–1032.]

4. SAME.

Where a will without latent ambiguity expresses a clear intent, the declaration of testator to his attorney in drawing the will is inadmissible; such evidence being proper only where the description of the person or property by extrinsic evidence is shown to be doubtful or imperfect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 1027.]

5. APPEAL — OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where a party withdrew his objection to the admissibility of testimony, and asked the court to admit it subject to a subsequent motion to strike out, and no motion was made to strike, the admission of the testimony was not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1258.]

6. WITNESSES—PRIVILEGE OF ATTORNEY—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO WILL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, prohibiting an attorney without the consent of his client from testifying as to any communication made by the client in the course of professional employment, does not prohibit an attorney who drew a will for his client from testifying in a suit involving the construction of the will to communications made by testator.

7. WILLS—CODICILS—EFFECT.

The disposition made by a will will not be disturbed by a codicil further than is absolutely necessary to give the codicil effect, and a clear disposition made by a will is not revoked by a doubtful expression or inconsistent disposition in a codicil.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 462.]

8. SAME.

Testator gave his residuary estate share and share alike to his sister J., nephew S., and his sister, testator's niece, all residing in L., Germany. By codicil he recited that his sister J. was dead, and gave her share to the other "two residuary legatees therein named, S., and to his sister, my niece, whose name is K., and whose residence is S., Germany, share and share alike." S. had an only sister who resided at L. Testator had a niece whose name was K., and who resided in S. Testator had been on terms of intimacy with the S. family, and there had been an absence of intimacy between him and K. and her parents. The attorney who prepared the will and codicil testified that in his discussion with the testator on the subject of family relationships he obtained the idea that the niece to whom the testator desired to leave one-third of the residuary estate was S.'s sister, and he supposed that K. was S.'s sister. Held, that S. acquired one-third of the residuary estate plus one-half of one-third, and his sister received one-third, and K. received one-half of one-third.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Dominici, deceased. From a decree distributing the estate pursuant to a construction given to the will of the deceased, Marie Kohler appeals. Reversed.

See 87 Pac. 389.

W. H. Hatton and L. J. Maddux, for appellant. W. O. Minor, J. W. Knox and Loewy & Gutsch, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Joseph Dominici died testate. Upon distribution question arose as to the interpretation of the provisions of his will and of a codicil thereto, and from the decree as ordered Marie Kohler appeals. The only matter here in controversy is a dispute over the conflicting claims of Marie Kohler and of Christiane Arndt.

The conflict arises under the following state of facts: By his will Dominici provided as follows: "Lastly, I give, bequeath and devise all the rest, residue and remainder of my property, real and personal, of whatsoever kind or character, or wheresoever situated, share and share alike, unto my sister, Louise Jahnke, and unto my nephew, Heinrich Schluter, and his sister, my niece, all residing in Luchow, Hanover, Germany." A codicil, made about three months thereafter, is as follows: "Whereas, it has come to my knowledge that my sister, Louise Jahnke, one of the residuary legatees therein named, is dead, I hereby bequeath, give and devise the share of my said estate in said will given, bequeathed and devised to my said sister to the other two residuary legatees therein named, Heinrich Schluter, and to his sister, my niece, whose name is Marie Kohler, and whose residence is Salzwedel, Altmark, Germany, share and share alike."

No doubt, ambiguity or uncertainty arises upon the face of these provisions. No conflict between them is disclosed; for, while the residence of the testator's niece, Schluter's sister, is given in the will as being Luchow, and in the codicil as Salzwedel, so far as appears from the face of the instrument, the facts might have been that her earlier residence was in Luchow, and her residence at the time of the codicil in Salzwedel. Nor does the name of Marie Kohler, described as the sister of Schluter and the niece of the testator, complicate matters upon the face of the writing, since Marie Kohler might have been the name of a married sister of Schluter. But, when it was attempted to make application of the residuary devisees and bequests to the persons designated, extrinsic evidence at once disclosed a difficulty. Heinrich Schluter did have a sister, and one sister only, who at the time of the making of the will and at the time of the making of the codicil was a resident of Luchow, Hanover. She never resided in Salzwedel. She was unmarried, and her name was Christiane Schluter. Upon the other hand, the deceased did leave a niece, the married daughter of another sister, whose name is Marie Kohler, and whose residence is Salzwedel, Altmark, Germany. There is thus disclosed a typical case of a latent ambiguity. It is not a patent ambiguity contemplated by section 1318 of the Civil Code, but a latent ambiguity, to which section 1340 of that Code is directed. That section provides as follows: "When applying a will, it is found that there is an imperfect description, or that no person or property exactly answers the description, mistakes and omissions must be corrected, if the error appears from the context of the will or from extrinsic evidence; but evidence of the declarations of the testator as to his intentions cannot be received." In its effort, therefore, to determine the true intent of the testator, upon the disclosure of this latent mistake in description, the trial court took extrinsic evidence, as it was proper to do. It concluded that the testator intended to name three residuary legatees, namely, Heinrich Schluter, his sister, Christiane Schluter, and the testator's other niece, Marie Kohler, and so decreed distribution of the residuary third of the estate in equal portions to these three. But this does manifest violence to the expressed intention of Dominici. In terms the codicil declares that the residuary one-third originally left to Louise Jahnke is devised "to the other two residuary legatees" in the will named. There can be but two persons whom the testator had in mind, and, as Heinrich Schluter is indisputably one of these, it is to be determined whom he intended as the other. For even in cases where extrinsic evidence is admitted to explain latent ambiguities, and to perfect imperfect descriptions of beneficiaries, or the subject-matter of devises or bequests, no evidence is admissible to change or vary the testator's expressed intent. This must always be deduced from the will itself, assisted by such extrinsic evidence. The proofs afforded by such evidence are to be employed merely as an aid to the court in determining what in fact was the expressed intent of the testator; and, if that intent may not be so found, the devise or bequest must lapse, since it is not within the power of a court to make a new will. Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011.

The section of the Code above quoted forbids in the giving of such evidence the reception of mere declarations of the testator as to his intentions. This is a limitation upon the general rule which, as stated in 2 American & English Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 298, is that in case of a latent ambiguity, where there are two persons or things equally answering the description, such ambiguity may be removed "by any evidence either of circumstances or declarations of the testator." The text of this citation will be found abundantly supported by authority, and our Code provision limiting the scope of the evidence which may be received appears to be at variance to the general rule. It will not be extended, therefore, beyond its actual language, and will be held to apply to the mere incidental fugitive utterances or declarations of intent, as distinguished from the specific instructions which it may be proved were given. There is, of course, a broad difference between testimony as to the casual remark of a man as to his intention to leave a portion of his estate to this person or the other, and the positive instructions which he has given to his attorney in the very performance of the testamentary act, and in any proper case such instructions may be received, without doing violence to section 1340 of the Civil Code. Thus, in Vernor v. Henry, 3 Watts (Pa.) 385, an ambiguity arose from a discrepancy between the name and the description of a devisee as here, and it was held that explanatory declarations made by the testator at the time of the execution of his will, indicative of his design to give his property in a particular way to a particular person, were admissible in evidence to explain the ambiguity. See, also, In re Gregory Settlement and Will, 34 Beav. 600. It should, of course, be unnecessary to add that, where a will without latent ambiguity expresses a clear intent, such evidence would never be permitted in an effort to show that the intent expressed was a mistaken one. It is only where the description of the person or property by extrinsic evidence is shown to be doubtful or imperfect that such evidence may be employed in the effort of the court to arrive at and declare the meaning and intent which the testator, by the terms of his will, attempted, however irregularly, to declare. This under the familiar rule of evidence that a doubt arising from extrinsic evidence may be removed by extrinsic evidence. In this case, with other testimony, that of the attorney who drew the will was taken upon the matter. By respondent it is objected, though the objection is not pressed with any earnestness, that it was error to receive the testimony of the attorney because it was the disclosure of privileged communications, forbidden by section 1881, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Doubtless the argument is not strongly urged because it appears from the record that, though respondent originally objected to the taking of the attorney's testimony, he withdrew his objection and asked the court to admit the testimony, subject to his subsequent motion to strike out. The testimony was so admitted, and respondent did not move to strike it out. Hence the evidence appears in the case, not only without objection upon her part, but absolutely by her invitation. In the second place, the reason for the rule prescribed in section 1881 ceases in a case such as this, and with the reason the rule itself ceases. Thus, in Doherty v. O'Callaghan, 157 Mass. 90, 31 N. E. 727, 17 L. R. A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 258, it is said: "Undoubtedly, while the testator lives, the attorney drawing his will would not be allowed without consent of the testator to testify to communications made to him concerning it, or to the contents of the will itself; but after his death, and when the will is presented for probate, we see no reason why, as a matter of public policy, the attorney should not be allowed to testify as to directions given to him by the testator, so that it may appear whether the instrument presented for probate is or is not the will of the alleged testator." See, also, In re Wax, 106 Cal. 348, 39 Pac. 624; Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 187, 64 Pac. 294. As said in Weeks on Attorneys at Law, § 165: "The privilege does not apply when the question arises as to the intention of a deceased person in respect to the disposition of his estate. * * * In the case of testamentary dispositions the very foundation of the rule appears to be wanting."

Coming, now, to consider the evidence in the case, it appears that Louise Jahnke was a sister of the deceased, and that Heinrich Schluter and his sister, Christiane Schluter, were children of another sister, and that Marie Kohler was a married daughter of a third sister. It further appears that the deceased had been on terms of intimacy with the Schluter family, corresponding with them and knowing them well; that he knew the name of Christiane Schluter as well as that of her brother Heinrich, and it is in evidence that he wrote to Christiane Schluter shortly before the making of the will. The testimony shows that he was in constant and regular communication with the members of the Schluter family, and that he was kept fully informed of their family affairs. The Schluter family resided at the birthplace of the deceased, in the house he had helped to build before he left Germany. It is in evidence, moreover, that he frequently talked about the Schluter family, calling the individual members of it by name, frequently speaking by name of his niece, Christiane Schluter. As respondent expresses it, "the evidence shows that the Schluters were in his mind all the time." There was an absence of intimacy between him and Marie Kohler and her parents, and there had been little communication between the deceased and the family to which Marie Kohler belongs in the last 20 years of his life. So much for the proofs of relationship and the attendant circumstances. Mr. Dennett, who drew the will and the codicil thereto, testified that at the time he drew the will Louise Jahnke and Heinrich Schluter, the other two residuary legatees, were named, the name of the third residuary legatee was omitted because deceased could not remember her name; that it was understood between the attorney and Dominici at the time the will was drawn that at some future time Dominici would bring his attorney the name of the person to whom he desired the remaining one-third of his property to go, and that, when Dominici obtained the name, a codicil should be written, or such change made in the will as would give the name of such third residuary legatee; that in accordance with this understanding Dominici subsequently came to Dennett's office, and the codicil was drawn; that the name and description of Marie Kohler, Salzwedel, Altmark, Germany, was furnished by Dominici to the attorney; that Dominici explained that he had received a letter from Germany giving the required name and residence. Mr. Dennett's recollection also was that Dominici wrote the name and address of Marie Kohler first in German and then in English; that the name "Marie Kohler, residing at Salzwedel, Altmark, Germany," was undoubtedly written in the codicil in accordance with Dominici's instructions; that Dominici never at any time during the execution of the will or of the codicil mentioned the name of Christiane Schluter. (It may be noted in this connection that the name "Christiane Schluter" nowhere appears in the will.) In the discussion of the family relationships, the attorney obtained the idea that the niece to whom Dominici desired to leave one-third of his property was Heinrich Schluter's sister, and that he supposed that Marie Kohler was, in fact, Heinrich Schluter's sister.

The intimacy between the deceased and the Schluters, and the fact that the Schluters were always in the deceased's mind, is, as a weapon in the hands of respondent, a two-edged sword. If the deceased really intended Christiane Schluter because of the family intimacy, there is no reason from the evidence why he should not have named her, and every reason why he should. Upon the other hand, if he really intended Marie Kohler, by reason of the estrangement between the families and the infrequent communications between them, it is reasonable to suppose that he might not recall the name and residence of the niece whom he actually designed and intended should share his bounty. There does not appear to have been any hostility between the deceased and Marie Kohler, and it is at least as natural that, in the prospect of death, he should have desired each of his sister's families to have shared in his estate, as to have supposed that he designed, for no real reason, to exclude one of them. If Marie Kohler be understood as a residuary devisee and legatee, then by his will he would have made provision that the residuary portion of his estate go in equal shares to the representatives of the families of each of his three sisters. Of even more significance is the fact that he brings to his lawyer and formally gives to him in writing the omitted name and address. If we can conceive that by some lapse of memory, he had at the time of the making of the will forgotten the name of Christiane Schluter, while remembering the name of Heinrich Schluter, her brother, it is not to be supposed that he would have come back, three months after, with the accurate name and address of one niece, under the mistaken supposition that he was really describing Christiane Schluter, who did live in Luchow, and who had never resided in Salzwedel, where Marie Kohler in fact did reside. From what has been said it is thus apparent that in the codicil either the words "his sister" is an error in description, and should be rejected, or the phrase "whose name is Marie Kohler and whose residence is Salzwedel, Altmark, Germany," is a misdescription and that it should be rejected. The circumstances and the evidence as heretofore set forth leave little room for doubt. The consequence attaching to the formal presentation of the name and address of Marie Kohler must be held to be the controlling and dominating circumstance, and, so far as the codicil is concerned, the words "his sister" and "above named" must be rejected as erroneous.

This conclusion, however, affects and can affect the codicil alone. The residuary clause in the body of the will is free from all doubt and uncertainty, latent or patent, and extrinsic evidence, therefore, cannot be admitted to change its terms. However strong the presumption may be that Marie Kohler was also intended in the body of the will, the presumption is one which may not be indulged and in support of which no evidence would be admissible, since the language of the will itself is free from doubt and from the need of construction. It leaves clearly and distinctly, and with no possibility for the play of construction, one residuary third of his estate to the sister of Heinrich Schluter, niece of the deceased, who resides in Luchow, Hanover, Germany. Christiane Schluter, now Christiane Arndt, completely and perfectly fills this description, and is entitled to take, and this, regardless of any disturbing effect which it may be thought that the codicil has upon it. It is a rule of construction that dispositions made by a will are not to be disturbed by a codicil further than is absolutely necessary in order to give that codicil effect, and a clear disposition made by a will is not revoked by a doubtful expression or inconsistent disposition in the codicil. In re Ladd, 94 Cal. 674, 30 Pac. 99; Kane v. Astor's Executors, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 533. Moreover, it is to be noted that the codicil itself does not attempt to overthrow the disposition made by the will, excepting as to the one-third of the residuum of the estate by the will devised and bequeathed to Louise Jahnke. It is upon this one-third alone that the codicil operates, and by its terms one-half of that one-third vests indisputably in Heinrich Schluter and the other moiety of the one-third vests in Marie Kohler. The residuary disposition then should be to Heinrich Schluter one-third plus one-half of one-third, or three-sixths; to Christiane Arndt one-third, or two-sixths; and to Marie Kohler one-half of one-third, or one-sixth.

It is ordered that the decree appealed from be reversed, and distribution ordered in accordance herewith.

CITY OF REDONDO BEACH v. BARKLEY.

(S. F. 4,638.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY—ELECTION—MEETINGS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, § 2, provides that whenever the legislative branch of any municipal corporation, by resolution passed by a two-thirds vote and approved by the executive, shall determine that the public necessity demands a municipal improvement, the cost of which will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income of the municipality, it may at any "subsequent meeting" of such board call a special election, and submit the question of incurring a debt for the purpose. Held, that a resolution calling an election under such section, passed at an adjourned meeting of the board of trustees immediately succeeding the meeting at which the resolution of public necessity was adopted, was passed at a "subsequent" meeting as required.

2. SAME—CLASSIFICATION OF CITIES—"EXECUTIVE."

St. 1883, p. 268, c. 49, § 858, provides that in cities of the sixth class the trustees are to choose one of their number president; section 875 declares that such president shall preside over meetings of the board, and shall sign warrants drawn, written contracts, and conveyances made by the city or town; and section 863 declares that every ordinance shall be signed by the president of the board. Held, that the president of the board of trustees of a city of the sixth class was the "executive" of the city, within St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, § 2, providing that resolutions of necessity for public improvements involving the creation of municipal indebtedness, and the ordinance calling a special election to obtain the consent of the voters, should be "approved by the executive" of the municipality.

In Bank. Application for mandamus by the city of Redondo Beach against S. D. Barkley, city clerk. Writ granted.

Arthur Wright, City Atty., for petitioner. O'Melveny & Stevens, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The city of Redondo Beach, a municipal corporation organized as a city of the sixth class under the municipal incorporation act of March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), filed its application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, its city clerk, to countersign certain bonds which the petitioner proposes to issue. An alternative writ issued, whereupon the respondent demurred to the petition, and the only question is whether the statutory steps precedent to the issuance of the bonds were properly taken.

From the allegations of the petition, which are not disputed, it appears that the board of trustees of the city, at a regular meeting held on January 8, 1906, passed and adopted, by the unanimous vote of all its members, a resolution determining that the public interest and necessity demanded the construction by the city of a septic outfall sewer system; that the estimated cost of the said improvement was $80,000; and that said cost was too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of the city. This resolution was on the 8th day of January, 1906, approved by the president of the board of trustees, and was duly published. On said 8th day of January, 1906, the board of trustees adjourned the regular meeting to the 15th day of January, 1906, and on the latter day to the 29th day of January, at which time said board, by the unanimous vote of all its members, passed and adopted an ordinance calling a special election to submit to the qualified voters of the city the proposition of incurring a debt of $80,000 for the purpose of constructing such sewer system. This ordinance was, on the 29th day of January, 1906, approved by the president of the board of trustees, and was duly published. The special election was held as provided in the ordinance, and more than two-thirds of the voters voting at said election voted to authorize the issuance of the bonds. The board of trustees canvassed the returns, and declared that said bond issue had been carried by the requisite two-thirds vote. On April 30, 1906, the board sold the bonds for par. The respondent refuses to comply with repeated requests to countersign the bonds, and this proceeding is instituted to compel him to countersign them.

It is conceded that, except in two particulars, the steps required by the statute for the issuance of such bonds were properly taken. The objections urged are these:

1. The resolution determining that the public interest and necessity demanded the construction of the sewer system was passed at a regular meeting of the board held on January 8, 1906, and the ordinance calling the special election was passed at an adjournment of said meeting, on January 29, 1906. It is claimed that this was not a compliance with the statute under which the bonds were to be issued (St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32), in that said statute requires that the ordinance calling the special election be passed at a "subsequent meeting" to that at which the resolution of public interest and necessity was adopted. Section 2 of the act in question reads: "Whenever the legislative branch of any city, town or municipal corporation shall, by resolution passed by vote of two-thirds of all its members, and approved by the executive of said municipality, determine that the public interest or necessity demands the acquisition, construction or completion of any municipal improvement, * * * the cost of which will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of the municipality, it may at any subsequent meeting of such board, by the vote of two-thirds of all its members, and also approved by the said executive, call a special election and submit to the qualified voters * * * the question of incurring a debt for the purpose set forth in said resolution." The respondent argues that an adjourned meeting is not a "subsequent meeting"; that in contemplation of law the meeting which is held pursuant to adjournment is merely a continuation of the original meeting. It is, doubtless, true that an adjourned meeting is, in a sense, a part of the meeting which was adjourned, and we are cited to cases, not dissimilar to the present, in which it was so held. Thus, in Staates v. Borough of Washington, 44 N. J. Law, 605, 43 Am. Rep. 402, an ordinance was introduced at a meeting of the common council held on May 2d. The meeting was adjourned to May 9, 1868, at which time the ordinance was passed. It was held that this was not a compliance with a clause of the charter, providing that no ordinance (of the character of the one in question) "shall be enacted or passed, unless the same shall have been introduced before the common council at a previous meeting." To the same effect is Flood v. Atlantic City, 63 N. J. Law, 530, 42 Atl. 829. On the other hand, in Montgomery v. Dormer, 79 S. W. 913, 181 Mo. 5, the contestant in an election contest gave notice that he would contest the election of respondent at the next term of the circuit court, to be held on December 15, 1902. This was an adjourned session of the October term; the next regular term being in January. The notice was held to authorize a hearing at the December term under a statute providing that "the contest shall be determined at the first term of such court that shall be held * * * after service of notice of contest," etc. A similar ruling was made in Burkleo v. County Commissioners, 38 N. W. 108, 38 Minn. 441, under a statute providing that, when a petition for opening a road is presented to the board, the county auditor shall lay it before the board "at their next session thereafter." See, also, State v. Ross (Wash.) 89 Pac. 158. In none of these cases was the language of the statute or charter the same as that here involved, and we think the question is one that must be determined by a consideration of the precise terms employed by the Legislature, read in the light of the purposes sought to be accomplished. The statute of 1901, authorizing the issuance of bonds for municipal improvements, provides for a determination by the legislative branch of the municipality that the public interest or necessity demands the improvement in question. There is no requirement that this determination shall be published, or that notice of it shall be given in any way. All that is required is that the special election, at which the matter is to be submitted to the voters, shall be called at "any subsequent meeting of the board." Such subsequent meeting may be a stated or a special meeting, and no particular time is required to intervene. The purpose of the provision seems to be that some period shall elapse between the close of the session which declares the necessity of the meeting and the opening of the session at which the election is called. The council is not to bring up the question, pass on its necessity, and provide for its submission to the voters at a single meeting. There is to be some period for deliberation between the first step and the second; but, as no particular period is specified, we see no reason why the object of the statute is not accomplished as fully where the meeting is adjourned to a stated time, as where it is adjourned sine die, and a new meeting called. These views are confirmed by a consideration of the prior statute providing for the issuance of bonds for municipal improvements. Under that act (St. 1889, p. 399, c. 261), the legislative branch was required to determine the necessity, etc., of the proposed work by ordinance, which was to be published for at least two weeks. After such publication, they might "at their next regular meeting after such publication, or at an adjourned meeting," call a special election. The two statutes being in pari materia, the former may, under well-known principles, be considered in giving a construction to the latter. We see, then, that the later statute eliminates the provision for a two weeks' publication of the determination of necessity, and, in place of the requirement that the election may be called at the "next regular meeting after such publication or an adjourned meeting," substitutes the simpler and more general phrase "at any subsequent meeting." It seems clear that the Legislature, in making this change, did not intend to restrict the power which the common council had under the earlier act, but to enlarge it, and that any subsequent meeting, whether regular, special, or adjourned, comes within the terms of the law. See Adcock v. Lecompt, 66 Mo. 40.

2. Section 2 of the act of 1901 provides that both the resolution of necessity and the ordinance calling the special election shall be "approved by the executive" of the municipality. The approval in this instance was by the president of the board of trustees. It is argued that the municipal incorporation act does not make the president of the board of trustees of cities of the sixth class the executive of the municipality, and that, as to such cities, no executive is provided. There is no merit in this objection. The statute of 1901 provides for the incurring of bonded indebtedness by "any city, town or municipal corporation incorporated under the laws of this state." It was not intended that any class of cities should be denied this power, and, when the statute speaks of the "executive" of the city, it must, as to cities which have no mayor, be taken to refer to the officer whose duties approximate most closely to those of the mayor, or "executive," in cities which have such officer. In cities of the sixth class, the trustees are to choose one of their number president. Mun. Incorp. Act, § 858; St. 1883, p. 268, c. 49. Such president is to preside over meetings of the board, to sign warrants drawn on the treasurer, written contracts entered into by the city or town, and conveyances made by the city or town. Section 875. It is also provided (section 863) that every ordinance shall be signed by the president of the board of trustees. These functions correspond to those of the mayor in the classes of municipal corporations in which a mayor is elected as such. We are satisfied that the approval of the resolution by the president of the board met with the requirement of the act of 1901.

A peremptory writ of mandate will issue, as prayed.

In re BOYES' ESTATE. (Sac. 1,430–1,437.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 8, 1907.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD — ACCOUNTING — ISSUES AND PROOF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1635, providing that, on the hearing of an account, any person interested may appear and file his exceptions in writing to the account and contest the same, a hearing on objections to a guardian's account was limited to the issues raised by the account and the written objections filed, so that, in the absence of a written objection that there was a fund available for the wards' support other than the principal of their estates, evidence in support of such claim that the guardian might have obtained an order for a family allowance was inadmissible.

2. SAME—EXCEPTIONS.

Exceptions to a guardian's account, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1635, providing that, on the hearing of an account, any person interested may appear and file exceptions in writing to the account and contest the same, are not limited to a mere written statement of the points or matters wherein the credits or charges in the account are claimed to be objectionable, but may also include a statement of any affirmative matters of fact not appearing on the face of the account, which it may be claimed require additional charges in favor of the estate or the rejection of credits.

3. SAME—DUTY OF COURT.

In proceedings for the allowance of a guardian's account, it is the duty of the court, regardless of exceptions, to scrutinize the account, correct all errors, reject all items of credit which appear illegal or excessive, and generally to inquire into the truthfulness and accuracy of the items of charges and credits and of the facts alleged in the accompanying report.

4. APPEAL—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where certain papers were admitted in proceedings for the judicial settlement of a guardian's account for the sole and express purpose of proving a question not within the issues, the ruling was not harmless because the papers or parts of them were competent evidence of other facts material to the case as finally developed.

5. GUARDIAN AND WARD — ACCOUNTING — HEARING—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—WAIVER OF ERROR.

The guardian did not waive the error by subsequently introducing evidence in rebuttal on the question sought to be proved by the erroneous introduction of the papers.

6. SAME—CHARGES—INTEREST.

Where a guardian delayed settlement of his final account after the ward arrived at age, there could be no valid objection to a charge voluntarily made against himself of 8 per cent. interest on the balance in his hands, in the absence of evidence that he received more.

7. SAME—EXPENDITURES AFTER MAJORITY.

Where a guardian after the ward became of age continued as before, with the ward's knowledge and consent, to support him and pay money to him out of the ward's estate received by the guardian during the ward's minority, and there was nothing unfair or unjust in the transactions, the guardian should be allowed credit in his account for the estate thus applied to the ward's use to the extent of the amount of the estate remaining in his hands, but was not entitled to a personal claim against the ward for any overpayment.

8. SAME—CREDIT FOR MAINTENANCE.

It was improper for a guardian to charge a ward's account for support of the ward as a member of a family consisting of the ward's mother and brothers and sisters for a year during which the ward was not at home.

9. SAME—DUTY OF GUARDIAN.

The fact that a guardian was one of the administrators of the estate of the wards' deceased father was immaterial to the determination, on the settlement of his accounts as guardian, of the question whether his duty as administrator required him to obtain a family allowance for the wards, since, if such was his duty, and he failed to perform it, the remedy must be sought in the administration proceedings or by suit against him for breach of such duty, and not by exceptions to his account as guardian.

10. SAME.

Where a guardian was one of the administrators of the estate of the wards' father, and if he had attempted to enforce his claims against the estate as a mortgagee, and had not borrowed from the estate of his wards to pay debts of the estate and had applied for a family allowance, the estate would have been rendered insolvent, the guardian did not abuse his discretion in failing to apply for such allowance and in using the wards' estate for their support.

11. ACCOUNT—FORM—ITEMIZED CREDITS.

Where a guardian was one of the administrators of the estate of the wards' deceased father, and as such borrowed money from their estate to pay debts of the father's estate under an agreement with the mother of the wards that they should live together as members of a family, and that there should be paid out of the funds of the father's estate for their maintenance a sum equal to the interest which would accrue on the money so borrowed, and that such sums paid for maintenance should be charged against the children by the guardian, and that he should credit them with the same sums in his accounts as guardian as interest collected on the money loaned, an account crediting the guardian with maintenance of the minors for a certain period with an amount exactly equal to a charge for interest so received was sufficiently specific.

12. SAME — ALLOWANCE — ORDER OF COURT — NECESSITY.

An order of court is not necessary to enable a guardian to charge a fixed reasonable sum by the week, month, or year for the maintenance of his wards.

13. SAME—APPORTIONMENT OF EXPENSE.

Where, after the death of the father of certain wards, it was arranged between their guardian and the mother that the mother should continue to support and maintain the wards in one family, it was no objection to the guardian's account that household expenses for the benefit of the family were apportioned numerically among the wards without reference to differences of actual consumption.

14. SAME—PAYMENT OF BALANCE.

Where it did not appear that a new guardian had been appointed to succeed an accounting guardian, an order discharging the accountant on paying the balance to another described as the guardian of the minors was erroneous.

15. SAME—SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—DUTY OF MOTHER.

While a mother ordinarily owes the duty of nurturing and caring for her children without compensation from their estate, circumstances may exist which might justify their guardian in paying the mother for her services in caring for such children out of their funds.

16. SAME—EXPENDITURE OF PRINCIPAL.

Where the income of a ward's estate is insufficient for his support, and expenditures from the principal are necessary and reasonable, and are made in good faith, the guardian may be allowed credit therefor without obtaining authority from the court in advance.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Judicial accounting by Jerome Churchill, as guardian of Alice Amelia Boyes and others, children of Charles B. Boyes, deceased. From an order settling the accounts, the guardian appeals. Reversed.

Gillis & Tapscott, for appellant. John H. Magoffey and R. S. Taylor, for respondents.

SHAW, J. On November 27, 1903, Jerome Churchill filed his accounts as guardian of the children of Charles B. Boyes, deceased. Although he was appointed as such guardian on July 10, 1890, this was the first account rendered to the court. There were eight of the children, and a separate account was filed for each child. At the time of filing the accounts five children, namely, Alice Amelia Boyes, Mattie Angeline Boyes, John Ethan Boyes, Fannie Jane Boyes, and Damie Elizabeth Boyes, had become of age. The five adults appeared, and each filed written objections to the account relating to him or her respectively. The attorneys for the adults were at the time of the hearing appointed by the court as attorneys to represent the three minors, but no written objections were filed in their behalf. The several accounts were heard together, and thereupon the court made a separate order settling each account. From each of these orders the guardian prosecutes a separate appeal. These appeals are numbered on the docket of this court for the Sacramento district, respectively, as follows: No. 1430, Alice Amelia Boyes; No. 1431, Mattie Angeline Boyes; No. 1432, John Ethan Boyes; No. 1433, Fannie Jane Boyes; No. 1434, Damie Elizabeth Boyes; No. 1435, Dora Maria Boyes; No. 1436, Lutie Anson Boyes; No. 1437, Charles Combs Boyes. The evidence is brought up in a consolidated bill of exceptions, and the appeals will be considered together.

1. The entire estate of the wards in the hands of the guardian consisted of the sum of $1,120 to each ward, derived from a life insurance policy on the life of the father. The credits claimed by the guardian were almost wholly for money expended for their support, and it exhausted the respective estates, excepting those of the two eldest and the two youngest. The guardian, Jerome Churchill, and Margaret Jane Boyes, the mother of the children, were administrator and administratrix, respectively, of the estate of their deceased father, Charles B. Boyes. As such, they had filed three separate current accounts of their proceedings in said estate, which had been duly approved and settled by the court, and the estate still remained unsettled at the time of the hearing of the guardian's accounts. Upon the hearing of the latter, the contestants offered, and the court received in evidence over the objection and exception of the appellant, all the papers on file in the estate of John B. Boyes, deceased, including the three accounts rendered and settled, the inventory and appraisement, and proceedings resulting in a sale of real estate of the deceased. This evidence was offered to show the solvency of said estate and the value thereof, and expressly in support of the claim on behalf of the children; that there were sufficient assets of said estate to have supported the children during minority, if an order had been obtained for a family allowance for that purpose to the widow, or guardian; that it was the duty of the guardian to procure such an order; that he failed to do so; and that by reason of such failure he cannot, as guardian, be allowed any credit for payments out of the insurance money for such support. The objection of the guardian to the admission of this evidence was that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

We think the court erred in overruling this objection. In substance, the claim sought to be proven by the evidence was that there was another fund available for the support of the children which the guardian could have obtained for them, or for their use, that it was his duty to secure this fund, and that he had neglected to do so. The written objections to the guardian's accounts contained no suggestion of any such claim and tendered no such issue. One of the elemental rules of the law of evidence is that the evidence must correspond with the allegations and be confined to the point at issue. Code Civ. Proc. § 1868. If not, it is said to be irrelevant. 16 Cyc. 847, 1111; 1 Taylor on Evidence, § 217. The objection was therefore well taken, if the issues are to be considered as limited by the account and report on the one hand and the written objections on the other. That they are so limited and that the evidence is to be limited accordingly is the rule established by the Code and by the decisions of this court. Section 1635 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, upon the hearing of an account, any person interested may appear and file his exceptions in writing to the account, and contest the same. The word "exceptions" was probably used with reference to the equity practice of filing exceptions to the report of a master in chancery. But in the practice which has grown up in this state, under this section, the office of such exceptions has been much enlarged, and the word has come to include, not only a statement in writing of the points or matters wherein the credits or charges in an account are claimed to be deficient, defective, or erroneous in law, but also a statement of any affirmative matters of fact, not appearing on the face of the account, which, it may be claimed, require additional charges in favor of the estate, or the rejection of credits claimed against it. In the case of the Estate of More, 121 Cal. 639, 54 Pac. 148, the court says: "Under these provisions, if a person interested in an estate wishes to contest an account presented for settlement by the executor or administrator, he must file his exceptions in writing to the account, setting out specifically the grounds of his objections; and at the hearing he should be held limited to the exceptions so presented." In the same connection the court stated that, without any objections, it was the duty of the court to carefully examine the account and reject all unjust or illegal claims. These principles were again approved by the court in Estate of Marre, 127 Cal. 132, 59 Pac. 385, in which it is said that the rule that the exceptions must be in writing and the evidence limited thereto is a "salutary" one. We do not doubt, however, that, regardless of the filing of exceptions, the court has power, and it is its duty, to scrutinize the account, correct all errors therein, reject all items of credit which appear to be illegal or excessive, and generally to inquire into the truthfulness and accuracy of the items of charges and credits, and of the facts set forth in the accompanying report. And in the course of such investigation it may require and receive evidence to prove or disprove the several items and facts thus under inquiry, although no contest is made. But we are not dealing with an independent investigation set on foot by the court, for none was instituted. We are dealing with a contest created by the filing of written exceptions, and with the right of the contestant to introduce evidence in support of the objections therein set forth. As above stated, his right must be limited by the grounds of contest set forth in his exceptions, and the matters appearing on the face of the account and report. There was nothing in said account or report referring to such neglect of the guardian. It did not show whether the father's estate was solvent or insolvent, nor the amount of its assets, nor whether or not a family allowance had been made therein. The claim in support of which this evidence was offered and given was therefore affirmative matter which should have been stated in the exceptions, in order that the guardian might have notice and an opportunity to answer or avoid the same in any appropriate and legal manner.

We would not say that the admission of such evidence, under such state of the record, would in all cases be error so injurious as to require a reversal of the judgment or order. But in this case, as we shall presently see, the result of the admission of the evidence was substantially injurious to the appellant, and a reversal is necessary. In point of law these papers, or parts of them, were competent evidence of other facts material to the case as it finally developed. If they had been offered for the purpose of proving such facts, there would have been no error in admitting them. But the record shows that the papers were offered and admitted for the sole and express purpose of proving the solvency of the estate and thereby establishing the proposition that the appellant, as guardian, was not entitled to any credits whatever for any money of the wards received by him as guardian, and applied by him to their maintenance. Having been received and offered for that purpose over the objection and exception of the guardian, the fact that some of the papers might have been admissible, and could have been properly considered for some other purpose, would not constitute a waiver of the objection, nor preclude the guardian from asserting error in the admission of the papers for the purpose for which they were offered and considered. Nor did he waive the objection by his subsequent conduct in introducing evidence to rebut the fact of insolvency or counteract the effects of the papers in any other respect. Having made the objections, and the court having overruled them, and having made the proper exception thereto, the guardian was at liberty to accept the decision for the purposes of the future conduct of the case, and his doing so did not constitute a waiver.

2. The objections stated in the written exceptions filed were (1) that the charges, credits, and balances were not segregated and separately stated; (2) that the account was uncertain as to the items of charges against the respective wards, and as to the balances due each; (3) that the items of the expenditures were not shown; (4) that none of the items of expenditures for the wards were legal or proper charges against them; (5) that the balances and the computations of interest were inaccurate; and (6) that the guardian had used the principal of the estate without authority from the court. The court apparently found that none of these objections, except the fourth, were well taken. In each order settling the accounts it is recited that the account is incorrect in the following particulars: "(a) In the items of debits against said guardian after the time when said minor arrived at the age of majority. (b) In the items of credits taken by said guardian after the time said minor arrived at the age of majority. (c) In the items of credits and debits taken by said guardian before the time at which said minor arrived at the age of majority, for the reason that said minor should have been supported by the estate of her father, C. B. Boyes, deceased, until she arrived at the age of majority; that the amount with which said guardian should be charged is the sum of $1,120, which was received by him the first day of October, 1890, and interest thereon." In the orders settling the accounts of the wards not yet of age, the first two of the above recitals were omitted; otherwise they were all in the same form. These recitals are in the nature of findings, and they show the grounds upon which the orders settling the accounts were based. These were, first, that charges and credits accruing after the ward becomes of age cannot be allowed in settlement of a guardian's final account; and, second, that, having neglected to obtain an allowance for their support out of their father's estate in the hands of the administrators, Churchill cannot be allowed credit for actual expenses for that purpose out of the insurance money received by him as guardian. There is no finding that the sums claimed were not paid in support of the children, that there was any uncertainty or inaccuracy, that the accounts were not properly itemized, or that there was not authority to use the principal of the ward's money for their support. The only credits to the adult wards, accruing after they became of age, are items of interest on the money for each year thereafter, at 8 per cent. per annum. This was properly included in the accounts. Where there is unreasonable delay by the guardian in making final settlement after the ward is of age, the court, in settling the account, should charge the guardian at least 7 per cent. interest annually on any balance he may have had on hand when they arrived of age, unless there are circumstances absolving him from such charge. Clearly, therefore, there can be no valid objection to a charge of 8 per cent. voluntarily made by the guardian against himself, unless he is shown to have received more, which is not asserted.

With regard to credits claimed by the guardian against the adult wards, accruing after they became of age, the circumstances do not show good reasons for rejecting them all on that ground alone. In the case of In re Allgier, 65 Cal. 228, 3 Pac. 849, there is a dictum to the effect that the court, in settling a guardian's account, has no jurisdiction of transactions arising between the guardian and the ward after the latter becomes of age. This, however, manifestly refers to transactions which do not arise out of any settlement between them regarding said estate and are not in any way connected with that estate, nor with any disposition the guardian may have made thereof, either by paying or delivering it to the ward, or expending it for his benefit with his knowledge and consent, or at his request. Where such transactions concerning the estate, or such dispositions of it, have occurred after the majority of the ward, the court, upon the settlement of the final account, not only has jurisdiction of them, but it is its duty to inquire into them, allow the payments, and approve or disapprove other dispositions of the ward's estate by the guardian, and allow or refuse credit to the guardian accordingly. If the guardian, after the ward becomes of age, has continued, as before, with his knowledge and consent, to support him, or pay money for him, out of the ward's estate received by the guardian during the minority of the ward, and there is nothing unfair, or unjust to the ward in the transactions, the guardian should be allowed credit in his account with the estate thus applied to the ward's use. If he has overpaid the money in his hands and other estate remains, he may be allowed a lien on the estate for the overpayment, but he cannot be given a personal claim against the ward for such overpayment in any case. Estate of Kincaid, 120 Cal. 203, 52 Pac. 492.

In the account with Mattie Angeline a credit is claimed for her support during the year 1899 as a member of the family. It appears from the statement in the account that she was not at home during that year, and did not receive the support claimed. Nothing is said about this in the briefs, and it may be a mere inadvertence or clerical error. On the face of the account it appears to be an improper credit.

The principal ground for the rejection of the credits appears to have been the failure of the guardian to secure their support out of the estate of their father. The fact that he was one of the administrators of that estate is of no importance here; for, if his duty as administrator required him to obtain a family allowance for them, and he failed to do so, the remedy must be sought in the proceeding for the administration of the estate, or by a suit against him for a breach of that duty, and not by exceptions to the account of the guardian. Nor does good reason appear for the rejection of all the credits to the guardian because of such failure, conceding that, under some circumstances, it might become his duty, as guardian, to press a claim against the father's estate for such family allowance. If that estate was in fact insolvent, no family allowance for a longer period than one year could have been made. Until July 15, 1891, which was 15 months after the issuance of letters of administration on the estate of Boyes, the children were all supported out of the estate of Boyes, or, at all events, from some source other than the money received by the guardian for them. The credits claimed by the guardian for their support did not cover any part of this period. Consequently, if we assume that the estate was insolvent, the guardian could have obtained no family allowance during the time for which he claims credit for their support in these accounts as guardian, and his failure to obtain it was no ground for disallowing his credits.

The assets of the father's estate were appraised at $58,564.34, and the debts allowed, exclusive of subsequently accrued interest, amounted to only $31,036.43, and hence the estate appeared to be solvent. But the assets consisted chiefly of horses and mortgaged lands, and at the time of the death of Boyces, and for many years afterwards, they were unsalable at the appraised value. The horses could not be sold for cash, and after several years they were sold on credit and a chattel mortgage taken on them as security for the price. This debt the administrator has been unable to collect, and it is now represented by a mortgage for some $40,000, including interest, on certain Los Angeles property, which has been in litigation until recently. The real property of the estate was sold by the administrators in 1895, but it did not bring enough to pay the mortgages thereon. The mortgagees, Mr. Churchill being one of them and interested in all of them, discounted their claims more than $10,000, and accepted the proceeds in full satisfaction. In order to preserve the estate and carry it over the period of low prices without sacrifice of the property, the insurance money of the children was borrowed for the use of the estate, at 8 per cent. annual interest, upon an arrangement with the mother that the interest was to be applied as far as it would go in support of the children. This insurance money was paid out upon the debts of the estate. This was not sufficient to satisfy the demands of the creditors, and Mr. Churchill advanced of his own means and paid upon the debts of the estate and expenses of administration sums which, with interest to November 25, 1902, amounted to $26,561.45, which sum is still owing to him from said estate. By reason of a recent general advance in the values of real estate in Los Angeles, the Los Angeles mortgage, taken to secure the debt for the horses, has become worth its face. The evidence shows, without serious conflict, that there was no time, until this advance, at which the property of the estate could have been sold for money enough to have paid the debts of the estate and the expense of administration. The advance in the value of the Los Angeles property began only two or three years before the filing of the account, and it does not appear that the mortgage held by the estate thereon could have been collected before the accounting by any means within the control of the administrators.

These were the circumstances under which the guardian was called upon to determine his conduct of the wards' estate. It was certain that if the estate of the father had been made to pay out further sums by way of a family allowance, amounting to anything near the sums shown to have been paid by the guardian in its support, its insolvency would immediately have been demonstrated.

This would, perforce, have compelled the cessation of any payments on such family allowance. The attempt to obtain the family support in that way would have defeated itself. The estate was practically insolvent. It is extremely doubtful whether he would have been justified in pressing against the estate a claim for such allowance, under such circumstances, and, if he had done so, whether he would not have been chargeable with malfeasance either in his capacity as guardian, or as administrator. But, at all events, it must be conceded that the question whether or not he should have compelled the estate to support the family, or should have supported them as he did, out of the guardianship funds, was a matter committed to his sound discretion as guardian. His duty was to pursue that course which would best subserve the interests of the children, but he was not bound as an insurer of the wisdom of the course adopted. He was only bound to the use of such care, diligence, and sound judgment as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in matters of similar importance to himself. In such circumstances he must act according to his own best judgment and discretion. The court should be liberal in judging of the conduct of a guardian who, when confronted with such problems, uses his best judgment and acts with ordinary diligence and prudence, in good faith, and with a view to the proper discharge of his duty to his wards. Estate of Schandoney, 133 Cal. 393, 65 Pac. 877. There appears to be no doubt that the guardian, in the present instance, was acting throughout the entire proceeding in the utmost good faith. Indeed, he went far beyond the requirements of the law in voluntarily advancing his own money to preserve the property of the estate of the father from sacrifice, and, although this was done in his capacity as administrator, he is entitled to have it considered in judging of the wisdom and good faith of his conduct as guardian. The court below erred in assuming that there was a hard and fast rule which prevented the allowance of credit to the guardian for the money thus applied in support of the wards. Upon the case as presented, he should have been allowed credit for the money properly expended for the support of the wards during their minority. And, unless it should appear upon a new trial that the money properly expended for that purpose for the adult wards, after their majority, was expended without their knowledge and consent and voluntarily on his part, we think he is also entitled to credit therefor, to the extent of the money in his hands belonging to them, respectively, but not to a personal claim for any excess in his favor.

3. Complaint is made that the charges and credits were not properly itemized. These objections seem to have been disregarded, but in view of another trial it becomes necessary to consider them. In each account there are three items of credit against the ward for maintenance for certain stated periods, and they are identical. These items and periods are: $150.08 from July 15, 1891, to March 1, 1893; $239.92 from March 1, 1893, to September 1, 1895; and $44.80 from September 1, 1895, to March 1, 1896. They exactly balance corresponding charges against the guardian for interest accruing during the same periods upon the money of the respective wards loaned to the estate of Charles B. Boyes, deceased, as above stated. The explanation given in the report is that it was arranged between the administrator of the estate and the mother of the wards that the mother and children should all live together as members of the family, that there should be paid out of the funds of said estate for their maintenance a sum equal to the interest which would accrue on the money so borrowed by the estate, and that these sums paid for maintenance of the children should be charged against them by the guardian, and that he should credit them with the same sums in his accounts as guardian, as interest collected on the money loaned. The form of the items will be shown by quoting one of them. It is as follows: "Sept. 1, 1895. By amount paid for the maintenance of said minor from March 1st, 1893, to Sept. 1st, 1895—$239.92." It is claimed that this is not a sufficient specification of the items of charges and credits; that it does not appear how much was paid on account of any particular child, nor how much of the supplies furnished was consumed by each. A family of children, under any ordinary circumstances, should be kept under the care and nurture of their mother, if possible. It is seldom possible, when this is done, to have accurate accounts kept showing the precise expense on account of each child. It is customary to apply to the court for an order fixing a lump sum by the week, month, or year, which is to be allowed and paid to the mother for such maintenance. This is perhaps the better method, as it serves as a protection to the guardian against a subsequent revision of his conduct, and also to some extent as a protection to the children against excessive payments. It also avoids the great expense that would be involved in the keeping of separate accounts of supplies furnished to each child. We do not understand, however, that a previous order of the court is necessary. In re Beisel, 110 Cal. 270, 40 Pac. 961, 42 Pac. 819. The guardian may make a contract for such support without the sanction of the court; and, if it is for a reasonable amount, the court should allow him credit therefor in his account. 21 Cyc. 66. Guardians are not always men of great efficiency in the matter of bookkeeping, and estates are not always of sufficient amount to justify an elaborate system of accounts. In cases where such contract is made without the order of the court, it is a sufficient itemization to state in the report accompanying the account, or elsewhere in the account, the particulars of the contract or agreement made to secure the maintenance of the ward, and to state in the account proper the sums paid in pursuance thereof. The method pursued in the account in question was a sufficient compliance with this rule. It would be the duty of the court to scrutinize the contract or arrangement whereby the money was applied to maintenance, and to see that it was just and fair, and that the sum for which credit was claimed did not exceed the sum paid in pursuance of the agreement. But, if the guardian acted in good faith, and the contract was fair and just, the fact that the precise expense for each child was not separately provided for by the arrangement made, or was not shown in the account, would not of itself deprive the guardian of the right to credit for money actually paid or applied to the support of the wards.

The bulk of the credits claimed by the guardian consists of a list of items paid on general account for the support of the family as a whole during the years following March 1, 1896; the particular ward being charged with his proportion of the entire sum for each year separately. The items of expenditure are given in great detail, and no objection is made on that account. But it is claimed that it is not fair to the respective wards that each should be thus charged with a numerical proportion of the total expense of the support of the whole family, regardless of the fact that many of the items may have been incurred for some one or more of the other members exclusively, and that the account furnishes no means of ascertaining whether or not all the members participated equally in all the supplies furnished. With regard to food furnished no such segregation of the account would be possible. Nor can we say that it would be unreasonable to keep the family together, and charge each with the same share of the total expense of that character, although the appetite of one may have far exceeded that of another. The same would be true of many other things consumed in the household. The slight inequalities that would occur between the different children in this respect would be more than compensated by the advantages of having them reared as a family, under the care of a mother and surrounded by the associations of brothers and sisters. It would be entirely proper for the trial court to invite or inaugurate investigations in regard to this matter, and, if it found that the expenses for the respective children were substantially unequal, and that any fair conclusion could be reached in regard to the amount justly chargeable to each ward, to give or refuse credit accordingly, and to adjust the credits between the respective wards according to the amounts justly chargeable to them. We cannot, in advance of a new trial, lay down a specific rule to govern the court in this particular case. In general it must be said that if the guardian has acted in good faith in expending money for the benefit of the wards, and the expenses thus incurred have not been unreasonable or excessive, he should be given the proper credit for the money actually so expended, although he may not be able to trace every item to the particular child. In matters of this nature much must be left to the sound discretion of the guardian by the trial court, and, after it has passed upon the questions, much must be left to the sound discretion of the trial court by the appellate tribunals. It may be a difficult task for the court below to examine into these matters and determine how much of the credits claimed by the guardian should be allowed in one account and how much in another, but it should endeavor to adjust them between the respective wards, if the evidence enables it to do so. It is not justified in rejecting all of the credits because some of them are improper.

4. The order settling the accounts as to the two youngest children provides that the guardian shall be discharged upon payment of the balance to one C. Henry Haight, their guardian. It does not appear that any order has been made removing Mr. Churchill as guardian, or appointing Haight as such guardian in his place, or as an associate with him. If, in fact, no such order of appointment has been made, the order for payment to Haight was erroneous.

5. It appears from the evidence that the supplies for which the guardian claims credit were used for the support of the entire family, including the mother. There is some evidence of an understanding that she should receive support to this extent out of the children's estate in return for her services in taking care of them. It does not appear that the court below decided as to the existence or validity of such an agreement. Ordinarily a mother owes to her children the duty of nurturing and caring for them, without compensation from their estate, but circumstances may exist which would make it proper to pay her for such services out of their funds, and to make an agreement to that effect. If the court, upon another trial, finds that it was not proper to charge the children for her support, it should make such deduction on that account from the credits for support, as it may deem reasonable from the evidence.

6. It is claimed that the guardian cannot be given credit for money paid out of the principal of the estate in support of the wards, because he did not obtain a previous order from the court authorizing such use of the principal. We have no statute on the subject. The authorities are conflicting. We believe the more reasonable rule to be that where the income is insufficient, and the expenditures out of the principal are necessary and reasonable, and are made in good faith, the guardian should be allowed the credit, although no authority was obtained from the court in advance.

In each case the order appealed from is reversed.

TRACY v. CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 5, 1907.)

1. SALES — ACTION FOR PRICE — BREACH OF WARRANTY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover the balance due on the contract price of an engine, where there was a defense of breach of contract and guaranty, and a cross-claim for damages, evidence considered, and held sufficient to sustain the finding of the court that certain knocking of the engine and flickering of the light produced by the electric plant run thereby were not caused by any defect of the engine, and that the engine was not defective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 1279.]

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The appellate court will not reverse an order of a trial court refusing a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of fact, if there is substantial evidence to support the findings of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3872.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by H. H. Tracy against the California Electrical Works. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank M. Parcells, for appellant. William H. Schooler, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeal from order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Defendant entered into a contract in May, 1900, with A. C. Bilicki & Co., whereby defendant agreed to furnish and install an electric light plant in the basement of the Hollenbeck Hotel, in the city of Los Angeles; said electric light plant to consist of a dynamo of a specified description, and an engine known as a "Shepard cross-compound, vertical non-condensing engine." Defendant, in order to carry out its contract with Bilicki & Co., entered into a contract with the Tracy Engineering Company, a copartnership (assignor of plaintiff), whereby the Tracy Engineering Company agreed to furnish the engine, and install both the engine and dynamo, which was furnished by defendant, in the Hollenbeck Hotel for a stipulated price. The contract between the defendant and the Tracy Engineering Company contained various stipulations concerning the engine, and among other things the following guaranty, to wit: "The party of the second part guaranties the material and workmanship entering into the construction of engine for one year, and any defects or flaws developing within the said one year from date of acceptance will be made good by the party of the second part, unless it is shown that such breakage, flaws or defects were caused by unskillfull management of the machinery during the said one year." The engine was furnished and the plant installed by the engineering company, and the engine was accepted by defendant on the 3d day of November, 1900, as completed and having run six days successfully, conditionally, however, upon the results of a test to be thereafter made as to economy and regulation; any defects found during that test to be made good, according to the contract. The electric plant, however, proved to be unsatisfactory, and after efforts, both by the engineering company and defendant, to discover the cause and to correct its defects, extending over several months, defendant was obliged to remove the plant from the hotel, and to pay damages in the sum of $1,650 to Bilicki & Co. Plaintiff, as assignee of the Tracy Engineering Company, brought this action to recover of defendant the sum of $1,284, being the alleged balance due on the contract price of the engine. Defendant for a defense pleaded a breach of the guaranty concerning the engine, and also, by leave of court, set up, by way of cross-complaint against the Tracy Engineering Company (said company having been made by order of court a party to the action), a breach of its contract and guaranty concerning said engine and damages resulting to defendant by reason thereof. Defendant claimed that the engine was defective, and that by reason thereof when in operation it caused a loud and continuous knock or pound, and also caused the lights generated to flicker. There is no dispute as to the fact that, after the acceptance of the engine, the lights generated by the electric plant did flicker, and that the engine, when operating the dynamo, did "knock" or "pound." Defendant claimed that the "knock" or "pound" was caused by defects in the engine, and that the flicker of the lights was caused by the "knock" or "pound," or, at any rate, by some defect in the engine; while the plaintiff and the Tracy Engineering Company claimed that the flicker of the lights was not caused by the "knock" or "pound," or by any defect of the engine, and that the "knock" or "pound" was not caused by any defect of the engine, but was caused by unskillful management of the engine. The court found against the contentions of defendant, and it is the action of the court in this regard that is attacked by this appeal.

Appellant urges with great earnestness that the evidence shows without conflict that both the flicker in the lights and the "knock" were caused by some defect in the engine. A careful examination of the record certainly discloses very persuasive evidence to the effect that both the "knock" and flicker of the lights were caused by some defect in the engine; but we also find substantial evidence supporting the conclusion that neither the "knock" nor the flicker were caused by any defect in the engine. Evidence was given on behalf of plaintiff that the engine was not defective when turned over to the engineer of the hotel, and was at that time working all right. Edward H. Minor, a mechanical engineer, who had charge of the work of installing the plant, testified that he ran the engine for about eleven days before turning it over to the engineer of the hotel. He first ran it five days, and then shut down to correct some trouble with the armature (a part of the dynamo), which caused some noise. After this was repaired, the engine was started again, and ran all right for six successive days, when it was turned over to the engineer of the hotel. During this time witness testified that there was not the slightest trouble or difficulty with the lights. The engine ran five days successfully, and then six days successfully, and everything ran correctly. There was no unusual noise, and no flicker in the lights. "The material and workmanship which entered into the construction of that engine are first-class. * * * When I went away the engine was running all right. When I came back it was not, in my judgment. It had been misused or abused. * * * I was conversant with the engine in its entirety, and knew it to be a first-class engine, and knew it was running in good order, and that everything was in first-class shape about it when I went away." H. N. Tracy, a member of the firm of the Tracy Engineering Company, and a mechanical engineer, testified that he first saw the engine in operation after it had been running five days. There was then a jar or bump, which he located in the armature shaft, and corrected. "When it started up there was no bump or knock discernible. It was started then again on the 28th of October. This engine was the quietest direct-connection engine I had ever seen. It then ran all right for six days successfully, when we got the letter of acceptance on November 3d." He further testified that he returned in two or three weeks, when it was found that the lights flickered when the engine was examined and subjected to certain tests by experts. He testified that he was convinced that the engine was all right, and that "I came to the conclusion that they had treated the engine shamefully. After a careful examination, lasting over quite a period of time, I am satisfied that the engine had nothing to do with the flicker of the lights." It was shown by certain tests that the revolutions of the shaft that imparted motion to the dynamo were uniform in speed. Edward S. Cobb, a consulting mechanical and hydraulic engineer, examined the plant in question as an expert, and testified that in his opinion there was no causal connection between the "knock" in the engine and the flicker in the lights; there was no rhythmic connection between them. Other witnesses testified to this effect also. This witness also testified to certain alternating discolorations in the commutator bars in the dynamo, which always appeared after the dynamo had been run for a time, whereupon the flicker in the lights would appear. This witness gave his opinion that the flicker was caused by some fault in the dynamo. Clarence N. Cory, witness for plaintiff, professor of electrical engineering, and engaged also in the business of consulting electrical and mechanical engineering, was furnished with full data concerning the tests and estimates made by Mr. Cobb and Mr. H. N. Tracy, respecting the engine and dynamo in question, made mathematical calculations based upon that data, and reached the conclusion that the disturbing cause of flicker of lights was located in the dynamo. He further said: "I took up the question of the engine tests, and I am satisfied that the flicker was not caused by the knock or pound of the engine, and the knock might be caused by many things, but in this case the engine did not produce the flicker. * * * I should say that the knock would be caused rather from improper handling than from any inherent defect in the engine." John Lafferty, a witness for defendant, and an expert engineer, employed as such by the Hollenbeck Hotel, had charge of the plant for some time, and testified that he did not think the knocking was responsible for the flicker, although in another part of his testimony he disclaimed all knowledge as to what did cause the flicker. J. W. Milstead, a witness for defendant, and an expert steam engineer, worked on engine for 24 days for defendant, testified to knock in engine, but said in regard to the engine: "There was not anything erroneous in its construction. There was not any knocking whatever so far as I know when there was no electricity generated. * * * I don't pretend to say that the knock or noise affected the lights." W. W. Hanscom, also a witness for defendant, and an expert engineer, who examined the plant, testified: "A knock or pound in an engine that was being run for the first time I should not consider of any importance. I could not see that the jarring or knocking was directly or immediately the cause of the flicker." He also said that if, after the dynamo started up, the flicker gradually appeared, it might be due to the engine, or it might be due to the generator. Other witnesses testified that the flicker did gradually appear in this way. He also testified to the alternating discolorations in the commutator bars, and that this showed defects in the commutator bars.

Other evidence was given of a similar character to that which we have above set forth; but we think we have specified enough to show that there is in the record sufficient evidence to support the findings of the court that the engine was not defective, and that neither the flicker in the lights nor the "knock" in the engine were caused by any defect in the engine. It is true, as we have before stated, that there is in the record much persuasive evidence supporting a contrary conclusion; but this court cannot reverse the order of the trial court for insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of fact, if there be any substantial evidence supporting the findings made by the trial court.

No other point being suggested why the order should be reversed, the same is affirmed.

TRACY v. CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS. (Civ. 204.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 5, 1907.)

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by H. H. Tracy against the California Electrical Works. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank M. Parcells, for appellant. William H. Schooler, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeal from order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

In this action defendant pleaded as a counterclaim the same matters pleaded as a defense, and by way of cross-complaint, in the action of the same title, and numbered 205, this day decided by this court. 90 Pac. 461. The two cases involved the same issues, and were tried upon the same testimony, and the same grounds are urged for a reversal of the order.

For the reasons set forth in the opinion this day filed in said action No. 205, the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

5 Cal. App. 319

MANUEL v. FLYNN. (Civ. 244.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1907.)

1. BOUNDARIES—ESTABLISHMENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit involving the location of the boundary between adjacent owners, evidence held to support the finding of the trial court as to the location of the boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Boundaries, §§ 184–194.]

2. APPEAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The findings of the trial court based on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983–3989.]

3. WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in a suit involving the location of a boundary, the testimony of a party was confined to his employment of a surveyor to run a line to ascertain the boundary and to what the surveyor had done to establish a line, the court did not err in sustaining an objection to a question on cross-examination if that surveyor was the only surveyor who had surveyed the land for the party and who had run the lines testified to.

4. EVIDENCE—ADMISSION OF ALTERED INSTRUMENTS—PRELIMINARY PROOF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1982, providing that a party producing a writing as genuine which has been altered must account for the alteration, a party offering an instrument on its face presenting evidence of having been altered must, on objection to its admissibility, account for the alteration if it involves a material part of the instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 1579.]

5. SAME.

A written agreement executed by adjacent landowners fixed the location of a corner and the location of a tree by description by reference to monuments and distances therefrom. After the execution of the instrument, the number "11," inserted in the agreement as indicative of the dimensions of the tree, had been written in such a manner as to give it the appearance of the number "41," and it was changed so as to read "11." Held, that the alteration was immaterial, and the court did not err in admitting the instrument in evidence in a suit involving the location of a boundary between the adjacent owners.

6. SAME.

The proper time for a party objecting to the admission in evidence of a written instrument offered by the adverse party on the ground that the same has been altered to offer his evidence in support of his contention is when the question of the admission of the instrument is before the court for determination.

7. APPEAL—RULINGS OF TRIAL COURT—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The conclusion of the trial court from the evidence on the issue of the alteration of an instrument offered in evidence is binding on appeal, unless the party offering the instrument admitted that he had without the consent of the other party altered the same in some material matter, or the evidence accounting for the alteration enabled the court on appeal to say as a question of law that it could not support the conclusion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3955–3969.]

8. EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial involving the location of a boundary, the declaration of a party at a time the adverse party was building a line fence that he had all the land that belonged to him was admissible as a declaration against interest within Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2, permitting proof of the declaration of a party as evidence against him.

9. NOTICE—SERVICE—PROOF—CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE.

The service by a constable of a notice commanding an owner of land to restore a fence, alleged to have been removed by him, to its proper place, is not an act within the constable's official duties, and his purported certificate of service is not prima facie evidence of service.

10. APPEAL—RECORD—REVIEW.

Affidavits alleged to have been used on the hearing of the motion for a new trial, but not incorporated in the bill of exceptions, and not authenticated as required by rule 29 (78 Pac. xii), will not be considered on appeal, though included in a stipulation between the attorneys to the effect that the motion was heard on enumerated papers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; A. G. Burnett, Judge.

Action by D. A. Manuel against P. H. Flynn. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Weber & Rutherford, for appellant. T. B. Hutchison, for respondent.

HART, J. Action to quiet title and for damages claimed to have been suffered by plaintiff through certain alleged tortious acts of defendant.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff "ever since the 23d day of February, 1884, has been the owner, in possession of and entitled to the possession of certain real property, situate within the county of Napa, state of California," and of which a description is particularly set out. The title in plaintiff to the lands as described in the complaint is not questioned, but the controversy arises over the line dividing the lands of the parties, and involves a certain strip of land which the plaintiff claims is within the description of the property belonging to him, but which defendant insists is within the boundaries of his lands. It is also charged, by appropriate averments, that on the 9th day of May, 1901, the defendant committed a trespass vi et armis upon said property of plaintiff, and that on the 14th day of May, 1901, he likewise entered upon the property in dispute, and "maliciously tore down and destroyed the fence belonging to said plaintiff along the north and east sides of said plaintiff's land for a distance of about one mile." It is charged that, by reason of the trespass first alleged, the plaintiff suffered damage in the sum of $2,000, and that because of the alleged destruction of the fence he was damaged in the sum of $100. Other damages are alleged to have been sustained in the sum of $100 and $200, respectively, for cutting down and destroying trees on plaintiff's property, and by reason of the alleged fact that through the destruction of the fence the stock of plaintiff was enabled to and did run at large, etc. It is alleged that defendant claims some interest in plaintiff's property adversely to the latter. The complaint is unverified. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, both as to plaintiff's ownership of the certain strip or portion of the land referred to and as to the damages claimed. The question presented by the pleadings, aside from the incidental question of damages, is as to the ownership of said strip of land, approximately two chains in width and something like a half mile long. The plaintiff was given judgment, quieting his title to the strip of land in controversy, and awarding him damages in the sum of $200—$100 for the destruction of the fence as alleged and $100 for the alleged injury suffered by plaintiff through the running at large of plaintiff's stock, in consequence of the alleged destruction of the fence and the loss thereby to him of the value of the pasturage upon said lands. The last-mentioned item of damages was, however, upon the order of the court at the time the motion for a new trial was made remitted by the plaintiff, and the judgment, so far as it affected damages, was reduced accordingly. The conclusion of the court was, as the findings of fact and judgment show, that the plaintiff's contention as to the location of the line between the lands of the parties was sustained by the evidence. The appeal is from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

1. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of the court, and specifies the particulars in which the evidence, according to his view, sustains his position. There appears from the record some conflict in the evidence relative to the disputed line dividing the respective properties of the parties. There is seldom presented to the appellate courts a record on appeal of which the same thing may not be said where the sufficiency of the proof of the ultimate fact is challenged. But we think the evidence as shown here fully sustains all the material findings, from which the judgment derives ample support to uphold it. While it could serve no useful purpose to consider the evidence in detail, in view of our opinion as already expressed that it fully justifies the findings of the court upon all the essential propositions in the case, it may be well to explain the exact point of difference between the parties, and make a brief statement of the facts bearing upon that point as established by the evidence. The lands of the appellant are situated without the exterior boundaries of the grant known as the "Rancho Carne Humana," near Calistoga, Napa county, while the lands of the respondent are located within the boundaries thereof. In the determination of the ultimate fact, it became necessary to locate through the evidence the eastern boundary line of said ranch as made by certain early surveys. The respondent contends, of course, that the strip of land in dispute is embraced within the boundary line of said rancho, while the appellant claims that it is not, and the whole controversy finally hinges upon and is reduced to the determination of the location of what is known as "corner 51." This corner was thus designated by one Tracy, a surveyor, who surveyed the rancho in the early 60's, and was thereafter designated as "corner 32" by one T. J. Dewoody, a surveyor, who, in the month of February, 1867, and in the month of August, 1868, surveyed the rancho, and which survey so made by him was subsequently confirmed by the United States District Court, and contains a full description of the boundary lines of said rancho. In the year 1886 and again in the year 1887 one O. H. Buckman, a surveyor and civil engineer, surveyed, at the request of the plaintiff, a portion of the land of the latter for the purpose of ascertaining the location of the line, and at the trial testified that he "ran the north line of lot 5, a part of the line of the Rancho Carne Humana, and some of the lines of the government surveys adjoining. One of the corners of the rancho is on the line of Mr. Manuel, commonly called 'corner 51' of the Tracy survey." He said that he was familiar with the field notes of the "Tracy survey of the Carne Humana Rancho as affecting corner 51, and also with the field notes of the Dewoody survey" of said rancho, and that, according to the field notes of those surveys, there was no change made in the Dewoody survey and corners 50 and 51. There was other evidence to this point. The plaintiff testified that he built a fence on the line made by Buckman a short time after the latter made his survey, and that the same remained on that line until destroyed by defendant a short time prior to the institution of this suit. There were other witnesses who corroborated the testimony thus given on behalf of plaintiff. There was also admitted in evidence a written agreement, made in February, 1884, and to which the plaintiff and defendant and Ephraim and T. A. Light (the latter owning lands adjoining those of the former) were parties, which stipulated as to the correct location of "corner 51." There is some testimony directly tending to show that the line as contended for by plaintiff was consistent with the number of acres embraced within his lands, as described by metes and bounds; that is to say, that, including the strip of land in dispute in the computation of the number of acres embraced within the description of the lands belonging to plaintiff, the latter would only have the number of acres to which he was entitled. On behalf of defendant, there was evidence contradictory of that given for plaintiff. Wallace, a civil engineer, testified to having made a survey of the disputed line of the rancho a short time previous to the trial of this action. His testimony, as well as that of one Lillie, who stated that he was then engaged in the business of a carpenter, but had studied and had had some experience in surveying, was, as to the location of the grant line and "corner 51," opposed to that given for plaintiff. There was also testimony given by neighbors and old settlers in the locality of the lands of the parties tending to corroborate the testimony of the surveyors thus testifying for the defendant. The evidence, so far as such a proposition may be determined from the bare record, seems to greatly preponderate in favor of the plaintiff's contention. It was, however, as is well understood, for the court below to pass upon the weight and probative force of the evidence, and, having done so, and made its findings accordingly upon evidence sufficient to justify them, its conclusions are beyond our power to disturb.

2. The appellant complains of a large number of alleged errors in the rulings of the court on the admission and rejection of testimony. There are only a few of these which we think justify special notice. The plaintiff testified to having employed surveyor Buckman to run some lines for him for the purpose of ascertaining the proper line of division between his lands and those of the defendant. The witness stated that he was present when Buckman made the survey, and confined his testimony to the fact of the employment of Buckman and what the latter had done in the matter of marking the corners, etc., as established by said survey. Upon cross-examination the witness was asked if Buckman was "the only surveyor who surveyed that land for you, and who ran the lines you have testified to?" An objection that the question was not cross-examination was sustained. The witness had not been questioned on his examination in chief as to any other survey having been made at his request than the one concerning which he testified. We can understand how such a question, if its purpose is the impeachment of the witness, or laying the foundation therefor, might be proper on cross-examination; but the question here was not in a form to imply any such purpose. If the defendant deemed it important to show that the witness had caused other surveys to be made than the one to which he testified in chief, he was not at liberty to do so by making the plaintiff his own witness before the latter had closed his case. He could have called him for that purpose, had he desired to do so, upon the presentation of his defense. Counsel declares that a more pertinent question could not have been asked in cross-examination of the witness in view of his direct testimony. It is true that the right of cross-examination should be given considerable latitude or not be restricted where it is apparent that it will accomplish some important purpose, and is not carried beyond the scope of the examination in chief. The power of cross-examination is one of the most efficacious weapons with which truth may be pursued and discovered. The law, it must be admitted, has contrived no other method or test so productive of that result. Trial courts, therefore, in the exercise of the discretion committed to them as to the extent of the cross-examination, should, for the sake of the discovery of the truth of a disputed fact, give it full range for that purpose, and yet the discretion of which we speak should never be abused, or given such elasticity as to permit an adversary party to prove his own case under the guise of cross-examination by thus propounding questions which are neither directly nor collaterally related to the subject-matter of the original examination. The truth sought by a cross-examination must, of course, be in respect of and limited to the material matters to which the witness has testified in chief, and, when such examination transcends that limitation and purpose, it ceases to be cross-examination. It does not appear what defendant's purpose was in asking the question, but, whatever its purpose, the form in which it was put rendered it, in our opinion, not pertinent cross-examination, and the court's ruling thereon was not erroneous.

3. The written agreement to which we have referred as having been entered into by and between the plaintiff, the defendant, and the Lights, and which was received in evidence, was objected to by appellant because it had been altered in some respects. The instrument upon its face presented evidence of having been at some time altered after it was written. This objection having been made, the burden was upon plaintiff to explain or account for such alterations, if they involved a part thereof material to the question in dispute. Section 1982, Code Civ. Proc. The plaintiff was therefore questioned as to the alterations, and testified that the name "Dewoody" had been inadvertently and unnecessarily written in the agreement twice, and that the erasure of the name in one place was made before the agreement was signed. Plaintiff also testified, and likewise his son, William A. Manuel, that, after the agreement was signed, he observed that the first figure of the number "11," inserted in said agreement as indicative of the dimensions of one of the "witness trees," had been written in such manner as to give it the appearance of a figure "4," which would have made the number read "41" instead of "11." The son of plaintiff, upon discovering the apparent mistake, changed the figure so that it conformed, as he declared, to what it was intended to be and what was understood to be the dimensions of the tree by the parties when the agreement was executed. The location of the tree was definitely fixed in the agreement by descriptive reference to other monuments and its distance therefrom, and was marked "B. T." by the parties, so that, whatever might have been its dimensions, it was thus clearly capable of identification as the "witness tree" to which the parties had reference when making the agreement. This erasure was therefore, in our opinion, immaterial. The other erasure was, as observed, shown to have been made previous to the signing of the agreement and in any event immaterial. No attempt was made by the defendant to contradict the explanation of the erasures by plaintiff until the defendant took the stand in his own behalf. He said that all the erasures were made subsequent to the signing of the instrument. But the proper time for him to have offered this testimony upon the point was when the question of the admissibility of the document was before the court for determination. And, even so, the court's conclusion from the evidence upon that issue would be binding here, unless, of course, it appeared that it was admitted by the plaintiff that he had without the consent of the other parties altered the agreement in some part material to the question in controversy subsequent to the execution of the instrument, or the evidence accounting for material alterations was such as to enable us to say that, as a question of law, it would not support the conclusion of the court.

4. The witness Doda was permitted, over an objection by defendant, to state that during a conversation with appellant the latter, at a time when the fence built by respondent was still intact, said that he (appellant) had all the land that belonged to him. The deduction from this statement by appellant was that the fence constructed by respondent was, under appellant's belief then, on the correct dividing line of the lands of the parties. The evidence, while, of course, furnishing only a circumstance and not conclusive upon the point to which it related, was undoubtedly admissible as a declaration against the interest of the defendant. Section 1870, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc.

5. Nor was error committed in the refusal of the court to admit in evidence a paper purporting to be a notice served on the plaintiff by the defendant through one Scott, then a constable, commanding the respondent to restore a fence, charged to have been removed by him, to "its proper place." The notice was signed by the defendant and a certificate attached to it by Scott, setting forth that the same had been served by him on the plaintiff. The testimony disclosed the fact that Scott had died previous to the time of the trial. If the notice was proper testimony for any purpose, the document was nevertheless inadmissible. The service of the notice was not an act within the constable's official duties under the law, and his purported certificate was not even prima facie evidence of the fact of service. This document was shown to the plaintiff when he was on the witness stand, and he denied that he had ever been served by any one with such a notice. It was then that it was offered in evidence by counsel for appellant. The court's ruling excluding the alleged notice was proper.

6. There appears in the transcript certain affidavits of defendant, his son, Thomas Flynn, and Rollo Fay, deputy recorder of Napa county, which affidavits, it is claimed in the briefs of appellant, were used on the hearing of the motion for a new trial. The affidavit of defendant is to the effect that he was surprised at the testimony given for the plaintiff of some of the witnesses, that he did not anticipate such testimony, and was, therefore, unprepared to meet it at the trial; and alleged that, if a new trial were granted, he could produce evidence to contradict it, etc. The other affidavits set forth facts in opposition to those testified to by said witnesses which affiants deposed that they would give in evidence upon another trial of the cause. These affidavits are not incorporated in a bill of exceptions, but counsel claim that they can nevertheless be considered on this appeal, because of a stipulation entered into between the attorneys representing both parties, to the effect "that the foregoing printed pages shall constitute the transcript on appeal in the above-entitled cause, and that the appeals may be heard thereon," and "that the papers therein mentioned are correct copies of the originals on file in the superior court of Napa county, with the endorsements of the dates of filing the same," etc. Said stipulation appears in the transcript, but not in the statement or in a bill of exceptions, and is signed by the attorneys for appellant and the attorney who tried the case for respondent and who has died since the taking of the appeal. (The present attorneys for respondent were thereafter substituted for and in the place of the deceased lawyer.) It is not clear that the stipulation includes the affidavits mentioned. But, whether it does or not, we think that, under the rule of this court and the decisions, the affidavits, not being incorporated in a bill of exceptions and therefore not authenticated as required by rule 29 (78 Pac. xii) of this court, cannot be considered on this appeal. In Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 237, 52 Pac. 491, there appeared in the transcript certain affidavits, upon which was indorsed the following: "Affidavits of ———, used on hearing of the motion for a new trial. John Hunt, Judge." These affidavits were not incorporated in a bill of exceptions and authenticated as required by rule 29 of the court, and it was held that they could not for that reason be considered on appeal. The court says: "When a motion for a new trial is made upon the ground of accident or surprise, it must be made upon affidavits (Code Civ. Proc. § 658); but whether an affidavit was 'used on the hearing' can be determined only by the judge before whom the hearing was had, and as there is no other mode provided by law for authenticating the affidavits which may be used on the hearing of the motion, under rule 29, they cannot be considered on the appeal unless they are incorporated into a bill of exceptions. [Citing Herrich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. 299; Von Glahn v. Brennan, 81 Cal. 261, 22 Pac. 596; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 114 Cal. 60, 45 Pac. 1022. See, also, Skinner v. Horn, 144 Cal. 279, 77 Pac. 904.] A bill of exceptions, settled as directed by section 651 of the Code of Civil Procedure, would contain all the affidavits upon which the judge acted in making the order, but the indorsement by him upon certain affidavits that they were used at the hearing of the motion does not make them the record of the papers upon which the motion was heard, since it does not appear thereby that these were all the papers used at the hearing. [Citing Shain v. Eikerenkotter, 88 Cal. 13, 25 Pac. 966. See, also, San Diego Savings Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299 et seq.]." In that case, it is to be noticed, even the indorsement upon the affidavits by the judge who heard the motion that they had been used on the hearing, they not having been incorporated in a bill of exceptions, is held to be insufficient to meet the requirements of the rule. Certainly where, as here, there is nothing more than the mere stipulation of the attorneys showing that they had been so used could not authorize their consideration upon appeal. Moreover, it does not thereby or otherwise appear that they constituted all the affidavits and papers used on the hearing.

We find no error in the record prejudicial to the defendant.

Judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

BROWN v. WRIGHTMAN et al. (Civ. 339.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 15, 1907.)

DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—RESTRICTIONS—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE FOR BREACH.

Plaintiff conveyed land to defendant's predecessors in title; the deed containing the condition that the grant should become void if the business of selling intoxicating liquors or keeping a bawdy house was ever conducted on the premises. Plaintiff subsequently sold parts of a tract lying immediately across the street from the first without making these restrictions, and the purchasers, with his knowledge and consent, conducted thereon bawdy houses and saloons. Plaintiff also leased parts of the second tract, understanding that they were to be used for such purposes. Held, that the plaintiff had waived his right to claim a forfeiture of the first tract for a violation of a restriction in the deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by Joseph Brown against Henry Wrightman and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Byron Waters and Henry Conner, for appellant. T. J. Norton, E. E. Millikin, and Gill & Densmore, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants. Appellant contends that the findings of fact made by the superior court entitled him to judgment against the defendants as prayed for in his complaint.

A summary of the findings of fact material here shows: That on the 14th day of December, 1886, plaintiff sold and conveyed to defendants' predecessors in title 45 acres of land adjoining the town of San Bernardino. The deed of conveyance contained the following condition: "This grant is made upon the following expressed condition subsequent, to wit: That there shall never be conducted upon said premises or any part thereof the business of selling intoxicating liquors at retail, nor shall there ever be kept or maintained upon said premises or any part thereof any bawdy house, house of ill fame, or house of prostitution, and in case of the happening of either of said events then this grant to cease and be void." At the time of such sale and conveyance plaintiff owned and resided, and still continues to reside, upon a tract of 15 acres of land lying immediately west of said 45-acre tract with only the width of a street intervening. At the time of said conveyance, the district in which said two tracts of land were situated was a residential district, and free from the business and houses of the character mentioned in the said condition; but in the years between 1891 and 1900 plaintiff sold portions of the tract of land so retained by him to various parties, without restricting or limiting the use of the premises, and that said parties to whom the said portions were so conveyed established and maintained and continue to maintain thereon, with full knowledge, consent, and acquiescence of plaintiff, houses of prostitution and places where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail, and plaintiff during said years himself leased to persons conducting houses of prostitution and carrying on a retail liquor business houses located on said 15-acre tract, understanding that they were to be used for such purposes. And said district in which both of said tracts of land were situate ceased to be a respectable residence neighborhood, and before the year 1902 became a district wholly devoted to places of lewd resort, houses of prostitution, and retail liquor business, and that plaintiff directly, knowingly, and deliberately contributed to and acquiesced in such change. On October 28, 1902, the defendant the South San Bernardino Land & Improvement Company sold four lots in said 45-acre tract to defendant Miller, who erected thereon two cottages, which have been occupied since about January 1, 1903, by the two defendants Bertha Smith and B. Flores, who have conducted bawdy houses therein and used said houses as places of prostitution and for the sale of intoxicating liquors at retail. Plaintiff brought this action to have the court declare a forfeiture of title to the 45-acre tract under the condition above set out, and for restitution of the possession of the premises. The trial court held that plaintiff had waived his right to claim a forfeiture of any part of said lands, and that he was estopped by his own acts from complaining of the violation of the condition by his grantees or their successors in interest, by reason of the transactions and business heretofore or that may hereafter be done or performed in violation of said condition on the lots conveyed to Miller as aforesaid.

The statement of facts found compels the conclusion reached by the trial court. As a reason why the plaintiff should not be divested of his right to a forfeiture of the lands in question, appellant contends that his conduct with reference to other lands can have nothing to do with his right to the lands conveyed upon condition. The description of the two tracts as shown by the numbers of lots and blocks show them to consist of contiguous portions of the Rancho San Bernardino, and parcels of the same lands; but, conceding them to have been held by different title, we are not aware of any rule which considers the place of the act constituting the waiver or estoppel, if the act be such as to cause the result upon which the waiver or estoppel depends. No authority has been called to our attention which would permit the plaintiff to render it impossible to fulfill the purpose for which the condition subsequent was placed in the deed, if the act by which this was accomplished were done on one side of the street, while he would not be permitted to do so if the act were done on the other side of the street. This attempted distinction "sticks in the bark." The authorities cited by appellant declare the rule that forfeitures are not favored by the courts, and that conditions providing therefor are to be construed liberally in favor of the holder of the estate, and strictly against the enforcement of the forfeiture. Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855. See, also, Reclamation Dist. v. Sels, 145 Cal. 184, 78 Pac. 638. The waiver and estoppel found by the superior court are sustained by numerous cases. In Duncan v. Central Pass. R. Co., 4 S. W. 231, 85 Ky. 525, the restrictions were inserted in the deed of plaintiff to the defendant to carry out a general plan of selling the property for residence purposes only. Subsequent sales of lots in the tract without such restrictions were held to constitute a waiver or abandonment. The court says: "A contract, the fulfillment of which becomes unreasonable, will not be enforced at the instance of a party who by his own conduct has produced such a result." In Jenks v. Pawlowski, 56 N. W. 1105, 98 Mich. 110, 22 L. R. A. 863, 39 Am. St. Rep. 522, it is said: "Restrictions of this class are sustained upon the theory that a party has the right, in disposing of his property, to prevent such a use by the grantee as might diminish the value of the remaining land, or impair its eligibility for other uses. But is there no mutuality in such agreements? It certainly cannot be said that a grantor has the right afterwards to sell an adjoining lot without restrictions, and thereby diminish the value of his former grantee's property and impair its eligibility for other uses, converting the locality into a saloon locality, and still be allowed to insist upon the restriction." In Chippewa v. Tremper, 42 N. W. 532, 75 Mich 36, 4 L. R. A. 373, 13 Am. St. Rep. 420, the restricting condition on which the forfeiture was asked applied only to the sale of intoxicating liquors. Held, that evidence of the sale of liquors by one of plaintiff's officers in a building erected upon an adjoining lot to that of defendant was admissible to show a waiver of the condition by plaintiff, and, also, as tending to show an effort upon plaintiff's part to create a monopoly, and that a court of equity would not lend its aid to create a monopoly in selling poisons, any more than it would in the selling of foods or other necessaries.

These authorities appear to be directly applicable here, and sustain the conclusions and judgment of the trial court.

The judgment affirmed.

MERIDIAN OIL CO. v. DUNHAM.

(Civ. 334.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District California. April 8, 1907.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONSIDERATION.

A vendor who has accepted and retained the agreed consideration cannot question its adequacy in an action for specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 151.]

2. SAME—PART PERFORMANCE OF ORAL CONTRACT.

In order to justify equity in granting specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land, there must be a part performance, consisting of the payment of the purchase price, accompanied by a change of possession or an expenditure of money on the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 120–139.]

3. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—ACCOUNTS.

In a suit by a corporation to enforce specific performance of an oral contract to convey land to complainant, it was proper to admit in evidence a book entry on plaintiff's journal showing the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1432–1483.]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—DEFENSES.

In a suit by a corporation to enforce specific performance of a contract, whereby complainant's president agreed to convey land to complainant in consideration of stock of the corporation, the fact that the stock, after its issuance to defendant, was subsequently used pursuant to a subsequent contract to aid the company in financial difficulties, and that defendant thereafter advanced money to the corporation, did not entitle defendant to withhold conveyance until payment of his claims.

Action by the Meridian Oil Company against F. H. Dunham. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

SHAW, J. Action to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey real estate.

On July 14, 1902, the plaintiff was a corporation having a board of three directors, of which defendant and his wife were members, and president and secretary, respectively, thereof. It had in process of construction an oil refinery located upon certain lands, which were then owned, or afterwards acquired, by defendant. At a meeting held on said date, all the directors being present, its board adopted a resolution to purchase from the defendant the real estate upon which it was constructing its plant, and pay therefor in capital stock of the company, and authorized the secretary to issue said stock to the defendant. The stock was issued in accordance with said resolution and delivered to defendant, who conveyed, or caused to be conveyed, to plaintiff, all of the property except the three lots involved in this action, and which he did not then own, but subsequently acquired. Plaintiff took possession of the property, including the three lots, and has made valuable improvements thereon, having a number of oil tanks located upon the lots, conveyance of which defendant withholds. After making these improvements, plaintiff learned the condition of the title and demanded a conveyance from defendant, and upon refusal to convey brought this action.

Appellant's demurrer was properly overruled. The allegations of the complaint sufficiently show that the contract was, as to the defendant, reasonable and just. The consideration for the sale was capital stock of plaintiff company. This was issued to and accepted by defendant, who executed a deed of conveyance to a part of the property. The well-recognized rule that in actions for specific performance the complaint must state the value of the land, or other facts showing that the consideration is adequate, is not applicable to the facts existing here. After accepting and retaining the agreed consideration, appellant cannot question the adequacy thereof. Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 608, 12 Pac. 778. The agreement to sell was based upon a parol contract. To justify a court of equity in enforcing the same, there must be, on the part of the purchaser, part performance thereof within the meaning of section 1741, Civ. Code. Payment of the purchase price alone does not constitute such part performance. Such payment must be accompanied by a change of possession, or an expenditure of money upon the property. Not only was there a change of possession and payment of the consideration here, but a large expenditure was made upon these lots in the way of improvements thereon, consisting of a number of tanks constituting a part of the plant for its oil refinery. Calanchini v. Branstetter, 84 Cal. 249, 24 Pac. 149. As the contract called for no improvement, it was not necessary to allege or prove that the improvements upon the property were made pursuant to the agreement. Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34, 3 Am. Rep. 657.

An examination of the record discloses no error in the rulings of the court in admitting evidence. Neither the copy of the plat admitted in evidence, nor the certificate excluded therefrom, is included in the record, and without which we must conclude that the ruling of the court thereon was correct. The book entry dated July 14, 1902, in the journal of the company, whereby it appeared that the company had bought from appellant the lots described in the resolution of that date and paid therefor in stock at a certain price, taken in connection with appellant's relation to the corporation as its president, was material as tending to show the parol contract with appellant, and was therefore properly admitted. The evidence offered by defendant relative to a sale of the company's property to one Jordan appears to have been wholly irrelevant, and was properly excluded. On direct examination appellant was interrogated as to his understanding and intention as to what he was to convey, and as to whether he intended to convey the lots in question to the company; all of which and other like questions called for the conclusion of the witness. It was likewise wholly immaterial what appellant did with the stock received by him as consideration for the promised conveyance of the lots. The fact that it was, pursuant to a subsequent contract, placed in the hands of trustees to aid the company in tiding over its financial distress, could not, in the absence of an agreement so to do, release appellant from his obligation to convey the property. Nor did the fact that he had subsequently advanced money to the corporation entitle him to withhold the conveyance, unless his claim was paid. His position in this respect was one in common with other creditors. San Francisco Water Co. v. Pattee, 86 Cal. 623, 25 Pac. 135.

The main contention of appellant is that, if for no other reason, the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial should be reversed upon the ground that the evidence fails to show an agreement on his part to sell the property. It conclusively appears from the record that defendant was president of the company; that he and his wife at the time of the adoption of the resolution held practically all of the issued stock; that he was present at the time the resolution was offered and adopted; that he accepted and retained the stock named in this resolution as the consideration for the purchase of the lots therein designated and described; that he assisted in locating the lines of the property, and with an employé staked out where to set the tanks on these lots; that he, in selling stock, represented to the purchaser thereof that the company owned these lots. And in the face of all this he strenuously contends that he never agreed to sell the lots in question. As we have seen, the adequacy of the consideration is not involved in the action. The court finds that the contract was fair and just as to defendant, and the evidence supports the findings. We cannot approve of the position for which appellant contends. It requires no authority to support the statement that one occupying the position with reference to a corporation held by appellant should be bound to the highest standard of good faith. Any other view would open wide the door for the perpetration of gross fraud.

What we have said as to the sufficiency of the complaint answers appellant's contention as to the court's failure to find any facts upon which it could be determined that the consideration was just and reasonable. The court did find the ultimate fact that it "was just and reasonable as to defendant."

Judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

REYMERT v. SMITH, Superior Judge.

(Civ. 384.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 12, 1907.)

1. CONTEMPT—NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense, and the charge and the findings and judgment of the court thereon are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, § 4.]

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF JUDGMENT—RIGHT TO EXAMINE RECORD.

The findings of the judgment do not preclude a reviewing court from an examination of the record to determine the jurisdictional facts.

3. SAME — PRESUMPTIONS — PROCEEDING NOT INCLUDED IN RECORD.

Where the performance or taking of necessary steps which ought to appear of record is not shown by the record, it will be presumed that such steps were not taken.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3670-3681.]

4. CONTEMPT—POWER TO PUNISH—CONTEMPT NOT IN PRESENCE OF COURT—NOTICE.

In order to give the court jurisdiction to punish for a contempt committed without the presence of the court or the judge at chambers, the accused must be served with notice or order to show cause containing a formal statement of the charge against him, and he must be given an opportunity to plead and answer such charge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, §§ 151-154.]

Application by James D. Reymert for review of proceedings upon commitment for contempt. Order of commitment annulled.

J. D. Reymert, in pro. per., and J. Marion Brooks, for petitioner. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and John C. North, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Application for review of proceedings upon commitment for contempt by superior court of Los Angeles county.

Judgment was rendered by said superior court on March 16, 1907, adjudging that petitioner pay a fine of $200 and, in case such fine be not paid, that he be confined in the county jail of said county until the fine be satisfied at the rate of one day's imprisonment for each two dollars of fine. The fine not being paid, the defendant was committed to the custody of the sheriff of said county.

The original minute entry of the judgment made on the day of its rendition contained nothing to show of what the alleged contempt consisted; but subsequent to the issuance of the order of this court directing that the record of the proceedings in said matter be certified up to this court, and on the 10th day of April, 1907, an order was entered in the minutes of said superior court, stating that the judgment rendered by the superior court on March 16, 1907, "was not properly written out in the judgment record of this court" and ordering that the judgment entered be amended to conform to the judgment rendered. The latter order finds the allegations of the affidavits of certain persons (naming them) to be true and adjudges petitioner guilty of contempt for procuring false and perjured testimony.

There is nothing in the record brought up to show that the petitioner was served with any notice or order to show cause that indicated the character of the charge of contempt which the petitioner was expected to answer. It does not even appear that he was served with a copy of the affidavits upon which the proceeding was predicated. No answer of petitioner appears in the record, and it does not appear that he was given an opportunity to answer. Section 1217, Code Civ. Proc. The only instrument of any kind presented on his behalf was a motion to set aside the citation upon the ground that there was no proper complaint or information upon which to base it. This motion was overruled, and the court proceeded to hear the matter without any formal statement showing the charge that was made against the petitioner, and without any answer or plea being filed or entered or any issue of fact joined. Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense (Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 362, 33 Pac. 1112, 21 L. R. A. 751, 37 Am. St. Rep. 57; Cosby v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 52, 42 Pac. 460), and the charge and the finding and judgment of the court thereon are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused (Schwartz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 112, 43 Pac. 580). The findings of the judgment do not conclude a reviewing court from an examination of the record to determine the jurisdictional facts. Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 50. While all natural and proper conclusions from the record will be indulged, where the performance or taking of necessary steps which ought to appear of record is not shown, it will be presumed that such steps were not taken. 5 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 290.

Waiving the question of the right of the court below to amend its records pending a proceeding for review in this court, it is apparent that the superior court failed to acquire jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner. The conviction of a citizen of a criminal offense without service on him of a formal statement of the charge against him and an opportunity to plead and answer such charge would be an anomaly in the law of criminal procedure. That a contempt proceeding is summary in its character is a reason why greater care should be taken in pursuing the steps required to reach a conviction, rather than a reason why certain steps necessary to the ordinary criminal proceeding should be omitted or overlooked. Where an alleged contempt has been committed without the presence of the court or the judge at chambers, there is no step essential to a proper accusation, and plea in an ordinary criminal case which can safely be omitted from the proceeding.

We are of opinion that the superior court was without jurisdiction to make the order made in this matter, and that an order of this court should be entered annulling said order and discharging said petitioner from custody; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. WHITE. (Cr. 51.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 3, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — TRIAL — PROVINCE OF JURY.

The jury in a criminal case are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight of the conflicting evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1719-1724.]

2. ROBBERY—ELEMENTS—FORCE AND FEAR—EVIDENCE.

On a trial for robbery, evidence held to show force and fear sufficient to constitute robbery.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CONDUCT OF JURY—PRESUMPTIONS.

The court on appeal in a criminal case must presume that the jury obeyed the instructions of the court limiting the effect of certain evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3032-3034.]

4. SAME — VERDICT — AFFIRMANCE BY TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

The questions of the credibility of the prosecutrix on a trial for robbery, and of the intent and motive of accused, are conclusively determined by the trial court's action denying a motion for a new trial, and cannot be considered by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3084.]

5. ROBBERY—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, on a trial for robbery, that if accused by the use of force and violence on the person of the prosecutrix, or by putting her in fear, compelled her against her will to deliver to him her personal property, and that accused took and received the same by such means, he was guilty of robbery, though he may have attacked the prosecutrix for some other purpose, is not open to the objection that it advised the jury that the intent to take the property was not necessary to constitute the crime.

6. CRIMINAL LAW—INTENT—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1962, 1963, providing that the law presumes a guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act, and that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his acts, the intent essential under Pen. Code, § 20, to constitute a crime, is evidenced by the acts of accused, and the presumptions arising therefrom, which presumption attaches successively to each act as done, regardless of the original intent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 26-28.]

7. SAME — INSTRUCTIONS — INCONSISTENT INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, on a trial for robbery, which deals with a transaction in which the original attack by accused on prosecutrix was made with the intent to commit rape, is not inconsistent with an instruction dealing with later acts committed by accused, justifying the inference of an intent to commit robbery.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1961–1968.]

8. SAME — INSTRUCTIONS — APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where, on a trial for robbery, the defense relied on an alibi, and rested on the theory that accused was sober, and the prosecution did not rest its case on intoxication of accused to establish motive, the failure to charge on the effect of evidence of intoxication on motive was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1980.]

9. SAME.

Where, on a trial for robbery, the prosecution relied on both force and fear, and there was no element of stealth in the taking of the property, the failure of the court to distingish in its instructions between robbery and larceny, and submit the lesser offense, was not erroneous.

10. ROBBERY—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

On a trial for robbery, it is sufficient for the court, in defining robbery, to give the statutory definition of the crime.

11. CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — REQUESTS—NECESSITY.

The failure of the trial court, in a criminal case, to charge on any proposition deemed essential by accused, is not error, unless he made a request for an instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1996.]

12. SAME — TRIAL — EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

On a trial for robbery, the court refused to require the prosecutrix to repeat to the jury in open court, on her direct examination, a proposal which she said was made to her by accused. The information desired was obtained by accused on cross-examination. The response was given to the counsel for accused in writing as requested by him. Held, that it could not be presumed that, had accused insisted on an oral response, and not accepted the written one, the court would not have required the witness to answer him orally, and therefore no constitutional right of accused was invaded.

13. SAME—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—IMPROPER ARGUMENT.

The statement, outside of the record, made by the district attorney in his argument on a trial for robbery, that the shirt accused wore the night of the alleged assault had not been in possession of the prosecution, and that it must be in the possession of accused, was prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1669.]

14. SAME—REVIEW—EXCEPTIONS.

The appellate court in a criminal case will not review an improper statement of the district attorney in his argument, where the improper conduct was not called to the attention of the trial court at the time, so that it might so act in the premises as to prevent a mistrial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2645.]

15. SAME.

The error due to the improper statement of the district attorney, in his argument on a trial for robbery, that the shirt accused wore the night of the alleged assault had not been in the possession of the prosecution, and that it must be in the possession of accused, arising from the fact that the statement was outside the record, could be cured by an instruction to the jury to disregard it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1693.]

16. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The finding of the trial court on the question of the misconduct of the jury in a criminal case, based on conflicting affidavits, will not be disturbed on appeal.

17. SAME — VIEW — PRESENCE OF JUDGE — RIGHT OF ACCUSED.

The jury in a criminal case, in viewing the place of the commission of the offense, as authorized by Pen. Code, § 1119, is receiving evidence, and accused is entitled to have the judge present.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1461.]

18. SAME—CORRECTION OF ERRORS.

The error committed by the court in a criminal case, arising from it permitting the jury to take, in the absence of the judge, a view of the place of the commission of the crime, may, in a proper case, be corrected.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 2118–2121.]

19. SAME—RIGHTS OF ACCUSED—WAIVER.

The right of accused in a criminal case to object to a view by the jury, in the absence of the judge, may be waived by him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol 14, Criminal Law, §§ 2118–2121.]

20. SAME—WAIVER.

The failure of accused in a criminal case to make timely objection to the jury taking, in the absence of the judge, a view of the place of the commission of the offense, is a waiver of his right to have the judge present at the view.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 2118–2121.]

21. SAME.

Accused in a criminal case did not object to the jury taking a view unaccompanied by the judge, but, after the return of the jury into court, made the absence of the judge a ground of an exception, and asked the court to have the record show the facts and his exception. Held, that accused waived his right to have the judge present at the view.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 2118–2121.]

22. SAME.

Accused in a criminal case did not object to the jury taking a view unaccompanied by the judge, but, after the return of the jury into court, the court was asked to have the record show that the judge did not accompany the jury. The court then advised the jury of the error committed in permitting it to take a view in the absence of the judge, and instructed them to disregard all impressions acquired during the view, and directed the taking of a second view. The second view was taken in the presence of the judge. Held, that accused could not complain of the action of the court in permitting the taking of the first view in the absence of the judge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

John White was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See 75 Pac. 828.

H. H. Appel and F. R. Robertson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., C. N. Post, Asst. Atty. Gen., and J. C. Jones, for the State.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of robbery. From a judgment of conviction in the superior court, and an order of that court denying his motion for a new trial, he appealed to the Supreme Court. This appeal was regularly transferred to this court for hearing and decision.

The evidence of the commission of the crime rests almost entirely upon the testimony of the complaining witness. The defense relies upon an alibi and the insufficiency of the identification of the defendant. As the complaining witness was returning to her home about half past 10 o'clock on the night of June 18, 1902, a man stepped in front of her. She stopped, threw up her hands, and he struck her with a rock. She screamed. He told her to "shut up," put his arm around her neck, and struck her in the mouth with his fist. She kept screaming, and he kept "beating" her. They both fell down, he on his knees and she on her back on the sidewalk. He kept pounding her in the face, and she begged him to let her up. At last he "loosened up a little" on her, and she said: "Do you want my money?" and he said: "Where is it?" She said: "It's in my pocket." He said: "Give it to me." He kept saying: "Give it to me." "So," says the witness, "I twisted myself in shape that I got the pocketbook, and he took it." After another effort to scream, followed by further beating, the man made a proposal to her which she characterized as the "worst proposal a man can make to a woman." This statement was stricken out on motion of defendant. The witness then further testified that she was dragged through an opening in a billboard to a sand bank near the river. An effort was made by her assailant to tear her clothing from her, the undoing of his own clothing by the man, and other preparations made by him tending to show an attempt to commit rape. The witness described the face and dress of the man with much particularity of detail, and attributed her ability to do this to the location of certain lights, and to the fact that, while she had been held down on the ground, an electric headlight on a passing street car had shone upon the man's face and clothing in such a manner as to enable her to see him with great distinctness. The "proposal" spoken of was not introduced upon the direct examination of the witness. Defendant demanded that the prosecution be required to disclose the language of this proposal as part of the transaction, and excepted to the refusal of the court to require this to be done. On cross-examination the witness requested to be relieved from using the language of the proposal, and was permitted, with consent of defendant's attorney, to write it on a piece of paper. It was a solicitation of sexual intercourse. It does not clearly appear from the record how or when (if at all) this language was disclosed to the jury. The suggestion was made by the district attorney that the writing be submitted to counsel and jury, but it does not affirmatively appear that this was done.

It is urged that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, because, among other things, the condition of the lights at the scene of the crime were such that it was improbable that the complaining witness could have seen her assailant with sufficient clearness to be able to identify him. Besides the cross-examination of the complainant in this regard, the record shows many pages of testimony disclosing the results of various experiments made by different persons at the place where the offense was consummated to test the effect of the lights mentioned in complainant's testimony. The testimony introduced by the defendant tended to establish a condition of darkness, and that of the prosecution one of light. The jury resolved these contradictory opinions in favor of the truthfulness of complainant's story, and they were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight of such conflicting evidence.

It is also contended that the motive and intent shown by the evidence indicated rape, rather than robbery; that no taking was proven; and, conceding a larceny was established, that it was not accompanied by sufficient force to constitute robbery. The complainant's description of the occurrence up to the time of the delivery of her purse to her assailant embodies every element of the crime of robbery. Force and fear were both present, and it is unnecessary to distinguish those cases discussing the violence of the force used. Motive and intent to commit both robbery and rape appear from the evidence. In order that evidence of the latter might not induce the jury to find the defendant guilty of the former, merely because robbery was the crime charged in the information, the court gave the instruction, marked "20." The jury were thereby informed that, if the assault was for the purpose of rape, and there was no intent to rob, and no taking of the purse by either force or fear, the defendant should be acquitted. It must be presumed that the jury did its duty and obeyed this instruction of the court. The questions of the credibility of the complaining witness and the preponderance of the evidence, so extensively presented by appellant in his brief, were ultimately and conclusively determined by the superior court when it denied his motion for a new trial, and cannot be considered by this court. What intent and motive were established by the evidence were also questions of fact, and were included in that determination.

The effect of instruction 20 as to intent with which the crime was committed was not neutralized by the giving of the last instruction (not numbered) by the court. The latter instruction is in the following language: "The court instructs the jury that, if you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the personal property mentioned in the information was in the possession of the witness Kate A. Dripps, and that the defendant by the use of force and violence upon the person of said Kate A. Dripps, or by putting her in fear, compelled her, against her will, to deliver to him the said personal property, or any part thereof, mentioned in the information, from her person, or immediate presence, as charged in the information, and that defendant then and there took and received said personal property from said Kate A. Dripps, under such circumstances and by such means, then the defendant would be guilty of robbery, even though you may further believe from the evidence that the defendant may have attacked the said Kate A. Dripps (if you believe from the evidence that he did attack her) for some other purpose or motive." If, as contended by appellant, the jury were advised by this instruction that a felonious intent to take the personal property mentioned in the information was not necessary to constitute the crime of robbery, then it would have been an erroneous statement of the law; but we do not think this a necessary or proper construction of the language used by the court. The moving intent was evidenced by the acts of the party and the presumptions of law that he intended the ordinary consequences of his acts. Pen. Code, § 20; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1962, 1963. This attached successively to each act as done, regardless of the original intent. The last instruction given is not in conflict with instruction 20. By the latter instruction (20), the jury were told that if the assault was not made "for the purpose of committing the crime of robbery, and that the person who assaulted Mrs. Dripps did not intend to rob her," and did not act in connection with the assault from which an intent to commit the crime of robbery could be inferred, then they should acquit the defendant. One instruction deals with an hypothesis in which no element of robbery was present at any time in the transaction, the other with a transaction in which the original attack was made with the intent to do something else, but the later acts in which justified the inference of an intent to commit the crime of robbery.

Appellant contends that the court should have instructed the jury in regard to three matters upon its own motion, to wit: The effect of evidence tending to show intoxication in respect to the motive or intent with which an act was done; the definition of the word "fear" as given by section 212 of the Penal Code; and the definition of the word "robbery," as distinguished from "grand larceny." And the failure to do so is assigned as error. A consideration of the last proposition includes the same question of law arising from the failure of the trial court to give an instruction as to the "lesser offenses" included in the crime of robbery (instruction 14), at the request of the appellant. Instructions given to the jury must always be adapted to the evidence and circumstances of the case on trial. The whole defense rested upon the theory that defendant was perfectly sober. He staked his case upon the fact that he was not there. So there is nothing in his case to justify an instruction upon the question of intoxication. The case for the prosecution did not rest upon the intoxication of the defendant to establish motive. It did not rely upon fear alone to show a robbery, but force and fear combined. There was no element of stealth in the taking proven, and nothing in the evidence to require the court of its own motion to distinguish robbery and grand larceny. This case is one of the class in the mind of the court, when the opinion in the case of People v. Church, 116 Cal. 303, 48 Pac. 125, was written, and the following language used: "Many cases of robbery may be disclosed by the evidence where the trial court would be justified in refusing an instruction to the effect that the defendant could be convicted of grand larceny. Such cases would be those where the evidence, without contradiction, indicates the offense to have been accomplished by means of force or fear." The statutory definition of the crime of "robbery" was given to the jury in one of the instructions of the court. That was sufficient. The failure of the trial court to instruct the jury upon any proposition deemed essential by the defendant is not to be regarded as error, unless he made a request for such instruction. People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 460, 32 Pac. 531. This has been applied to an instruction as to intoxication in the case of People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 381, 59 Pac. 772. We have considered defendant's objections to the instructions given by the court, notwithstanding the Attorney General's position that they are part of the judgment roll and are reviewable only as part of the judgment roll, and that the record does not disclose the judgment from which the appeal was taken. It is unnecessary to determine the question of practice raised in view of the rulings made on the questions of law, further than to say that we do not adopt the views of the Attorney General as applied to this case.

The defendant suffered no injury because the court refused to require Mrs. Dripps to repeat to the jury in open court upon her direct examination the proposal which she said was made to her by her assailant. The information desired was obtained by defendant on cross-examination in answer to his counsel's question. The response was given to defendant's counsel in the manner requested by him, that is, in writing, and if it failed to reach the jury it was the defendant's own act. It cannot be presumed that, had he insisted upon an oral response, and not accepted the written one, the court would not have required the witness to answer him orally. No constitutional right of the defendant was invaded. It is not a constitutional right of the defendant to have the prosecution conduct its case in accordance with his wishes, and there was no interference with the fullest exercise of his right of cross-examination in the case in this connection.

The remarks of the district attorney specified as error and misconduct upon his part were all within the bounds of legitimate inference from the evidence, except one. The statement, outside the record, "that the shirt defendant wore the night of the alleged assault had not been in the possession of the prosecution, and that it must be in the possession of the defendant," was the statement of a fact important to the case of the prosecution and highly prejudicial to the defendant. It would have been reversible error had the matter been called to the attention of the trial court at the time, and that court had refused to instruct the jury to disregard the remark; but no opportunity was given the trial court to correct the abuse. It is essential, in order that such an act shall be reviewed by this court, that it shall first be called to the attention of the court below at the time, in order that the court may so act in the premises as, if possible, to avoid the error and prevent a mistrial. People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 647, 49 Pac. 842. The effect of such a remark could have been removed by an instruction to the jury to disregard it. People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 159, 65 Pac. 295.

The jury were twice taken to view the place where the crime had been committed. On both occasions the proper safeguards were thrown around the jury, and the proper cautions and instructions were given, except that on the first occasion the trial judge failed to accompany the jury to the scene. Misconduct of the jury at the first view was claimed by defendant, and presented, by affidavit, to the trial judge upon the motion for a new trial. This showing was met by counter and conflicting affidavits from the prosecution, and, by its ruling on the motion, the trial court ascertained the truth to be with the prosecution. This was a matter peculiarly within the province of the judge who tried the cause, and this court will not disturb his finding. People v. Rushing, 130 Cal. 449, 62 Pac. 742, 80 Am. St. Rep. 141.

The defendant did not object to the first view being taken upon the grounds that the jury were not accompanied by the judge, but, after the return of the jury into the court, made this the ground of an exception, and asked the court to have the record to show the fact and his exception. The learned judge who tried the case recognized the error committed by his absence from the first view, and with the purpose of correcting such error, if possible, advised the jury of the error committed and instructed them to disregard any and all information or impressions acquired during or by reason of the first view, and to eliminate everything seen or heard on that occasion in the same way that they should disregard any testimony ordered stricken out, and ordered that a second view be taken. No tenable objections to the proceedings in connection with the second view, or exceptions to the court's actions in relation thereto, appear in the record.

Appellant contends that it was irremediable error for the jury, under the instructions of the court, to view the premises without the presence of the judge of the court. That he was entitled to have the judge present as a constitutional right, and that his failure to object cannot be construed as a waiver. The Attorney General, on the other hand, in support of the action of the trial court, urges: First, that a view is not the taking of evidence; neither is it "the trial." Therefore, the presence of the judge is not necessary. Next, that if his presence be necessary, his absence is but an irregularity which the defendant could and did waive; And that the jury were instructed to disregard the first view, and the first view became merged into the second. Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, it is clear that the later decisions of the Supreme Court of this state are based upon the theory that, in viewing the place in which an offense is charged to have been committed, under section 1119 of the Penal Code, the jury is "receiving evidence." People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 184, 54 Pac. 833. It was upon this theory that it was declared to be error for the jury to view the place in the absence of the defendant in a criminal case. People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 10 Pac. 169, s. c. 71 Cal. 606, 12 Pac. 781. It must also be accepted as the law of this state that the judge is a component part of the court, and there can be no court without the judge; and that a defendant convicted under such circumstances has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law. People v. Tupper, 122 Cal. 424, 55 Pac. 125, 68 Am. St. Rep. 44; People v. Blackman, 127 Cal. 248, 251, 59 Pac. 573; People v. Yut Ling, 74 Cal. 570, 16 Pac. 489. The opinion in People v. Blackman, in so far as it has any bearing on the question here involved, relies upon the opinion in People v. Tupper, which, in turn, rests upon O'Brien v. People, 17 Colo. 561, 31 Pac. 230, Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 793, and State v. Beuerman, 59 Kan. 586, 53 Pac. 874. The Colorado case mentioned (O'Brien v. People) is expressly distinguished, by the justice writing the principal opinion therein, from one in which there is a waiver of, or consent to, the absence of the judge. The Chief Justice, in a concurring opinion, says that every absence of the judge from the courtroom during a criminal trial is not reversible error. He concurs in the decision because an error was committed by taking the testimony of a witness, away from the courtroom, in the presence of the jury, when the judge was absent. In Turbeville v. State, the decision of the court, as stated in the syllabus, is that "the circuit judge's absence from the bench during the argument of a felony case is not such abandonment of the court and conduct of the trial as that the judgment should be reversed, if he remains in an adjoining room within hearing with a lawyer on the bench to call him if needed." The portion of the opinion supporting the California cases is: "If we would consider this statement of the facts as showing such absence from the room on the part of the judge as constitutes a temporary relinquishment of the control of the court and of the conduct of the trial, we should unhesitatingly reverse the judgment. There can be no court without a judge, and his presence as the presiding genius of the trial is as essential during the argument as at any other time." In State v. Beuerman it is said: "If the presiding judge abandons the trial, or relinquishes control over the proceedings, the accused has good cause to complain. Meredeth v. People, 84 Ill. 479; Thompson v. People, 32 N. E. 968, 144 Ill. 378; State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 376; Turbeville v. State, 56 Miss. 793; Palin v. State, 57 N. W. 743, 38 Neb. 862; O'Brien v. People, 31 Pac. 230, 17 Colo. 561. The fact that the court may not see or hear everything occurring in the courtroom, or that he may step into an adjoining room, but not out of hearing of the proceedings, is not necessarily prejudicial to the interests of the defendant in every case; but the presiding judge cannot safely absent himself from the trial, or relinquish control over the proceedings during the trial." If the language of this opinion be considered in connection with the holding by the Kansas court in State v. Adams, 20 Kan. 311, that a view of the premises by a jury is not receiving evidence during the trial, and the absence of either judge or defendant therefrom not error, because the statute does not in terms require them, or either of them, to be present, it is apparent that the Kansas court would regard that case as not applicable here. In People v. Yut Ling it is said: "When the jury went to view the premises the judge of the court should have gone along with them. It was the right of defendant to have the judge accompany the jurors when they went to take this view." We are left in the dark as to the reasons of the court for its position on this question, and Justices McFarland and Paterson dissent from the decision without comment. In the absence of reasons given, we have assumed that the court considered the view as receiving evidence (People v. Bush), and a part of the trial, and therefore the absence of the judge from the trial was error. People v. Tupper, supra.

Accepting these cases as declaring the law of this state, and considering them in the light of the reasons given for the decisions upon which they rest, it is apparent that the error committed by the court here is such an error as may, in a proper case, be corrected by the court, and the right to object thereto may be waived by the defendant. The view has been a part of the jury trial since its origin, and at one time constituted, with the personal knowledge of the jurors, the entire evidence considered by the jury in arriving at its verdict. There is nothing in the reports of the earlier English cases to indicate that the judge was required to be present at the view, and the practice permitted a view by either a part or the whole of the jury. In some of the cases the courts seem concerned chiefly in determining how many jurors, or what part of the jury, must have visited the scene in order to sustain the verdict. For many years after other evidence than the knowledge of the jurors began to be considered by the jury, the view continued to be the main evidence received in cases of waste, trespass, and nuisance. It is still made an important part of the evidence in cases of waste in some states, and in other states in cases of eminent domain, by express statutory provisions. The personal knowledge of the juror can no longer be considered, unless he be sworn and examined in open court. Pen. Code, § 1120. The freedom of the common-law view is much restricted. Its use now rests in the discretion of the trial court, and the whole matter is generally regulated by statute. In construing these statutes, the courts have reached widely divergent conclusions. The opinions range from those holding that a statute providing for a view of the premises in a criminal case, similar to section 1119 of the Penal Code, is unconstitutional because such a view is receiving evidence by the jury when absent from the court (Foster v. State, 12 South 822, 70 Miss. 755), to those holding that the view is no part of the trial, and that the jury are not receiving evidence, but merely receiving impressions from inanimate objects that will enable them better to comprehend and apply the testimony in the case. State v. Adams, 20 Kan. 311; Shular v. State, 4 N. E. 870, 105 Ind. 289, 55 Am. Rep. 211; People v. Johnson, 17 N. E. 684, 110 N. Y. 134; People v. Thorn, 50 N. E. 947, 156 N. Y. 286, 42 L. R. A. 368; State v. Mortensen, 73 Pac. 562, 26 Utah, 312.

This diversity of conclusion appears to be due, largely, to the restriction of the term "the trial" to the permanent proceedings in the courtroom, and an effort of the courts to evade the apparently inevitable result of that construction upon the case under consideration. Every step taken in a criminal case, by, or in, the court wherein the case is pending, from issue joined to verdict rendered, is a step or proceeding "arising during the course of the trial." People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370. In this extensive sense, "the trial" would include many occasions when the judge need not be personally present exercising control or conducting the trial. This is the case where the jury are kept together during the entire trial. Between the sessions of the court they are under the sole control of the sheriff, and if they make an unauthorized visit in a body to the place where the crime was committed, while in charge of that officer, the error may be waived, and the court can consider whether or not the view influenced the minds of the jurors, in ruling on a motion for a new trial. Warner v. State, 29 Atl. 505, 56 N. J. Law, 686, 44 Am. St. Rep. 475. The same rule was applied in a case in which the gist of the action on trial was the condition of the locus in quo. Rush v. St. Paul, 72 N. W. 733, 70 Minn. 5. The inquiry is: "Was the [misconduct] not calculated to prejudice the result of the trial? Is it apparent that it could have had no influence upon the verdict?" People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 193, 37 Pac. 207, 42 Am. St. Rep. 102. Such error should be objected to at the time, and consent of defendant or his failure to object in time will defeat his right to complain. People v. Tarm Poi, 86 Cal. 225, 24 Pac. 998; People v. Fitzgerald, 137 Cal. 546, 70 Pac. 554. This same test has been extended to an absence of the judge from the courtroom, without suspending the trial, during the examination of a witness for the prosecution (Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35), and during the argument of the case (O'Shields v. State, 6 S. E. 426, 81 Ga. 301; Pritchett v. State, 18 S. E. 536, 92 Ga. 65).

The conditions surrounding the jury at the view; the restrictions upon their actions, and that of the judge; the inability of the judge or any one else to control or direct their observations to any objects other than those indicated to the person appointed as "shower" while in open court at the courtroom; the absence of any assistance of counsel to indicate the details of the observation which make for their respective clients; the prohibition of the taking of testimony or receiving of any other information than that given by the "shower," coupled with the statutory requirement that the jury be placed in the custody of the sheriff—might call for a distinction between the modified form of trial at the view and the proceedings taken and had in the courtroom, if this were necessary to this decision; but the rule having been established in this state that the defendant is of right entitled to have the judge present at the view, the modified character of his functions there becomes immaterial. Considering the absence of the judge as involving the question of whether or not it be depriving the defendant of his liberty without due process of law, we see no reason why the rule above declared should not be applied to the error committed.

"Due process of law" undoubtedly means, in the due course of legal proceedings according to the rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights; and that changes of forms, proceedings, and process from time to time shall be made with due regard to the landmarks established for the protection of the citizen. Cooley on Const. Lim. 355. Many of the common-law statutory and constitutional rights of a defendant may be waived by him, and some will be presumed to have been waived, if they have not been asserted in a timely manner. He is entitled to be tried by a full common-law jury on a charge of felony before sentence; but he may waive all the incidents of the trial established for his protection and enter a plea of guilty. He is entitled to challenge jurors both for cause and peremptorily without assigning cause; but if he fails to do so, having had the opportunity, it is too late to complain after conviction. So it is with having the process of the court to secure the attendance of his witnesses, and his right to have only competent evidence introduced upon the trial. Failing to assert his right, he is deemed to have waived it.

In the case at bar, the defendant had an opportunity to assert every legal right involved, and either failed to do so, or asserted them in such a manner that he is deemed to have waived them. If the first view be left out of consideration, the record would show a complete trial unattended by any prejudicial error preserved and excepted to as required by the rules of practice. The first view was no more prejudicial to the defendant than the introduction of incompetent evidence during the trial, which, on discovery of the error by the court, was directed to be stricken out, and the jury instructed to disregard it. The jury were aided in doing this by the subsequent view. The impressions obtained from the two views would be presumed to be the same, as the second view covered the same grounds, the shower pointed out the same places and objects, and the affidavits produced on the motion for a new trial show that there was no change in the location of the objects viewed, or the topography of the scene, between the first and second views. If a different impression were obtained, that from the second, being more recent, would no doubt be the more vivid at the time of the deliberations of the jury. There was no dispute at the trial in relation to the location of any of the objects which were seen by the jury on either view. The evidence in relation to the disputed matters was directed to the angle at which the lights fell upon certain objects and places, the effect of the distance of the street lamps from the scene, and the strength of the light that would be given by them at the place of the occurrence. Even this evidence was of minor importance, as the complaining witness based her ability to see so distinctly upon the fact that the headlight of a passing street car fell upon the face and clothing of her assailant. Both of the views by the jury were taken in the daytime, and there was no opportunity on either occasion to observe the effect of the lights upon the scene. The case was one in which a view was proper and served the purpose which should be the primary, if not the only, consideration in criminal cases, to wit, a knowledge of the premises that the jury may the better apply the testimony heard in court. The evidence received on both views was evidently of this character.

However the error be classified or considered, the facts disclosed by the record, on the motion for a new trial, warranted the trial judge in finding that the prosecution had sustained the burden of showing that no injury resulted to defendant's case, and that he was not prejudiced by the absence of the presiding judge from the first view. No timely objection to the absence of the judge from the first view was made, such absence was not prejudicial to the defendant or subversive of his legal rights, and there is no ground for granting a new trial. Horne v. Rogers, 35 S. E. 718, 110 Ga. 362, 49 L. R. A. 176. It is not every unauthorized view of the locus in quo that will require the setting aside of a verdict. Considerations of practical justice forbid it. If verdicts were set aside for such reasons, there would be no reasonable limits to litigation, especially in cities where the opportunities are great for jurors personally to view the locality of a crime under consideration.

Ex parte SHORTRIDGE. (Cr. 86.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 12, 1907.)

1. Habeas Corpus—Contempt—Conclusiveness of Commitment.

Where one has been committed for contempt on petition for discharge by writ of habeas corpus, he may not contradict the facts set forth in the order of commitment.

2. Contempt — Commitment of Attorney — Order— Sufficiency.

An order committing an attorney for contempt, reciting that he "interrupted" court proceedings, without stating what he did, does not comply with the statute requiring the court to recite the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, §§ 207, 208.]

3. Same—Review—Presumptions.

On proceedings to review a commitment for contempt, no intendments or presumptions may be indulged in against the prisoner, but the order must be strictly construed in favor of his liberty, and hence an attorney is entitled to discharge, where the order of commitment merely discloses that, while a witness was being examined, he persisted in addressing the court, though admonished not to do so; it not appearing he was not rightfully and respectfully discharging his duty to the court and his client.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, § 233.]

4. Same—Fugitive Client.

An attorney, who persists in addressing a court on behalf of a fugitive client, after being refused permission to do so, is guilty of contempt.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, § 9.]

Application of Samuel M. Shortridge for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner discharged.

Peter F. Dunne, Frank P. Murphy, Henry Ach, Robt. Ferral, and Charles H. Fairall, for petitioner. Hiram W. Johnson, for respondent.

HALL, J. Samuel M. Shortridge heretofore filed in this court his petition, wherein he alleged that he was illegally restrained of his liberty by Thomas F. O'Neil, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, and praying for a writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to said sheriff, which being granted, said sheriff in due time made return thereto that he held said Shortridge in custody by virtue of a conviction and judgment for contempt of court; a certified copy of the commitment being attached to the return. At the hearing before this court, petitioner excepted to the sufficiency of the return by way of a demurrer thereto, to the effect that the commitment is on its face void, for the reason that it does not set forth facts sufficient to warrant a conviction or judgment for contempt of court.

The commitment, after reciting the title of the court, is in the words as follows, to wit: "On this day the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, being regularly in session, and having then and there regularly before it the actions and proceedings of the People v. Eugene E. Schmitz and Abraham Ruef, and being then and there engaged in such actions and proceedings in the taking of testimony in open court while a witness, William J. Walsh, was upon the witness stand in open court and being regularly examined and interrogated in respect to said actions and proceedings, after the said William J. Walsh had been duly and regularly sworn to testify as a witness in said matter, and while he was so testifying in regard to his actions in the matter of serving an attachment for the body and person of one Abraham Ruef, which had theretofore on the 7th day of March, 1907, been regularly issued by said court and delivered to said William J. Walsh for execution as coroner of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, by reason of the fact that said court had theretofore duly made and entered its order, adjudging that Thomas F. O'Neil, the duly qualified, elected and acting sheriff of said city and county of San Francisco was disqualified to act in said matter, and after said court had on several occasions admonished said Samuel M. Shortridge to take his seat and to refrain from interrupting the said proceedings, or from interfering with the due and orderly administration of justice, or the orderly administration of the procedure in said court, and the said Shortridge having refused to obey the orders and directions of said court, and having interrupted and continued to interrupt the orderly conduct of the proceedings before the said court, and having interrupted and interfered with the due and orderly administration of justice in said court, the said court adjudged the said Shortridge guilty of contempt of court, and directed that the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco take the said Shortridge into custody, and that he be confined for the period of twenty-four hours in the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco, and the court then found and now finds the following facts in relation to the said contempt, to wit: That on the 8th day of March, 1907, there was pending before the above-entitled court an action or proceeding entitled the People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. Eugene E. Schmitz and Abraham Ruef, Defendants; that the said court on said day duly and regularly met, and was during the time hereinafter mentioned duly and regularly holding a session of the said court; that in the matter of the said action and said proceeding the witness had been in said court at said time duly and regularly sworn, and was being examined and interrogated as such witness in said action on said day; that during the time of the examination of said witness the said Samuel M. Shortridge addressed the said court, interrupted the said proceedings, and was admonished and warned by the said court to take his seat and to cease his interruptions, and the said Samuel M. Shortridge refused then and there to obey the order and direction of the said court; that the said Shortridge continued to talk to said court and interrupt the said proceedings, although directed by the said court to cease to do so, and the conduct and acts and language of the said Shortridge were calculated to and they did interrupt the orderly conduct of the investigation and proceeding before said court, and they did interfere with and interrupt the administration of justice in said court; that the conduct and the language of the said Shortridge were boisterous and offensive; that by reason thereof the said Shortridge was guilty of a contempt of court committed in the immediate presence of the court. And, the court being fully advised in the premises, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said Shortridge be confined in the county jail of the city and county of San Francisco for the period of twenty-four hours; that the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco take the said Shortridge into his custody and execute this sentence and order. Dated March 8, 1907. F. H. Dunne, Judge of the Superior Court."

The law does not permit the petitioner to contradict the facts set forth in the order of commitment, but the recitals of the facts must be taken as true upon the hearing before this court on the proceedings for a discharge by the writ of habeas corpus. Upon the other hand, no presumptions or intendments can be indulged in against the prisoner, but the facts set forth in the commitment must be sufficient to show contempt within the meaning of the law without the aid of intendments and presumptions. "The power of the court to punish for an alleged contempt of its authority, though undoubted, is in its nature arbitrary, and its exercise is not to be upheld except under the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law. It is essential to the validity of proceedings in contempt, subjecting a party to fine and imprisonment, that they show a case in point of jurisdiction within the provisions of the law by which such proceedings are authorized, for mere presumptions and intendments are not to be indulged in their support." Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 415. In Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 Pac. 372, it was said: "In the case of a contempt committed in the presence of the court, the section says that the order adjudicating the contempt must contain a recital of the facts. This provision can only mean that the order must contain a recital of those facts which make out a contempt; that is, a recital of those facts, which in a case of constructive contempt, the law says must be incorporated in an affidavit." In other words, the facts that prove the contempt, and not mere conclusions. To the same effect are People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 155; People v. Rowe, 7 Cal. 183; Ex parte Zeehandelaar, 71 Cal. 238, 12 Pac. 259. In Ex parte Zeehandelaar, the prisoner was discharged because the return did not show that a question that he had refused to answer as a witness was pertinent to the matter in issue before the court. In Overend v. Superior Court, supra, an order adjudging a witness guilty of contempt was annulled on certiorari because the question which he had refused to answer was not set forth, and the order therefore did not show that he had refused to answer a pertinent question, for which reason the order did not state facts showing the accused to be guilty of contempt of court. These two last cited cases strikingly illustrate the doctrine that no presumptions or intendments can be indulged in to support an adjudication of contempt, and that the order of adjudication must state facts showing the prisoner to be guilty of contempt. "The offense being criminal in its nature, both the charge and the finding and judgment of the court thereon are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused." Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580.

With the foregoing principles in mind, we now proceed to an examination of the facts set forth in the commitment before us. The petitioner is an attorney at law, entitled to practice as such in all the courts of this state, and as such is an officer of all said courts. It is apparent from a reading of the commitment that the adjudication of contempt is not predicated upon the theory that the acts charged against him were committed by him as a mere interloper and stranger to the action then pending before the court. If that were so, it certainly should have been so stated in the order. Being an attorney at law, we think we should assume, in the absence of any statement to the contrary, that in addressing the court, as it is found that he did, he was acting as the attorney for one of the parties to the action then before the court. We do this the more readily because the argument before this court from both sides shows this to be the fact. A reading of the order of commitment discloses that the gravamen of the charge and finding against the petitioner is that, while a witness was being examined in the action then before the court, and after he had been admonished not to do so, he addressed the court and insisted on talking to the court. The finding is "that during the time of the examination of said witness the said Samuel M. Shortridge addressed the said court, interrupted the said proceedings, and was admonished and warned by the said court to take his seat and to cease his interruptions, and the said Samuel M. Shortridge refused then and there to obey the order and direction of the said court; that the said Shortridge continued to talk to said court and interrupt the said proceedings, although directed by the court to cease to do so." Evidently the statement that the petitioner interrupted the proceedings is based upon the fact that he addressed the court, for no other concrete fact is set forth. The mere statement that he interrupted the proceedings, without stating what he did, does not comply with the plain mandate of the law that the facts must be stated. The statute requires that the court must make an order "reciting the facts as occurring in such immediate view and presence." This is essential, in order that it may clearly appear from the actual facts set forth that the accused has been guilty of a contempt. Every interruption of the proceedings of the court is not a contempt, nor unlawful, nor necessarily improper. Many interruptions are lawful and proper. Every time an attorney in the performance of his duty objects to a question asked a witness, or objects to any other proceeding in the action, he may be said to interrupt the proceedings. The particular circumstances of the interruption—the concrete facts constituting the interruption—must be set forth, in order that the commitment shall show upon its face and without the aid of presumptions that the accused has been guilty of a contempt. The only interruption set forth—the only concrete fact set forth—is that, while a witness was being examined, the petitioner addressed the court, and continued to do so after being admonished to take his seat. What he said to the court is not stated, and no circumstances are set forth which will enable us to say without the aid of intendment and presumption that his remarks were not perfectly proper in themselves, and strictly within the line of his duty as an officer of the court and the attorney for one or both of the parties to the action then pending before the court.

It is true that the court had directed him to cease addressing the court, but so had the court in the cases heretofore cited (Overend v. Superior Court, supra; Ex parte Zeehandelaar, supra; Ex parte Rowe, supra) directed the accused as a witness to answer a question; yet it was held in those cases that the witness was not guilty of contempt, unless the question was one pertinent to the issue before the court. Not only this, but the order of commitment must set forth the question and sufficient facts to affirmatively show that the question was one which the witness should answer. The reviewing court cannot, in such cases, in support of the action of the trial court, presume that the question which the witness refused to answer was pertinent and proper; but it must be shown to be so on the face of the commitment. Unless this be shown on the face of the order, the commitment of the witness for contempt cannot be sustained, notwithstanding that the witness refused to obey the order of the court to answer the question. See cases last cited.

Examining the commitment now before us by the four corners in the light of the rule of law that no presumptions or intendments can be indulged in against the accused, it boils down to the proposition that the petitioner, an attorney for one of the parties to the action then pending before the court, has been adjudged guilty of contempt because he persisted in addressing the court as such attorney, presumably on behalf of his client. It is not suggested by anything in the commitment that the language employed by him was improper, or that it reflected in any manner upon the court or the judge thereof. It is true that the order does state in general terms that his conduct was boisterous and offensive; but, reading this statement in connection with the context in which it occurs, it is clear that the order means no more by this than to state a conclusion from the fact that he persisted in addressing the court against the order of the court. So the question involves the single proposition: Does the simple fact that an attorney for a party to an action pending before the court, while a witness is being examined, persists in addressing the court, although admonished not to do so, constitute a contempt of court? We think it does not. For aught that we can see from the order, the petitioner may have been rightfully and respectfully discharging his duty to the court and to his client, making proper objections to the questions put to the witness on the stand. What he said to the court is not set forth, nor are any circumstances set forth making it improper for him to address the court in a respectful manner, except the bare order of the court not to do so. This we do not think is sufficient, any more than is the order to a witness to answer a question sufficient without an affirmative showing in the order of commitment that the question is one that the witness should answer.

In what we have said concerning the commitment, we have not overlooked the argument so forcibly pressed upon us by counsel for the respondent that the court has the right to refuse to hear counsel for a defendant who is a fugitive from justice, or who refuses to appear in court when lawfully required to do so. Undoubtedly a defendant in a criminal case who is a fugitive from justice, or who refuses to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court, has no right to be heard in court by counsel until he does submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court. People v. Redinger, 55 Cal. 290, 36 Am. Rep. 32; People v. Elkins, 122 Cal. 655, 55 Pac. 599. If the commitment in this case showed that the client of the petitioner was, at the time of the acts complained of, a fugitive from justice, and that the court for such reason had refused to permit him to address the court on behalf of such client, and that he nevertheless persisted in so doing, we should not hesitate to uphold the action of the court in adjudging him guilty of contempt for such action. There is no statement in the order before us that defendant, or any party to the action then before the court, was a fugitive from justice, or was not then before the court. Neither is it stated that the court for any such reason denied petitioner the right to address the court. For aught that appears upon the face of the order of commitment, the petitioner's client may have been sitting by his side in the courtroom. It is true that there is a recital in the order to the effect that an attachment had theretofore been issued for the body of Abraham Ruef, and from this we might infer, if it were permissible in this proceeding to indulge in presumptions against the accused, that Mr. Ruef may have been a fugitive from justice; but, as we have already seen, upon proceedings to review an order committing a person for contempt, no intendments or presumptions may be indulged in against the accused, but the order must be strictly construed in favor of his liberty. Batchelder v. Moore, supra; Schwarz v. Superior Court, supra. There is no statement in the record before us that Mr. Ruef was, at the time the petitioner addressed the court, or at any other time, a fugitive from justice. If such were the fact, and if for such reason the court had refused the petitioner the right to address the court, it was a very simple matter to so state in the order.

The power to punish for contempt, being an arbitrary power, and the facts as recited in the order of commitment being conclusive in such contempt proceeding, the correct rule, in our opinion, is to require the commitment to state the facts, so that this court, on reading the commitment, can determine as to whether or not such facts as a matter of law constitute a contempt of court. When we examine the commitment by the above rule, we cannot say as matter of law that the petitioner was guilty of contempt.

For the reasons above set forth, we think the order of commitment insufficient, and that petitioner should be discharged, and it is so ordered.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 13, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT — RES ADJUDICATA — VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT.

To constitute an estoppel, the judgment pleaded in bar must be a valid judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction, and these facts must be shown to justify the reception in evidence of such judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 1150–1156, 1254–1258.]

2. SAME — COLLATERAL ATTACK — VALIDITY — PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a collateral attack is made, the recitals in a judgment pleaded in bar are sufficient evidence of the matters therein recited, and, where the judgment is rendered by a court of general jurisdiction, the recitals constitute evidence of their truth, and every intendment must be indulged in support of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 907–916, 1809–1812.]

3. SAME.

Where a judgment is pleaded in bar, a certified copy is, under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1905, evidence of the adjudication by the court of the issues involved in the suit, and the recitals therein showing jurisdiction are evidence thereof.

4. SAME — CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENT—PERSONS CONCLUDED—PRIVITY.

A grantee brought a suit to set aside a deed on the ground of the fraud of the grantor. Pending the suit he married and died. The suit was prosecuted by his administrator, and a judgment was rendered in favor of the validity of the deed. Held, that the judgment was a bar to an action by the widow to set aside the deed on the same ground.

5. SAME—ISSUES.

A grantor in an action to set aside a deed alleged that at the time of the execution thereof he was infirm of purpose, mind, and body, and that the grantee took advantage of his condition, and by fraudulent representations induced him to sign the deed. The court denied any relief. Held, that the judgment was a bar to a subsequent action by his widow seeking to set aside the deed as sole heir of her deceased child in esse at the time of the grantor's death, on the ground that the grantor was at the time sick and in an exhausted condition, and incapable of making the deed, and that the grantee took advantage of his condition, and by fraudulent representations induced him to sign the deed.

See 80 Pac. 860.

SHAW, J. Appeal on behalf of plaintiff from judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff, who is appellant here, is the widow of Samuel Page, deceased, who died intestate on June 24, 1899. Besides his widow, he left surviving him her unborn child in esse, who was born alive, but died on the same day, and three sons and a daughter, the defendant herein, all children by a former marriage. Plaintiff in her own right as widow and as sole heir of her deceased child, brings this suit to set aside and have declared null and void certain deeds, whereby the said Samuel Page, in his lifetime and long prior to his marriage to appellant, conveyed to defendant certain real estate described in the complaint, upon the ground that at the time of making the deeds Samuel Page was in a sick, weakened, and exhausted condition, and, on account of great physical and mental weakness, incapable of making any deed, or doing any business whatever; that, taking advantage of his condition, this defendant and her brother, Solomon C. Page, did, by means of fraudulent representations made to said Samuel Page, induce him to make and deliver to defendant the said deeds to the real estate. The answer contains no denial of the allegations as to the mental and physical condition of Samuel Page at the time of executing the deeds; nor any denial as to the fraudulent representations alleged to have been made by defendant. There is a denial that Samuel Page was at the time of his death the owner of the land in question, or that he had been, subsequent to May 1, 1897, the owner of any part thereof, or held any interest therein other than a life estate to a portion thereof. As a defense to the action defendant relies upon two judgments, which are pleaded by way of estoppel.

The conveyances from Samuel Page to the defendant were made on December 9 and 11, 1896, and the marriage of plaintiff to Samuel Page occurred on February 4, 1899. About one year after the conveyance of the property to defendant Samuel Page commenced an action against her, having for its purpose the annulment and setting aside of the deeds whereby he had theretofore conveyed the real estate to the defendant. Pending the trial of this action Samuel Page died. A special administrator of his estate was substituted as plaintiff, who, under the order of the court, prosecuted said action to a final determination and judgment was rendered in favor of defendant therein. At the time of filing the answer herein said judgment had become final. At the trial of this action defendant offered in evidence certified copies of the judgment, findings, complaint, amended complaint, and the order substituting the special administrator as plaintiff and his supplemental complaint in the former suit brought by Samuel Page, to all of which objections were made upon the ground that they did not constitute the entire record of the case. Other objections were made, which will be noticed in discussing the effect of the former action as an estoppel. To constitute an estoppel the judgment pleaded in bar must be a valid judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction, and these facts must be shown in order to justify the reception in evidence of such judgment. The usual and appropriate manner of making this proof is to offer the judgment roll. Conceding, but not holding, this mode of proof to be exclusive where a direct attack is made upon a judgment (McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 570; Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 398, 9 Pac. 646), we are nevertheless of the opinion that where a collateral attack is made, the recitals contained in the judgment are sufficient evidence of the matters therein recited. The judgment may be grossly unjust or erroneous, but the decision of the court as to all issues involved in the action stands as a finality between the parties and their privies until set aside in some mode recognized by law. Jones on Ev. § 601. In such case, where the judgment is one rendered by a court of general jurisdiction, the recitals contained therein constitute evidence of their truth, and every intendment must be indulged in support of the judgment. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Est. of Twombley, 120 Cal. 351, 52 Pac. 815; Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455. The duly certified copy of the judgment pleaded and offered was the highest evidence of the adjudication by the court of the issues involved in the suit brought by Samuel Page against respondent, so its recitals showing acquisition of jurisdiction of the parties in that action constituted evidence of the facts recited. Simmons v. Threshour, 118 Cal. 100, 50 Pac. 312; section 1905, Code Civ. Proc. We therefore conclude that the documents referred to were entitled to be received in evidence unaccompanied by the judgment roll.

The further objection is made that the action was not between the same parties, and did not involve the same issues. A solution of these questions must dispose of the appeal. Samuel Page commenced his action against this respondent December 9, 1897, and prior to his marriage to appellant herein. His death occurred June 24, 1899, and, as she claims by right of succession and as sole heir of her deceased child, it follows that her title, if any, was acquired at a date some 18 months after he, Samuel Page, had instituted suit against this defendant to regain the property involved, and wherein this judgment was rendered. The rule is statutory that, when a matter has once been adjudicated by a competent tribunal, its determination "in respect to the matter directly adjudged" is conclusive not alone between the actual parties themselves, but also as to "their successors in interest by title subsequent to the commencement of the action."

Section 1908, Code Civ. Proc. A judgment binding upon an intestate is binding upon his heirs at law. Jones on Ev. § 603; Ross v. Banta, 34 N. E. 865, 39 N. E. 732, 140 Ind. 120; Bigelow on Estoppel, pp. 75, 76. Appellant's position is one of privity with her deceased husband, to whose position she succeeds, to a limited extent, as to all property rights which he owned at the time of his death. Page v. Garver, 146 Cal. 577, 80 Pac. 860. She stands in his shoes, and a judgment which would estop him in life would bar an action on her part after his death. Page v. Page, 143 Cal. 602, 77 Pac. 452; section 63, Herman on Estoppel.

Appellant insists that the issues determined in the case of Samuel Page against respondent are entirely different from those involved in this action; that the question of Samuel Page's competency or capacity to convey the lands was not in issue in the former action and has never been adjudicated. For the purpose of determining whether the issues are the same, resort may be had to the amended complaint and findings introduced in evidence. Wixson v. Devine, 67 Cal. 341, 7 Pac. 776; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266; Wolverton v. Baker, 86 Cal. 591, 25 Pac. 54. An examination of these discloses the fact that the actions were brought for identically the same purpose; that is, to set aside and annul the deeds (which are the same) whereby Samuel Page conveyed the real estate to this respondent. In the former action Samuel Page alleged that he was at the time of making the deeds "of great age, to wit, of the age of 74 years, and was infirm of purpose, mind and body." In the case at bar his widow alleges that he was at said time "sick, weak and in an exhausted condition," and, by reason of said sickness, he was "incapacitated from doing any business and wholly incapable of making a deed." In both cases it is alleged that this respondent took advantage of his alleged condition, and by false and fraudulent representations induced him to sign the deeds. Evidence which would prove the allegations of the complaint in the one case would be equally applicable to the issues in the other. The same evidence which would be required to support the former action would be required in the one at bar. Phelan v. Quinn, 130 Cal. 374, 62 Pac. 623; Freeman on Judgments, § 259; Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367.

The court found that Samuel Page was not induced through fraudulent representations to make the deeds to this respondent, that there was no conspiracy between respondent and her brother to obtain the property, and that Samuel Page was not infirm of body, mind, or memory. The former case involved the same issues as this, was brought for the same purpose, tried upon its merits, and appellant, claiming under the same title as the successor in interest of Samuel Page, and by reason of her privity with him, is estopped by the adjudication therein had.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to pass upon any other points made.

The judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

KELLER et al. v. McGILLIARD et al.

(Civ. 341.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 15, 1907.)

1. QUIETING TITLE — ANSWER — SHOWING SOURCE OF TITLE—NECESSITY.

In an action to quiet title, defendant set up a decree in an action wherein the issues were the same, quieting title in defendant as against one W., alleging that W. was the real plaintiff in the present action, and that plaintiffs were merely his successors and agents. Held, that the allegations constituted an estoppel preventing W. and his successors and agents from questioning defendant's title, and rendering it unnecessary for defendant to show his source of title.

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

The error, if any, in refusing to strike out defendant's cross-complaint in an action to quiet title, was harmless where the judgment was not rendered on the cross-complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4114.]

3. QUIETING TITLE—PLEADINGS—CROSS-COMPLAINT.

Plaintiff in an action to quiet title may be compelled by defendant's cross-complaint to litigate in the action the cloud cast on defendant's title by the commencement of the action

4. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in an action to quiet title, a judgment for defendant was not based on a certain deed to him, the error, if any, in introducing the deed in evidence, was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4171.]

5. QUIETING TITLE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action to quiet title, the burden of proving a paramount title was on plaintiff.

6. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

A party to an action to quiet title failing to assert his claims properly, or to present the proper evidence, cannot litigate it in a second suit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Mrs. E. J. Keller and another against G. D. McGilliard and others. From a judgment for defendant McGilliard, and from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, for appellants. R. L. Horton, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to quiet title. Judgment was in favor of defendant McGilliard. Plaintiffs appeal from judgment and order denying their motion for a new trial.

The complaint is in the usual form. The action was dismissed as to the defendants Campbell and McC. Chaffey, and the answer of the defendant McGilliard first denies the material allegations of the complaint and then sets up three affirmative defenses: (1) That the property described in the complaint was conveyed by the sheriff of Los Angeles county to one J. E. White by deed made pursuant to a judgment foreclosing a street assessment lien against Alex. Scott and J. A. Frawley and others; that said White thereafter brought an action to quiet his title to said property against the said G. D. McGilliard, defendant herein; that notice of the pendency of said action was filed in the recorder's office as provided by law; and that by the judgment of the superior court duly given and made in said action on the 17th day of September, 1901, it was decreed that said G. D. McGilliard, defendant herein, was the true and lawful owner of said property, and that his title thereto be quieted against the claims of the said J. E. White, and said White estopped from setting up any claim to the property against the defendant herein. That an appeal was taken by said White to the Supreme Court, and said judgment was duly affirmed by that court on the 16th day of October, 1903. That the plaintiff E. J. Keller acquired her title to the property by quitclaim deed from said Alex Scott and J. A. Frawley, dated May 7, 1902; that the issues involved in this case are the same as those involved in White v. McGilliard, and that plaintiff is the direct successor in interest to the alleged title of said Scott and Frawley acquired after the entry of the judgment in the action of White v. McGilliard. (2) A title by adverse possession based upon a certificate of sale of said property for payment of a delinquent bond for street assessment, made to him by the city treasurer of Los Angeles city on October 19, 1898; actual possession and payment of all taxes for more than five years prior to the commencement of the action being alleged. And (3) that the deed by which plaintiff acquired title is void and of no effect. By the same instrument, and as part thereof, said defendant McGilliard sets out a cross-complaint in the form, and containing the usual allegations, of a complaint to quiet title to the property described in the original complaint against the plaintiffs and his codefendants. On the day of trial and prior to the decision of the case defendant was permitted by the court to amend his answer by adding the allegation: "That the plaintiffs herein are closely related to the said J. E. White, the plaintiff in the case of White v. McGilliard, above mentioned, and are his agents and representatives, and that they have no interest in the property described herein, of any kind or character." The court finds all the averments, allegations, and denials of defendants' answer and cross-complaint to be true, but the defense of adverse possession and void deed; and that the allegations, averments, and denials of plaintiffs' pleadings are untrue.

Appellants specify as grounds for reversing the judgment (1) that defendant did not set up in his answer his source of title, upon which the judgment was rendered; (2) error of the court in refusing to strike out the cross-complaint and in giving judgment thereon; and (3) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the court in finding that the treasurer's certificate of sale and deed passed the title to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was not the real party in interest.

To sustain their first point, appellants assume that the only source of title pleaded by defendant was the city treasurer's certificate of sale and adverse possession. These were but parts of the same source of title set up in the second affirmative defense in the answer, and in no way support the judgment, since the trial court expressly found against this defense.

The assumption of appellants is unwarranted by the record. The first affirmative defense pleads as a source of title good against the plaintiffs a decree of the superior court (affirmed by the Supreme Court) quieting defendant McGilliard's title to this same property, rendered, in an action wherein the issues were the same as in this, against J. E. White, who is alleged to be the real plaintiff in this action. While perhaps not in the strict sense a source of title, these allegations constitute an estoppel which prevents J. E. White and his successors and agents from questioning the title of McGilliard, and renders it unnecessary that he should as against their claims show his source of title. This defense appears to be the one upon which the judgment was rendered. It is the rule that a cross-complaint is unnecessary in an action to quiet title, and, where unnecessary, it may be stricken out on motion, but the rule has its exceptions. Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 25 Pac. 407, 22 Am. St. Rep. 243; Islais, etc., v. Allen, 132 Cal. 438, 64 Pac. 713. There is no issue tendered by the cross-complaint here and none made by the answer to it which was not before the court on the complaint and answer. The judgment, however, was not rendered upon the cross-complaint. The findings of fact which support the judgment, and which are sufficient for that purpose, negative the allegations of the complaint and confirm the allegations of the first affirmative defense set forth in the answer. The references to the cross-complaint in the findings may be stricken out as surplusage and the findings still be sufficient to support the judgment. The so-called cross-complaint was not a separate pleading, and its allegations were mere repetitions of some of the allegations of the answer. If the ruling on the motion were error, it was not prejudicial to plaintiffs' interests; but the practice here followed seems to be justified by the decision in Islais v. Allen, supra, in cases where affirmative relief is sought by the defendant to enable the latter to prevent a dismissal of the action by the plaintiff and thus compel a determination of the rights of the parties if the action be begun. In other words, the plaintiff in such an action, having laid claim to the defendants' property by suit, may be compelled, if the latter elects, to litigate in that suit the cloud thus raised upon defendant's title by the commencement of the action.

Appellants' third ground of reversal, like the first, proceeds upon the assumption that the treasurer's certificate of sale is the only source of title pleaded by the defendant. The trial court was of the opinion that there was not sufficient evidence to justify it in finding that this certificate and the deed made in pursuance thereof passed title to the defendant, even when aided by the evidence of adverse possession introduced, and there is nothing in the record to suggest that the judgment rests upon these instruments, or either of them, alone. If the introduction of the deed were erroneous, it could not have been prejudicial. The plaintiffs' confused and conflicting testimony on the witness stand, taken with the record evidence in the case, was sufficient to justify the trial court in finding that she was the mere agent of J. E. White in this action. The matters to be considered in drawing this inference are peculiarly within the province and discretion of the trial court, who had the witness before it, and could best determine the true relations of the parties. For the purposes of this appeal, this finding of the trial court must be accepted and J. E. White regarded as the real plaintiff here. The real plaintiff then stands in the position of attempting to relitigate or again litigate title to the same property and against the same parties who were before the court in White v. McGilliard, 140 Cal. 654, 74 Pac. 298. From the opinion of the Supreme Court in that case it appears that plaintiff in that action (the real plaintiff here) to sustain his claim of ownership of the property relied upon the same title conveyed by deed of one A. K. Crawford to Alex. Scott and J. A. Frawley, which was introduced to support the title of Mrs. Keller, the record plaintiff here, and also upon the deed which White received from the sheriff in pursuance of the execution of the judgment foreclosing the street assessment lien in the action of White v. Scott, Frawley et al. In the absence of other evidence than these instruments and proceedings, the court found that they were "not in themselves sufficient to connect appellant with any paramount title to the premises."

The court upon the trial of that case (140 Cal. 654, 74 Pac. 298) considered these evidences of title, and presumably found that all the title originally held by Crawford was vested in J. E. White; but, since it did not appear that Crawford had any title at all, White's claim of ownership failed against defendants' possession because the burden was upon him to establish a paramount title. Had he supplied in that action the chain of title with which he now supports the title in Mrs. Keller's name, his whole title would have been passed upon by the court. The purchase from Scott and Frawley in the name of Mrs. Keller does not bring to plaintiffs' support any other or different title than that presented on the trial of the other cause. All the title of Scott and Frawley and of A. K. Crawford was before the court, but plaintiff in that action failed to show of what this title consisted. Failing to do this, he cannot now maintain another action against the same parties for the purpose of introducing evidence to show what title Scott and Frawley had at the time of the former trial. It is a well-settled rule that if a party fails to assert his claims properly, or to present the proper evidence in the first suit, he will not be permitted to litigate it in a second suit. Bingham v. Kearney, 136 Cal. 177, 68 Pac. 597.

The errors of law complained of as arising during the course of the trial, in so far as they are not covered by the foregoing consideration of the case, are not specially urged. They do not appear to present any error prejudicial to appellant.

Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

LINDOW v. COHN. (Civ. 292.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 15, 1907.)

1. Principal and Agent — Authority of Agent.

A traveling salesman, engaged in soliciting orders for merchandise and transmitting them to his employer, who had the option to accept or reject them, and not held out as possessing other than the ordinary authority incident to the business of a soliciting agent, though possessing authority, under Civ. Code, § 2323, to warrant the quality of the goods, has no authority to enter into an agreement for the settlement of a customer's claim for breach of warranty of the quality of goods previously sold by him to the customer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 329.]

2. Same—Ratification—Evidence.

A traveling salesman, engaged in soliciting orders for merchandise and transmitting them to his employer, transmitted an order, which the employer accepted and filled. The order was procured by the salesman agreeing with the customer to settle for breach of warranty of the quality of goods previously sold. The employer had no knowledge of the settlement prior to the shipment of the goods pursuant to the order, and he subsequently repudiated the settlement and returned to the customer the check sent by him. Held, that the employer having no knowledge thereof, as required by Civ. Code, § 2310, did not ratify the unauthorized act of the salesman in making the settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, §§ 627, 630.]

3. Sales—Contracts—Rescission—Redelivery of Goods.

A traveling salesman procured an order from a customer, which the principal filled. The goods did not comply with the warranty, and thereafter, on the customer giving to the salesman a second order, the salesman agreed that the customer might return the unsold portion of the first bill of goods, and, after deducting the price of the same, remit to the employer the balance in settlement of the second bill. The employer refused to accept the return of the goods, writing: "We return you your check. * * * The goods that you shipped back will lay at the railroad at your expense, as we positively refuse to accept them." Held, that the employer did not receive the goods that were returned by the customer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by G. C. Lindow against C. Cohn. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jellett & Meyerstein and Geo. E. Whitaker, for appellant. Emmons & Irwin, J. W. P. Laird, and Fred E. Borton, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The facts as they appear from the record are: That one Peiser, as traveling salesman and soliciting agent of Meyerstein Company, plaintiff's assignor, sold to defendant a lot of merchandise, consisting of corduroy trousers, and on behalf of his principal made covenants of warranty as to the quality of the goods. Some six weeks after the goods had been received and paid for by defendant, Peiser again called upon defendant, soliciting further orders for his house, when defendant for the first time made complaint, stating that the corduroy trousers were not as he had represented them; that every pair thereof which defendant had sold had been brought back to him; and that he (defendant) had been compelled to reimburse the purchasers thereof. Whereupon Peiser admitted that the goods were not as warranted, and said to defendant that he wanted his trade, that he would do all that he could to make it right, and told defendant to return the goods and charge his principal, the Meyerstein Company, with the goods shipped back, plus freight charges and the amount of defendant's loss in making adjustments with his customers. Defendant then gave Peiser an order on Meyerstein Company for the bill of goods, the purchase price of which is herein involved. The order was transmitted to Meyerstein Company, who in due course of time shipped the goods as per order. The defendant, pursuant to his agreement with Peiser, returned to Meyerstein Company the unsold portion of the first bill of goods, and after deducting the price of the goods so returned, together with freight charges and the amount which defendant had paid to his customers in making adjustments with them, sent to Meyerstein Company his check for the balance, in settlement of this last bill of goods. The Meyerstein Company refused absolutely to accept the return of the goods, and by letter stated: "We return you your check, shipping receipt and Wells, Fargo & Co. receipt. The goods that you shipped back will lay at the railroad at your expense, as we positively refuse to accept them." The assignee of Meyerstein Company thereupon brought suit for the amount of the last bill of goods, and judgment was rendered for defendant, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The court found that Peiser, as agent of Meyerstein Company, had authority to make the agreement for the return of the corduroy trousers and settle and allow the amount of damages claimed by defendant, as a condition of defendant giving the second order for goods, and found further that Meyerstein Company ratified the act of its agent. There is nothing in the record disclosing the extent of Peiser's authority, other than the fact that he was the traveling salesman of Meyerstein Company, engaged in soliciting orders for his house. It thus appears that no actual authority, as defined in section 2316, Civ. Code, was conferred upon him to make this agreement. Hence the only question, aside from the ratification found by the court, is whether or not the making of the agreement for the return of the goods to his principal was within the scope of his employment as traveling salesman or soliciting agent. Did the position clothe him with authority to make the said agreement with defendant, and, if not, did Meyerstein Company ratify his acts in that behalf? Peiser's authority to sell carried with it the authority to warrant the quality of the goods sold (section 2323, Civ. Code), and the court, upon sufficient evidence, finds that he did so warrant them. This section of the Code, however, cannot be extended so as to clothe the agent with authority to determine, not only whether there was a breach of the covenants of warranty, but also to adjust and allow the damages which defendant claims to have sustained by such breach. Section 2325, Civ. Code, provides that a general agent intrusted with the possession of goods sold may receive the price for which they are sold; but in this case the agent was not so entrusted. There is no evidence of custom, previous dealings, or evidence of any character, which tends to show that Peiser was held out by his principal as possessing other than the ordinary authority incident to the business of soliciting agent (section 2337, Civ. Code), and that was merely to solicit orders and transmit them to his principal. Chambers v. Short, 79 Mo. 204. His principal was not bound to complete the sale, but might, at its option, decline to fill the order. Ency. of Law, vol. 6, p. 227. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, "to sell" means to sell for cash, and an agent authorized to sell has no authority to receive other goods in part payment (Organ Co. v. Starkey, 59 N. H. 142); and in this case Peiser had no authority solely by virtue of his position to bind his principal upon an agreement to receive back a portion of the goods in the way of barter in payment for the second order (Clough v. Whitcomb, 105 Mass. 484; Benjamin on Sales, p. 728; Hayes v. Colby, 65 N. H. 192, 18 Atl. 251; Seiple v. Irwin, 30 Pa. 513). Defendant had paid Meyerstein Company for the first bill of goods, and the transaction was complete, and left defendant with his cause of action against the principal for any breach of warranty made by the agent in the sale thereof.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings to the effect that Peiser was authorized to make, on behalf of his principal, the covenants and agreement upon which respondent bases his defense.

The court finds that Meyerstein Company ratified and affirmed the acts of Peiser, and respondent contends that, even conceding that authority was lacking in Peiser to make the agreement, the ratification is sufficient to bind his principal. It is true that Meyerstein Company filled the second order and shipped the goods to defendant; but this in itself would not constitute a ratification on the part of the company, unless it had notice of Peiser's alleged agreement with defendant before making delivery of the goods. Section 2310, Civ. Code; Lumber Co. v. Krug, 89 Cal. 237, 26 Pac. 902; Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 607, 9 L. Ed. 246. There is no evidence tending to show that the company had any knowledge of the alleged agreement claimed to have been made with Peiser prior to such shipment, and it appears from the letter which defendant offered in evidence that it repudiated the agreement in the strongest possible language, and returned to defendant his check. Such disavowal was sufficient. We cannot agree with respondent that Meyerstein Company received the goods that were returned. The contrary clearly and conclusively appears.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

ROBINSON v. MUIR et al. (Sac. 1,415.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1907.)

1. EXECUTION—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

The purchaser, in a suit to foreclose liens, takes no title as against a prior grantee in an unrecorded deed, not a party to the suit; the lien claimants and such purchaser, who was acting on their behalf, knowing at all times of the claims of such grantee, and Civ. Code, § 1217, declaring an unrecorded instrument valid as between the parties and those having notice thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 21, Execution, §§ 783, 785.]

2. CORPORATIONS — SALE OF PROPERTY TO STOCKHOLDER.

Civ. Code, § 309, prohibiting the directors of a corporation from making dividends except from surplus profits, or dividing any of the capital stock among any of the stockholders, does not prevent the sale, for an adequate consideration, by a corporation of any of its property to a stockholder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 695, 698.]

3. APPEAL—RECORD.

The admission in evidence of a judgment roll cannot be reviewed on appeal from the denial of a new trial; the judgment roll not being incorporated in the statement on motion for new trial, so that its contents cannot be known.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2899.]

4. EXECUTION—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

The purchaser at sale in a suit to foreclose liens on land, though knowing that the one in whom was the legal title had purchased as agent, takes the legal title, subject merely to the equity of the agent's principal to have a conveyance of such title.

5. QUIETING TITLE—PLEADING AND PROOF.

The defense, in an action to quiet title, consisting merely of a denial of plaintiff's title and an assertion of title in defendant, is not established by proof that, while plaintiff is the owner of the legal title, defendant has an equity entitling him to a conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Quieting Title, § 87.]

6. APPEAL—SUPPLYING FINDINGS.

Findings on issues as to which the trial court has not found cannot be supplied on appeal, though the evidence be regarded as sufficient to sustain them.

7. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where findings are sufficient to sustain a judgment, failure to find on other issues, which could not change the result, is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4238, 4239.]

8. SAME—REVERSAL IN PART.

Where the issues are entirely separate, and a new trial was properly denied as to some, and erroneously as to others, the order will be reversed only so far as necessary to correct the error therein.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4555.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; E. E. Gaddis, Judge.

Action by A. K. Robinson against William Muir and others. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part.

A. K. Robinson, for appellant. J. D. Meredith, F. P. Tuttle, and Lander & Burns, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff commenced this action to quiet his title to four placer mining claims known as the "Manhattan," the "Weske No. 1," the "Weske No. 2," and the "Weske No. 3" mines, and to a ditch or canal known as the "Dead Horse Mining Ditch," all situate in Placer county. The action was dismissed as to the defendant Hamilton; the other three defendants answering separately. White set up a claim of title to the Manhattan mine. Muir and Chapin filed answers, in which each denied the plaintiff's allegation of ownership, and claimed title in himself to an undivided one-half interest in all the property involved in the action. Certain separate and additional defenses were also pleaded by Muir and Chapin. Upon a trial before the court, sitting without a jury, findings were made to the effect that the plaintiff "is not, and never was, the owner of, or entitled to, or in the possession of, all, or any, of" the property described in the complaint; that the defendant White "has no right, title, claim, interest, demand, or estate" in or to said Manhattan placer mine, or any of the property described in the complaint; that the defendant Muir is the owner of an undivided one-half interest in said Weske No. 1, Weske No. 2, and Weske No. 3, and Manhattan mines, and the defendant chapin the owner of an undivided one-half interest in and to said mines. The court made no findings on any other of the defenses set up by Muir and Chapin. Appropriate conclusions of law were drawn from the findings, and a judgment was entered whereby it was decreed that Muir and Chapin are the true and lawful owners and entitled to the possession of the four mining claims in question; and that their title thereto be quieted as against the claims of the plaintiff and all persons claiming under him. It was further adjudged that plaintiff was not the owner of or entitled to the possession of the ditch known as the "Dead Horse Mining Ditch." Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he now appeals from the order denying his said motion. The principal contention of the appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings of the court that he was not the owner of any of the property described in the complaint, and that the defendants Muir and Chapin were the owners of the four mining claims involved in the action. The titles asserted by the parties to the various pieces of property involved are traced through different channels, and it will be necessary therefore to state them under separate heads.

1. The three Weskes: It appeared without dispute that the three claims, known as "Weske No. 1," "Weske No. 2," and "Weske No. 3," were originally patented to Adolph Weske, who, in October, 1878, conveyed them to the Weske Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation. The plaintiff offered in evidence the judgment roll in an action entitled A. Skym et al. v. William Muir et al., in the superior court of Placer county. This was an action to foreclose miners' liens upon said Weske No. 1, Weske No. 2, and Weske No. 3 claims. The Weske Consolidated Mining Company was one of the parties defendant in said action, which resulted in the entry of a decree foreclosing said liens. An order of sale was duly issued in said action, and pursuant thereto said three claims were, on June 21, 1897, sold to J. M. Fulweiler and Ben P. Tabor, who, on June 28, 1898, received the commissioner's deed for the same. On October 11, 1898, Fulweiler and Tabor conveyed said claims to John R. Scupham. Subsequently, E. D. Pereira and others commenced an action in the superior court of Placer county to foreclose certain miners' liens upon all the property involved in this case, including the three Weskes. Among the parties defendant were George W. Hamilton, John R. Scupham, William Muir, the Weske Consolidated Mining Company, and others. In that action a decree was entered in favor of the plaintiffs as against Scupham, but not against Muir, and an order of sale issued. On September 20, 1902, the sheriff of Placer county executed a certificate of sale of the four claims and the Dead Horse Ditch to A. K. Robinson, the plaintiff herein, and on September 29, 1903, the sheriff's deed of said property was executed to plaintiff and recorded.

Undoubtedly these facts made out a prima facie case of title in plaintiff to the three Weskes. The defendants Muir and Chapin, however, offered evidence tending to establish that on or about the 29th day of November, 1882, the Weske Consolidated Mining Company had executed and delivered a deed conveying the Weske No. 1, Weske No. 2, and Weske No. 3 claims to the defendant Muir. This deed was never recorded; it having been, as was claimed, destroyed by fire shortly after its delivery. Evidence was also produced to the effect that on June 17, 1883, Muir mortgaged the three Weskes to C. F. Morgan and J. W. Huffman; that on August 6, 1883, Morgan and Huffman assigned the mortgage to Samuel Sussman, who thereafter brought an action to foreclose the mortgage, recovering judgment of foreclosure on June 3, 1885. A foreclosure sale was had on August 4, 1885, and Sussman became the purchaser at this sale, and received his deed in due course. On June 4, 1898 (after the foreclosure sale in Skym v. Muir to Fulweiler and Tabor), Sussman deeded the three Weskes to Muir. Muir conveyed a one-half interest in all these properties to Chapin.

The trial court evidently believed this testimony, and, so believing it, necessarily reached the conclusion that plaintiff had no title to the three Weskes, but that the title thereof was in Muir and his grantee, Chapin. Plaintiff's claim is derived from the sale in the action of Pereira et al. v. Hamilton et al. Among the defendants in that case was John R. Scupham, and it is his interest that is claimed to have passed to the plaintiff by virtue of this sale. But the only interest which Scupham had was acquired by his deed from Fulweiler and Tabor, who were the purchasers at the sale under the foreclosure of the miners' liens in Skym v. Muir. In this action of Skym v. Muir, Samuel Sussman was not a party, and any interest which he may have had in the property could therefore not have been affected by the judgment in that action or the sale thereunder. But during the entire pendency of that action, and until after the sale therein, Sussman had been the owner of the property. It follows that no title passed to Fullweiler and Tabor by the foreclosure sale, and that none could pass from them to Scupham or to the plaintiff. The evidence does not sustain the contention of plaintiff that Sussman held the property merely as trustee for Muir, who was made a party to the Skym suit. Nor could Muir's interest, derived from Sussman's conveyance in 1898, have been affected by the sale in the Pereira suit, since Muir, although a party to that suit, recovered judgment in his favor.

It is argued that, as Muir's claim of title has its original basis in the unrecorded deed from the Weske Consolidated Mining Company, it cannot prevail as against the claim of plaintiff. There would be much force in this contention if plaintiff occupied the position of a bona fide purchaser for value. Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680; Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 575, 32 Pac. 579, 21 L. R. A. 33, 33 Am. St. Rep. 209; Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 153, 45 Pac. 267. But there is ample evidence to sustain the conclusion that the lien claimants suing in Pereira v. Hamilton, and the plaintiff, who was acting on their behalf, were at all times fully informed of Muir's claim of title, even if they were not put upon inquiry by his actual possession of the property. Security, etc., Co. v. Willamette, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 636, 34 Pac. 321. The purchaser, with notice of another's claim, cannot take advantage of the fact that the conveyance under which the other claims was not recorded. Civ. Code, § 1217.

It is suggested also, that, as Muir was shown to be a stockholder of the Weske Consolidated Mining Company, the conveyance from that company to him was void, under the provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code. Assuming that plaintiff is in a position to assail collaterally a transfer which has never been questioned by the corporation, its stockholders, or its creditors, there is nothing in section 309 to prohibit the sale by a corporation, for an adequate consideration, of property owned by it, and such sale may be to a stockholder as well as to a third person. There is evidence here that the transfer in question was the result of such a sale.

It is claimed that the court erred in admitting, over the plaintiff's objection, a certain judgment roll in an action brought by William Muir against J. R. Scupham. But the appellant failed to incorporate this judgment roll in his statement on motion for a new trial. We have no knowledge beyond the statements of counsel as to the contents of this roll, and without such knowledge we cannot say that its admission, if erroneous, was prejudicial.

So far as the three Weskes are concerned, we think the findings were fully sustained by the evidence, and that the court committed no error to the prejudice of the appellant.

2. The Manhattan mine: The statement on motion for new trial sets forth that "the evidence is undisputed that in 1898 the title to the Manhattan placer mine stood of record and was in J. M. Fulweiler and B. P. Tabor." Fulweiler and Tabor conveyed said mine to John R. Scupham by deed dated and recorded October 11, 1898. Scupham executed a deed to Muir on July 25, 1902. Meanwhile, on July 14, 1902, the plaintiff, in Pereira et al. v. Hamilton et al., had obtained a decree foreclosing their liens on this property as against Scupham, and pursuant to this decree the sale to plaintiff, as above stated, was made. A notice of the pendency of this action had been filed with the recorder of Placer county on January 18, 1902. The sale to plaintiff, and the deed executed in pursuance thereof, conveyed to the purchaser all the title which the judgment debtor (Scupham) had at the date of the filing of the lis pendens. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 409, 1908. At that date the legal title was in Scupham, and it accordingly passed by the execution sale and deed. The respondents sought to avoid this conclusion by offering evidence to the effect that Scupham, in purchasing the Manhattan mine, acted as agent for Muir, and was holding the title in trust for him, and that the lien claimants, before commencing their foreclosure suit, as well as the plaintiff, their attorney, had actual notice of these facts. The evidence was probably sufficient to justify a finding in favor of this theory; but, if this was so, it did not alter the fact that the legal title to the property was in Scupham, and that Muir simply had an equity entitling him to a conveyance from Scupham of such legal title. The plaintiff, purchasing with notice of Muir's claim, became the owner of the legal title, subject to the same equity. The findings were that plaintiff had no title, but that the title was in Muir and his grantee, Chapin. These findings were contrary to the evidence. It has long been settled law in this state that an action to quiet title cannot be maintained by the owner of an equitable title against the owner of the legal title. Von Drachenfels v. Doolittle, 77 Cal. 295, 19 Pac. 518; Harrigan v. Mowry, 84 Cal. 456, 22 Pac. 658, 24 Pac. 48; Burris v. Adams, 96 Cal. 667, 31 Pac. 565; Tuffree v. Polhemus, 108 Cal. 676, 41 Pac. 806; McDonald v. McCoy, 121 Cal. 55, 53 Pac. 421; Chase v. Cameron, 133 Cal. 231, 65 Pac. 460. See, also, Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 7 Sup. Ct. 1129, 30 L. Ed. 1010. And, similarly, in such action by the owner of the legal title, proof of a mere equity in the defendant will not sustain a finding that such defendant is the owner of the property. Reilly v. Wright, 117 Cal. 77, 48 Pac. 470. We do not intend to suggest that an equitable defense may not be set up in actions to quiet title; but, where the defense consists merely of a denial of plaintiff's ownership and the assertion of title in defendant, such defense is not established by proof that the plaintiff is the owner of the legal title, subject to an equity in favor of defendant. It is true that in this case various equitable defenses were interposed by the answers of the defendants Muir and Chapin. No findings were made on these, however, and they cannot therefore be considered. Such defenses, in order to be available to the defendants, should have been the subject of favorable findings by the court. Even though we might regard the evidence as sufficient to sustain them, we cannot supply findings on issues as to which the lower court has not found.

It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to add that, if the findings actually made (which are sufficient to support the judgment), were sustained by the evidence, the failure to find upon additional issues, which could not affect the result, would be entirely immaterial. We mention this in answer to the contention of appellant that such failure in itself constitutes prejudicial error.

3. The Dead Horse mining ditch: This stands in much the same situation as the Manhattan mine. The plaintiff offered evidence tending to show title in Scupham, and a sale of the same to plaintiff in the Pereira foreclosure suit. The defendants again rely on proof of the trust relation between Scupham and Muir; but, for the reasons stated above, this was insufficient to overthrow plaintiff's claim of title. A new trial must accordingly be ordered as to the Manhattan claim and the Dead Horse mining ditch. We see no reason, however, why such new trial should not be limited to the issues raised as to these properties. Under our practice a party may move for a new trial as to a part of the issues. San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 Pac. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83. If the motion be for a new trial as to the entire action, the court may grant it in part, and deny it in part, leaving its former determination upon a portion of the issues to remain. Duff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 1, 35 Pac. 437. It has also long been settled that upon an appeal from the judgment an appellate court may order a new trial as to a part of the issues, leaving the decision in force as to the remainder. Marziou v. Pioche, 10 Cal. 546; Soule v. Dawes, 14 Cal. 248; Argenti v. San Francisco, 30 Cal. 463; Kinsey v. Green, 51 Cal. 379; Glascock v. Ashman, 52 Cal. 420; Billings v. Everett, 52 Cal. 661; Goodlett v. St. Elmo Investment Co., 94 Cal. 303, 29 Pac. 505; Tunis v. Lakeport Ass'n, 98 Cal. 285, 33 Pac. 63. The reasoning upon which these cases went is equally applicable to an appeal from an order denying a new trial. Where the issues are entirely separate, and a new trial was properly denied as to some, and erroneously as to others, the order should be reversed only so far as may be necessary to correct the error in the order. As we have seen, there was no error in denying a new trial as to the three Weskes, and it would be imposing a useless burden and expense upon the parties to require the issues affecting these claims, which have once been properly adjudicated, to be again reopened for litigation. See Emerson v. Yosemite, etc., Co. (Cal. Sup.) 85 Pac. 122.

The order denying a new trial is reversed so far as it affects the issues raised regarding the Manhattan mine and the Dead Horse mining ditch. In all other respects it is affirmed. The parties should, if they desire, have leave to amend their pleadings, or to file additional pleadings regarding the issues sent back for a new trial.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

CHUBBUCK v. WILSON. (Sac. 1,333.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1907.)

1. OFFICERS—COMPENSATION—OCCUPANCY BY DE FACTO OFFICER—LIABILITY.

Pol. Code, § 936, as amended by Laws 1891, p. 28, c. 44, provides that, when the title of an incumbent to any office is contested in any court no warrant can be drawn or paid for any part of the salary until such proceedings have been finally determined, except that the section shall not apply to any party to a contest who holds the certificate of election or commission of office and discharges the duties of the office, but that he shall receive the salary as if no contest was pending. Code Civ. Proc. § 807, relating to actions by the Attorney General against one usurping or unlawfully holding a public office, declares that, if judgment be rendered on the right of another person alleged to be entitled in favor of such person, he may recover by action the damages which he may have sustained by reason of the usurpation of the office by the defendant. Held, that where defendant was awarded a certificate of election as sheriff of B. county, under which he performed the duties of the office, pending a contest, in which plaintiff was successful, plaintiff could not recover the amount paid to defendant as salary while he held the office, either as compensation incident to the office, or as damages for defendant's withholding the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Officers, §§ 134, 159.]

2. SAME—ELECTIONS—CONTEST—APPEAL.

Where an appeal was taken by defendant in an election contest within the time prescribed, the appeal suspended the judgment, and continued defendant's certificate of election in full force during its pendency, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1127, in so far as such certificate and defendant's incumbency entitled him to receive the salary of the office.

Henshaw and McFarland, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; John C. Gray, Judge.

Action by James Chubbuck against S. H. Wilson. From a judgment in favor of defendant, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of HENSHAW, J., in department, with which McFARLAND and LORIGAN, JJ., concur:

"Plaintiff's cause of action against defendant arose out of the following facts: He and defendant were rival candidates for the office of sheriff of Butte county at the general election held in November, 1902. On the canvass of the returns by the board of supervisors, defendant was declared elected, and a certificate of election was issued to him. In January, 1903, he entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office. Plaintiff in due time contested defendant's election. His action was tried, and resulted in a judgment in his favor on the 24th day of January, 1903. The judgment decreed that the certificate of election issued to the contestee, defendant and respondent herein, be annulled and set aside, and that the county clerk issue to contestant, plaintiff and appellant herein, a certificate of election to the office of sheriff. The county clerk duly issued this certificate of election. Chubbuck qualified, and on the 26th day of January, 1903, demanded of Wilson possession of the office, which was refused. Wilson in due time appealed from the judgment in the election contest to this court, and on the 25th day of March, 1904, the judgment against him was affirmed. Upon the going down of the remittitur one month thereafter, namely, on the 25th day of April, 1904, Wilson surrendered the office to Chubbuck, who then took possession of it, and has since discharged its duties. Chubbuck then commenced his action, setting forth all these facts, and alleging that the respondent had wrongfully withheld said office from him from the 24th day of January, 1903, the date of the judgment of the superior court, until the 25th day of April, 1904, and prayed for damages for such unlawful withholding in the sum of $8,100, the amount of salary and fees received by defendant between these dates. Defendant demurred to this complaint upon the ground that it failed to state a cause of action, in that it appeared that defendant had received the salary and fees pending the election contest, and that during all of that time the defendant held the certificate of election and was discharging the duties of the office. The demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff appeals.

"The action is in form for money had and received. It is based upon the well-established principle that a de jure officer, after recovering possession of the office, has a right of action against the intruder, and that the salary and fees received by such intruder are the measure of his damage. Such was the rule at common law, and such, generally, is the rule in all of the states which have adopted the common law as the basis of procedure. 1 Chitty Plead. 100 m. p.; 8 Am. & Eng. 810; Avis v. Stukey, 2 Mod. 260; Vaux v. Jefferson, 2 Dyer, 114. In Dolan v. Mayor, 68 N. Y. 274, 23 Am. Rep. 168, it is said: 'The exclusion of a de jure officer is a legal wrong committed by the intruder. In a legal view it is immaterial that the defendant may have acted in good faith, or that he supposed he had the better title. A good motive is not an adequate answer to a claim for indemnity for a violated right. There is a great preponderance of authority in support of the doctrine that the de jure officer can recover, as against the intruder, the damages resulting from the intrusion.' Indeed, as we have read respondent's brief, that such a right of action exists, where not destroyed by statute, is conceded. But respondent insists that the statutory law of this state now deprives the successful litigant in a contested election case of this right. He admits that under section 807, Code Civ. Proc., such a right exists, as it has been declared to exist in People ex rel. Drew v. Rogers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 Pac. 740, 50 Pac. 668, where the action is strictly for usurpation of office under section 803, Code Civ. Proc., but argues that this right is limited to that particular class of actions because of the present reading of section 936 of the Political Code. Prior to 1891 that section read as follows: 'When the title of the incumbent of any office in this state is contested by proceedings instituted in any court for that purpose, no warrant can thereafter be drawn or paid for any part of the salary until such proceedings have been finally determined.' In 1891 the Legislature amended this section by adding the following: 'Provided, however, that this section shall not be construed to apply to any party to a contest or proceeding now pending, or hereafter instituted, who holds the certificate of election or commission of office and discharges the duties of the office; but such party shall receive the salary of such office the same as if no such contest or proceeding was pending.' Laws 1891, p. 28, c. 44. Upon the construction of this section as amended, respondent cites Bledsoe v. Colgan, 138 Cal. 34, 70 Pac. 924, Wilson v. Fisher, 140 Cal. 188, 73 Pac. 850, and Anderson v. Browning, 140 Cal. 222, 73 Pac. 986, and, from his reading of these cases, declares that they are absolutely determinative of the case, and leave no ground for argument as to the soundness of the ruling of the court in sustaining the demurrer. It is important to consider, therefore, just what these cases do decide. Bledsoe v. Colgan was an original proceeding for mandate, brought against the state controller, asking that he be ordered to draw his warrant in favor of Bledsoe for salary as judge of the superior court. It was shown that, in a quo warranto proceeding brought by Bledsoe to contest the right of John L. Campbell to hold the office, the trial had resulted in a judgment that Bledsoe had been duly elected to the office, and should take possession thereof upon qualifying and taking oath, and that subsequently Bledsoe had so qualified and taken possession of the office, and had continuously performed the duties thereof. The defendants in the quo warranto proceedings had appealed from the judgment, and the appeal was pending at the time of this application for mandate. This court held that, under these circumstances, the judgment in mandate could not be considered the equivalent of the certificate of election contemplated by section 936, Pol. Code, saying that the commission of office which he was given by the judgment was not the same as the certificate of election which the law declared he must hold to become entitled to the salary while litigation was pending. 'Prior to 1891,' says this court, 'when litigation arose contesting the title to an office, no salary could be paid to the incumbent of the office until that litigation was finally determined; but the Legislature, recognizing the extreme harshness of this rule, made the exceptions found in the aforesaid proviso.' Thus, what Bledsoe v. Colgan decides is, first, that the proviso to section 936 of the Political Code is valid and entitles the state, or other disbursing officer, to pay, and the incumbent who holds a certificate of election to receive, the salary or emoluments of the office. Anderson v. Browning, supra, was an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Yolo county, directing the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the defendant, as auditor of the county, to draw his warrant on the county treasurer in favor of the plaintiff as salary of the plaintiff as district attorney. Anderson had been declared elected, and a certificate of election had been issued to him, and he had qualified by taking the official oath and had entered upon the discharge of his duties. His opponent, Huston, had instituted a contest of Anderson's right, and a trial had resulted in a judgment in favor of Huston. Anderson had appealed to this court, and the appeal was pending at the time of the demand made upon the auditor, who refused to draw his warrant under the indicated circumstances. It was held that mandate should issue, that the appeal by Anderson stayed the operation of the judgment, and that the certificate of election continued unimpaired during the pendency of the appeal. Therefore that Anderson occupied the position of incumbent who held a certificate of election, and, under section 936, Pol. Code, was entitled to draw the salary. Wilson v. Fisher, 140 Cal. 188, 73 Pac. 850, was in principle and in decision identical with the last cited case. Collectively, then, these cases decide that under the proviso of section 936, Pol. Code, the incumbent, who has received the certificate of election, is entitled to draw the salary of the office, and the state, or county, or municipality, is compelled to pay that salary until final determination of the right upon appeal, even though the trial court may have decided against his claim of title to the office. But in none of these decisions, it will be noticed, is there a single word touching the right of private action which exists against one who is a usurper of office, and an officeholder who continues to hold office after judgment by the superior court, notwithstanding that his appeal may suspend the operation of that judgment, is a usurper from the date of that judgment, if the decision upon appeal shall be adverse to him. Such has been the settled law of this state since Dorsey v. Smyth, 28 Cal. 21, where it is said: 'It was the duty of defendant when judgment was rendered against him in the contest, to have surrendered the office. He was presumed to know the law, and acted at his peril.' So, in People v. Potter, 63 Cal. 127, it is said: 'After the judgment in the superior court there was no legal obligation upon him to hold. On the contrary, the law made it his duty to surrender the office to his successor. If he did not, he acted at his peril.'

"What, then, is the meaning of the amendment to section 936, Pol. Code? Before that amendment, while a contest over an office was pending, and until the final decision of such contest, the disbursing officers could draw no warrant in favor of either party without peril of becoming themselves liable in case, ultimately, title should be found in another, for the rule of law was that the salary was an incident, not to the tenure, but to the legal title, and in whomsoever the legal title should be shown to exist, to him belonged the salary. So far, therefore, as the disbursing officers were concerned, since they could not pay, excepting at their own peril, the result was that no payments were made at all, and this resulted in injury to the service of the state, since it must often follow that service would not be performed well, if at all, by one who would have to look eleswhere than to the salary for his very living expenses during a protracted period of litigation. In contemplation of this situation, which had actually arisen, the amendment was passed, and, for the good of the public service, it declared that, as between the state and the incumbent holding a certificate, the state would pay to him the salary of the office, and the disbursing officers, upon such payment, would be relieved from all liability. Wilson v. Fisher, 140 Cal. 188, 73 Pac. 850. It nowhere said that, as between such incumbent and the legal and rightful claimant of the office, such rightful claimant would not have his action against the incumbent for the illegal and unlawful withholding. The government is keenly interested, as a matter of fundamental principle, in seeing that its duly elected officers shall have and hold their offices; but to deprive such a duly elected officer from ever receiving the emoluments of an office by ordering the salary paid to an incumbent holding unlawfully, and then to say that the legal officer should have no right of action for a recovery against such an incumbent, would be to put a premium upon frivolous appeals, and be a declaration that the state was not interested in seeing that its legally elected and qualified officers were seated, but, to the contrary, that it designed the emoluments of an office to go to him who, by hook or crook, could get possession of it with a certificate of election. Moreover, as we have seen, section 807, Code Civ. Proc., does make provision for the recovery of damages by the one who proves his legal title against an intruder, and these damages are, of course, the costs of his litigation, with the salary or fees of the office which the intruder has received. An action for usurpation of office can be brought as well against one holding the certificate of election and drawing the salary, as can an election contest pure and simple. Shall it be said that this private right to damages depends merely upon the form of action, and that, if the claimant adopts the expeditious mode of an election contest, he shall not have a right to recover damages, while if he adopts the more circuitous proceeding of obtaining permission of the Attorney General, to proceed in quo warranto, if successful in this litigation, he may recover these damages? There is neither logic, nor common sense, nor yet the mandate of the law, to compel such a conclusion.

"As we have seen, the defendant became an intruder by holding possession of the office after the judgment of the superior court. He had, of course, the right to appeal, and he had the right to draw the salary until the appeal was determined. Upon the other hand, he could have surrendered the office, and still have prosecuted his appeal. Acting as he did, he acted at peril of the result.

"It is therefore ordered that the judgment be reversed, and the demurrer be overruled, with leave to the defendant to answer."

A. E. Boynton and Park Henshaw, for appellant. W. H. Carlin, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment given in favor of defendant on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The facts of the case, as shown by the complaint, are as follows: Plaintiff and defendant were opposing candidates for the office of sheriff of Butte county at the general election held November 4, 1902. On the official canvass of the returns of said election, defendant was found to have received the highest number of votes, and was declared elected, and a certificate of such election was regularly issued to him on November 22, 1902. In January, 1903, he entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office. Plaintiff in due time contested the election of defendant under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to such contests (section 1111 et seq.), with the result that, on January 24, 1903, judgment was rendered in the superior court of Butte county declaring plaintiff elected to the office, and annulling the certificate of election issued to defendant. Thereupon plaintiff qualified, and on January 26, 1903, demanded to be let into possession of the office. Defendant on the same day appealed from said judgment to this court. The judgment was affirmed by this court on March 25, 1904; the remittitur being transmitted to the superior court one month thereafter. Thereupon, on April 25, 1904, defendant, who had in the meantime continued in the possession of the office, discharging all the duties appertaining thereto, surrendered possession of the office to plaintiff. Between the date of the judgment in the superior court, January 24, 1903, and the giving up of possession of the office, defendant received from the county the accruing salary provided by law for such office, $6,000 per annum, as well as certain fees allowed such officer by law, amounting to $600, or thereabouts. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover from defendant the amount of salary and fees so received by him during his incumbency of the office.

It cannot be doubted that, in the absence of statutory provision compelling a contrary conclusion, these facts would show a right of recovery in plaintiff. This is not disputed by defendant. At common law, the salary annexed to a public office is incident to the title to the office, and not to its occupation and exercise, and it is apparently well established that, in the absence of statutory provision, the de jure officer recovering possession of the office has a right of action against the intruder for the damage occasioned him by the intrusion, and that the salary and fees received by the intruder are the measure of his damage. We are of the opinion that this rule has, however, been materially modified in this state by statute. From the time of the adoption of the Codes to the year 1891, section 936 of the Political Code was as follows: "When the title of the incumbent of any office in this state is contested by proceedings instituted in any court for that purpose, no warrant can thereafter be drawn or paid for any part of the salary until such proceedings have been finally determined." The effect of this provision was to relieve the disbursing officers of the necessity of determining at their own risk as to who was the rightful claimant, and, by keeping the money in the public treasury pending the proceeding, to secure to the person lawfully entitled to the office the full salary annexed thereto, and to protect the public from the contingency of being compelled to pay twice for the same period of time, as had occurred in Dorsey v. Smyth, 28 Cal. 21, and Carroll v. Siebenthaler, 37 Cal. 193. It was undoubtedly a recognition of the doctrine that the salary annexed to the office is incident to the true title, and not to its occupation and exercise, and the rightful claimant, when his right was finally adjudged, would become entitled to receive from the disbursing officers the amounts so withheld and accumulated during the pendency of the proceedings, whether he had or had not discharged the duties of the office. See People v. Potter, 63 Cal. 127; Bledsoe v. Colgan, 138 Cal. 34, 36, 37, 70 Pac. 924. In 1891, this section was amended by the addition of the following: "Provided, however, that this section shall not be construed to apply to any party to a contest or proceeding now pending or hereafter instituted who holds the certificate of election or commission of office, and discharges the duties of the office; but such party shall receive the salary of such office, the same as if no such contest or proceeding was pending." Laws 1891, p. 28, c. 44. The question in this case is as to the effect of this provision, pending contest of title to an office, in the case of one holding the certificate of election or commission of office, and discharging the duties of the office. It seems very clear to us that it entitles such a person not only to receive, but also to retain to his own use, the compensation incident to the office, and to this extent modifies the old rule. It is well settled that, under this provision, the person so situated may enforce payment of the accruing salary at the hands of the disbursing officers. See Bledsoe v. Colgan, supra; Wilson v. Fisher, 140 Cal. 188, 73 Pac. 850; Anderson v. Browning, 140 Cal. 222, 73 Pac. 986. In Wilson v. Fisher, supra, which was mandamus against a county auditor, it was said that the provision of this section, that such a person "shall receive the salary of such office the same as if no such contest or proceeding was pending," is entirely clear, and leaves no room for the play of construction; that no valid reason appeared for holding it unconstitutional; and that under it the petitioner was beyond doubt entitled to his salary, notwithstanding the pending contest. In Anderson v. Browning, supra, the auditor was forced to draw his salary warrant in favor of the incumbent holding the certificate of election, for salary accruing during the pendency of an appeal by him from a judgment awarding the office to the contestant; the effect of the appeal taken within 10 days from such judgment being to suspend the operation thereof, and continue the certificate of election in force unimpaired. Section 1127, Code Civ. Proc.; Day v. Gunning, 125 Cal. 527, 58 Pac. 172. To this extent certainly, under the decisions cited, the common law has been modified by the statutory provision, for under the old rule the lawful title to the office was in issue in any proceeding to enforce the payment of the salary, and only one showing himself to be the officer de jure could prevail. See People v. Potter, supra; Dolan v. Mayer, etc., 68 N. Y. 274. It is further established by decisions of our district courts of appeal that, in view of this proviso, the successful claimant cannot enforce the payment of salary already once paid to an incumbent coming within its terms. See Merkley v. Williams (Cal. App.) 84 Pac. 1015; Tout v. Blair (Cal. App.) 84 Pac. 671. As to the correctness of these decisions we have no doubt.

Plaintiff is compelled by the decisions to admit this much, but claims that the provision deals solely and entirely with the respective rights of the incumbent and the de jure officer as against the disbursing officer or sovereignty paying the salary, and was not intended to affect the right of the contestant to recover from the incumbent such damages as he may suffer by being excluded from the office, in the event that he is ultimately determined to have been entitled thereto. So far, certainly, as he includes in such damage the amount of any salary or fees received by the incumbent by virtue of this statutory provision, and therefore withheld from him, we can see no merit in his contention.

There can, of course, be no doubt as to the power of the Legislature to so change the general rule as to the right to the compensation annexed to the office, as to give such compensation pending contest, to the incumbent holding the certificate of election or commission of office, and discharging the duties of the office. The matter of compensation of public officers is wholly within the domain of legislative power, to be arranged as may be deemed best for the public interest, and every successful candidate for public office takes his office subject to the provision. Public offices are created primarily for the benefit of the public, and if it be considered essential to the proper performance of the duties of such an office during a protracted period of litigation as to the right to the office, that the incumbent possessing the prima facie right evidenced by the certificate or commission, and discharging those duties, shall have the compensation, the Legislature may undoubtedly so provide. If it is so provided here, plaintiff was never entitled under the law to any of the compensation accruing prior to the final determination of the contest in his favor. Under the law, it, to such extent, was made an incident of the occupancy and exercise of the office, and belonged absolutely to the incumbent, and in receiving it defendant received only what the law gave to him as the incumbent performing the public service, and holding the prima facie evidence of title to the office, and plaintiff can have no valid claim against him for damages on account thereof. The question is as to whether the amendment of 1891 is to be construed as constituting such provision. In our judgment no other reasonable construction can be given to it. The only conceivable object for its enactment was to insure the proper performance of the duties of the office. As we have seen, under the law as it stood prior to the amendment, no salary could be paid to either party pending the contest. This manifestly relieved the disbursing officers from all embarrassment as to whom the salary should be paid, fully protected the public against the possibility of double payment for the same service, and preserved the whole salary, incident to the office, intact in the public treasury, for the one who should ultimately be determined entitled to the office. It was found, however, as might well have been foreseen, that the public service incident to the office might not be performed well, if at all, by one who was receiving no compensation for his services, and whose right to ever receive the same was contingent upon a final adjudication in his favor in the contest as to the right to the office, a result as to which there must always be some degree of doubt, and in many cases a very serious doubt. Under such circumstances, it might well be that neither claimant could afford to take the risk of performing the duties without compensation, and the public service might be very greatly embarrassed. To remedy this was, unquestionably, the object of the amendment. It will readily be seen, however, that very little, if anything, has been accomplished in the desired direction, if the effect of the amendment is practically to make the person receiving the salary merely the trustee for the rightful claimant until the contest is concluded, for such would be the effect of a construction that would leave the incumbent liable to such rightful claimant for the damage caused by his failure to obtain the salary. Unless he be absolutely execution proof and devoid of any desire to pay his debts, the incumbent would still be beset with the same difficulties as under the old law. To merely receive, and temporarily retain, and perhaps use, the salary, with a knowledge that the account must ultimately be given in the form of damages to the other claimant, if he finally prevail, would not materially assist the situation as it existed prior to the amendment. No good reason can be given for the amendment if it goes only to this extent. So construed, its only practical effect would be to take away the absolute security theretofore afforded the rightful claimant by retaining the salary in the treasury for him, and make his ability to recover the same depend on the solvency of the party who had received it, which would manifestly be a most absurd result. The plain language of the amendment and the manifest object of its enactment point inevitably to the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature that, pending contest as to the title to a public office, in the interest of an efficient performance of the duties thereof, the person having the prima facie right thereto evidenced by certificate or commission, and actually discharging the duties, as he is entitled to do by reason of such certificate or commission, should be entitled to the compensation incident to the office as pay for his services, thus making such person during said time, not only the de facto officer, but practically the de jure officer. Such a condition is, of course, a hardship on the person ultimately found to have been entitled to the office, whose official emoluments have thus been abridged; but the public interests are paramount, and fully warrant legislation of the character here under consideration.

Much reliance is placed upon the fact that section 807, Code Civ. Proc., in the chapter relating to the action that may be brought by the Attorney General in the name of the people of the state, against one usurping or unlawfully holding or exercising a public office, etc., has always provided that if judgment be rendered upon the right of another person alleged to be entitled, in favor of such person, he may recover, by action, the damages which he may have sustained by reason of the usurpation of the office by the defendant. Under the existing law, however, this cannot be held to authorize the recovery, as damages, of the amount of salary or compensation of which the party has been deprived by reason of its payment to the incumbent under such circumstances as existed here. Conceding that an action may be maintained by the Attorney General under this chapter against an incumbent possessing the certificate of election or commission of office, for the purpose of contesting his right to the office on any of the grounds specified for the ordinary contest by an elector (section 1111, Code Civ. Proc. et seq.), the case, in the event of such action, is still within the provisions of section 936, Pol. Code, as amended in 1891. The language of that section is such that it necessarily includes any character of proceeding by which the title of such an incumbent is assailed, and entitles such incumbent to the compensation incident to the office pending the contest, as long as the conditions specified (possession of a valid certificate or commission and discharge of the duties of the office) continue. The rule thus declared by the Legislature in the interest of a proper performance of the public service is paramount to the personal claims of either of the claimants, and necessarily excludes the recovery in any form, either as salary or damages, of the compensation awarded by and paid under the law to the incumbent. The case of People ex rel. Drew v. Rogers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 Pac. 740, 50 Pac. 668, does not touch upon the question here involved, and does not assist plaintiff.

The judgment of the superior court in the election contest, declaring plaintiff elected, and annulling the certificate of election held by defendant, in no degree affected the right of plaintiff to hold the office, discharge its duties, and receive the compensation, until its affirmance on appeal, in view of the appeal from the judgment taken within 10 days from the time it was given. His rights after such judgment, and until the disposition of the appeal, were the same as before judgment. The appeal so taken operated as an absolute suspension of the judgment, and continued the certificate of election in full force during its pendency. Code Civ. Proc. § 1127; Day v. Gunning, supra; Anderson v. Browning, supra. See, also, Wilson v. Fisher, 148 Cal. 13, 82 Pac. 421. As suggested in Day v. Gunning, supra, it might be wiser to provide that, pending an appeal in such a case, possession of the office should go to the party prevailing in the trial court; but that is a matter of policy within the legislative domain, and the Legislature has not seen fit to so provide. Construing the amendment of 1891 liberally, with a view to the accomplishment of its manifest object, as we must, we are satisfied that it must be held to so change the old rule, as to entitle an incumbent, under the circumstances therein specified, to the compensation incident to the office, whether the same be salary in the strict sense, or designated fees for specified services.

In view of what we have said, the complaint failed to state a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

HARTSON v. DILL et al. (Sac. 1,211.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 6, 1907.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—IRRIGATION—DIVERSION OF WATER — DECREE — CONSTRUCTION.

Decree, in an action to determine the respective rights of the parties to the use of the waters of a river and of certain sloughs, construed, and held to entitle defendants to exclude during a certain period of the year the waters of the river from entering one of the sloughs, and thence passing down to plaintiff's land.

2. JUDGMENT—CONSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action involving the construction of a decree, evidence as to what the parties to the decree understood its scope to be was inadmissible; the decree itself determining that matter.

3. SAME.

In an action involving the construction of a decree determining the rights of the parties to the use of the waters of a river for irrigating purposes, evidence as to any custom existing in the locality or adopted by the parties prior to the decree respecting the use of the waters was inadmissible.

4. SAME.

Where, in an action to determine the rights to the use of the waters of a river, the court found that the rights of the parties, as fixed by a decree in an action between them in 1899, were the same as were fixed by a decree in a prior action in 1893, evidence that during the period between the decrees plaintiff had acquired a prescriptive right as against defendant to the use of a portion of the waters was inadmissible.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Charles Hartson against Mrs. A. Dill and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. V. Spencer and H. D. Burroughs, for appellant. Garoutte & Goodwin, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action for damages for the alleged wrongful diversion of water, and to quiet title to rights asserted to the use thereof. Judgment went for the defendants in the trial court, and this appeal is from said judgment and an order denying the motion of plaintiff for a new trial.

The waters involved are those of the Susan river, in Lassen county. A portion of the waters of that river leave the main channel and pass down what is known as the "Dill" and "Van Noten" sloughs to their junction, where they form what is known as the "Big" slough. The waters flowing into said Big slough are taken therefrom by all of the parties to this action for irrigation and domestic use. The defendants, by means of dams in the Big slough and ditches leading therefrom, first take the waters from said slough, and lower down through what is known as the "Hartson" slough, a minor slough diverging from said Big slough, the plaintiff takes such waters as defendants are not entitled to. The defendants also, by dams constructed at points near the head of the Dill and Van Noten sloughs, prevent the waters of Susan river, between June 20th and August 1st of each year, from passing into such sloughs and thence into the Big slough, and by means of ditches divert it directly from the river to their lands. These dams at the heads of the sloughs are so arranged that all, or nearly all, of the waters can be made to pass down the sloughs or down the river at pleasure. The sole point involved in this case is as to the right of defendants to exclude said waters, during the above dates, from entering the Big slough and reaching the lands of plaintiff by way of the Hartson slough diverging therefrom. This general statement is all that is necessary to be made for the purpose of considering the question arising on this appeal, because, in our judgment, the rights of the respective parties to the use of the waters here involved are to be determined by the construction to be given to the terms of two separate decrees of the superior court of Lassen county, entered in suits between these same parties, and relative to their respective rights to the use of these same waters.

It appears from the record that in 1890, dissensions having arisen between them as to their rights to the use of these waters, the defendants here (plaintiffs there) brought an action against various parties, including the plaintiff in this present suit (J. D. Byers, Mrs. A. Dill et al. v. Charles Hartson et al.) to have their rights determined. Upon a stipulation entered into between the parties, a decree was entered in 1893, in which, among other things, it was determined: "That plaintiffs (defendants here) severally own the water rights connected with said river and the sloughs making therefrom as described in the complaint, and, as against the defendant Hartson, have the right to divert and use said waters upon their said lands as heretofore appropriated by them as alleged, subject to the rights of the defendant Hartson as hereinafter specified. That plaintiffs also own dams and bulkheads across those sloughs above their said lands known as and called the 'Dill' and 'Van Noten' sloughs, which sloughs unite and form what is commonly known as the 'Big' slough. That said dams and bulkheads are at the heads of said sloughs where the same leave said river. That plaintiffs have the right to maintain said dams and bulkheads and thereby to regulate the flow of the water down said sloughs for the use of the plaintiffs or any one or number of the plaintiffs, and have the right to exclude all the waters of said river from said sloughs from and after the 10th day of May in each and every year, and to compel during said time all of said water to flow down the main channel of Susan river onto their several lands. That from the 20th day of June to the 1st day of August in each year they have the right to use said sloughs, or any part of said sloughs, as a waterway through which to turn from their said several lands all or any portion of said waters, and that the defendant shall not in any manner interfere with the exercise of any of said rights by plaintiffs or any of the plaintiffs." The decree then sets forth the ownership of certain lands by Hartson, and proceeds: "That a branch from the aforesaid Big slough (the Hartson slough) runs to and across the defendants' said land. That prior to the 10th day of May in each and every year the defendant Hartson is entitled to have one-fourth of all water owing down said Big slough to a point thereon where the plaintiffs have a bulkhead. That from the 10th day of May to the 20th day of June in each and every year the said Hartson shall have one-fourth of the water flowing down to said point, provided that his said one-fourth shall not exceed at any part of said time 50 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure or its equivalent one cubic foot per second, and provided further that in times of extreme drought when plaintiffs require the water his said one-fourth shall not during said time exceed 25 inches of water so measured. That from the 20th day of June to the 1st day of August in each and every year the said defendant (Hartson) may have all the water which the plaintiffs or any of the plaintiffs shall turn from their or any of their said lands down said slough towards this defendant's said premises. That from and after the 1st day of August in each year the said defendant shall have one-fourth of all water permitted by the plaintiffs to flow down said slough to the point of division as aforesaid." In 1898 the defendants in this present suit brought another action in said superior court against the plaintiff here (Mrs. A. Dill et al. v. Hartson), which again involved their respective rights to these waters, and a decree in the exact terms of the prior one was entered in 1899.

Now, the main question involved in the present suit is as to the interpretation to be put upon the provisions of both these decrees. The contention of the defendants in the lower court was, and is here, that, under the terms of the decrees referred to above, they had a right during the period from June 20th to August 1st of each year to exclude, if they saw fit, the waters of the river from entering the Big slough, and thence passing down it to plaintiff's land through the Hartson slough. The trial court put this interpretation upon the decree, and we perceive no room for any other interpretation. It is provided in both decrees so plainly that it is not open to any other view that, during the period named, the defendants in this suit have the right not only to take out waters from the Big slough, but, if they choose to do so, to take them directly from the channel of the Susan river, and, for that purpose, to exclude or prevent their passage into the Big slough. As to the waters of said river, the only right that is given plaintiff by the terms of the decree, during that period of time, is to take and use a proportion of all such waters of the river as the defendants may turn down or into Big slough towards the lands of plaintiff. If the defendants should turn or permit the waters of the river to run down the slough, plaintiff had the right to use it under the decree. If, on the other hand, the defendants required, during the period fixed by the decree, the use of these waters on their lands, they were accorded the right to prevent their entry into the sloughs and to convey them directly from the river to their lands. This was the view, as we say, the trial court took, and we see no room for any other interpretation of the terms of the decree.

Plaintiff elaborates in his brief upon what he designates as an "unlimited license" to exclude such waters from the slough, and a "wholesale license" granted defendants by the decree to run the waters wheresoever they saw fit, to the deprivation of plaintiff of its necessary use upon his land. There is nothing in the case, however, to warrant this suggestion. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the defendants take this water in order to deprive plaintiff of its use, or for any other purpose than for use upon their own lands. In fact, it appears from the testimony that the amount which they could get out of the river by this means was only about one-fourth of the water which they actually needed upon their lands.

Aside from the proper construction to be placed upon the provisions of this decree, it is insisted by appellant that the court erred in rulings respecting evidence offered by him. We do not think so. It was not a proper subject of inquiry as to what the parties to the first decree understood its scope should be. The decree itself determined that matter. Nor was any custom existing in the locality or adopted by the parties prior to 1893, respecting the use of these waters during said periods of the year, of any moment, in face of the decree establishing exactly what their respective rights were. Nor did the court err in refusing to allow appellant to prove that he had acquired a prescriptive right as against defendants to have the water of said Susan river flow down through the Big slough, and thence to the Hartson slough, during the period from the entry of the first decree in 1893 and the entry of the second decree in 1899. The present action was brought in 1900.

Aside from the fact that whatever rights these parties had in such waters and their flow were fixed by the decree in 1893, it appears that in the action eventuating in the decree in 1899 this plaintiff asserted the same adverse claim as he asserted in the present action, and in determining, by the decree in 1899, that his rights to said waters were the same as were fixed by the decree of 1893, the court necessarily found that there was no merit in such asserted claim of and right acquired by adverse user to any of such waters during said period.

There is nothing further to be considered in this matter. There is no merit in the appeal, and the judgment of the lower court and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.

BOLSA LAND CO. et al. v. BURDICK et al.

(L. A. 1,608.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 13, 1907.)

1. INJUNCTION — PRELIMINARY — TRESPASS TO LAND—HUNTING.

In a proceeding to enjoin numerous persons from entering land to hunt, a preliminary injunction was proper, where defendants by preconcert of action had often and in great numbers broken down fences and entered plaintiffs' inclosure, overrunning the lands, traversing the waters by boat, discharging firearms at will, shooting game, and refusing to heed warnings.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 302, 303, 305, 306.]

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A drainage ditch constructed under a grant from private landowners from 12 to 15 feet wide, in some places less than 2 feet deep, and so filled with vegetation that a light skiff cannot be rowed down it, is not a navigable stream.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Navigable Waters, §§ 5, 7, 9.]

3. SAME—RIGHTS OF PUBLIC.

One may not lawfully obtain access to navigable waters by passing over private property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Navigable Waters, § 179.]

4. SAME.

It is not true that wherever one may catch fish waters are navigable, or that wherever one may row or pole a boat he may do so because of the navigability of the water.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Navigable Waters, §§ 5, 7, 9.]

5. SAME—LAND UNDER WATER—RIGHT OF STATE TO CONVEY.

The state may not only convey into private ownership lands under waters between high and low tide, but, subject to the paramount control of the general government, may convey lands perpetually covered by tides.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Navigable Waters, § 203.]

6. SAME—OBSTRUCTION—RIGHT TO REMOVE.

If waters confined by a dam were wholly inclosed by plaintiffs' land, and were navigable, and the dam was a purpresture, it could only be abated at the instance of the state or national government; plaintiffs having color of title to the water-covered lands.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Navigable Waters, § 139½.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Injunction proceeding by the Bolsa Land Company and another against Will Burdick and others. Plaintiffs appeal from an order discharging a preliminary injunction. Reversed, with directions to restore the injunction.

Dunn & Crutcher and Scarborough & Forgy, for appellants. F. O. Daniel and Clyde Bishop, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged that the Bolsa Land Company was the owner of the land in the complaint described, and with the Bolsa Chica Gun Club, a corporation, the members of which were the same as the members of the Bolsa Land Company, were in possession of it. This tract of land, comprising several thousand acres, was wholly inclosed by a fence surrounding its exterior boundaries. Within the inclosure, and near the center of the tract, were numerous sloughs, artificial ponds, and overflowed swamp lands. These ponds, sloughs, and swamp lands were frequented by wild fowl—ducks, geese, snipe, etc. The plaintiffs had improved these lands and constructed thereon conveniences for shooting purposes, and used these ponds, sloughs, and overflowed lands for such purposes as a preserve for its members and stockholders. To give notice and to protect these lands, the plaintiffs had posted notices along the fence surrounding the tract. It is then alleged that the defendants, who are many, are strangers to the property, and have absolutely no rights or interests therein, but, notwithstanding, have at numerous times, by force and violence, broken down plaintiffs' fences, entered upon the land, hunted, shot, killed, and carried away large numbers of the wild fowl found thereon, and that, although personally notified to refrain from trespassing upon the land, the defendants paid no heed to such notification, but declared their intention to return and enter upon the land whenever they chose to do so, and in particular declared that they would return upon the 26th day of November (which day was Thanksgiving Day) and enter upon the premises and shoot and kill the wild fowl which they might find there. It is further alleged that the effect of such indiscriminate shooting was to drive the birds away from the lands, and to destroy the value of the lands as a game resort and preserve. It was also charged in the complaint that these defendants were acting under agreement and conspiracy so to trespass upon the lands of plaintiffs and commit the unlawful acts charged. Plaintiffs prayed that an injunction might be issued upon the filing of the complaint, restraining the defendants from entering upon the land and trespassing thereon, and that at the trial of the cause the injunction be made permanent. Upon the filing of the complaint the court made its order directing the issuance of a preliminary injunction, and fixed the amount of the bond thereon, which plaintiffs gave as required. The writ of injunction was then issued and served upon the numerous defendants. Thereafter the defendants came into court and filed their answer and served notice of a motion to dissolve the preliminary injunction upon the records of the case and upon accompanying affidavits attached to the notice. This motion was presented to the court, together with affidavits, and plaintiffs in turn filed counter affidavits. Besides these affidavits, they presented documentary evidence, both in support of their title and in opposition to certain asserted rights of defendants, which will hereinafter be more specifically adverted to. The court thereupon dissolved the preliminary injunction, and plaintiffs appeal.

It is plain that this complaint is in all respects like that of Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74. An injunction is the principal relief sought. A preliminary injunction, under the allegations of the complaint, was not only proper but necessary to protect the plaintiffs' rights and to prevent the alleged prospective destruction of their game preserve. The question here presented is whether, under the showing made by the answer, and the affidavits in support of the motion to dissolve, taken with the opposing evidence offered by plaintiffs, the motion was properly granted. Without attempting to set forth at length the matter of this evidence, its substance may be summarized briefly. There is no serious attempt to deny the acts charged against the defendants generally. Affidavits of individual defendants make specific denials in some instances, but certain facts are established substantially beyond question. The defendants did, in great numbers and upon many occasions, break down the fences and enter upon plaintiffs' inclosure, overrunning the lands, on foot, as well as traversing the waters by boat, carrying firearms, discharging them at will, shooting birds, refusing to heed warnings and notices of plaintiffs' employés, and, in at least one instance, that of defendant Barton, threatening to kill. They did do these things (excepting the threat to murder) by agreement and preconcert of action; but they deny that a conspiracy existed, and assert that their agreement went only to the exercise of their legal rights upon the premises. They do not deny the breaking down of plaintiffs' fences, but assert that in so doing they were but removing obstructions to a navigable stream. In short, upon the nature of their acts, the summing up may be made in the language of respondents' brief: "There has for several years been a kind of scrambling contention between appellants and the citizens and residents of the community of Bolsas Bay as to the right of the general public to go upon the said water since the time when the plaintiffs claim to have procured the conveyance of the same; the people in the neighborhood, including many of these defendants, claiming that they had the same rights upon the water that they had before the conveyance or patent was made by the state, and that the plaintiffs had no legal right to build the dam across the mouth of said bay or to fence said waters. And this controversy has arisen because of these contentions." Such being the admitted attitude of the defendants, it needs but little knowledge, and no discernment, to perceive that they were using at least the waters of this preserve in all respects as though their rights thereon were the same as the plaintiffs. Thus, no substantial denial is made of the fact that some 40 or 50 of them overran the lands and waters upon November 26th, all carrying guns, all discharging them freely and shooting game. Yet the affidavits on this point would seek to have the court believe that they were there upon that occasion as invited guests of the plaintiffs, called to an amicable conference to adjust their differences. Just why some 40 or 50 should have come to the conference, instead of 1 or 2 spokesmen and leaders, just why, in coming to this conference, they should have carried shotguns and tramped the marshes over shooting at game, and just why they should never have attended, nor have sought to attend, this proposed conference, is, of course, nowhere explained. So much for the acts of the defendants, which acts, it may not be questioned, constituted such an invasion of plaintiffs' asserted rights as to have justified the continuance of the preliminary injunction.

As to the title and right of possession of the property, plaintiffs showed that the lands were part of a rancho to which patent had been issued by the United States. The plaintiffs' title was derived by mesne conveyance through the holders of the patented title. The lands comprised many hundreds of acres of upland as well as marsh lands, with an ocean frontage. An estuary from the ocean projected into these lands, the waters in which estuary, with its tributary sloughs, were affected by the flow of the tides. To the lands covered by all of these waters, the plaintiffs had acquired title by patent from the state of California under an act to provide for the management and sale of lands belonging to the state, approved March 28, 1868 (Stats. 1867–68, p. 507, c. 415). As to their allegations of exclusive possession and right of possession, and the insufficiency of defendants' denial thereof, defendants' answer thereto, as taken from respondents' brief, is that "defendants, being only laymen, are not supposed to know whether in law such possession as plaintiffs had amounted to exclusive possession, nor whether they were entitled to possession." No comment upon this seems necessary.

It further appeared, without contradiction, that from the upper reaches of land fresh water drained down into these sloughs and into Bolsas Bay, as a widening of this estuary was named, and that plaintiffs had constructed a dam across a narrow neck of the estuary to confine these waters, and by floodgate permitted the surplus waters to escape through an artificial channel into the ocean. Direct communication with the ocean was thus cut off, the waters became inland waters and not subject to the tides, and were and are wholly inclosed by the lands claimed by plaintiffs under their patents and deeds. Defendants assert that these waters were and are navigable waters, and that they have a right which they enjoy as members of the public, in common with the public, and not otherwise, to go upon navigable waters to take fish and to kill wild fowl—rights which unquestionably are enjoyed by the public in the navigable waters of the state or nation. But, as these so-called navigable waters are wholly surrounded by the lands of plaintiff, and as it is not asserted, and, indeed, it would require much rashness and temerity to assert, that the public has a right to invade and cross private lands to reach navigable waters, a lawful mode of ingress and approach to these navigable waters became necessary. This was conveniently at hand for defendants in the "Freeman river." Freeman river they declare is a navigable stream of water flowing into Bolsas Bay. It is down this navigable river they assert that they propelled their boats to its junction with that bay, and the only fences which they destroyed were fences which crossed this river and obstructed its navigability—mere purprestures. Such an invasion and destruction of the navigability of a stream should receive, as it would merit, the severest condemnation; but that condemnation would be unjust, and must be withheld in this case, in view of the facts. By them it is shown, indisputably, that Freeman river is a mere drainage ditch, the right to construct and maintain which was granted to the county of Orange by plaintiffs' predecessors in interest. This ditch, as actually existing, is from 12 to 15 feet wide and of a depth in some places of less than 2 feet. Growing vegetation so fills and clogs it that frequent cleanings are necessary. It is not possible to row even a light skiff down it, but it is possible at times to pole such a boat. It was where this ditch enters the lands of plaintiffs that across it a continuous fence had been erected, and it was this fence across the ditch and for 15 or 30 feet each side of it upon the right of way granted to the county of Orange for the maintenance of the ditch, that defendants, acting within their asserted rights to remove purprestures from navigable waters, destroyed the fence. Moreover, the meander lines of the United States patent crossed this so-called Freeman river at its mouth or junction with a tributary slough of Bolsas Bay. The whole length, therefore, of this Freeman river, or ditch, was conveyed into private ownership by this patent, which thus contains a distinct negation of the claim of navigability.

It should be unnecessary to add that the contention that such ditch constitutes a part of the navigable waters of the state, or of the nation, is a sham as shallow as the ditch itself. The county of Orange had no right to use the ditch and the right of way which went with it, except for the purposes of the grant—that of drainage. The county of Orange itself could not interfere with the fences of plaintiff, unless those fences themselves interfered with the drainage capacity of the ditch, and, even then, their interference would be limited to removing such obstructions as did in fact interfere with the drainage. The unlawful acts of W. W. Barton, John Blaylock, and other of the defendants, who cut down and destroyed the fences across the ditch and upon the right of way 30 feet upon each side thereof, are wholly without justification. They were acts which the county of Orange could not do, and the doing of which by another it could not authorize. As defendants, therefore, had no right of entry upon the lands of plaintiffs by the route which they took, and as this is the only method of approach to the so-called navigable waters to which they assert any right, it necessarily follows, aside from the question of the navigability of the waters of the inclosed Bolsas Bay, that defendants, were trespassers. Whether or not Bolsas Bay ever was, or, if it ever was, whether it is now, part of the navigable waters of the state, defendants certainly have no right to invade private property to gain access thereto. If, to approach such waters a right of way becomes necessary over private lands, such right of way does not run to the public with the use of the waters. It must be condemned and paid for by the public, as must any other right of way for public use.

As to the question of the navigability or nonnavigability of these waters, little need be said, and that little would not be said were it not for the fact that the court, in dissolving the preliminary injunction, would seem to have concluded that these waters were navigable. As has heretofore been stated, the right of the public to the use of the navigable waters of the state under proper restrictions by the state, for purposes of navigation and fishery, is unquestioned. So, also, and under like restrictions, will go unquestioned the right of the public to take other kinds of game upon such waters. While it is true, therefore, that one may take fish and shoot birds upon navigable waters, and while it is true also that one may go with boats thereon, the converse of these propositions is far from being true. Though the belief seems to be somewhat widely held, it is not true that wherever one may catch fish the waters are navigable, or that wherever one may row or pole a boat he has the right so to do because of the navigability of the water. Nor, it may be added, while dealing with these popular fallacies, is it true that one may go with his boat wherever the tides ebb and flow, upon the theory that wherever the tides ebb and flow waters are navigable. Still less is it true that the state may not convey lands under waters which are between high and low tide into private ownership. It may not only do this, but it may also convey lands which are perpetually covered by the tides. As to lands wholly covered by the waters of the ocean, it is sufficient to instance the fact that, in the city and county of San Francisco, land to the value of millions of dollars is made up by the actual filling in of the bay of San Francisco, and, as the Supreme Court of the United States has said, he would indeed be a rash advocate who should assert that the titles to these lands were not good because originally they were perpetually covered by the navigable waters of the bay. The state has sold into private ownership thousands and tens of thousands of acres of its swamp and overflowed lands adjacent to the shores of the ocean and its navigable bays, like Humboldt Bay and the Bay of San Francisco. To reclaim these lands the construction of levees has been necessary, and the building of these levees has imperatively called for the erection of dams across minor sloughs and estuaries, thus cutting them off from their original ocean or bay connections. So long as this work does not, in the view of the state or nation, interfere with the navigability of the remaining waters, no individual has cause of complaint. It is for the state, and not for the individual, to say whether its interests are best subserved by the damming or filling such creeks, sloughs, or estuaries. The simple truth of the matter is that the state, always, of course, subject to the paramount control of the general government touching matters of navigation and commerce, has the right to sell into private ownership any of these water-covered lands; the limitation upon its power in this regard being that such sales shall be in aid of, or at least not in derogation of, its governmental trust to preserve needed navigable waters for the benefit of its people. Ill. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Ill., 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018. The state, therefore, is not called upon to preserve the navigability of its waters because the public may desire to shoot wild game thereon. The state is interested in preserving the navigability of waters in the aid of commerce. And in a case such as this, where the so-called navigable waters begin and end wholly within the limits of private property, such waters are no more useful for navigation than is a duck pond in a man's back yard, over which pond a skiff may be propelled. What is here said is not to be construed as a determination of the validity or invalidity of the state patent. That question is not before us. It is but an enunciation of the general principle of the power of the state, in appropriate cases, to make grants of water-covered lands. As to the dam constructed by plaintiffs under color of title and authority which they derived from the state's patents to all these water-covered lands, it is sufficient to say that, from the showing here made, if it be a purpresture, it may be abated only at the instance of the state or national government. It cannot be said to interfere with the right of navigation of defendants, since the waters which it confines are wholly inclosed by the lands of the plaintiffs.

Indeed, respondents themselves assert that "the question of title could not be adjudicated upon a motion to dissolve." It is sufficient, therefore, to say, as indisputably appears, that plaintiffs' patents give them color of title, and they unquestionably have, and have been exercising, a right of possession; that the implied finding of the navigability of Freeman river is unfounded, and defendants have no right of ingress upon plaintiffs' land by means of this irrigating ditch; that they have failed to show any other right of ingress. Their claim of right as members of the general public to enter upon the lands of plaintiffs, therefore, falls to the ground and the court erred in dissolving the preliminary injunction.

For which reason the order is reversed, with directions to the trial court to restore the preliminary injunction pending the trial and final determination by the court of the questions involved.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.

STEIN v. ARCHIBALD. (Sac. 1,429.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907.)

1. CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where one construction of a contract will make it unreasonable, unfair, or unusual, and another construction, equally consistent with the language thereof, will make it reasonable, fair, and just, the latter construction will prevail.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, § 735.]

2. SAME.

In construing ambiguous contracts, the circumstances surrounding and known to both the parties at the time of the execution thereof may be taken into consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, § 752.]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — CONTRACT OF SALE—CONSTRUCTION.

A purchaser of 9,680 acres at $4 per acre, $10,000 of which he paid, and for the balance of which he gave a note at 7 per cent. interest, agreed on the date of the purchase to convey to a third person an undivided half interest therein, provided the latter should "at any time within 3 years * * * pay * * * $4 per acre for the undivided one-half." The third person was given two additional years in which to perform his part of the contract. The contract gave him an equal voice in making a sale of the premises during the option period, bound him to bear equally with the purchaser the expenses incurred in farming the land, and gave him one-half of the gross income arising therefrom. The parties contemplated that the purchaser was to personally superintend the farming operations. Held, that the purchaser gave the third person the option to purchase an undivided half interest in the land within five years on his paying $4 per acre for the whole number of acres.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—FAIRNESS OF CONTRACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 3391, providing that specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract who has not received an adequate consideration, etc., the contract, if construed to give the third person the right to purchase the undivided interest at the rate of $2 per acre for the whole number of acres, will not be specifically enforced against the purchaser; the consideration for the conveyance being inadequate and the enforcement thereof unreasonable.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by M. P. Stein against J. F. Archibald, continued after his death against W. J. Archibald as administrator. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. Nicol & Orr and Francis A. Fee, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to enforce specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of certain lands to the plaintiff. The action was begun against J. F. Archibald, the vendor in the contract. He died after the trial, and the defendant W. J. Archibald as administrator of his estate was substituted as defendant. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, and from that judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial the defendant appeals.

The contract was executed on October 9, 1897, and is in the following words, the names of the parties being given instead of their designation as party of the first part or second part, respectively, as it appears in the contract, and the introductory paragraph being omitted: "The said J. F. Archibald in consideration of the agreements hereinafter expressed to be performed by M. P. Stein or his assigns, has agreed and does hereby agree at any time within three years from this date to sell and convey to said M. P. Stein an undivided one-half interest of, in and to all those certain lands, situate in the county of Madera, state of California, and described as follows, to wit: [here is inserted a description of the lands embracing 9,680 acres]. And if said M. P. Stein or his assigns, shall at any time within three years from this date pay to said Archibald $4 per acre for the undivided one-half of all said described lands, then and in that event and upon such payment being made the said Archibald hereby agrees to make, execute and deliver to said Stein or his assigns, a good and sufficient deed of grant, bargain and sale, conveying and assuring to said Stein, or his assigns, the undivided one-half of all said described lands free and clear of any and all incumbrances and liens done, made or suffered by the said Archibald. It is hereby further agreed that if during the term of this option and before said Stein or his assigns shall have made the payment above specified, a chance occurs affording to said Archibald the opportunity to sell said described lands at a sum in excess of the amount by said Archibald paid to the Stockton Savings & Loan Society for said lands, then and in that event, and notwithstanding this option, the said Archibald may sell said lands and the whole thereof, but he shall pay to the said Stein or his assigns the one-half of the net profits arising from such sale; provided, however, that he, said Stein, shall have an equal voice in making such sale and no sale shall be made without his being first consulted and giving consent thereto. It is hereby further agreed that during the life and term of this agreement said Stein is to bear equally with Archibald all the expenses incurred in farming said lands, and is to have and receive one-half of the gross income arising therefrom. It is hereby further agreed that, in the event said Stein at any time during the term and life of this agreement shall desire to sell and dispose of his interest in said lands under this agreement, he shall give to Archibald the option of purchasing the same and shall not dispose thereof until the opportunity shall have been first given to said Archibald." On the day this agreement was made Archibald had purchased the land from the Stockton Savings & Loan Society at the price of $4 per acre, amounting to $38,720, of which he had paid $10,000 in cash, and for the balance of $28,720, had given his note bearing 7 per cent. annual interest. Before the expiration of the three years named in the option, it was extended for another period of two years. The court in its findings declared that prior to the expiration of this two years the plaintiff Stein had made due offer of performance to the vendor Archibald in pursuance of the contract, that he was entitled to a conveyance from said Archibald on payment of the amount agreed to be paid under the terms of the contract, and that this sum as expressed in the contract and as construed by the court was $19,280, or one-half of the original purchase price at which the whole interest in the land was sold by the Stockton Savings & Loan Society to Archibald, less $160. This $160 was deducted because the court found that the area of the land was only 9,640 acres instead of 9,680 acres, as it was supposed to be when Archibald executed the note for the balance of the purchase price to the savings and loan society. The decree was that, upon payment of this sum of $19,280, the plaintiff shall receive the conveyance of the undivided one-half interest in the land described in the contract.

The important question in the case is the construction to be given to the option contract with respect to the amount to be paid thereunder as the price of the undivided one-half interest in the land described. The plaintiff claims that its meaning is that the plaintiff was to pay at the rate of $2 per acre on the whole number of acres. The defendant's contention is that the contract calls for the payment of the sum of $4 an acre, on the whole acreage of the land. It is a well-settled principle applicable to the construction of contracts that where one construction would make the contract unreasonable, unfair, or unusual and extraordinary and another construction, equally consistent with the language, would make it reasonable, fair, and just, that the latter construction is the one which must be adopted. It is also a principle of construction with respect to ambiguous contracts that the circumstances surrounding and known to both the parties at the time of the execution of the contract may be taken into consideration in determining the meaning intended to be conveyed. Conceding for the present that the contract in question is ambiguous in this respect, we think it is clear that the construction contended for by the plaintiff cannot be given to it. The option was to continue for three years, and was afterwards extended for two years more. The vendor, Archibald, had on the same day bought the land for the price of $4 per acre, paying $10,000 down and agreeing to pay the balance in one year, with 7 per cent. interest. A note for this balance was renewed from year to year, and does not appear to have been paid. The interest thereon amounted to over $2,000 a year, and it appears that Archibald from year to year paid this interest. Under the terms of the option contract the purchaser Stein became, in practical effect, an immediate owner of a one-half interest in the property. He was to pay one-half of the expenses of farming it, and was to receive one-half of the receipts therefrom. From the evidence it appears to have been contemplated by the parties that Archibald was to personally superintend the farming operations. In effect, therefore, Archibald gave to Stein the privilege of purchasing a half interest in the land at any time within five years from the date of his own purchase, and gave him immediate possession of the half interest in the lands agreed to be conveyed, and gave him, also, the benefit of his own personal supervision of the farming operations thereon and of the profits thereof during the time which might intervene between the date of the option and the day when Stein should choose to avail himself thereof, and agreed to accept as the price of such purchase the then present value of the land without interest, while at the same time Archibald was himself paying 7 per cent. interest on the purchase money which he had agreed to pay to the loan society therefor. It is precisely the same in this respect as an agreement to sell land for a fixed price payable in five years without interest, the purchaser to have the immediate possession and use thereof. It was in effect a present or gift from Archibald to Stein of some $8,000 of interest which he himself paid on the balance of the purchase price to the Stockton Savings & Loan Society, and, in addition thereto, a one-half of all of the benefits in the way of interest or income from the $10,000 cash which he had paid on the price thereof to the said society. It is, of course, not impossible that such an agreement might have been made with full intention to give it this effect. Such agreements are sometimes made when the owner is anxious to sell, and makes a sacrifice for that purpose. But it is scarcely conceivable that a landowner would give another an option to purchase on such terms where the price fixed was the same as that which the owner himself had paid for the land immediately before the option was given, and particularly where he had bought on credit and was paying interest on that price. If the contention of the plaintiff is correct, this was the agreement which was made. That such an agreement would be unfair and harsh under any ordinary circumstances must be conceded. There are no circumstances appearing in the record to explain such a remarkable bargain.

On the other hand, it would not be unreasonable for an owner to give an option extending over a number of years and give the other party immediate possession, where the price agreed to be paid was in excess of the present price, and was large enough to give the owner a profit sufficient to compensate him for the loss of interest on the money and the rents and profits of the land in the meantime. Under these circumstances the option contract must be construed so as to give it the latter effect rather than the former, if it is fairly susceptible of that construction.

We think that it is not only fairly susceptible of that construction, but that it is not fairly susceptible of any other, even when considering its language alone. The contract describes 9,640 acres of land, according to the findings of the court. The number of acres is not stated in the contract, but, after describing the land, its language is that, if Stein "shall at any time within three years from this date pay to [Archibald] $4 per acre for the undivided one-half of all of said described lands," then he shall be entitled to a conveyance of said undivided one-half from said Archibald. The previous paragraph contains an agreement on the part of Archibald to sell and convey to Stein "an undivided one-half interest of, in and to all those certain lands," describing them. An undivided one-half interest in an acre of land is an interest which extends over the entire area. If a party agrees to buy the undivided one-half interest in 100 acres of land, and agrees to pay $4 per acre for that interest, it would seem clear that the effect of such an agreement is that he shall pay $4 per acre for the entire area, although he receives therefor only an undivided one-half interest. The phrase "$4 per acre" refers to the area, and not to the interest, and the price is found by computing the rate per acre upon the entire area of the land, and not upon one-half of such area. This is the plain meaning of the words of the contract without aid from the surrounding circumstances. And, when considered in connection with the surounding circumstances and the evident advantage which the other construction would give to the purchaser, no other construction is admissible, except that contended for on behalf of the defendant. A fair construction of the contract is that Archibald intended to give plaintiff the privilege of purchasing the half interest at any time within the period of the option upon the payment of $4 for each acre thereof, but that in the meantime, if either party could make sale of the entire interest at an advance over the original purchase price of $4 per acre, they were to have equal advantage of such sale, and that during the period that the option ran both parties should have equal advantage from the products of the land. Thus construed, it is neither unfair nor unreasonable. The conclusion of the court that the plaintiff was entitled to a conveyance on the payment of $19,280, or at the rate of $2 per acre, for an undivided one-half interest thereof, is not justified by the contract sued upon.

Furthermore, it is a principle of equity that specific performance of a contract to convey land will not be decreed unless it is just and reasonable and based upon an adequate consideration. Civ. Code, § 3391. From what we have seen, it is plain that the consideration which the plaintiff claims he agreed to pay for the land would not be adequate, and that to enforce performance thereof would be both unjust and unreasonable to the vendor; there being no circumstances which tended to explain the reason for giving such an unfair contract, or which suffice to show that, notwithstanding its apparent unfairness, it was nevertheless just and reasonable. The court in the application of this principle of equity should have refused a decree for specific performance.

The judgment and order are reversed.

DOUGLAS et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Sac. 1,199.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907.)

1. NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT—SETTLEMENT—EXTENSION OF TIME—AUTHORITY OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 3, providing that, when proposed amendments to the proposed statement on motion for a new trial are adopted, the statement shall be amended accordingly and presented for settlement, but, if not adopted, the proposed statement and amendments shall within 10 days thereafter be presented by the moving party to the judge on five days' notice to the adverse party or delivered to the clerk for the judge, and section 1054, authorizing the extension of time within which the proposed statement and amendments may be presented for settlement, and the time within which notice of such presentation may be given, the court, on the application of the party moving for a new trial, may extend the time for the settlement of the statement and amendments and the time within which to give notice of the time for presenting the same for settlement, though at the time of the application it was impossible for such party to give five days' notice for the settlement of the statements and amendments within the 10 days from the service of the amendments proposed by the adverse party.

2. SAME—NOTICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 3, providing that, when proposed amendments to the proposed statement on motion for a new trial are adopted, the statement shall be amended accordingly and presented for settlement, but, if not adopted, the proposed statement and amendments shall within 10 days thereafter be presented by the moving party to the judge on five days' notice to the adverse party or delivered to the clerk for the judge. The defeated party served in due time its proposed statement for a new trial. The adverse party proposed amendments thereto. The defeated party gave notice of its nonacceptance of the amendments, and stated that in "due time" it would present the same to the judge for settlement. Held, that the notice merely indicated that the defeated party would pursue the general course required by the statute as a result of the nonacceptance of the proposed amendments and applied to either mode of presentation.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

An employer operated a machine shop and a planing mill. An employé in the machine shop was killed by a piece of timber thrown from a gang saw operated in the planing mill. The employé at the time of the accident was returning from a water-closet to his place of work in the machine shop. The employer had provided safe routes for its employés in going to and returning from the water-closet. The route selected by the employé was obviously dangerous, in consequence of the operation of the machinery in the mill. Held, that the employé was guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 153, 706–709, 745.]

4. SAME.

The fact that the way selected by the employé was more convenient than the safe way provided by the employer did not relieve him from the duty of taking the safe way.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 706–709, 745.]

5. SAME.

An employé was injured while taking an obviously dangerous way from a water-closet to his place of work. Upwards of 100 men worked with the employé, but none of them took this way in going to and returning from the closet. At the time of the accident, the employé was familiar with the premises, and had worked there for 20 years. Held, that the employé must have been familiar with safe route provided by the employer, and he was required to select it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 706–709, 745.]

6. SAME.

Under Civ. Code, § 19, providing that a person having actual notice of circumstances to put a prudent man on inquiry as to a fact has notice of the fact, an employé selecting, without any suggestion from any one an obviously dangerous way in going to and from a water-closet, instead of using a safe way provided by the employer, must exercise ordinary care to inquire whether there was a safe way, and his failure to do so when inquiry would have disclosed the safe way was negligence, precluding a recovery for injuries received while using the dangerous way.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by Mabel H. R. Douglas and others against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Grove L. Johnson, for appellant. A. L. Shinn and M. S. Wahrhaftig, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. After judgment in department 2, a rehearing was ordered, and the cause argued before the court in bank. Upon further consideration, we are satisfied with the conclusions heretofore reached, and, for the reasons stated in the opinion filed in department, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

The following is the department opinion referred to (Lorigan, J.):

"The plaintiffs are the widow and children of Robert C. Douglas, and brought this action to recover damages for his death, alleging that it was occasioned through the negligence of defendant. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and this appeal is taken by defendant from said judgment and the order denying its motion for a new trial.

"It is insisted preliminarily that, on the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, the statement settled on motion therefor cannot be considered by this court, because it was not presented to the lower court for settlement within the time allowed by law. This objection was urged by plaintiffs at the time of settlement in the lower court, and the facts upon which it was based are presented in the record. These facts are that defendant in due time served its proposed statement on motion for a new trial, and on February 16, 1903, plaintiffs served their proposed amendments thereto, of the nonacceptance of which defendant gave notice to plaintiffs next day, the notice also stating that 'in due time' defendant would present them to the judge for settlement. On February 24, 1903, defendant obtained an order granting it 15 days in addition to the time allowed by law within which to give notice of the time for presenting said proposed statement and amendments to the judge for settlement, and extending the time for settlement of the same for that period. The same day this extension was obtained defendant notified plaintiffs that said statement and amendments would be presented to the judge for settlement at 10 a. m., March 6, 1903. They were presented at that date and time and the settlement was continued by the court from said last date until April 10, 1903, on which day the statement was settled. It is provided by subdivision 3, § 659, Code Civ. Proc., that when proposed amendments are served, if they are adopted, the statement shall be amended accordingly, and presented for settlement, but, 'if not adopted, the proposed statement and amendments shall, within ten days thereafter, be presented by the moving party to the judge, upon five days' notice to the adverse party, or delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge.'

"No question is raised but that the court could have extended, under section 1054 of the same Code and upon application duly made, the time within which the proposed statement and amendments should be presented for settlement, as likewise the time for giving notice of such presentation. Respondent, conceding this to be true, insists, however, that, as prior to February 24th, it became impossible for the defendant to give five days' notice to plaintiffs within the ten days from the service of the amendments—February 16th—its right to do so had lapsed, and the court had no power thereafter to extend the time for giving such notice. We think the construction contended for is too narrow and extreme to be given to the provision of the section immediately in question and is unwarranted upon a fair consideration of its purpose. The purpose of the provision is twofold—to fix a time when the statement shall be presented, and to provide different methods whereby the adverse party may have notice of the fact. The statement must, unless the time is extended, be presented within ten days, but the method of its presentation is optional with the moving party. He may present it on five days' notice to his adversary, or he may deliver it to the clerk for the judge. Mellor v. Crouch, 76 Cal. 594, 18 Pac. 685. In the one case the adverse party is actually advised by the notice when it will be presented, which may be at a time earlier than the ten days, and at which time the court may fix the date of settlement. In the other, he has constructive notice of its presentation by expiration of the time within which the law requires it to be presented, and will receive notice of the date of settlement from the clerk. Code Civ. Proc. § 659. In either event, however, the main purpose of the provision of the statute is fulfilled—he has notice of its presentation.

"Provisions of the statute must be construed liberally, with a view to promoting the rights of parties and in the interests of justice. Statements on motion for new trial are ultimately used as a basis for presenting the merits of a case upon an appeal, the right to which is constitutionally conferred, and no narrow construction should be placed upon a rule of procedure which will defeat that right. As we say, one purpose of the statute is to place a limitation on the time for presentation; the other is to provide an optional mode of presentation. In our judgment, under section 1054, Code of Civil Procedure, the time may be extended for all purposes, including an extension of time to give actual notice; the only requisite being that when such notice is given the adverse party must have five days' notice of the presentation. If a party on the seventh day after the service of amendments should obtain a general order of court granting additional time to present the statement for settlement, and should within the extension, and upon five days' notice to the adverse party, present it for that purpose, if the construction of the section now contended for by plaintiffs is correct, it would apply in the given case and defeat the right to the settlement, as the effect of the extension, under respondent's theory, would be to limit the moving party to a delivery of the statement to the clerk for the judge. He could not present it upon actual notice, because, under plaintiffs' contention, as he obtained the order of extension at a time when he could not have given actual notice, the court was without power to extend it for that purpose. This is not the understanding of the profession as to the meaning of the section, nor is it the practice under it, and no satisfactory reason is advanced now why the construction urged should be placed on it. Such a construction would not come within the intent or spirit of the section.

"It is claimed, as we understand it, that the notice served on plaintiffs by defendant was to the effect that the proposed statement and amendments would be presented on actual notice. We do not so understand it. It simply notified plaintiffs that 'in due time' defendant would present them for settlement. It contained no date or specified time when the presentation would be made, and the statement that they would be presented 'in due time' was evidently used in connection with the notice of non-appearance, as indicating that defendant intended to pursue the general course required by the statute as a result of such nonacceptance. The language used was general and applied to either mode of presentation which the section permitted. The objection to our consideration of the settled statement on the ground urged we think untenable.

"This preliminary objection disposed of, brings us to a consideration of the merits of the appeal. The defendant is a corporation operating extensive shops and factories in Sacramento and employs therein a large number of men. Robert C. Douglas was an employé of the defendant on April 30, 1900, on which date he was injured by a piece of timber thrown from a gang saw operated by another employé of defendant in that portion of the factory known as the 'planing mill,' from the effects of which he died. Deceased was at the time of his death 53 years of age, in full possession of all his faculties and members and had up to the time of his injury and death been for some 20 years in the employ of defendant as a skilled laborer, working in its car machine shop. At the lower or south side of this machine shop, near the center, was a door, and at the west side of the door and near to it was the bench at which the deceased worked, his employment being to mark irons to be drilled by other employés in the shop where he was working. Immediately to the south of this car machine shop, and separated therefrom by an intervening roadway or track 30 feet wide, was the planing mill building, in which was operated the gang saw referred to. On the north side of the planing mill building was likewise a door, located almost opposite to the door in the south side of the building where deceased was employed. On the south side of this planing mill building was still another door opposite the door at the north side thereof. Immediately to the south of the planing mill building, and fronting the south door thereof, was one of the water-closets used by the employés of the defendant company. It was not the custom to keep the doors of the planing mill closed, and some of the employés of defendant from other of its shops in the vicinity passed through the mill building on various errands. It appears also that Douglas frequently passed through there.

"Coming now to the time of the accident: The first that was noticed of Douglas in the planing mill building was immediately that he was injured by the piece of timber thrown by the gang saw. Wnen struck, he was opposite the north door of the mill some 10 or 15 feet from the saw. This saw was located to the west of said door, was of the best manufacture and approved pattern, and was operated by competent men, but the evidence showed that, in common with all gang saws, it would occasionally in its operation, where a thin or warped piece of lumber was being sawed, throw pieces backward, and that it was from a warped piece so thrown back that Douglas was injured. It was necessary to have the gang saw located as it was, in proximity to a track run beside it, over which lumber and materials were brought in push cars to feed it, and thereafter reloaded in said cars and taken to wherever it was further required in the mill. At the time of the accident there was lumber lying near the saw across the north doorway to be used at the saw. While the evidence does not directly disclose what business Douglas had in the planing mill when injured, it may be assumed that there was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that he was returning through the mill from the water-closet at the south side of it to his place of work in the car machine shop.

"As to the planing mill, the evidence shows that at that time the mill was in full operation; that at all times when so in operation there were from 40 to 50 men employed in it; that two tracks ran into it from east to west, over which trucks loaded with lumber were constantly being run; that the mill was filled with machinery of various descriptions in operation; that there were no regular pathways through the mill from the north to the south doors and such as there were were usually blocked; that the central portion of the mill particularly was filled with machinery, benches, and tables, hand trucks of lumber upon the tracks, and lumber and material piled around the saws, planers, boring machines, etc. It was, by reason of machinery and other appliances, the movement of employés, the vast quantities of material handled at the machines and transferred from one point to another, and the general activities of the business, quite a crowded and obstructed place.

"As to the approaches to the water-closets used by the employés: The evidence shows that there were at least three other routes than the one taken by deceased in going to and returning from the closet at the rear of the planing mill. Mentioning two of these in a general way, they were routes from the machine shop through the south or west door thereof, along the passageway between the machine shop and mill, and thence around either the east or west side of the latter building to the closet at the rear thereof. Still another route, open to deceased, or any other employé of the machine shops, proceeded from the north end of said shop upstairs and thence south along the upper story of the machine shop and planing mill to a closet located immediately above the one at the rear of the ground floor of the mill building, from which deceased was apparently returning when injured. There was no evidence that any employé in the car machine shop, or in any other department of defendant's business in that vicinity (and there were others), ever took the route through the planing mill, either to or from the closet at the rear thereof, which was being taken by the deceased when the accident occurred; nor any evidence that they ever went through the mill for that purpose. On the contrary, the evidence shows that the co-employés of the deceased in the car machine shop either proceeded from the south or west door thereof, and went around on the outside of the mill on the east or west side routes to which we have heretofore referred or went upstairs and along the upper story of the building on the other route above indicated. These are the principal and controlling facts in the case, and all that are necessary to be stated in order to apply propositions of law which are determinative of this appeal.

"The gist of plaintiffs' action is that the defendant provided an unsafe and dangerous way through which it was necessary for its employés in the car machine shop to pass while going to and from the water-closet, and that deceased was injured while using such way for that purpose.

"Defendant at the close of all the evidence in the case moved the court for a nonsuit. The motion was made upon two grounds: First, that in using the way to and from the closet through the planing mill deceased assumed the ordinary apparent risks attending that route, and, second, that it appearing from the evidence that deceased had a choice of two routes to and from the closet, one of which—up the stairs from the machine shop and along the upper floors of the said shop and the planing mill—was safe, and the other—the way through the planing mill which he took—was dangerous, that in using the perilous rather than the safe route he was guilty of contributory negligence which barred a right of recovery for his death. The motion was denied, and the ruling of the court in that respect presents the important question for consideration on this appeal. The facts in the case are not disputed; the only dispute being as to the inference which should be drawn from them, and we think that the only legitimate inference which could be drawn is that they disclose no liability on the part of defendant, and hence the motion for a nonsuit should have been granted. While two grounds are urged for the nonsuit, and while we entertain but little doubt that under the evidence the motion could have been granted on both, we do not discuss the matter of assumption of risk by the deceased in passing through the planing mill under conditions of danger apparent to any man of ordinary intelligence and prudence, because it is beyond debate that, upon the second ground, that of contributory negligence, the court should have withdrawn the case from the jury. The evidence shows beyond any question that the defendant had provided a safe and secure way to a closet for the employés of the car machine shop from the stairway on those premises up and along the upper story of the building. Having done so, it had done all that the law cast upon it, and it was the duty of the deceased when occasion required to take that safe way. When a safe way is provided by an employer and a dangerous way exists, if an employé chooses to take the dangerous way and is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. This is the rule universally recognized. As said: 'Where a person having a choice of two ways, one of which is perfectly safe and the other of which is subject to risks and dangers, voluntarily chooses the latter and is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover. An employé must take care of himself as well as the master must take care of his duties and his employés. These obligations are mutual. And it is the law that if a man voluntarily puts himself in a dangerous position, does so unnecessarily when there are positions in connection with the discharge of his duties which are safe which he can be placed in, he cannot recover damages for the injury to which he has contributed by his own negligence.' Bailey's Personal Injuries, §§ 1123, 1124. In Hoffman v. American Foundry Co., 18 Wash. 287, 51 Pac. 385, the rule is expressed: 'Where there are two methods by which a service may be performed, one perilous and the other safe, an employé who voluntarily chooses the perilous rather than the safe one cannot recover for an injury thereby sustained.' And in Dandie v. S. P. Co., 42 La. Ann. 686, 7 South. 792: 'The servant cannot recover where his own want of care has contributed to the injury. If among the different modes of performing a duty he selects the most dangerous, which unnecessarily exposes him to danger, he is responsible for the selection.' It is hardly necessary to quote further from the authorities, but the following are cited: Labat, Master & Servant, § 333, p. 839; Colo. C. & O. Co. v. Carpita, 6 Colo. App. 248, 40 Pac. 248; Sladky v. Marinette L. Co., 107 Wis. 250, 83 N. W. 514; Sauer v. Union Oil Co., 43 La. Ann. 699, 9 South. 566; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Bivins, 103 Ala. 142, 15 South. 515; Fritz v. Salt Lake & O. G., etc., Co., 18 Utah, 493, 56 Pac. 90; Wilber v. Wisconsin Central R. Co., 86 Wis. 535, 57 N. W. 356.

"Applying this rule to the undisputed facts, as we have said, there can be no question that under the evidence a way upstairs, reasonably safe and free from danger, was provided for the use of deceased and his coemployés in the machine shop, and it is equally clear that the way the deceased usually took through the planing mill was attendant with risks and dangers, and hence unsafe. To undertake to pass through the planing mill when it was in full movement—its planers, saws, and other machinery in operation; trucks, push carts, tables, benches, lumber and material occupying practically the entire mill, with no distinct passageway through it, and such ways as there were so blocked that one would have to pick a devious or uncertain route over or around permanent and temporary obstructions—was so obviously attendant with risk and danger as not to be open to discussion on that point. It is true that the route through the planing mill was more convenient as a direct route for the deceased than the route upstairs or, in fact, any of the other routes taken by his co-employés in the machine shops to the closets. The matter of convenience, however, could not qualify the rule that he should have taken the safe route. The mere fact that the dangerous way he took involved less trouble and was more direct than the safe route which was open to him furnished no excuse for not taking the latter. Labat, Master & Servant, § 333, p. 841.

"It is claimed, however, by respondent that this rule requiring an employé to select the safe route has no application to the case at bar, because it is insisted that there was no evidence that the deceased knew of any other route to a water-closet than the one he took through the mill. It is true there is no direct evidence to this point, but we do not think that it was necessary. It is to be presumed that the deceased knew it, and, aside from the presumption in view of the danger that was apparent to him as attending the route he was invariably taking, it was his duty in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence to have ascertained whether there was not a safer way which he might take, and that there was he could have ascertained by the slightest inquiry. There were employed in the car machine shop where deceased worked, as his fellow employés, upwards of 100 men. Of these employés not one of them took the route the deceased took to the closet. In fact, the evidence does not show that any employé of the defendant in any of its departments took that route for that purpose; that deceased alone took it. At the time of the accident deceased had been in the employment of defendant in the car machine shop for 20 years, and was familiar with the premises. Under these circumstances, as a man of ordinary observation, he must have been familiar with the various places and avenues which were provided for the benefit of the employés of the shop where he worked, and their use of them, and it would only be indulging in a natural and reasonable presumption to conclude that he did. But, independent of the presumption, it was his duty to ascertain whether a safe way to a water-closet had been provided by the defendant for the benefit of himself and his co-employés. He knew that it was his employer's duty to do so, and he knew that the way he was taking did not fill the legal requirement, but was perilous. He had no right to assume that the way he was taking was the only way. No one suggested to him that it was. He selected it for himself, and seems to have been the only one who used it for the purpose. Every time he passed through the planing mill on his way to or from the closet he was confronted with the risks of injury which he was taking by using that route. Under these circumstances, it ought to have suggested itself to him as a man of ordinary intelligence that the defendant, as the law required it to do, had provided a safer route, and as a prudent man it was his duty to inquire whether it had or not. He could not go on using the perilous route, heedless of its dangers, when a simple inquiry would have placed him in a position to avoid them. The danger he was incurring was a circumstance calling on him, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, to inquire if there was not a safer way, and his failure to do so when inquiry would readily disclose that there was another and a safer route was negligence of a contributory character. One who has actual notice of circumstances which are sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to a particular fact has constructive notice of the fact itself, if he might have ascertained it by making the inquiry. Section 19, Civ. Code. There can be no question but that the circumstance of danger from the way he was pursuing placed the deceased upon inquiry, and, as that inquiry would have informed him of the fact that there was a safe way, in legal contemplation what he could have learned he knew.

"Many other points are presented by counsel, but from the conclusion we have reached it is unnecessary to discuss them.

"In our judgment the court should have granted the motion for a nonsuit on the ground urged by appellant that the evidence as a matter of law showed that the contributory negligence of deceased was the cause of his injury and death, and that, therefore, plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

"The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

DERNHAM v. BAGLEY. (S. F. 4,673.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Rules of Court—Bills of Exceptions—Settlement.

The phrase, "when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions," in court rule 2 (78 Pac. vii), requiring the appellant in a civil action to file within 40 days after the appeal is perfected a transcript of the record, provided that, when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions which may be used in support of such appeal the time for filing and serving the transcript shall not begin to run until the settled bill of exceptions has been filed, includes any proceeding looking to the settlement of a bill of exceptions actually inaugurated and pending undisposed of and not abandoned, regardless of questions whether the bill can be legally settled.

2. Same.

Where a proceeding for a settlement of a bill of exceptions has been inaugurated and is pending undisposed of, the adverse party who desires to avail himself of objections based on the ground that the proposed bill has not been served within the time allowed by law or order of the court or stipulation of the parties must interpose the defense before the judge settling the bill, thereby enabling the trial court to determine the facts and the appellate court to review its decision.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1382.]

3. Same.

Where a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions is pending in the trial court, the appellate court will not determine the question whether the proposed bill has been served within the time allowed by law or by valid order of the court, or by stipulation of the parties on motion to dismiss the appeal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John A. Hosmer, Judge.

Action by Henry Dernham against Mary C. Bagley. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Heard on motion to dismiss. Denied.

Thomas, Gerstle, Frick & Beedy, for appellant. John Hubert Mee, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal taken by plaintiff from so much of the judgment given in the above-entitled cause as was in favor of the defendant. The ground of the motion is that plaintiff has not served and filed the printed transcript of the record on appeal within the time prescribed by rule 2 of this court. (78 Pac. vii).

Several interesting questions have been ably argued by respective counsel, but we find it necessary to consider only one matter in disposing of the motion.

The appeal was duly perfected on April 2, 1906. At the time of the service and filing of the notice of this motion, September 11, 1906, and at the time of the hearing, October 1, 1906, no transcript of the record on appeal had been served or filed. There had been in due time a service and filing of a purported notice of intention to move for a new trial. It is claimed by defendant that this notice was so defective that it was ineffectual for any purpose. There had also been certain stipulations extending the time of plaintiff to serve a proposed bill of exceptions on motion for a new trial, and various orders of the court purporting to extend the time of plaintiff within which to serve his proposed bill of exceptions on appeal from the judgment and on motion for a new trial. Within the life of the last order, on September 1, 1906, plaintiff served on defendant his proposed bill of exceptions, on appeal from the judgment, and on motion for new trial. Defendant refused to admit service thereof, on the ground that, so far as it was a bill of exceptions on appeal from the judgment, it was not served in time, and, so far as it was a bill of exceptions on motion for a new trial, it could not be considered, for the reason that no notice of plaintiff's intention to move for a new trial had been served or filed within the time allowed by law. On September 11, 1906, defendant obtained an order of the judge of the lower court, extending by 30 days from that date her time within which to propose amendments to said bill, and this time, it will be observed, had not expired at the date of the hearing of this motion. At that time plaintiff's proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions to be used on the appeal from the judgment, as well as upon the motion for a new trial, was pending undisposed of in the trial court, and no disposition had been made therein of his attempted proceeding to obtain a new trial.

By the express terms of rule 2 of this court, "when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or a statement which may be used in support of" the appeal, the forty-days' time, within which the transcript may be served and filed, does not commence to run until the settled or authenticated statement or bill of exceptions has been filed. It is not necessary to discuss the question as to the validity of the attempted notice of intention to move for a new trial, or the question as to the effect of its invalidity, if it be invalid, upon the right of plaintiff to have a bill of exceptions on motion for a new trial settled for use on the appeal from the judgment. We have, in this case, a proceeding still pending in the trial court for the settlement of a bill of exceptions for use on the appeal from the judgment. Defendant's claim on this motion, so far as such proceeding for settlement is concerned, is simply that the proposed bill of exceptions on appeal from the judgment was not served by plaintiff within the time allowed by law, or any stipulation of the parties, or valid order of court, and that consequently the court is without jurisdiction to settle the bill. We are satisfied, however, that the words "when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions," etc., in the rule above referred to, must be held to include any proceeding looking to the settlement of such a bill actually inaugurated by a party and pending undisposed of, and not abandoned, regardless of all questions as to whether the proceeding can ultimately avail and the bill be legally settled. Those questions are primarily for the trial court to determine, subject to review by this court. This was recognized in Moultrie v. Tarpio, 147 Cal. 376, 81 Pac. 1112, where it was said that ordinarily this court "would not undertake to determine on a motion to dismiss an appeal, whether or not a party had so failed to comply with the requirements of the law in regard to the settlement of a bill of exceptions that his pending proceeding for such settlement must ultimately fail, but would leave that question to be determined by the trial judge, subject to review on appeal." It will readily be seen that this must be the proper rule of practice to be followed wherever a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions has actually been inaugurated by a party, and is pending undisposed of in the trial court, and the moving party is actively engaged thereunder in attempting to procure the settlement of his appeal. It is well settled that the adverse party desiring to avail himself of such an objection must interpose it in the trial court, or before the judge settling the bill, and that if no objection is there made the bill may be settled, and thereafter used on the appeal. Ryer v. Rio Land & Imp. Co., 147 Cal. 462, 464, 82 Pac. 62; Henry v. Merguire, 106 Cal. 142, 146, 39 Pac. 599. It may often happen that there is a dispute as to the facts upon which it is claimed that the bill was not served in time, and the determination of this question of fact is primarily for the trial tribunal, subject to review by this court to the same extent only as is its determination upon other questions of fact. It is further settled that it is entirely within the power of the trial court, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., upon application in that behalf made within the proper time and upon sufficient showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, to relieve a party from the effects of his mere failure to serve his proposed bill of exceptions within the prescribed time, where objection to the settlement is made on that ground, and thereupon settle the bill. Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 43, 29 Pac. 332; Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 414, 53 Pac. 935; King v. Dugan (filed Jan. 10, 1907), 88 Pac. 925. The question as to whether the facts are such as to warrant the relief in a case of this kind is primarily one for the trial court, and that court is vested with a large discretion in such matters. Obviously this court should not deprive a party of the substantial right of making an application for relief, and having the same heard and determined by the trial court, which it would do if it dismissed the appeal under such circumstances. The proceeding must be, of course, for the settlement of a bill of statement that may be used on the appeal, which, in the case of an appeal from the judgment necessarily includes a bill for use thereon, settled under the provisions of section 650, Code Civ. Proc. There being a 'proceeding pending in the lower court for the settlement of a bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment, the time for the filing of the transcript had not commenced to run at the date of the hearing of this motion. This is a complete answer to the motion to dismiss before us.

In what we have said we do not desire to be understood as intimating any opinion upon the question as to the validity of the notice of intention to move for a new trial.

The motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment is denied.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO 551 et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Sac. 1,535.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1907.)

1. LEVEES—RECLAMATION DISTRICTS—PUBLIC PROPERTY.

A levee constructed by a reclamation district on a right of way procured for that purpose is a part of the works which the trustees of the district are, under Pol. Code, § 3454, authorized to take materials for and construct for the purpose of reclaiming and keeping reclaimed the land within the district, and is public property acquired by the agent of the state for state purposes.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION—PUBLIC PROPERTY—RIGHT OF WAY AND LEVEE OF RECLAMATION DISTRICT.

Under Pol. Code, §§ 3454, 3471, authorizing the trustees of reclamation districts to acquire by condemnation a right of way for the construction of works, including drains, canals, etc., the easement of a reclamation district for the construction of a levee is "a right of way," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1240, enumerating the private property which may be taken under the right of eminent domain, and providing that "rights of way" shall be deemed private property for the purposes mentioned in section 1238, declaring that the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of specified public uses; and hence the right of way procured by a reclamation district for the construction of a levee, together with the levee, may be taken by a railroad company under the right of eminent domain for its right of way, provided the right of way will not interfere with the right of way and levee of the district or affect the efficiency of its works.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, § 107.]

3. SAME.

In a proceeding by a railway company to condemn for a right of way the right of way procured by a reclamation district for the construction of a levee, together with the levee, where the complaint alleges that the railway right of way will not interfere with the efficiency of the reclamation works, the court cannot, as a matter of law, say that a limited use by the railway company and the reclamation district in common cannot be so regulated that there will be no material interference with the reclamation works.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, § 560.]

4. SAME—JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

Where the Legislature has provided that the right of way of a reclamation district for a levee and the levee constructed thereon may be crossed or intersected by another right of way, or subject to a limited use in common with the owner thereof, when necessary, it cannot be said that the court is without jurisdiction of a proceeding to condemn the right of way and levee for a railway right of way, merely because the complaint shows that the greater portion of the strip of land over 1,000 feet in length, sought to be condemned, is subject to an easement for a levee constructed thereon.

5. PROHIBITION—ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDIES.

Where the complaint, in a proceeding to condemn land for a railroad right of way, shows a case where property of the kind sought to be taken may be taken for the use for which it is sought, the question whether the facts justify the taking is for the trial court in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and cannot be determined on prohibition to restrain the court from proceeding with the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Prohibition, § 7.]

Original application for a writ of prohibition by reclamation district No. 551 and others against the superior court of the county of Sacramento and others. Denied.

A. L. Shinn, for petitioners. Devlin & Devlin, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an application, on notice, by a reclamation district and the members of the board of trustees of said district for a writ of prohibition, restraining the superior court of Sacramento county from proceeding with the trial of an action instituted in said court by the Sacramento Southern Railroad Company, a corporation, for the condemnation of a strip of land 1,349.6 feet long, situate in said county, for the purposes of a railroad right of way. According to the allegations of the complaint in such action, the Onisbo Improvement Company, a corporation, is the owner of the strip of land and of the larger tract of which it forms a part, while one P. J. Van Loben Sels and the People's Savings Bank claim an interest therein. It further appears from the complaint in such action that the greater part of such strip is subject to an easement for a levee already constructed and now maintained thereon, known as the levee of reclamation district No. 551, which levee is under the control of the trustees of said district, and that it is designed to construct the proposed railroad on said levee in part; it being alleged that said levee easement and the easement sought in the action, can coexist without in any manner interfering with each other. All of the persons interested in said land, including the reclamation district and its trustees, are parties defendant in such action. A demurrer to the complaint has been overruled, and an answer has been filed, and the trial court will proceed with the trial of the action unless restrained.

Plaintiffs' claim is that the court has no jurisdiction to try, or otherwise entertain, said action, for the reason that there is no authority in law by which a railroad corporation is empowered to condemn or use the levees of a reclamation district, or to make a joint public use thereof, and because such use will necessarily obstruct the trustees of the district in the control, management, alteration, repair, and protection of the works of reclamation of said district.

This case differs from the ordinary case in which it is sought to subject private property to a second public use alleged not to be inconsistent with a former public use already imposed, in that it is here attempted to permanently appropriate to the second use, in common with the first use, not only the property of the owner of the land, but also the permanent structure constituting public property, placed and maintained thereon by the first taker in the exercise of its easement. The levee itself was constructed by the reclamation district on the right of way procured for that purpose, and is a part of the "works" which the trustees of the district are authorized to take materials for and "construct" for the purpose of reclaiming and keeping reclaimed the land within the district (Pol. Code, § 3454), and is "public property, acquired by the agents of the state for state purposes" (Reclamation Dist. v County of Sacramento, 134 Cal. 477, 66 Pac. 668). So far as the reclamation district is concerned, the object of the action in eminent domain is to subject its right of way for levee purposes, and the levee constructed thereon, to a limited use on the part of the railroad company for right of way purposes for the railroad; such use to be in common with that of the district. We think that under some circumstances such a use of the levee right of way and the levee itself might be acquired by a proceeding in eminent domain.

Section 1240, Code of Civil Procedure, enumerates the kinds of property, "which, for the purpose of the exercise of eminent domain, shall be deemed to be private property," which may be taken. Marin Co., etc., Co. v. Co. of Marin, 145 Cal. 586, 79 Pac. 282. Subdivision 5 thereof is, in part, as follows: "All rights of way for any and all the purposes mentioned in section twelve hundred and thirty-eight, and any and all structures and improvements thereon, and the lands held or used in connection therewith shall be subject to be connected with, crossed, or intersected by any other right of way or improvements, or structures thereon. They shall also be subject to a limited use, in connection with the owner thereof, when necessary; but such uses, crossings, intersections and connections shall be made in the manner most compatible with the greatest public benefit and least private injury." There is no warrant for restricting the application of this provision to property owned by private persons and corporations. Section 1240, Code Civ. Proc., is not confined to property so owned, nor even to property owned by the state as a private proprietor which may be condemned for public use in the cases provided in subdivision 2 thereof It was held, in Marin Co., etc., v. County of Marin, supra, that, under subdivision 3, declaring that property appropriated to public use could be taken for a more necessary public use, all property appropriated to public use, both public and private, not excepted by some other provision, is private property for the purpose of the exercise of eminent domain, and can be taken for a more necessary public use, and an action by a water company for the condemnation to its use of the right of way for a public highway and the highway constructed and maintained thereon for the public use was sustained. Where the fee of the land already appropriated to public use is in the state, or a city, etc., it is excepted by subdivision 2. Subdivision 5 is most comprehensive in terms, including "all rights of way for any and all the purposes mentioned in section twelve hundred and thirty-eight," and "any and all structures," etc., thereon. Section 1238, Code Civ. Proc., is the general section stating the many and varied public uses in behalf of which the right of eminent domain may be exercised. It includes as well public uses managed by public officers of the state, or a subdivision thereof, as public uses managed by private persons or corporations. The object of subdivision 5 is clear. It was recognized that frequently a work of great public benefit might be rendered impossible by reason of the fact that land necessary to be used in connection therewith for right of way purposes was already subject to a use for such purposes, notwithstanding that it was entirely feasible for the matter to be so adjusted that the two uses could coexist without material injury to either. Mere crossings and intersections of rights of way present the most familiar instances of this, but we may easily conceive of cases where something more may be necessary, and for that reason "a limited use, in common with the owner thereof, when necessary," is authorized. The necessity is as great where the right of way is owned by the state, or some subdivision of the state, for a public use, as it is where the ownership is in some person or private corporation administering a public use. The fact, then, that the right of way here, and the levee constructed thereon, constitute "public property acquired by the agents of the state for state purposes" (Reclamation Dist. v. County of Sacramento, supra), does not preclude the application of this subdivision.

The easement of a reclamation district for its levee constitutes a "right of way" within the meaning of that term as used in subdivision 5 of section 1240, Code Civ. Proc. It is so characterized in the sections of the Political Code relating thereto. Sections 3454 and 3471. See, also, McCarty v. S. P. Co., 148 Cal. 211, 220, 82 Pac. 615. It is urged that it is not a right of way for any purpose mentioned in section 1238, Code Civ. Proc., and that subdivision 5 of section 1240 is expressly confined to such rights of way as are for the purposes so mentioned. It is true that the word "levee" is nowhere expressly used in section 1238, Code Civ. Proc. That section was, however, intended to include all public uses in behalf of which the right of eminent domain might be exercised. There is, of course, no doubt as to levees and embankments for reclamation purposes constituting a public use authorized by the Legislature. Pol. Code, §§ 3454, 3471. Section 1238 in terms specifies the raising of the banks of steams as one of the purposes for which the right may be exercised, and also "draining and reclaiming lands." We think that this makes the right of way for a levee or embankment for reclamation purposes a right of way for a purpose "mentioned in section 1238." Subdivision 5 of section 1240 was clearly intended to be most comprehensive, and a construction excluding such a right of way would be opposed to the whole spirit of the provision.

We are unable to see any sound constitutional objection to this provision of our statute, so construed as applicable to levee rights of way. The argument of learned counsel for plaintiffs in this behalf is based upon the fact that statutes of the state vest the full control of the reclamation work of a district, including the planning and constructing of the works, and changes and repairs therein, in the trustees of the district, and that, to the extent of the occupation by the railroad company which may be authorized by a court in eminent domain proceedings, the dominion of the officers designated by statute is necessarily interfered with; but the statute authorizing such judicial interposition is enacted by the same legislative body that defined the powers and duties of reclamation district trustees, and no good reason appears why the legislative department cannot make the power of the trustees subject to such provisions of a decree of eminent domain as may be necessary under subdivision 5 of section 1240, Code Civ. Proc. The power of boards of supervisors in regard to public highways is no less absolute than that of trustees of reclamation districts (see San Mateo Co. v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 631, 63 Pac. 78, 621), and it is settled that a public highway, where the fee of the land is in a private party, may be taken in eminent domain. Marin, etc., Water Co. v. County of Marin, supra. Where, as here conceded, the subsequent use is not a more necessary public use than that to which the property has been already appropriated, there can, of course, be no such interference with the former use as will substantially or materially affect the efficiency of the reclamation works. As already stated, it is alleged in the complaint in eminent domain that there will be no such interference. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that a limited use, in common, cannot be so regulated that there will be no material interference with the reclamation works.

The conclusion we have reached in regard to the matters already discussed necessarily disposes, in our judgment, of this application for a writ of prohibition. If the Legislature has provided that the right of way for a levee, and the levee constituting a structure or improvement thereon, may be crossed or intersected by another right of way, or subjected to a limited use, in common with the owner thereof, when necessary, in the manner most compatible with the greatest public benefit and least private injury, it can hardly be said that the superior court of Sacramento county is without jurisdiction of the action in eminent domain, simply because the complaint shows that the greater portion of the strip of land 1,349.6 feet in length, sought to be condemned, is already subject to an easement for a levee constructed thereon. It might very reasonably be contended that whether or not a complaint, in an action brought to enforce the right of eminent domain, shows a case in which the property sought is of such a character that it may be taken at all, is strictly a question to be determined in the exercise of its jurisdiction by by the trial court in the condemnation proceedings, subject to review in the ordinary way, and that prohibition will not lie to determine the sufficiency of a complaint in an action belonging to a class of which the superior court has jurisdiction. However this may be, it is certainly enough to preclude the remedy of prohibition that the complaint shows a case where property of the kind sought to be taken may be taken for the use for which it is sought. Whether or not the facts are such as to justify the taking in a particular case is for the determination of the trial court in the lawful exercise of its jurisdiction, and cannot be determined on prohibition. We are, by no means, prepared to decide that subdivision 5 of section 1240, Code Civ. Proc., or any other provision of law, would warrant the taking of the levee right of way as a right of way for a railroad simply because it would be advantageous for the railroad company to acquire a roadbed already constructed. The subdivision in question was, of course, not enacted for the purpose of giving the second taker the benefit of structures or improvements of the first taker, but was solely to enable the crossing of an existing right of way by a second right of way to be made, or a limited use thereof to be had, in common with the owner thereof, when necessary. The necessity here referred to can hardly be said to exist solely because of the existence of a structure of the first taker on the prior right of way that would serve as a roadbed for a proposed railroad. The right of the railroad company under this subdivision in regard to the acquirement of the use of the levee is perhaps no greater than it would be in a case where it was seeking to secure a limited use, in common with another railroad company, of the right of way and roadbed of the latter. It may be that the facts in this regard which may be shown under the issues, made in the eminent domain action, constitute a full defense to such action, under a proper construction of subdivision 5 of section 1240, Code Civ. Proc. As to this, however, we express no opinion, as the question is not properly before us. In fact, we do not wish to be understood as now definitely deciding any question as to the proper construction of subdivision 5 of section 1240, Code Civ. Proc., except in so far as we hold that it is applicable to a levee right of way, and the levee constructed thereon.

The application for a writ of prohibition is denied.

McDONALD v. CALIFORNIA TIMBER CO. et al. (S. F. 4,034.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 6, 1907.)

1. Venue—Change of Place of Trial.

Under Const. Cal. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation may be sued in the county where the liability arises, or where the principal place of business of the corporation is situated; and Code Civ. Proc. § 395, providing that all cases, other than those previously mentioned, which did not include personal injury actions, must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, resided at the time of the commencement thereof; and section 397, providing that the court may on motion change the place of trial when the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county—where an action for personal injury against a corporation is begun in a county other than that in which the injury occurred, if the corporation is the sole defendant, it has a right to demand a transfer to the county of its principal place of business.

2. Same—Form of Application—Motion—Fraudulent Joinder.

Where a resident defendant is fraudulently joined with the real defendant for the purpose of preventing a transfer of the action to the proper county, a motion for change of place of trial upon the ground of that fraud is a proper proceeding.

3. Same — Notice of Application — Statement of Fradulent Joinder.

Where a defendant moves for a transfer of a cause to the county of its principal place of business, on the ground that a resident defendant was fraudulently joined for the sole purpose of preventing a change, the fraud relied on must be clearly stated in the notice of the motion, or the plaintiff will not be required, on the hearing of the motion, to support by specific proof the averments of his complaint showing a cause of action against the resident defendant.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by John R. McDonald against the California Timber Company and another. From an order denying a change of place of trial, the defendant company appeals. Affirmed.

See 83 Pac. 172.

Charles B. Younger, Jr., for appellant. Chas M. Cassin, Benj. K. Knight, and Cassin & Lucas, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an appeal by the corporation defendant from an order of the superior court denying its motion for a change of the place of trial. The action is for damages for personal injuries received at the mill of appellant in San Mateo county during the course of plaintiff's employment there, but it was commenced in the county of Santa Cruz. The principal place of business of the corporation is at the city of San Francisco. As the action was not commenced in the county where the liability arose, appellant, if it had been the sole defendant, would have had the undoubted right to demand the removal of the cause to San Francisco for trial. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 395, 397; Const. art. 12, § 16; Cohn v. C. P. Ry. Co., 71 Cal. 488, 12 Pac. 498, and cases cited in note to that case. But the corporation was not the sole defendant named in the complaint, and since there was ample evidence to justify the superior court in finding that its codefendant, Dent, from the time of the alleged injury to the commencement of the action, had been a resident of Santa Cruz county, that fact was a complete answer to the motion of the corporation, based as it was upon the sole ground that the county of Santa Cruz was not the proper county for the trial of the action, unless it had a right to show, and succeeded in showing, as it attempted to do, that the plaintiff, without having any cause of action against Dent, or any reason to believe that he was liable to respond in damages for the injury alleged, had fraudulently named him as a defendant for the mere purpose of defeating the right of the real defendant to demand a change of the place of trial to the county of its legal residence. This, therefore, is the sole question which the case presents.

At the time of its appearance, the appellant filed an affidavit of merits, and the demand prescribed by section 396, Code Civ. Proc., and gave notice of its intention to move for a change of the place of trial to the city and county of San Francisco. The grounds of the motion specified in the notice were the following: "Said motion will be made on the grounds that the place where the principal business of said defendant, California Timber Company, is transacted, is situate in said city and county of San Francisco, and that said city and county of San Francisco has been the place where the principal business of said corporation is transacted since the incorporation of said defendant, California Timber Company, on April 14, 1894, continuously from said last-named date to and including the date of the commencement of this action; that the alleged cause of action described and set forth in the complaint in this action arose in the county of San Mateo, in said state of California; that all and singular the liability and obligation, if any, mentioned and set forth in the complaint in this action, arose in the county of San Mateo, in said state of California; that said defendant Dent was, at the time of the commencement of this action, a resident of said county of San Mateo, in the state of California; that neither of said defendants, at the time of the commencement of this action, was a resident of said county of Santa Cruz; that said county of Santa Cruz is not the proper county for the trial of said action; that said defendant California Timber Company has heretofore demanded, in writing, that the place of trial of said action be changed to the city and county of San Francisco, in said state." The affidavit of appellant's manager, which was served with the notice, contained the following averments: "That plaintiff at the time of the commencement of this action well knew that he was not in the employ of said Dent on April 24, 1903, and that said Dent was not engaged with said California Timber Company in operating and running, or operating or running, the sawmill in said complaint described. That affiant is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that said George Dent was made a party herein for the sole purpose and with the object on the part of said plaintiff of attempting to prevent the trial of this action being had in the proper county," etc. The affidavit of Dent charges in like direct terms that the plaintiff at the time of commencing the action well knew that he had never been engaged in conjunction with the corporation or at all in operating the mill.

The respondent does not contend that a plaintiff has the right to join a person as defendant against whom he has no cause of action, and thereby defeat the right of the real defendant to have the cause removed to the proper county for trial. He admits that such a proceeding would be a fraud, but he doubts whether under our Code of Procedure it is remediable. We do not doubt that a motion based upon that ground is a proper proceeding, and one that ought in a proper case to be sustained; but we think that, where a fraud of that character is the ground of the motion, it should be distinctly specified in the notice of motion, and, unless so specified, that the plaintiff cannot at the hearing of the motion be held bound to support by specific proofs the allegations of his complaint showing a cause of action against the resident defendant. In this case the notice of motion distinctly specifies other and independent grounds and entirely fails to specify the particular ground of motion here relied on in support of the appeal.

The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CLARK. (Cr. 1,292.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 10, 1907.)

1. HOMICIDE — MURDER — TRIAL — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 523–532.]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — DUE PROCESS OF LAW—CRIMINAL LAW—RIGHT TO CONFRONT WITNESS.

Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, permitting testimony taken before a committing magistrate by question and answer in the presence of defendant, who has had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, when authenticated and filed as expressly required by section 869, to be read in evidence on the trial, where the witness is dead, etc., does not violate Const. art. 1, § 13, guarantying accused due process of law.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—PRESUMPTION.

On a criminal appeal, there being nothing to show that the transcript of decedent's testimony before the committing magistrate was not properly authenticated and filed as expressly required by Pen. Code, § 869, or that it was not a true statement of the testimony and proceedings at the examination, in the absence of specific objection in the trial court, those things must be assumed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2736.]

4. SAME—APPEAL—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

Under Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, permitting testimony taken before a committing magistrate "by question and answer" in the presence of defendant, etc., to be read in evidence at the trial, where the witness is dead, objection to the reading of testimony taken in narrative form was waived, where no specific objection was made when the testimony was offered, and a motion to strike it out was based only on a general ground, and no exception reserved to a denial of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2654, 2662, 2672, 2674.]

5. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR—IMPROPER CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in a murder trial, defendant testified that a few months before the killing he went to the house where his family was living to see an injured son, any error in allowing him to be asked on cross-examination whether he had been to the house for two years before that time, tending to show neglect of his family, was harmless; the theory of his case being that the relations between himself and his wife had been irrevocably terminated by his wife, acting under decedent's influence, it appearing that his failure to call at the house could not be discreditable to him, and defendant having elicited testimony that he was not at his wife's house from the time she left him until the son's accident.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3137, 3138.]

6. SAME — OPINION EVIDENCE—MENTAL CONDITION.

Since, in a criminal trial, the determination of the question whether one is an "intimate acquaintance" of defendant, and hence competent under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, to judge as to his mental sanity, is largely within the trial court's discretion, and its ruling will not be disturbed unless that discretion is abused, allowing a witness who had known defendant for four or five years, and talked with him frequently, to testify as to his sanity, was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1054.]

7. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a murder trial, any error in allowing defendant's daughters to testify that they did not visit him in jail, because he never requested it, and they thought he never cared to see them, was harmless, where it appeared from his case that relations between himself and his family had been terminated through decedent's influence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3137.]

8. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—ARGUMENTATIVE.

In a murder trial, an instruction distinguishing between the diseased and deranged condition of the mind rendering a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, constituting insanity, which the law recognizes as a defense, and mere moral insensibility, passion, etc., which is not a defense, and cautioning the jury to observe the distinction, was not objectionable as argumentative and manifesting partisanship against defendant.

9. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF COURT AND COUNSEL — CONFLICTING AFFIDAVITS — COURT'S FINDING—CONCLUSIVENESS.

If, in a murder case, a claim that the trial judge and district attorney had been guilty of prejudicial misconduct may be urged on a motion for new trial, and the facts may be presented by affidavits, where all matters set forth as to which complaint might be made are controverted by the district attorney's affidavit, creating a substantial conflict of testimony, the trial court's finding thereon is conclusive.

Joseph Clark appeals from a conviction of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

Daniel O'Connel and Louis P. Boardman, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., C. N. Post, Asst. Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, and Louis F. Byington, Dist. Atty., for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and adjudged to suffer life imprisonment. He appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Although judgment was pronounced in the lower court on May 27, 1899, the bill of exceptions was not settled therein until January 15, 1905, and the transcript on appeal was not filed until August, 1905. We have no means of ascertaining where the blame rests for this delay. The District Court of Appeal, by its decision given on such appeal, reversed the judgment and order; but within due time thereafter this court vacated that decision and ordered the cause to be heard and determined here (section 4, art. 6, Const.), and the same has now been submitted for our consideration.

There can be no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. The deceased, one Joseph T. Gross, between whom and the defendant considerable enmity had existed for a long time, was, on the evening of November 30, 1898, on duty at a station of the San Francisco fire department, standing with two or three other firemen at a rope stretched across the main doorway on the public street, when the defendant came along, and, without a word being spoken by any one, pulled out his pistol and fired two shots at him. The first shot was fired while the deceased was facing defendant, and at very close range; the parties not being over a foot or two apart. The deceased turned away, and immediately the defendant fired a second shot at him, when, according to the defendant's own testimony, the deceased fell. He died almost instantly, without having spoken a word after the shooting. No other shot was fired by anybody. Upon the person of deceased were found two wounds. On his very cursory examination, the surgeon immediately summoned, and who found the man dead, saw only a gunshot wound over the liver on the right side. Others who were present immediately after the shooting saw the two wounds. There was no pretense on the trial that the defendant did not kill the deceased, the defenses urged being self-defense and insanity; and, entirely independent of the deposition of the autopsy surgeon, the evidence was such that it was impossible to reasonably escape the conclusion that the cause of the death of the deceased was one or the other or both of the shots fired by defendant. The evidence in support of the plea of self-defense was most shadowy and unsubstantial, and directly opposed by the evidence of the several eyewitnesses. The most that can be said for the plea of insanity is that the evidence upon that subject presented a substantial conflict, and under well-settled rules the finding of the jury thereon is conclusive here.

Complaint is made that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the deposition of Dr. Gallagher, the autopsy surgeon, taken upon the preliminary examination of the defendant. Although several specific objections are made upon this appeal to such evidence, the only objection made in the trial court, in addition to a general objection of immateriality, irrelevancy, and incompetency, was that the defendant had the constitutional right to be confronted with the witness. As to this objection, the claim is that subdivision 3 of section 686, Pen. Code, in so far as it permits testimony received on the preliminary examination of the defendant before a committing magistrate, and taken down by question and answer in the presence of the defendant, who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined, or had an opportunity to cross-examine, the witness, when authenticated and filed in the manner prescribed by section 869, Pen. Code, to be read in evidence upon its being satisfactorily shown that the witness is dead, or insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the state, is in violation of section 13 of article 1 of our Constitution. This court has repeatedly held to the contrary. People v. Oiler, 66 Cal. 101, 4 Pac. 1066; People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 607, 41 Pac. 697; People v. Sierp, 116 Cal. 249, 250, 48 Pac. 88; People v. Cady, 117 Cal. 10, 48 Pac. 908; People v. Plyler, 126 Cal. 379, 382, 58 Pac. 904. The matter was exhaustively discussed in People v. Sierp, supra, where it was pointed out by the court, speaking through Mr. Justice McFarland, that we have no constitutional provision entitling a defendant to be confronted with the witnesses against him; the only provision guarantying such right being the one contained in this very subdivision 3 of section 686, Pen. Code, where it is immediately followed by the exception and provision authorizing the reading of testimony taken on the preliminary examination in the manner and under the circumstances already stated. It was further shown that the constitutional provision relied on does not apply to testimony given at the judicial proceeding known as a preliminary examination, but refers only to "an ordinary extrajudicial deposition, taken, as it is called, de bene esse." In view of the decisions upon the subject, the matter should be considered finally settled.

There is nothing in the record tending to show that the transcript of testimony and proceedings before the magistrate was not properly authenticated or certified and filed as required by section 869, Pen. Code, or that it was not a true statement of the testimony and proceedings taken and had on the preliminary examination of defendant on this charge, and therefore, in the absence of specific objection in these regards in the trial court, all of these things must be assumed. See People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 383, 77 Pac. 169; People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 578, 72 Pac. 177. The only objection to the testimony now urged which appears to have any merit is that it appears from the testimony itself that it was not taken down "by question and answer," as the statute requires, but was in narrative form. We have no doubt that compliance with this requirement of the statute is essential to the admissibility on the trial of the so-called deposition of a witness taken at the preliminary examination; but no objection on that ground was specifically made at the time the testimony was offered, or before it was read in evidence, and it was stated to the court at the time, by counsel offering it, that it appeared to be in compliance with the law. In the absence of such specific objection, the court was warranted in assuming it to be in proper form, and therefore did not err in overruling the general objection made. While a motion to strike out the testimony was made after the reading, such motion was based only on the general ground before stated, and no exception was reserved to the ruling denying the motion. Under these circumstances, the defendant must be held to have waived this objection. We therefore conclude that there was no error on the part of the trial court in the matter of this deposition. It is, however, proper to say in this connection that the testimony of this witness was, simply, that he held an autopsy on the body of the deceased, that he found two gunshot wounds thereon, and that the deceased came to his death from an internal hemorrhage following these wounds. It was so clearly shown by the other uncontradicted evidence that the cause of death was the shooting by defendant, that this deposition did not materially add to the case against defendant.

The defendant was a witness on his own behalf. He testified that a few months before the homicide, he went to the house on Green street, where his wife and children were living, for the purpose of seeing his son, who had just been severely injured by being thrown from a bicycle. On cross-examination he was asked, "Have you been to the house on Green street for two years before you went to see your son?" and answered, over objection that the same was not cross-examination, "No." The objection was good. There was nothing in the direct examination warranting this question on cross-examination, and the matter elicited thereby was of such a nature that, under ordinary circumstances, it might well prejudice the defendant, by carrying with it the implication that he had unduly neglected his family; but, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, there could have been no such prejudice. The defendant and his wife had been living separate and apart for several years. The children were with the wife, and, up to the time of the boy's accident, had visited him at frequent intervals. The defendant's claim was that his wife had abandoned him and the family home by reason of the persuasion of the deceased, and was living apart from him, and associating with the deceased, in open defiance of his wishes in the matter. It was this that constituted the basis of his plea of insanity. The theory of his case, as evidenced by his counsel's opening statement, and the evidence of his witnesses, was that the relations between himself and his wife had been absolutely and irrevocably terminated by his wife, acting under the influence of the deceased. Inasmuch as his children came to see him at his own house, it could not be discreditable to him that he should fail to call at the house occupied by the wife, between whom and himself all relations had been severed. Moreover, on the cross-examination of one of his daughters, defendant himself elicited testimony to the effect that he was never in the house occupied by his wife, from the time she left him until the accident to his son.

We cannot say that error was committed in allowing witness Strothers to give his opinion, as an intimate acquaintance, as to the sanity or insanity of defendant. The witness had been acquainted with the defendant for four or five years, and saw and talked with him frequently. As we have said before, the determination of the question as to whether one is an "intimate acquaintance," and, therefore competent, under subdivision 10 of section 1870, Code Civ. Proc., to give an opinion as to the mental sanity of another, is necessarily to a great extent within the discretion of the trial court, and the ruling of that court will not be disturbed except where the evidence is such as to leave no just room for question that the discretion has been improperly exercised. People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 255, 258, 46 Pac. 1073.

On cross-examination by defendant of a daughter, Miss Lottie Clark, a witness for the prosecution, she was asked whether she, or her mother, sister, or brother, had visited defendant in prison, and answered in the negative. The only possible object of this testimony was to show bias on the part of the witness and the others named against the defendant. On redirect examination, she was asked why she had not visited her father in prison, and, over objection, said that he had never requested it, and she thought he never cared to see her. In view of the cross-examination, this was probably proper redirect examination. However this may be, in view of the evidence given in support of defendant's case as to the relations between himself and his family, we do not see how this testimony could have prejudiced him. The same may be said of testimony of a similar nature given by the other daughter, which was undoubtedly erroneously admitted; there having been nothing in her cross-examination to warrant it.

The court instructed the jury quite fully and correctly upon the defense of insanity, and, among other instructions on that subject, gave an elaborate one, wherein it was attempted to show the distinction between the diseased and deranged condition of the mental faculties rendering a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in relation to the act with which he is charged, constituting the insanity which the law recognizes as a defense, and mere moral insensibility, passion, hatred, anger, etc., which do not constitute a defense, and to caution the jury to observe the distinction. We find in this instruction no proposition that is not absolutely correct as a matter of law. The complaint made of it is that it is argumentative, and manifests such a strong partisanship adverse to defendant and his defense, as would lead the jury to infer that the court believed the defense of insanity here interposed was without foundation. We cannot assent to this conclusion. There is not in it the assumption of any fact, or, so far as the printed words show, the slightest intimation of any opinion on the part of the court, as to the merits of the defense in this case, and we cannot see that such was its general effect. It indicates no more than a commendable desire on the part of the court to have the jury thoroughly understand what is and what is not, in the eyes of the law, insanity constituting a defense in a prosecution for crime. The other instructions complained of were so manifestly correct as not to require notice here.

On the motion for a new trial, affidavits were presented in support of a claim that the trial judge and district attorney had been guilty of misconduct prejudicially affecting defendant's cause. If we assume, purely for the purposes of this decision, that such a claim may be urged in support of a motion for a new trial, and that the facts upon which it is based may be presented by affidavits, we find that all matters therein set forth as to which complaint might justly be made are controverted by the counter affidavit of the district attorney, and that, in regard thereto, a substantial conflict of testimony was thus made, which it was the province of the trial court to determine.

MOSS v. JACK. (Sac. 1,349.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1907.)

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS—GROUND—FRAUD—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to set aside an assignment and a deed on the ground of fraud, evidence held insufficient to establish fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Cancellation of Instruments, § 102.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by Bradley S. Moss against Edward H. Jack. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Buck & Middlecoff and Thomas S. Louttit, for appellant. Ansel Smith and Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action in equity to have a certain assignment and deed executed by plaintiff to defendant set aside, as having been fraudulently procured, and to recover from defendant the sum of $15,000 for moneys and property of the plaintiff obtained by defendant under this deed and assignment. The trial resulted in findings wholly exonerating the defendant from the charges and imputations of fraud, and judgment followed the findings in defendant's favor.

The essential facts are the following: Plaintiff is a son, heir, and devisee of William S. Moss, deceased. Upon his death William S. Moss, who was a resident of California, left a will, whereby were appointed as executors of his estate Judge Baldwin and defendant, Jack. Defendant, Jack, had married a daughter of William S. Moss, and is a brother-in-law of plaintiff. Besides property in California, Moss left property and property interests in the state of Illinois, which were, and for years had been, deeply involved in litigation. It is not necessary to particularize in this regard further than to say that this litigation involved the adjustment of partnership accounts, awards to Moss in the accounting, the levy and execution sales of pieces of real property, the purchase of them by Moss, appeals resulting in setting aside these decrees, the clouding of the titles so obtained by Moss, affirmance of the execution sales as to certain pieces, and disaffirmance as to others, litigation over this, outstanding liens upon these pieces of property, with resulting confusion and uncertainty as to what would be the ultimate outcome of the litigation. An administrator in Illinois had been appointed to take charge of the property of Moss in the state of Illinois, which property was, of course, first subject to the claims of the Illinois creditors. Jack himself had been the attorney in fact of his father-in-law during his lifetime, and after his death presented to his coexecutor, Judge Baldwin, a claim for $13,000, $10,000 of which were for services rendered as his attorney in fact, $3,000 being for advancements and payments of money. Judge Baldwin, with the consent of all of the heirs and devisees, approved this claim, and it was, in turn, approved by the judge in probate, but thereafter objection having been made by one of the devisees, Jack, with the consent of the court, withdrew his claim for the purpose of presenting it, and it was presented to the probate court in Illinois. Some time before, while Judge McCulloch in Illinois was acting as attorney and adviser for the California executors and the heirs of Moss, Jack, at McCulloch's suggestion, had purchased certain outstanding trust deeds which were liens upon the Illinois property, in which the estate of Moss was interested, for the purpose of protecting the Moss interest from loss by hostile and aggressive foreclosure, as in the then uncertain condition of the Moss title or interest, it was extremely doubtful whether it would be expedient for the estate to attempt to redeem from such forced sales; that is to say, whether its own interests were sufficiently secure to justify these added expenditures. Thus Jack came to have large demands against the property in Illinois, both by reason of his ownership of the trust deeds, as well as by reason of his $13,000 claim against the estate. In addition to this, there was other claims filed for approval in Illinois, some of which were unquestionably valid, others of which were doubtful, and there were in addition court costs and attorney's fees for the litigation already had and still pending. In August, 1891, all of the heirs and devisees of Moss joined in the conveyance and assignment to Jack of the Illinois property, and it is this conveyance and assignment which is here attacked for its fraudulent procurement. At the time when plaintiff executed it he was over the age of 25 years, and some 12 years passed thereafter before this action was commenced. The specific allegation of fraud charged in the complaint is that on the 29th day of August, 1891, while Jack was acting as executor of the last will and testament of Moss, he (Jack) requested plaintiff to convey to him the property belonging to the estate of Moss in Illinois, and, acting upon the request of Jack, he joined in and executed to Jack a deed of conveyance; "that at said time Jack did not inform plaintiff that he had collected said sum of $7,395.14 from Louisa H. McCall, and did not inform plaintiff that he had collected said sum of $1,000 from said sheriff, and did not inform plaintiff of the true value of the real property, and plaintiff alleges that the procuring of said conveyance and said assignment from said plaintiff was and is fraudulent as to this plaintiff; that this plaintiff did not know the true description or value of the real property, and did not know that Jack had collected the moneys or had received said rents until within six months prior to the commencement of the action." It is then alleged upon information and belief that at the time of the execution of the deed and assignment there was nothing whatever due to Jack from the estate of Moss, and nothing due to Jack from plaintiff, and that plaintiff received no consideration for the deed.

Without discussion as to whether or not Jack, so far as the property in the state of Illinois is concerned, was chargeable to this plaintiff with the high duty and faith of a trustee, and, indeed, declaring that he was so chargeable, the evidence completely answers and disposes of the specific charges of fraud made in the complaint. Thus, as has been said, it was established that Jack was directly through his claim, and indirectly through his liens upon the property, title to which was claimed by the estate of Moss, a heavy creditor of the estate. It is established that Jack did not collect any sum of money in settlement of the litigation or otherwise from the Illinois property until after the deed and assignment to him by the heirs, and these collections were made under and by virtue of that assignment. It is established that he did not collect the sum of $1,000 from the sheriff, excepting by virtue of the assignment and deed, and it is still further established that the $1,000 was $1,000 which he himself had advanced to protect the interest of the Moss estate. It is established that the plaintiff did know the true description and value of the real property, not only from the letters of Judge McCulloch in Illinois and the explanations of Judge Baldwin in California, but from a personal visit which he himself made to Peoria, and from examinations and inquiries which he there instituted, and from information which he there personally received from Judge McCulloch. Upon every matter of fraud concerning which the complaint speaks, the answering evidence of the defense is full and complete. It establishes, as the court finds, that Judge McCulloch in Illinois, representing the interests of the heirs, wrote frequently at great length to Judge Smith, who was the attorney for the California executors and to the California executors themselves. Judge Baldwin, one of these executors, is dead. But it is abundantly established by the testimony of Judge Smith and of the defendant, Jack, that the heirs were kept advised with most painstaking care of all the transactions and complications in the progress of the settlement of the estate. Moreover, as to the values of the property, and aside from the finding of the court that plaintiff knew of these values, the court declares that the total amount of property received by Jack under this deed and assignment was $31,443, as against which there were unquestionably, in the shape of incumbrances and undisputed payments by defendant, attorney's fees, taxes, assessments for street work, and the like, claims totalling $25,379.95. With the difference between these sums ($6,063), defendant's claim of $13,000 was to be satisfied, in addition to other claims, unquestioned as to their validity, amounting to $896.69, with the disputed claim of one Mrs. Odell of $23,790. Moreover, it does not appear that the heirs placed any reliance upon the representations of Jack in executing this deed and assignment; but, to the contrary, it does affirmatively appear that they placed implicit reliance upon the instructions and advice of Judge Baldwin, the coexecutor, who had been William Moss' attorney during his lifetime, and who continued as the attorney and adviser of the heirs after his death. Thus Mrs. Griffith, a daughter of William Moss, testifying as to the circumstances attending the execution of the deed and assignment, said: "I had known Judge Baldwin ever since I was a child, and I relied upon his statements. His statements in regard to the property in Illinois was that Mr. Jack would not probably get more than was due him; that I had better join in with the other heirs, and he did not think Mr. Jack would ever trouble us any further. * * * Judge Baldwin came to me as a friend, not as an attorney, and advised me to sign these papers, rather than to have any further trouble with Mr. Jack; that Mr. Jack would take whatever he might get there in Illinois, and, if he did not get enough to justify his claim, he could come here and recover, but Judge Baldwin said he did not think he would if we would all sign this deed, and he so advised me as a friend, and, having implicit faith in Judge Baldwin, I did as he told me, as he advised me. All the Moss heirs were present when the deed was signed with the exception of Bradley and Billy." Mrs. McDougald, another daughter, testifies: "We had talked over with Judge Baldwin the actual condition of the property in Illinois and the liens upon it. I can't tell you how many times; it had been talked over a number of times at the meetings. I presume Judge Smith was there when the matter was talked over, although my conversation was usually with Judge Baldwin. Whatever I asked Judge Baldwin he advised me." Judge Smith testifies that full information was conveyed to the heirs by himself and by Judge Baldwin touching all these matters. Upon January 16, 1891, Judge McCulloch from Illinois wrote a letter containing a most elaborately complete statement of the condition of the Illinois properties. It was addressed to Messrs. Jack and Baldwin, executors of the estate of Moss, was received by them, and indisputably its contents were communicated and explained to the heirs. In that letter Judge McCulloch writes: "We have taken everything of a doubtful nature, and have put a valuation upon the several items fully as high as they will bear. The whole affair can now be closed up upon the above basis," etc. It would seem to be demonstrated that this charge of fraud, if it is to be sustained, can be sustained only upon the theory of a conspiracy between Judge Baldwin and Jack to swindle the heirs, since it was upon Judge Baldwin's advice that the transaction was consummated. Such conspiracy is not charged, and to entertain the idea of it would strain credulity to the breaking point.

But (and this seems to be the gravamen of appellant's complaint upon appeal) it is said that a certain provisional agreement was entered into by McCulloch with Mrs. McCall, and with Mr. Frazer, who were the principal parties in litigation with the estate of Moss, whereby the litigation was to be compromised upon a certain basis, and that there is no evidence that the terms of this provisional agreement were made known to the heirs before they executed the deed and assignment. The provisional agreement in itself amounted to little. Mrs. McCall had paid into the bank some $7,000, the amount of a judgment against her, and of this the heirs had been advised. They had been advised also that it was unwise to accept the amount at that time, lest it might complicate the pending litigation with Frazer. The provisional agreement of July did not change the terms and conditions as to Mrs. McCall. She paid no more nor less than the amount which she had already deposited. It did compromise the litigation with Frazer. Judge McCulloch testifies that the agreement was provisional, because it would first have to be ratified and accepted by the heirs, and that he sent on to California and to the executors the terms and provisions of this agreement, that the heirs might act upon it. It is true that Mrs. McDougald and Mrs. Griffith testify that they were not informed of this provisional agreement, but the plaintiff Moss does not so testify. Indeed, he offers no word of testimony himself to support any of the charges of fraud which he prefers. The testimony of Jack, which was taken by deposition in Florida, contains no specific mention of the matter, and this, for the very obvious reason that this charge of fraudulent concealment is not preferred in the complaint. His examination was directed to the fraud actually charged, and his deposition completely covers these matters. It is not surprising that he did not testify in reference to a matter concerning which he was in no way advised that he would be attacked. Judge Smith, though living, was not present at the conference whereat these matters were made known to the heirs, and whereat by Judge Baldwin they were advised to execute the deed. Judge Baldwin himself, as has been said, had died. The testimony, however, shows generally that the heirs were kept fully advised upon all matters touching their interests. It is unquestioned that Judge Baldwin knew of the compromise agreement. It is proved out of the mouths of plaintiff's witnesses that Judge Baldwin advised the execution of the deed and assignment to Jack, with this knowledge, and excepting, as we have said, upon the highly improbable theory that Judge Baldwin was a corrupt conspirator to defraud his clients, as it was upon his advice they relied, it will not be concluded that upon this point the charge of fraudulent concealment has been established by convincing evidence, or at all.

The court's findings declare, not only the fairness of the transaction, but the payment of a full price, and we see no reason why these findings should in any respect be disturbed.

None of the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence calls for particular consideration, and for the foregoing reasons the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Where findings supported by the evidence are sufficient to warrant the judgment, the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support other findings will not be considered on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; F. H. Smith, Judge.

Action by Mary B. Percival against Edward H. Jack. From an order denying a motion for new trial after findings for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louttit & Middlecoff, for appellant. Ansel Smith and Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

McLAUGHLIN, J. The controlling facts in the case at bar are identical with the facts in the case of Moss v. Jack, this day decided.[1] Here, as there, one of the devisees of the estate of William S. Moss, deceased, is seeking to have the assignment and deed, so frequently mentioned in the opinion in Moss v. Jack, declared fraudulent and void, to compel an accounting and annul certain decrees settling the accounts of defendant as executor of the estate of William S. Moss, deceased.

The only essential difference between the two cases is that here the plaintiff is seeking to recover the sum of $45,000, and specifically alleges the misappropriation of $68,000 worth of bonds in addition to the property mentioned in the other suit. The court found that the decedent never owned and that defendant never received the bonds in question, and the other findings are substantially the same as the findings in Moss v. Jack, with the single exception that there is no specific finding on the question of laches. Plaintiff appeals from the order denying her motion for a new trial. The findings are fully supported by the evidence. It is unnecessary to indulge in a lengthy review of the testimony showing the reasons for so holding. Suffice it to say that the evidence in all substantial particulars is to the same effect as was the evidence in the case above mentioned.

It is contended that the finding relating to the statute of limitations is erroneous for the reason that defendant was out of the state, but we deem it unnecessary to dwell upon the evidence in this regard, for the reason that, if this finding was the other way, the judgment would still be supported by proper findings. Costa v. Silva, 127 Cal. 354, 59 Pac. 695; Hayden v. Collins, 1 Cal. App. 266, 81 Pac. 1120.

The court did not err in allowing Ansel Smith to testify touching communications between himself and the devisees. McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 91, 70 Pac. 1008. The husband of plaintiff had testified in her behalf and was cross-examined by defendant. Later the witness was recalled for further cross-examination, and then the objection was interposed that he could not be examined without plaintiff's consent. The court overruled the objection, and appellant insists that such ruling was error. We do not think so. If a wife calls her husband as a witness, the other side is certainly entitled to cross-examine him as to all matters brought out on the examination in chief. Besides, the only testimony elicited was entirely immaterial and came from the witness voluntarily after the court had sustained objections to the testimony on the ground that it was not cross-examination. The other rulings of the court were similar to rulings passed upon in Moss v. Jack, and, citing the opinion in that case as an elaboration of the opinion here on this and other points in the case, we conclude by saying that there is no prejudicial error in this record.

PEOPLE'S LUMBER CO. v. GILLARD et al.

(Civ. 338.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 24, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 20, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Law of Case—Dictum.

Where, in an action on a contractor's bond for the construction of a high school, the constitutionality of Code Civ. Proc. § 1203, providing for such bonds, and the validity of the bond in question given thereunder, were directly presented and decided by the court, to the effect that the bond was enforceable as a common-law bond voluntarily given, regardless of the validity of the statute, such decision was not obiter, but constituted the law of the case, and was conclusive on the parties on a subsequent appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4361–4379.]

2. Pleading—Amendment—New Cause of Action.

A contract to build a high school provided that the board of trustees might request alterations, additions, or omissions, which should not affect the contract, but that the cost should be added to or deducted from the amount of the contract price. An original complaint on the contractor's bond counted on material furnished under, and a breach of the contract generally, as the measure of defendant's liability on the bond. Held, that an amendment to the complaint after appeal, alleging changes and alterations made in conformity with the contract, did not state a new or different cause of action foreign to that originally charged.

3. Appeal—Objections—Waiver.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying motion of defendants White and Hickson for a new trial.

Plaintiff furnished material to the defendants Gillard and Leary as contractors to be used in the construction of a high school building in the town of San Buenaventura. Defendants White, Hickson, and Darancette were sureties on a bond in the penal sum of $7,000 given to insure the faithful performance of the contract entered into by Gillard and Leary with the trustees of the high school district, and the payment of all just claims against said building for labor and material. Said bond being conditioned to inure to and for the use and benefit of any and all persons who perform labor for or furnish materials to the said contractors (in pursuance of said contract), etc. The action is brought against the contractors and sureties on the bond. It was dismissed as to Darancette and judgment given against the other defendants for $1,753.97 and costs. Gillard and Leary made default, and the defendants White and Hickson appeared and defended and now appeal from the judgment and order aforesaid.

Appellants urge in support of their appeal and as reasons for reversing said judgment and order (1) that the bond upon which their liability rests was given pursuant to section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that that section is unconstitutional and any bond given in pursuance of it is void and unenforceable; (2) that the action was barred by the statute of limitations; and (3) that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objections to certain testimony offered in evidence by the defendants.

This is the second appeal. On the former appeal the Supreme Court directly decided the question raised by the first ground of appeal here presented. It was held that the bond in question "derives force from its provisions and not from the statute," and that it "may be enforced." No such other or different attack is now made upon the sufficiency of the bond as to bring the case within the rule declared in Anderson v. Hancock, 64 Cal. 455, 2 Pac. 31, and similar cases. The determination of the character and validity of the bond was the decision by the Supreme Court of a question of law, as distinguished from an inference or finding of fact made by that court. Wallace v. Sisson, 114 Cal. 45, 45 Pac. 1000. The validity or enforceability of the bond did not then, and does not now, depend upon the determination of any issue of fact. The ruling on the former appeal was predicated on the admitted truthfulness of the allegation in the original complaint that the bond was "given in pursuance of section 1203." The question arises now upon the undisputed finding of the court to the same effect. The finding "that said bond was given by defendants, Gillard and Leary, in pursuance of the provisions of section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure," responds to and covers all the issues raised by appellants' answer to the amended complaint as to the validity of the bond. Appellants contend that an issue of fact was presented by the pleadings upon the second trial as to whether or not the bond was voluntarily given. The answer to the amended complaint does not allege that the bond was not voluntarily given, and the record fails to show that any such issue of fact was before the trial court.

The objections to the sufficiency of the complaint in the respect here under consideration, made on the first appeal, were: (1) Section 1203 is unconstitutional; (2) the act being void, the bond made pursuant to it is void; and (3) "the bond being a statutory bond, the right to sue on it comes alone from the statute, and that the complaint must set forth the facts on which the statutory right of action depends, which it is claimed the complaint fails to do." 136 Cal. 57, 68 Pac. 576. The Supreme Court says, in effect, passing over the objection as presented by the first two grounds and admitting that the bond is, in form, a statutory bond, the right to sue on it does not come alone from the statute. It was voluntarily made, and may be enforced as a common-law bond. If the determination of the law of the case here resolves itself into a question of whether or not the opinion of the Supreme Court on the former appeal in relation to the validity of the bond under consideration was dictum, the rule in this state is clear. Other jurisdictions have taken other views, and the range of the authorities on this question is thus stated in Bouvier: "According to the more rigid rule, an expression of opinion, however deliberate upon a question, however fully argued, if not essential to the disposition that was made of the case, may be regarded as a dictum; but it is, on the other hand, said that it is difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not as persuasive on all the points which were so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to argue them, and which were deliberately passed over by the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point." Since an early date the Supreme Court of this state has refused to adopt the rule which confines the law of the case to that portion of the opinion of the appellate court which can be said to be strictly essential to the disposition made of the case. Dewey v. Gray, 2 Cal. 374; Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 589; Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 84; Phelan v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 39; Table Mountain v. Stranahan, 21 Cal. 548; Gwinn v. Hamilton, 75 Cal. 266, 17 Pac. 212; Page v. Fowler, 37 Cal. 105; Porter v. Muller, 112 Cal. 366, 44 Pac. 729. In Phelan v. San Francisco, Field, C. J., states the rule of the law of the case as follows: "A previous ruling by the appellate court upon a point distinctly made may be only authority in other cases, to be followed and affirmed, or to be modified or overruled according to its intrinsic merits; but in the case in which it is made it is more than authority, it is a final adjudication, from the consequences of which the court cannot depart, nor the parties relieve themselves." The reason for the rule of the law of the case is said in some of the cases to rest upon the doctrine of res adjudicata (Soule v. Dawes, 14 Cal. 250); in others, upon the want of power, when the cause has gone beyond the jurisdiction of the appellate court, for it to annul or reverse its decree or judgment for any error of fact or law, and because the rule is necessary as a matter of public policy (Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 654, 22 Pac. 26, 131). Considered by the rule of res adjudicata the authorities are conclusive, and no clear distinction can be drawn between the rule of res adjudicata and the rule of finality of decision declared in the latter case (Sharon v. Sharon, supra). It is immaterial that the decision was erroneous. The rule is the same in all cases, regardless of the correctness of the decision. Page v. Fowler, supra; Sharon v. Sharon, supra. As we read the opinion in Wixson v. Devine, 80 Cal. 385, 22 Pac. 224, there is nothing in conflict with the decisions in the foregoing cases in respect to this question. In that case the court is considering expressions of opinion which are purely "obiter." Of the portions of the opinions referred to in that case the court says: "They were not the subject of review on his appeal. There was no occasion, therefore, for this court on that appeal to say anything as to the correctness or incorrectness of these rulings."

The language here under consideration was in no sense "obiter." The questions of the constitutionality of section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the validity of the obligation upon which this action was brought, were directly presented and argued by counsel, and decided by the court on the former appeal; and, had the decision of the court at that time upon this question been in favor of appellants, it would have concluded the case. If it be conceded that the opinion was dictum at all, it would have to be classified as judicial as distinguished from obiter. Whatever opinion we may entertain as to the policy of the rule, or the validity of the bond, it is clear from the authorities that it was the duty of the superior court and it is our duty to hold the bond valid and enforceable, under the law of the case. The contract contained the following clause: "Third. Should the said board of trustees at any time during the progress of said building request any alterations, deviations, additions, or omissions from the said contract, specifications, or plans, they shall be at liberty to do so, and the same shall in no way affect or make void the contract, but will be added to or deducted from the amount of said contract price, as the case may be, by a fair and reasonable valuation." The original complaint counted upon material furnished under, and a breach of, the contract generally, as the measure of defendants' liability on the bond. After the former appeal the complaint was amended to meet the suggestions of the Supreme Court in regard to these matters upon which the reversal of the judgment was based. In the amended complaint certain changes in the contract and building are alleged to have been made under and pursuant to the above mentioned clause, after the execution of the said contract. Issues of fact were joined by the answer, upon the questions whether or not these changes were made pursuant to the provisions of the contract or otherwise, and whether or not the changes so made materially altered the contract so as to relieve the defendant sureties from their obligation on the bond. The trial court found the changes to have been made pursuant to the contract and not otherwise. This finding was in conformity with the allegations of the amended complaint.

To sustain their plea of the statute of limitation, appellants contend that, because of the additional allegations as to the changes made under this contract, the amended complaint states a new and different cause of action, and that as to the cause therein stated the action was not commenced until the amended complaint was filed. The language of the opinion of the commissioner on the former appeal is quoted in appellants' brief as an apparent authority for the contention that the amended complaint counts on a "different contract." The language quoted shows upon its face that it refers to the claim of the appellants that the contract was changed and modified independent of its own provisions. Changes or alterations made in conformity with the provisions of the contract were not being considered when the language quoted was used. The allegations setting out the changes provided for in the contract do not state a new or different cause of action foreign to the original complaint. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 425, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53. The measure of the recovery asked is still based upon the material furnished for the high school building under the contract, and defendants' liability to pay is based upon a breach of the same conditions of the bond, under the amended complaint, that it was under the original complaint.

The error specified in the record relating to the refusal of the court to permit the witness Leary to continue his statement in regard to the board of trustees not agreeing to pay for alterations made is not urged in appellants' brief. The testimony was in direct conflict with the provisions of the written contract, and the ruling of the court might be justified on that ground; but, since the matter is not presented, we assume that it is not relied upon by appellants. We see no error in the record to justify a reversal of the judgment or order complained of.

Judgment and order affirmed.

5 Cal. App. 408

SAN FRANCISCO NAT. BANK v. AMERICAN NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES.

(Civ. 281.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 18, 1907.)

1. Banks and Banking—Collections—Selection of Agent—Negligence.

Plaintiff accepted a check on an Arizona bank from a customer for collection, and, in accordance with plaintiff's custom, forwarded the check the same day to defendant bank in Los Angeles for collection, defendant, on receiving the check, immediately forwarded it to a bank in the place where the check was payable for presentment and collection. This bank was in fact insolvent, and its draft, sent to defendant bank for the proceeds of the collection, was protested, and remained unpaid on the bank's failure shortly thereafter. Held that, when the bank making the collection obtained the money on the check, it became the debtor of plaintiff's depositor, and that defendant was therefore not liable for the collecting bank's default, not having been negligent in selecting the bank to make the collection.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Banks and Banking, § 586.]

2. Same—Method of Payment.

Defendant not having accepted the collecting bank's draft as payment, and it not appearing that any other method might with reasonable probability have resulted in collection from the collecting bank, defendant was not in default in accepting the collecting bank's draft, instead of insisting on payment in money.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Banks and Banking, §§ 592, 609.]

3. Customs and Usages—Customs of Banks—Collections—Knowledge.

Where the holder of a check deposited it in plaintiff bank in San Francisco, by which it was forwarded for collection to defendant bank in Los Angeles, and defendant forwarded the check for collection to a bank in a town where it was payable, plaintiff was chargeable with knowledge of a custom of banks in Los Angeles that in receiving checks on banks in other places, either for collection or credit, the receiving bank shall transmit it in the usual manner for collection, either to the bank on which it is drawn, or to such bank or persons as it may deem reliable, or some other proper collecting agent, for the convenience of the depositor, and shall not be liable for such collecting agent's default, nor for the loss of the proceeds, until the proceeds in actual money have come into the receiving bank's possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Customs and Usages, §§ 23, 24, 26.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco National Bank against the American National Bank of Los Angeles. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Lynn Helm, for appellant. S. C. Denson, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The plaintiff placed a draft with the defendant for collection. The defendant forwarded the draft to a bank at Arizona for collection, which bank collected the draft, failed, and no part of the proceeds has ever reached any of the parties hereto. The action was tried by the court on an agreed statement of facts. Judgment was rendered therein for plaintiff, from which judgment the defendant appeals.

The agreed statement of facts, in part, is as follows: The Judson Dynamite & Powder Company, of San Francisco, held a check, dated December 17, 1903, on the Sandoval National Bank of Nogales, Ariz., for the sum of $637.97, which check was, December 21, 1903, by the powder company, indorsed to the San Francisco National Bank, and deposited with it for collection. The same day that bank indorsed the check to "any bank or banker," and sent it to the American National Bank of Los Angeles "for collection and return." The American Bank of Los Angeles received the check December 22, 1903. It thereupon examined a directory of banks and bankers, and learned that there were two banks at Nogales—one the bank on which the check was drawn, and the other the International Bank of Nogales—whereupon it indorsed the check "American National Bank of Los Angeles, to any bank or banker," and forwarded it to the International Bank of Nogales for collection, by which bank it was received and collected in cash December 28, 1903. On the same day the International Bank of Nogales sent the American National Bank of Los Angeles a draft for $636.72, drawn on the National Bank of Commerce of New York, which was received in due course of mail and immediately forwarded by the Los Angeles Bank to the Corn Exchange Bank in New York for collection, by which bank it was received January 7, 1904, and the next day presented to the National Bank of Commerce for payment. Payment was refused because of insufficient funds, and the draft was duly protested for nonpayment. The International Bank of Nogales failed January 15, 1904, and was utterly insolvent. In the meantime, on January 8, 1904, the Corn Exchange Bank of New York telegraphed the defendant of the nonpayment of the draft, and that the draft had gone to protest, and thereupon, on the same day, defendant telegraphed to the International Bank of Nogales as follows: "Your draft of December 28 on National Bank of Commerce for six hundred thirty-six is protested. Protect and wire the money to pay." In response the International Bank of Nogales telegraphed the defendant: "Draft protested for reason that currency remittance to our New York correspondent went astray. We follow your instructions and cover same by wire." January 15, 1904, the defendant telegraphed the National Bank of Commerce that the protested draft was being returned for collection, that the International Bank had wired funds covering said draft, and requested the National Bank of Commerce to hold the amount for return of draft to it. On the same day the National Bank of Commerce replied that the account was not good for the check mentioned, and that it could not meet the request of the defendant. The defendant wrote to the plaintiff January 14, 1904, and as the contents of that communication are sufficiently referred to in the reply thereto, dated January 19, 1904, only the reply need be given: It is: "We are in receipt of your favor of the 14th inst., confirming your telegram of even date, and note your suggestion in regard to charging back item of $637.97, on Sandoval National Bank of Nogales, and replying to same we have referred the matter to our client, and he wired to the maker of the check, in Nogales, and has reply to-day stating that the check was paid, and that the money was in the hands of your agent at Nogales. Our client therefore declines to reimburse us in the matter, and inasmuch as we cannot return to them the original check, we are inclined to think that they are right, and that at the time the check was paid to your agent our responsibility in the matter ceased. Is this not correct?"

It is the custom of banks in each of the cities of San Francisco and Los Angeles, by recommendation of their several clearing houses, that, in receiving notes, drafts, and checks on points other than said respective cities of San Francisco and Los Angeles, either for collection or credit, the bank with which said check is deposited for collection shall transmit the same in the usual manner for collection, either to the bank on which it is drawn, or to such bank or persons as it may deem reliable, with the express understanding that the same is done simply for account and convenience of the depositor, and that the bank so receiving said item for collection shall in no wise be liable for default of any such bank, person, or agents, or for loss in transit, or for any other cause whatever, until the proceeds in actual money shall come into its possession.

There is a great diversity and conflict of opinion on the question mainly discussed in the briefs, namely, what is the extent of the duty and responsibility of a bank which receives an instrument for collection at a place different from its place of business, and how far it is liable for the acts of its correspondents or agents in the performance of their duty. One class of cases maintains the absolute liability of a bank for any default or neglect of its correspondent or collection agent in the same manner as it would for the default of its own employés, regarding the correspondent or collector as the agent of the bank, and not the agent of the owner of the commercial paper. Another class of cases holds the bank receiving the claim for collection at a place distant from the place where it conducts its business liable only for failure to exercise due care and diligence in selecting a trustworthy agent or correspondent, and if it exercise such care and diligence the bank is exonerated from all liability. The view, however, we have reached in the case on other points, renders it unnecessary to analyze and discuss the various conflicting decisions on this question.

1. The trial court held that the defendant was guilty of negligence in accepting and forwarding for collection the draft on New York sent it by the International Bank of Nogales; that it should have insisted upon payment of the money. In reaching this conclusion, the court doubtless relied upon the general principle of law that, as commercial paper is payable in money only, a collecting bank is not authorized to receive in payment anything but money (Selover on Bank Collections, §§ 46, 47), but defendant did not take the New York draft as payment. At the time of receiving the draft on New York the defendant might have sent it back to the International Bank of Nogales, and demanded payment of the money, or it might have pursued some other course than the one it did adopt, but no fair inference can be drawn from the statement of facts that any other method might with reasonable probability have resulted in a collection from the International Bank of Nogales. There are respectable authorities which hold that it is the custom of banks to remit by check or draft or certificate for the proceeds of any collection, instead of remitting the exact money collected, and that this custom is so general and universal that courts take judicial notice of it (Selover on Bank Collections, § 127, and cases cited); but we do not rest our decision on this line of authorities. We take the position that there is nothing in the record which would warrant the conclusion that the defendant was remiss in any duty or obligation it owed the plaintiff. By the custom before referred to, the Judson Dynamite & Powder Company, when it deposited the draft with plaintiff for collection, authorized the plaintiff to transmit the same through the usual channels for such collection. It was not expected that the plaintiff would send a messenger from San Francisco to Nogales for the purpose of collecting the draft. Under the custom plaintiff only undertook to transmit the draft, through the usual channels, either to the bank on which it was drawn or to such bank as it might deem reliable, with the one understanding that the same was done simply for account and convenience of the Judson Dynamite & Powder Company, and that it should not be responsible for the default of any such bank, or for any cause whatever until the proceeds in actual money should come into its possession. The plaintiff transmitted the draft to the American National Bank of Los Angeles, a bank which it deemed reliable. It was not guilty of any negligence in making such selection of the Los Angeles bank, and is not liable to the Judson Powder Company for any default of such bank. The money never came into the hands of the plaintiff. The same may be said as to the deposit of the draft by the plaintiff with the Los Angeles bank for collection. The Los Angeles bank sent the draft to the International Bank of Nogales, in the usual manner, and was guilty of no negligence in selecting the International Bank as its agent at Nogales. The Los Angeles bank never received the money, and the proceeds of the draft never came into its possession. When the International Bank of Nogales collected the money, it collected it under the custom as agent for the Judson Dynamite & Powder Company; it having been selected through the agencies of which the plaintiff availed itself, and which the powder company impliedly agreed to when it left the draft with plaintiff for collection. From the time the International Bank of Nogales collected the money, it became the debtor of the Judson Dynamite & Powder Company. It appropriated the money and has not paid the powder company. It would not be in accord with the custom to hold the defendant for the default of an agent not in its employ, and of whose services it availed itself with no fault or negligence in the selection.

2. At the time the plaintiff bank sent the draft in question to the defendant bank at Los Angeles for collection, there was a custom among banks of that city, to which reference has already been made. That part of it pertinent here, in substance, absolved the banks at Los Angeles from default of their correspondents in collecting checks or drafts at other points than Los Angeles. While the identical custom prevailed in San Francisco as in Los Angeles, there is nothing in the agreed statement of facts from which we can conclude that the plaintiff knew of the existence of the custom in Los Angeles. Knowledge of a custom must, according to some decisions, be brought home to parties who are bound by it; but the better authorities declare that the custom of banks of a place is binding on parties who deal with a bank there, whether they are aware of its existence or not. In Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Commercial National Bank, 39 S. W. 338, 98 Tenn. 337, it is said: "A principal who selects a bank as his collecting agent, thus availing himself of the facilities which it holds out, in the absence of special directions, is bound by any reasonable usage prevailing and established among the banks at the place where the collection is made, without regard to his knowledge or want of knowledge of its existence." In Sahlien et al. v. Bank of Roanoke, 16 S. W. 374, 90 Tenn. 221, it is held that the great weight of authority is that a reasonable custom of all the banks of a place, though not known to a party sending paper for collection to one of them, is binding upon the sender as a part of the contract of agency, to which the sender impliedly assents by selecting the bank without inquiry or without especial instructions. Selover on Bank Collections, § 10, says: "Where the custom is general and reasonable, the depositor of paper for collection is bound thereby, though he did not know of it." In Morse on Banks & Banking, § 231, it is said: "Knowledge of the usage, either express of implied, must, it has been said, be brought home to the parties who are to be bound by it. Mills v. Bank of United States, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 431, 6 L. Ed. 512; Peirce v. Butler, 14 Mass. 303. But other cases of high authority declare that the usage of the bank in collections will bind the person dealing with it in this business, whether such usage be known to him or not (Smith v. Whiting, 12 Mass. 6, 7 Am. Dec. 25; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. [U. S.] 25, 7 L. Ed. 37; Dorchester & Milton Bank v. New England Bank, 1 Cush. [Mass.] 177; Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Newland, 97 Ky. 472, 31 S. W. 38; Jefferson County Sav. Bank v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 39 S. W. 339, 98 Tenn. 337); and this is certainly the correct rule. Indeed, the opposing cases can be easily reconciled by the link which appears to be suggested in one of them. The facts that one deals with a bank without taking the trouble to inquire as to its system will raise the implication that he already knows and is satisfied with that system. It is clear that, if a person hands over a note to a bank for collection without any species of remark as to the course to be pursued, the bank is not bound to thrust upon him a statement of its intended course, and to retain him until the whole theory has been expounded to him, when his conduct unmistakably shows that either he already knows it, or else does not desire to know it. Either he knows and approves it, or he voluntarily trusts to the wisdom of the bank, at his own deliberately assumed risk of its sufficiency. In such case the bank not only has the right to assume, but it is even positively bound to assume, that his desire is that the ordinary and established usage be pursued. And an unordered deviation from that usage, though the usage were unknown to him, would lay the bank open to his suit for damages; and the court must, as has been already shown, hold as matter of law that the pursuance of this custom was an implied condition of the contract. It is clear, then, that he could not plead ignorance of it in order to lay a foundation for a suit against the bank for acting according to it. The knowledge on his part would be implied conclusively." See, also, Morse on Banks & Banking, § 9. This is the rule in California. See Davis v. First Nat. Bank of Fresno, 118 Cal. 600, 50 Pac. 666.

A custom must be general as to place, and not confined to any particular bank or banks. Selover on Bank Collections, § 10. The custom under discussion was general as to Los Angeles; it was reasonable, and under the authorities cited the plaintiff was bound by it.

The judgment is reversed.

5 Cal. App. 427

PEOPLE v. JAMES. (Cr. 37.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 23, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 17, 1907.)

1. Criminal Law—Hypothetical Questions—Objections.

Where there was evidence in the record of a criminal case of all the facts embodied in a hypothetical question asked of a medical expert, an objection that it was not founded on the facts proven by the prosecution was properly overruled, as it was not necessary that the question should have embraced all the evidence in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1073-1076.]

2. Same—Appeal—Objections Not Raised at Trial.

An objection to a hypothetical question, not urged at the trial, is unavailable on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2639-2642.]

3. Same—Form of Objections.

An objection that a hypothetical question was not warranted by law was ineffective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1633-1636.]

4. Same—Instructions—Construction as a Whole.

Where other instructions clearly charged that it was the people's duty to prove beyond a reasonable doubt all the elements of the crime charged, defendant was not prejudiced by an instruction that every fact and circumstance relied on by the prosecution to establish defendant's guilt must be proved by evidence beyond all reasonable doubt, and, if the jury were not satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that each fact and circumstance had been so proved, it was their duty to find defendant not guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3158; vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1990.]

5. Same—Presumption of Innocence.

An instruction that the presumption of innocence remains with defendant throughout the trial was not erroneous for failure to continue such presumption until verdict rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1847.]

6. Same—Appeal—Invited Error.

Accused cannot complain on appeal of an instruction given in the identical language of his request to charge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3007-3009.]

7. Same—Instructions—Duty of Officer.

In a prosecution for homicide, a request to charge that the law presumes that if defendant was an officer, and acting as such at the time of the homicide, that he was doing his duty, was obscure and misleading, and not justified by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, declaring the presumption that official duty had been regularly performed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; E. C. Hart, Judge.

Philip James was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. B. Harris and Jas. L. Copeland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Appellant was tried on an information charging him with murder, and he was convicted of manslaughter. He has appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. The assignments of errors relate to certain instructions given and refused, and to the action of the trial court in overruling an objection to a hypothetical question addressed to one of the witnesses for the people. We will notice in the order presented in his brief all of the points upon which appellant relies for a reversal of the judgment.

Dr. Stevenson, a medical expert for the people, was asked this question: "Suppose a man weighing 130 pounds or thereabouts was struck with sufficient force by a man weighing 180, 190, or 200 pounds to knock him down twice within a short period of time, the first blow being succeeded by a struggle, and during that struggle the smaller man was choked for a period of half a minute, at first lightly and then gradually increasing it until he let go his hold upon a revolver; after the second blow he had some difficulty in arising, but got up, walked a space of 15 or 20 feet, or 10 feet; then walked a space of 30 or 40 or 50 feet without staggering; his muscles co-ordinating, and during that period talks coherently—what can you say as to the mental condition of such smaller man?" Counsel for defendant made this objection: "I object to the question as not founded upon the facts as proven by the prosecution in this case." Thereupon, in response to the question by the court, "Wherein is it defective or wherein does it not conform to the facts?" counsel answered: "In this, that the witness Bridge called by the prosecution testified that, when the defendant first got up, he staggered to the bar; that after he got the pistol he walked in a stooping position; that he gradually braced up and walked a little better, so it is not founded upon the testimony." "Very well," said the district attorney, "after he got the pistol, there was a little swaying, but he quickly gathered himself and walked naturally, without staggering or swaying, all of his muscles apparently co-ordinating?" Counsel for appellant again objected "on the same grounds. On the further ground that it calls for an opinion on a hypothetical question not warranted by law." The objection was overruled and an exception taken. There is evidence in the record of all the facts embodied in the foregoing question; and, as the objection went only to that point, the ruling of the court was obviously correct. It was not necessary for the question to embrace all the evidence in the case. Indeed, if that were the rule, hypothetical questions would generally be impossible on account of the conflict usually created by the testimony.

The rule is clearly stated in People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 566, 48 Pac. 712, by Mr. Justice Van Fleet, as follows: "While the question should have for its basis some probable, or at least possible, theory to be deduced from the evidence in the case, counsel have a right to frame the question to accord with their theory of what the material facts are as shown by that evidence, and in so doing may omit facts which from their point of view have no material bearing upon the subject." Thompson on Trials is therein quoted to the following effect: "The hypothetical questions must be based either upon the hypothesis of the truth of all the evidence, or upon a hypothesis specially framed of certain facts assumed to be proved for the purpose of the inquiry. Such questions leave it for the jury to decide in the first case whether the evidence is true or not, and in the second case whether the peculiar facts assumed are or are not proved." And again: "It is no objection to a hypothetical question that the state of facts which it assumes is erroneous, if within the possible or probable range of the evidence. * * * It is the privilege of counsel in such cases to assume within the limits of the evidence any statement of facts which he claims the evidence justifies, and have the opinion of experts upon the facts thus assumed. The facts are assumed for the purposes of the question, and for no other purpose." 2 Jones on Evidence, § 372, cited by appellant, states the rule also in line with the other authorities: "While it is impossible to lay down any unyielding rule as to the form of the hypothetical question in such cases, it is clear that the question should be so framed as to fairly and clearly present the state of facts which the counsel claims to be proved and which the testimony on his part tends to prove."

But appellant contends that facts, and not opinions, must be assumed in the question (Rogers on Expert Testimony, § 30), and that the objection should have been sustained because the words "co-ordinating" and "coherently" presuppose the mental condition which it is the exclusive province of the jury to determine. Granting that these words are objectionable as involving a conclusion, it is difficult to see how their use could have prejudiced appellant. But a complete answer to the contention is that no such objection was made in the court below as is presented here. The additional objection that it was "a hypothetical question not warranted by law" raises no issue and amounts to nothing. In the case of People v. Mahoney, 77 Cal. 532, 20 Pac. 74, the district attorney asked one Dr. B. F. Carpenter the question: "From an examination of the wound and the course of the bullet, in your opinion would it have been possible for the deceased to have shot himself?" Defendant objected on the ground that it was "incompetent, no foundation having been laid for it." The district attorney then declared he would lay the foundation, and he proceeded to interrogate the witness as to his competency. The hypothetical question was then repeated, and it was objected to by defendant's counsel as "incompetent and irrelevant, no foundation being laid for the testimony." The objection was overruled and an exception taken. The answer of the witness to the question was, "No, sir; he did not." The Supreme Court, in discussing the matter, said: "It appears quite clear, therefore, that the only question upon which the court was asked to pass was, whether the witness had not sufficient experience in such matters to enable him to speak as an expert—to give his opinion—not whether the opinion, if given, was competent evidence. The objection made was not specific, if the point now urged was the one which counsel desired the court to pass upon at the trial." The above question addressed to Dr. Carpenter was of the gravest importance and clearly called for incompetent testimony; and his answer may have caused the conviction of the defendant, and it is apparent that if the proper objection had been made, in case of an adverse ruling below, the defendant would have secured a reversal in the appellate court. Here it could be demonstrated that the objectionable words, assuming them to be objectionable, could not have prejudiced the defendant. But we uphold the order of the court upon the ground that, in view of the particular objection made, the ruling was undoubtedly sound.

It is urged that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "You are instructed that each and every fact and circumstance relied upon by the prosecution to establish the guilt of the defendant must be proved by the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt, and, if the jury are not satisfied beyond all reasonable doubts that each such fact and circumstance has been proven, it is your duty to find a verdict of not guilty." The suggestion made in reference to this instruction seems exceedingly hypercritical and destitute of any merit. It would be unreasonable to hold that to the average mind the language used could mean anything more or less than that the burden is upon the prosecution to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the crime charged against the defendant, and that, if any fact or circumstance necessary to constitute such crime is not so established, the defendant must be acquitted. The only other inference likely to be drawn is that the burden is upon the people to prove all the facts and circumstances which the prosecution has introduced in evidence, whether material or not, to establish the crime. This, it is needless to say, is stating the law more favorably to defendant than he has a right to demand. But if we concede that the instruction, standing apart, might be deemed somewhat obscure, no such imputation can be made when we consider it in connection with the other instructions given by the court wherein the people's duty to prove beyond a reasonable doubt all the elements of the crime charged was clearly set forth.

Appellant also assails the following portion of one of the instructions given: "This presumption of innocence attaches to every stage of the case and to every fact essential to a conviction and remains with the defendant throughout the trial until the contrary is established by proof beyond a reasonable doubt." The contention is made that the presumption of innocence remains with the defendant until a verdict is rendered, and not simply "until the contrary is established by proof beyond a reasonable doubt." In People v. Arlington, 131 Cal. 235, 63 Pac. 347, 349, a similar instruction was upheld by the Supreme Court in the following language: "The court told the jury that 'it is a presumption that abides with him throughout the trial of the case,' and we do not think the language 'until the evidence convinces you to the contrary beyond all reasonable doubt' conveyed the impression that the presumption ceased to operate at the close of the evidence of the prosecution or at any time before the jury had finally determined upon a verdict. The court meant, and, we think, must have been by the jury understood to mean, that the presumption remained to the last with defendant and until in their deliberations upon the evidence they became convinced of his guilt." That decision is controlling here. But, again, appellant cannot complain of the instruction because he requested the court to so instruct the jury, as shown in the transcript. The court instructed the jury in the identical language requested by appellant. It needs no citation of authorities under such circumstances to show that appellant cannot complain, even granting that the instruction fails to state the law correctly.

The only other point made is that the court erred in refusing to give all of a certain instruction requested by defendant. The part eliminated reads as follows: "And you are further instructed that the law presumes that if the defendant was an officer and acting as such at the time of the alleged homicide that he was doing his duty." Appellant seeks to justify his contention by citing subdivision 15 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that it is presumed "that official duty has been regularly performed"; but the proposed instruction goes far beyond the presumption of the regular performance of official duty. It conveys the suggestion that, if the defendant was an officer, he had a right to kill the deceased. Peace officers are justly invested, under our law, with considerable discretion and power, but it could hardly be contended seriously that a homicide committed by one is presumed to be justifiable simply because of his official position. At best, the instruction was obscure and misleading. As far as is inferentially contained a correct legal principle it was covered by instructions given. Besides, it does not appear that it was requested by appellant.

We have examined with anxious care all the suggestions made and authorities cited by counsel, but we find in the record no error whatever. The judgment and order are affirmed.

TRINITY COUNTY v. MENDOCINO COUNTY. (Sac. 1,504.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1907.)

1. Counties — Boundaries—Establishment—Statutes—Implied Repeal.

Pol. Code, §§ 3969–3972, provided that all common boundaries of counties not adequately marked by natural objects or legal surveys should be definitely established, either by a joint survey of the respective county surveyors or by the surveyor general. Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), authorized a commission of survey to be chosen by the boards of supervisors of the counties concerned in locating the line between Trinity, Humboldt, and Mendocino counties, the commission to appoint a surveyor, who was directed to accurately run, thoroughly mark, and place monuments on the line between such counties, previously declared to be the fortieth parallel of north latitude and declared that the line so run should be the boundary line between the counties. Held, that such act was not so inconsistent or repugnant to the sections of the Political Code that either would repeal the other by implication.

2. Same.

The Legislature, after having provided by Pol. Code, §§ 3969–3972, that any county lines not adequately marked should be run and marked by the surveyor general, was still authorized to enact a special law (Act March 30, 1872; St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), for the survey of a line dividing particular counties, and declaring that the line so surveyed should be conclusive until the Legislature should change the line or order another survey.

3. Same—Legal Boundary.

A survey under such special act was a legal survey.

4. Same—Statutes—Special and General Laws—Date of Enactment.

Sp. Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), providing for the establishment of a boundary line between certain counties, having gone into effect subsequent to Pol. Code, §§ 3969–3972, providing generally for the establishment of county boundaries not adequately marked, the special act would prevail over the Code provisions in case of inconsistency.

5. Same—Special Act—Repeal by General Law.

Sp. Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), providing for the survey and establishment of a boundary line, between certain counties, was not repealed by Pol. Code, §§ 3969–3972, a general law, which took effect after the passage of the special act and provided generally for the establishment of county boundaries not adequately marked.

6. Constitutional Law—Legislative Power—Delegation.

Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), providing for the establishment of a boundary line between certain counties, section 10 (page 767) of which declares that the line, when run, marked, and defined, should be the true boundary line between the counties, was not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power to establish a boundary line to a ministerial or executive officer, to wit, the surveyor appointed to run and mark the line.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 110.]

7. Counties — Boundaries—Establishment—Statutes—Construction.

Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), provided for a commission to appoint a surveyor to run and mark the boundary line between certain counties previously fixed as the fortieth parallel of north latitude. The surveyor was required to "accurately run" and thoroughly mark the line, and the act declared that the line so run, marked, and defined should be the boundary line between the counties. Held, that the words "accurately run" were directory only, and that the line surveyed and marked constituted the legal boundary between the counties, though it did not in fact accurately coincide with the fortieth parallel of north latitude.

8. Same—Subsequent Survey.

Where a boundary line between certain counties was run by a surveyor and established in accordance with Sp. Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), providing for the establishment of such line, there was neither necessity nor authority for a resurvey of the line by the surveyor general, as provided by Pol. Code, § 3969, authorizing resurvey of inadequately marked lines between counties, unless the monuments of the line run under the special act had been displaced or destroyed, so that the line was no longer adequately marked.

9. Same — Statutes—Re-Enactment — Appeal.

The acts of 1851 and 1853 fixed the fortieth parallel of north latitude as the dividing line between certain counties, and Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), provided for a commission and the appointment of a surveyor to run, mark, and place monuments on such line, declaring that the line, when marked, should constitute the dividing line between the counties. Held, that Pol. Code, §§ 3914, 3918, 3919, declaring that the fortieth parallel of north latitude should be the common boundary between such counties, constituted merely a re-enactment and codification of the prior laws, and did not, therefore, repeal by implication the act of March 30, 1872, nor nullify the line run and marked thereunder as the boundary line between the counties.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County, J. F. Ellison, Judge.

Suit by Trinity county to enjoin Mendocino County from further claiming certain territory pursuant to a dispute with reference to the boundary line between such counties. From a judgment in favor of complainant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. R. Girven, Dist. Atty., and D. J. Hall, for appellant.

SHAW, J. By the acts of 1851 and 1853 the fortieth parallel of north latitude was made the dividing line between the counties of Trinity, Humboldt, and Mendocino, and constituted the north line of Mendocino and the south line of Trinity and Humboldt. The line was not well defined or marked on the ground, and the Legislature, by the act of March 30, 1872 (St. 1871–72, p. 766, c. 531), provided for a commission of survey to be chosen by the boards of supervisors of the counties concerned, and authorized such commission to appoint a surveyor, who was directed thereupon to "accurately run, thoroughly mark, and place monuments on the line between" the respective counties. The commission appointed and employed one W. H. Fauntleroy, a surveyor, to survey and mark the line. He proceeded to make the survey and place the monuments as required by the act, completing and filing the same in the respective counties on October 30, 1872. Section 10 (page 767) of the act provided that "the lines run out, marked and defined as required by this act are hereby declared to be the true boundary lines of the counties named herein." Doubts appear to have arisen in regard to the accuracy of Fauntleroy's survey and location on the ground of the fortieth parallel, constituting the boundary between Trinity and Mendocino counties. In 1891 the board of supervisors of Mendocino county, proceeding under section 3969 of the Political Code, requested the surveyor general of the state to survey and establish the line between the two counties. Upon this request, and under the supposed authority of the Code, the surveyor general appointed Sam H. Rice, a surveyor, to survey and mark the line. This Rice proceeded to do, and the survey by him was completed and approved by the Attorney General on December 18, 1891. Both Rice and Fauntleroy undertook to locate the true position on the ground of said fortieth parallel of north latitude. It so happened, however, that the line thereof, as established by Rice, is located parallel to the line established by Fauntleroy and about 2 miles north thereof, thus leaving a strip about 2 miles in width and some 31 miles long between the two lines. Since that time each of these counties has claimed this strip of land as part of its territory, and both have attempted to exercise jurisdiction over and to levy and collect taxes on the property situated thereon. This action was begun by Trinity county to enjoin the county of Mendocino from further claiming this territory, or from exercising, or attempting to exercise, sovereignty over it. Findings and judgment were given in the lower court in favor of Trinity county. The defendant appeals.

The court below, in its findings, declared that the line established by Rice is in fact on the fortieth parallel of north latitude, and that the line established by Fauntleroy is in fact nearly two miles south of said parallel. The judgment was given for the plaintiff upon the theory that the Fauntleroy survey established the situation of the county boundary, regardless of the fact that it did not correctly locate the position of the said north parallel. By virtue of the special act of March 22, 1872, which took effect at its passage, all of title 1, part 4, of the Political Code, including sections 3969 to 3972, took effect on May 1, 1872. These sections provide that all common boundaries of counties not adequately marked by natural objects or legal surveys were to be definitely established, either by a joint survey of the respective county surveyors, or by the surveyor general. If these sections had been the only law applicable to these counties at the time of the Fauntleroy survey in October, 1872, that survey would have been unauthorized and void. But the act of March 30, 1872, also took effect upon its passage. It was not necessarily so inconsistent or repugnant to the sections above cited that either would by implication repeal the other. The state may provide for as many surveys of county boundaries as the Legislature may deem best. After having provided in these sections that any county lines not adequately marked should be run and marked by the surveyor general, it was still in the power of the Legislature to enact a special law for the survey of any particular county lines, and make it conclusive until it should itself change the lines, or order another survey. A survey under such a special act would be a legal survey. The act of March 30th was a special act for the survey of the common lines of these particular counties, and the Fauntleroy survey made under it in October, 1872, was a legal survey, even if the provisions of section 3969 were also in force at the time. There was at that time no constitutional objection to a special law on the subject. Even if the act of March 30, 1872, was inconsistent with section 3969 in this respect, it would not be the Code, but the special act which would prevail. This is evident from the dates of the respective acts and the rule of law on the subject. The Code was passed March 12, 1872, and is to be considered as if passed December 4, 1871. Pol. Code, § 4478. The act putting these parts of it in force on May 1st, was enacted on March 22, 1872. The special act of March 30, 1872, being the later enactment, would prevail over the Code. Where two inconsistent laws are enacted at the same session of the Legislature, the one last adopted prevails. Ex parte Sohncke, 148 Cal. 262, 82 Pac. 956, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813; Estate of Wixom, 35 Cal. 320; People v. Phœnix, 6 Cal. 93; People v. Dobbins, 73 Cal. 259, 14 Pac. 860; Smith v. McDermott, 93 Cal. 424, 29 Pac. 34; Davis v. Whidden, 117 Cal. 622, 49 Pac. 766; Mariposa Co. v. Madera Co., 142 Cal. 55, 75 Pac. 572; State v. Halliday, 63 Ohio St. 165, 57 N. E. 1097; 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 736. Furthermore, as it is a special law relating to one of a particular class of subjects, according to the rule of statutory construction in such cases, it would not be repealed by a general law subsequently passed embracing the entire class of subjects, including that treated in the special law. Sutherland on Stat. (1st Ed.) §§ 157, 158; People v. Quigg, 59 N. Y. 88; Anderson v. Hill, 42 N. J. Law, 351; Vail v. Easton, 44 N. J. Law, 239; State v. Mills, 34 N. J. Law, 180; People v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 88; Crane v. Reeder, 22 Mich. 322; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 191.

It is claimed by appellant that section 10 of the act of March 30, 1872, declaring that the line to be run by the surveyor selected in accordance with its provisions, when it was so run, marked, and defined, should be the true boundary line of the counties, is unconstitutional. It is said that the act delegates to the surveyor the power to fix the limits of the territory of the respective counties, that this is a legislative act which cannot be delegated by the Legislature to a ministerial or executive officer, such as a surveyor, and hence that it is contrary to the provision of section 1 of article 3 of the Constitution of 1849, to the effect that the powers of one department of the state cannot be conferred upon another department. We cannot agree to this view. The Legislature had established the boundary of the respective counties, and had declared that the fortieth parallel of north latitude is the line which separates them. That line was not marked on the ground, so that its position could be known to the citizens and parties interested, nor was its precise location ascertained. It was deemed necessary that it should be so located and marked. The Legislature could not itself, go into the field and survey and mark the line. Nor is the process of surveying and marking a line a legislative function. It is purely ministerial in character. Holley v. Orange Co., 106 Cal. 424, 39 Pac. 790. It was, therefore, not only proper, but necessary, that the Legislature should provide for the employment of a surveyor to do the work.

It is conceded that if, after the survey was made, the Legislature had enacted a law providing that the line so marked should be the boundary line between the counties it would thereupon constitute such boundary, no matter how much it deviated from the true line or position of the fortieth parallel, and that, even if such subsequent act was passed in ignorance of the mistake or error in the survey, it would make no difference in this respect. But it is contended that it is not competent for the Legislature to declare, in advance of the work, that the line which might be surveyed and marked by the surveyor should be the true line. We can see no essential difference between the two propositions, so far as the mere matter of legislative power is concerned. The rule in regard to such legislation is thus stated by the authorities: "The Legislature cannot delegate the power to make laws, but it can delegate the power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend." Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 722; State v. Thompson, 160 Mo. 333, 60 S. W. 1077, 54 L. R. A. 950, 83 Am. St. Rep. 468; Boyd v. Bryant, 35 Ark. 69, 37 Am. Rep. 6; Pueblo Co. v. Smith, 22 Colo. 534, 45 Pac. 360, 362, 33 L. R. A. 465; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529; 8 Cyc. 830; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. 1029, 1032. The case is similar in principle to those cases where it is held it is not a delegation of legislative power to commit to some officer, person, or board the power to determine the fact that an applicant for some license or privilege is or is not of good character, or possesses or does not possess some other qualification necessary to entitle him, under the law, to the license or privilege, and empowering such officer, person, or board, if it shall determine that such person has the necessary qualifications, to forthwith issue the license. In such cases the law declares that a certain class of persons are entitled to the license. The determination of the fact that a particular applicant is of the class described in the law as so entitled is not a legislative act, but one which is either ministerial or judicial, and hence to commit the power to make such determination to any other person or body is not a delegation of legislative power. The cases above cited are chiefly of this class. Here, the Legislature having declared that the county boundary should be the fortieth parallel, it further provided that its location should be established by a surveyor and marked accordingly, and that the line so fixed and marked should be the true boundary. The surveyor was directed to ascertain the position of that parallel on the ground in accordance with the rules of his science and by means of the instruments of his profession. The exact position was presumably unknown. Perhaps it may be said that it cannot, by human means, be ascertained with absolute certainty. It was therefore competent for the Legislature to settle all controversy over the question by providing for a survey and declaring in advance that the line as surveyed should be the true boundary line. It cannot be conceded that the Legislature cannot delegate the power to determine contrary to the fact. The power to decide necessarily includes the power to decide erroneously; but the fact, once decided, whether true or false, is nevertheless effective for its purpose.

The act provided that the surveyor, when employed, should "accurately run" the line of the fortieth parallel. It is contended that the effect of this language is that if he ran it inaccurately his survey would be void; that the words quoted were a limitation upon his power, such that he could make no legal survey unless it was absolutely correct. We deem the language quoted directory only. This is made sufficiently clear by section 10 above quoted. That section manifestly was made in view of the contingency that the survey might not be absolutely correct, and its purpose and effect was that, whether correct or not, the line surveyed and marked should thereupon be the true line. The construction contended for would leave the county lines always subject to change and uncertainty; for if the line must be absolutely accurate in order to be valid, if the true line of that parallel and not any particular surveyed line thereof is to be the true county line, it would be subject to relocation and change whenever new discoveries, more accurate instruments, or more careful surveys should demonstrate that the previously surveyed line was incorrectly located on the ground. If the true line of the parallel, and no other, was to be the lawful line, the surveying and marking of any line would accomplish nothing. It would, indeed, indicate the place where the particular surveyor ascertained and believed the position of the true line to be; but such location would be merely tentative, and subject always, whenever the location of the line was in issue, to dispute upon the claim that it was not the true line, and to prove which might show it to be false, and there would be no remedy, except by legislative act. The matter of establishing a county boundary is for the Legislature. If it has declared that the true line of the parallel is the line, the courts cannot declare any other line to be the boundary, in the absence of legislative authority to so declare. The court can declare and construe the law on the subject, but it cannot declare and establish the fact that the parallel is situated elsewhere than in its true location; and, if that location is to be the sole criterion, the court's decree must be as much subject to such inquiry and dispute as the survey of any surveyor. It is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended to reduce the proposed survey and location of such a mere idle ceremony.

It is said that under this theory of the law the surveyor might arbitrarily locate the line 10, 15, or even 50 miles from the true line. There is no charge that the surveyor fraudulently located the line. What the effect would be if he did act fraudulently we need not decide. But, so far as mere inaccuracy is concerned, it seems clear that it would not affect the question. In any event, the location of the county lines is a political question, to be settled by the legislative power of the state, and subject to change from time to time as the legislative power may direct. If the line as fixed in accordance with its directions is inaccurately located by the person whom it has directed to make the survey and place the marks, the correction of the error lies with the Legislature, and not with the courts, unless it has provided that the courts shall determine the true location, which it has not done. The finding of the court is that the common boundary line between Mendocino and Trinity counties was, and ever since the Fauntleroy survey has been, adequately marked by monuments, lines, and surveys lawfully made. Such being the fact, there was no necessity or authority for a resurvey by the surveyor general, under section 3969 of the Political Code, unless it appeared that the monuments of the Fauntleroy survey had been displaced or destroyed, so that this line was no longer adequately marked. In that event the surveyor general could be called upon to resurvey and mark the line under the provisions of the Political Code above cited; but, if he should be called upon to make such survey, it would be the Fauntleroy line which he must survey and mark, and not the actual position of the fortieth parallel of north latitude.

It is entirely immaterial whether there was, or was not, a dispute concerning the location of the line when the act of March 30, 1872, was passed and the survey made thereunder. The matter was within the power of the Legislature, regardless of the existence of any such controversy. The surveyor was to locate the line; but, if by error he did not truly locate it, nevertheless the line he marked was to be the dividing line, and his act was made binding upon the respective counties and all citizens and inhabitants of the state, the Legislature alone having power to correct or change it. The rules regarding surveys of disputed boundary lines between coterminous owners of land have no application to this case. The sections of the Political Code, declaring that the fortieth parallel of north latitude should be the common boundary, did not, when they took effect on May 1st, work any change or in any way affect the act of March 30, 1872. The same parallel had been previously fixed by law as the boundary, and the act is to be construed merely as a re-enactment and codification of the previous law on the subject, and not as a new enactment, and therefore it does not operate as a repeal by implication of the act of March 30, 1872, declaring that the Fauntleroy line, when fixed, should be the true line. Swem v. Monroe, 148 Cal. 741, 83 Pac. 1074. The survey of Fauntleroy had fixed, for all legal purposes, the position of the county line, and section 10 of the act in effect declared that this line was for that purpose, in contemplation of law, the fortieth parallel of north latitude.

The judgment is affirmed.

BECKER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(S. F. 4,644.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1907.)

1. Courts—Procedure—Propriety of Overruling Prior Decisions.

Where no property rights could have grown up on the faith of a former decision announcing an erroneous doctrine, there is no impropriety in establishing the correct rule of law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Courts, § 311.]

2. Equity—Jurisdiction—Retention of Jurisdiction Acquired—Denial of Equitable Relief—Foreclosure of Lien—Personal Judgment.

In an action to recover a money judgment, and to establish a mechanic's lien, though the lien fails and the amount claimed is not in itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction, in the absence of fraud the court may render a personal judgment for the amount due, since legal and equitable remedies may be pursued and granted in the same action, and the court having jurisdiction of the cause as originally presented has jurisdiction to grant the proper relief.

In Bank. Certiorari by A. Becker and another against the superior court of Santa Clara county, Cal., and Hon. A. L. Rhodes, judge thereof, to review a judgment. Writ dismissed.

Will M. Beggs, for petitioners. Jackson Hatch, for defendants.

SLOSS, J. A writ of certiorari was issued to review a judgment of the superior court of the county of Santa Clara. It appears that the Glenwood Lumber Company, a corporation, on the 10th day of November, 1904, filed in said superior court of Santa Clara county a complaint against Frances L. Mason, A. Becker, and James H. Tooze, as defendants, to recover $81.23 claimed to be due from Becker and Tooze for lumber furnished to and used by them in the construction of a building which, as contractors, they erected for Frances J. Mason, as owner, and to foreclose a mechanic's lien of said Glenwood Lumber Company upon said building. The complaint was in proper form, and its allegations, if proven, would have entitled the plaintiff to the relief claimed. The defendants answered, denying some of the allegations of the complaint. At the conclusion of the trial a nonsuit was granted as to defendant Mason upon the ground that the claim of lien filed by the plaintiff did not truly state the terms of the contract between said plaintiff and Becker and Tooze, in that the time of payment for the lumber was not correctly stated. The court, however, filed findings of fact, in which it found that the claim of the lien truly and correctly stated plaintiff's demands against Becker and Tooze in all other respects, and that Becker and Tooze were indebted to plaintiff for materials furnished in the sum of $81.23. Upon these findings judgment went in favor of plaintiff against said defendants for such sum, together with interest and costs.

It is this judgment that the petitioners herein, defendants in the former suit, seek to annul. Certain preliminary objections are made by the respondent to the consideration of the writ. These are based upon the failure to serve the petition upon the real party in interest and upon the delay in seeking this relief. The conclusion we have reached upon the merits makes it unnecessary to consider these preliminary points.

The petitioner contends that, since the amount of the plaintiff's claim in the action of the Glenwood Lumber Company v. Mason et al. was less than $300, the jurisdiction of the superior court to entertain the action depended entirely upon the fact that the foreclosure of a lien was sought, thus making the action one of equitable cognizance; that, when the plaintiffs failed to establish their right to the foreclosure, the equitable character of the action was lost, and it became a simple action at law for the recovery of money, and, the amount sought to be recovered being less than $300, the superior court was without jurisdiction. This contention finds support in a decision of a department of this court in Miller v. Carlisle, 127 Cal. 327, 59 Pac. 785. Five plaintiffs had there united to enforce alleged liens for labor done by them upon certain mining ground. The court made findings declaring that "the liens of plaintiffs do not attach to said land," and that there was due to the plaintiffs from the defendants personally the several sums demanded, each of which was less than $300. Judgment against said defendants for such sums was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendant Carlisle appealed from an order denying his motion for a new trial. This order was reversed upon the ground taken by the petitioner here; the court holding that, where "the lien fails and the court can administer no equitable relief whatever, it must logically follow that the residue of the action—a dispute concerning money less than three hundred dollars in amount—can no longer engage the attention of the court." If this case correctly states the law, the judgment rendered by the superior court of Santa Clara county in favor of the Glenwood Lumber Company against Becker and Tooze was beyond the jurisdiction of that court and void; but we think that the rule declared in Miller v. Carlisle was based upon an insufficient consideration of the true basis of the jurisdiction of the superior court. As we are not confronted by a situation in which property rights can have grown up on the faith of the decision, there can be no impropriety in now correcting the error, if error was committed. And there is the more justification for reconsidering the doctine declared in Miller v. Carlisle, since it appears from the opinion in that case that the department in reaching its conclusion was not aided by any argument or presentation of authorities on behalf of the respondents who were relying upon the judgment there declared to be void. See page 329 of 127 Cal., page 785 of 59 Pac.

There can be no doubt that upon the filing of the complaint, setting forth a cause of action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, the superior court was invested with jurisdiction of the cause a suit for such foreclosure being a suit in equity. Curnow v. Blue Gravel Co., 68 Cal. 262, 9 Pac. 149; Brock v. Bruce, 5 Cal. 279. And the court, having jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause so presented, had jurisdiction to grant the relief demanded in whole, or to refuse it in whole, or to grant it in part or refuse it in part. Whatever action it took, whether rightly or erroneously, was in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon it. It has frequently been held that, when a court of equity once obtains jurisdiction of a case, it will decide the whole case as between the parties, and not leave any part of it for future litigation. Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 528, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64; Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 76, 58 Pac. 376. The test of the jurisdiction of a court is ordinarily to be found in the nature of the case made by the complaint and the relief sought. The fact that the plaintiff does not succeed in establishing all that he claims does not oust the court of its jurisdiction to give judgment for so much as is established.

It is unquestioned that in an ordinary action at law where the jurisdiction of the superior court depends upon the amount of the "demand," the court may, where more than $300 is demanded in the complaint, render judgment for less. Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 653; Greenbaum v. Martinez, 86 Cal. 459, 25 Pac. 12; Rodley v. Curry, 120 Cal. 541, 52 Pac. 999. The same result was reached under the former Constitution, giving the district courts jurisdiction in cases "where the amount in dispute exceeds two hundred dollars." Jackson v. Whartenby, 5 Cal. 94. And in other states it is the general rule that the jurisdiction, under similar constitutional or statutory provisions, is to be determined by the amount claimed by the plaintiff without regard to the amount found due. 9 Cyc. 775, and cases cited. Again, the superior court has, under the Constitution, jurisdiction in "all criminal cases amounting to felony." Yet a defendant may be convicted in the superior court of a lesser offense, if he was charged with felony which included the lesser offense. Ex parte Donahue, 65 Cal. 474, 4 Pac. 449. We see no reason why the same rule should not apply where the jurisdiction of the superior court attaches by reason of the case being one in equity. The nature of the action as an equitable one is fixed by the allegations of the complaint. The fact that the plaintiff fails to establish all of his claims does not change the nature of the action. In the opinion in Miller v. Carlisle the court cites several cases in which it was held that in a suit to foreclose a mortgage made to secure a promissory note, where the proof at the trial showed that the mortgage was invalid, the court sitting in equity had no power to render judgment for the sum due on the note, and should dismiss the bill without prejudice. Dowell v. Mitchell, 105 U. S. 430, 26 L. Ed. 1142; Cramer v. Cohn, 119 U. S. 355, 7 Sup. Ct. 277, 30 L. Ed. 439; Rose v. West, 50 Ga. 474; Gamage v. Harris, 79 Me. 531, 11 Atl. 422. But these cases all arose in jurisdictions where equitable and legal remedies were not administered in the same tribunal, and in such jurisdictions legal and equitable claims cannot be blended together in one suit. Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 512, 13 Sup. Ct. 148, 36 L. Ed. 1059.

In this state, on the contrary, legal and equitable remedies may be pursued and granted in the same tribunal, and in a single action (White v. Lyons, 42 Cal. 279), and the fact that the equitable relief is not obtained furnishes no reason in itself for the refusal of legal relief in the same action. As was pointed out in Miller v. Carlisle, "it is nothing uncommon to render judgment for money due to the lien claimant from a defendant personally liable to him, although the lien itself fails of enforcement." Kennedy-Shaw Lumber Co. v. Priet, 113 Cal. 291, 45 Pac. 336; Lacore v. Leonard, 45 Cal. 394. If the views hereinbefore expressed be correct, the fact that the amount claimed is less than $300 does not affect the power of the court to grant this relief. The jurisdiction in all such cases rests, not upon the amount claimed, but upon the fact that the suit is one to foreclose a mechanic's lien, and is therefore a suit in equity within the meaning of the Constitution.

It may be remarked that we are not dealing with the question whether jurisdiction can be fraudulently conferred upon the superior court by the assertion in bad faith of an unfounded claim. We have no doubt that an action at law in which the actual demand amounts to less than $300 cannot be brought and retained within the jurisdiction of the superior court by adding a fictitious claim for a larger sum, or by making a fictitious showing as a basis for a purported prayer for equitable relief. But no such question is presented here. There is nothing to indicate that the Glenwood Lumber Company was not seeking, in good faith, to foreclose a lien claimed by it. It follows that the lower court must be held to have acted within its jurisdiction in rendering the judgment complained of.

The writ is dismissed.

GRAY v. LAWLOR. (S. F. 3,916.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—VACATING JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—EXCUSES FOR DEFAULT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, provides that, when the summons has not been personally served on defendant, the court may allow him at any time within one year after the rendition of judgment to answer to the merits. Held, that a defendant served by publication need not present any excuse for his failure to appear, except the fact that he was not personally served with the summons; but, if there is any neglect on his part which would make it inequitable to grant him the relief, proof of that fact must come from the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 253.]

2. SAME—TERMS ON GRANTING APPLICATION.

The provision in Code Civ. Proc. § 473, that the court may allow a defendant not personally served to answer on the merits at any time within one year after rendition of judgment "on such terms as may be just" does not give the court power to refuse the relief when the statutory conditions are met, but merely confers the power, when it finds the defendant entitled to the relief, to consider whether he may not have been negligent in a degree not amounting to laches, and whether the plaintiff may not have incurred expenses on the faith of the judgment which the defendant should in justice refund.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 326.]

3. SAME—MERITORIOUS DEFENSE.

A defendant served by publication, moving to vacate a judgment by default and to be allowed to answer to the merits, must show that he has a good defense to the action on the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 293.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by W. W. Gray against William M. Lawlor. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying defendant's motion to vacate the judgment and allow him to answer to the merits, he appeals. Reversed.

Curtis Hillyer and H. F. Peart, for appellant. W. M. Beggs, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from the judgment, and from an order after judgment denying the defendant's motion to vacate the judgment and allow him to answer to the merits of the action.

The complaint states a good cause of action to quiet title to a tract of land, and the record shows due service of the summons by publication and a judgment regularly entered. There is no merit in the appeal from the judgment, and it need not be further considered.

The affidavit of the defendant, in support of his motion to be allowed to answer to the merits, stated that during the times mentioned in the complaint the defendant was the owner of the property, and that he had not been personally served with the summons and had no knowledge of the attempted service by publication until within two weeks next before the filing of the motion. No showing was made of mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect as preventing causes for his failure to appear before judgment. The motion was made about four months after the rendition of the judgment. The third clause of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that, "when from any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on the defendant, the court may allow, on such terms as may be just, such defendant or his legal representative, at any time within one year after the rendition of any judgment in said action, to answer to the merits of the original action." The clause preceding this applies to all parties to the action, whether plaintiff or defendant, who have been personally served with summons, or who have appeared thereto, and, in order for such party to obtain the relief there provided, he must show that he failed to make his claim or defense through "his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." No such showing is required in the case of a defendant served by publication only. This difference in the requirements shows the different scope and purpose of the respective provisions. Under the latter clause the defendant need not present any excuse for his failure to appear, except the fact that he was not personally served with the summons. It is manifest that in the majority of cases it would be utterly futile to require any further showing, for he would be ignorant of the entire proceeding, so far as any actual notice is concerned. Accordingly it is said that "there is no presumption against him of lack of diligence in interposing his defense, as in a case where he was personally served." Frankoviz v. Ireland, 35 Minn. 278, 28 N. W. 508. This is the key to the different effect of the two clauses. In the case where he is personally served, if he fails to appear in due time through mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, when, in fact, he had a good defense, he is required to set forth in his application for relief the circumstances which caused his lack of diligence. Where he has had no personal service, there is, with respect to his right to relief in such cases, no presumption of knowledge, or of inexcusable negligence, on his part, and he is only required to show the lack of personal service. If there was any neglect on his part to the injury of the opposite party, which would make it inequitable to grant him the relief, proof of such neglect and of the circumstances causing injury must come from the plaintiff.

The authorities are uniform to the same effect. With respect to this class of cases, Mr. Freeman says: "On complying with the conditions of the statute, the moving party secures an absolute right to have the judgment opened, which the court has no discretion to deny." 1 Freem. Judgts. (4th Ed.) § 105, p. 154. In Frankoviz v. Ireland, supra, it is further said that the defendant "is not required, at least in the first instance, to show that he had not actual notice of the action in season to interpose his defense within the ordinary time." The Minnesota statute is substantially the same as our own. Section 125, c. 66, Gen. St. 1878 (Gen. St. 1894, § 5267), provides for relief where there is personal service. Section 66 provides that, where there is no personal service of the summons, "on application and sufficient cause shown," the defendant "may * * * be allowed to defend after judgment, and within one year after the rendition of such judgment, on such terms as may be just." In Washburn v. Sharpe, 15 Minn. 63 (Gil. 43), and Frankoviz v. Ireland, supra, there was some intimation, not necessary to the decisions, that the court had some discretion to refuse such applications. In Lord v. Hawkins, 39 Minn. 73, 38 N. W. 690, these cases were overruled on this point, and the court said: "It was assumed [in the above cases] that the application is addressed to the discretion of the court. Upon a more careful examination and comparison of the two sections, we are satisfied that herein lies the chief difference between them. The latter section (125) provides that the court may, in its discretion, grant the relief, the other, that the defendan, on application and good cause shown, before judgment, shall be allowed to defend, and may in like manner be allowed to defend after judgment. The section does not—certainly not in terms—leave it to the discretion of the court. A good defense to the action must certainly be considered 'good cause shown.' The construction we place on section 66 is that it provides to the defendant who comes within its terms, and who shows that he has a good defense, and who has not lost his right by laches, an opportunity to defend as a matter of right, and not of discretion." This case was approved in Boeing v. McKinley, 44 Minn. 392, 46 N. W. 767, and in Bausman v. Tilley, 46 Minn. 66, 48 N. W. 459. The same doctrine has been declared in Savage v. Aiken, 14 Neb. 315, 15 N. W. 693; Albright v. Warkintin, 31 Kan. 442, 2 Pac. 614; Kinney v. O'Bannon, 6 Bush (Ky.) 692; McLean v. McLean, 84 N. C. 366; Satterlee v. Grubb, 38 Kan. 234, 16 Pac. 475; Brown v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 277, 6 S. W. 869, 7 S. W. 640; Snow v. Hawpe, 22 Tex. 168; Lyon v. Robbins, 46 Ill. 276. In all the states, except Minnesota, the statutes differ from ours, in that they omit the phrase "on such terms as may be just." This does not change the effect of those statutes in the particular here under consideration. The effect of that qualifying phrase in our statute is not to give the court power or discretion to refuse the relief when the statutory conditions, expressed and implied, are met, but merely confers upon it the power, when it finds the defendant entitled to the relief, to consider whether or not the defendant may not have been negligent, in a degree not amounting to laches or creating an estoppel, and whether or not the plaintiff, or his successor, may not have innocently, on the faith of the judgment, incurred costs or expenses which the defendant in justice should refund, and to impose on the defendant such terms as may be necessary to do complete justice between the parties, or to fix the time for filing the answer and limit and define its character so that it shall be addressed to the merits. See 15 Ency. Plead. & Prac. pp. 290, 291.

From the fact that the relief to be afforded is the privilege of answering "to the merits of the original action," the condition is implied that the defendant must have a sufficient answer to present; that is, he must have a good defense to the action on the merits. This being one of the conditions of the statute, the defendant must show that such defense exists. The defendant in this case has complied with this rule. He avers in his affidavit that he is now, and at all times mentioned and for more than 10 years last past has been, the owner of, and entitled to the possession of, the property described in the complaint. This, if true, is a complete defense to the cause of action sued on.

There do not appear to have been any circumstances which would constitute laches on the part of the defendant, or which would create an estoppel against him. It is not shown that he had any personal knowledge of the pendency of the action, nor that the plaintiff has suffered or will suffer any injury from the vacation of the judgment, other than that of being compelled to meet the defense that may be made. The defendant states that he had no knowledge of the attempt to serve the summons upon him until a few weeks before instituting proceedings on his motion for relief.

The order is reversed. The court below is directed to set aside the default and judgment and allow the defendant to answer to the merits of the original action, on such terms as may be just. If no further proceedings are had in furtherance of the motion, the judgment will stand affirmed.

HENSHALL v. MARSH et al. (Sac. 1,426.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1907.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—SCHOOL LANDS—APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE—PURPOSE OF APPLICANT.

An agreement by an applicant for the purchase of school lands to pay one for services in attending to the matter in the land office, payment to be made on the land being sold, does not show that the applicant did not apply to purchase the land for her own use and benefit, within Pol. Code, § 3495, requiring an applicant for the purchase of school lands to aver in his affidavit that he desires to purchase for his own use and benefit.

2. SAME.

An arrangement between an applicant for the purchase of school lands and another for the borrowing by the applicant of sufficient money to make payment for the land, to be repaid on a sale of the land or to be secured by a mortgage after obtaining the certificate of purchase, constitutes simply a loan, and does not give the lender an interest in the land, and does not show that the applicant did not desire to purchase the same for her own use and benefit, within Pol. Code, § 3495.

3. EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

The inference that an applicant for the purchase of school lands proceeded in good faith to acquire the land in compliance with the law should be indulged in, rather than that he was proceeding fraudulently and by perjury to acquire title to it.

4. PUBLIC LANDS—SCHOOL LANDS—PURCHASE—VALIDITY.

Under Pol. Code, § 3495, providing that an applicant for the purchase of school lands must state in his affidavit that "he desires to purchase the same for his own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person, * * * and that he has made no contract or agreement to sell the same," when considered in connection with section 3515, providing that certificates of purchase may be sold by deed or assignment, as well as independent thereof, an applicant for the purchase of school lands may at the time of making the application contemplate the sale of it for a profit at any time after obtaining the certificate of purchase therefor.

5. SAME—APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

An affidavit by a female applicant for the purchase of school lands, which avers that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name, is not void under Pol. Code, § 3496, declaring that, where the applicant is a female, the affidavit must "show" that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name, where on a contest for the land it appears that she is unmarried.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; C. E. McLaughlin, Judge.

Action by Richard P. Henshall against Corinne Anna Marsh and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Towle & Henshall and James W. Cochrane, for appellant. A. E. Bolton, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action involves conflicting applications to purchase from the state a section of school land in Plumas county, and was brought upon a reference made to the superior court of said county by the surveyor general of the state under section 3414 of the Political Code. Upon the trial the superior court found, among other facts not involved on this appeal, that on April 15, 1902, the defendant Corinne A. Marsh made, and on April 16, 1902, filed in the land office of the surveyor general of the state, an affidavit and application to purchase the land in question, the affidavit, among other things, stating that she was over the age of 21 years, a native-born citizen of the United States, and for over 15 years a resident of the state of California; that she desired to purchase the land described in said affidavit for her own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever, and that she had made no contract or agreement to sell the same; that said land was not suitable for cultivation and was timbered land. The court found that these facts, set forth in her affidavit, were true, and particularly that at the time said defendant Marsh filed on said land she desired to purchase the same for her own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever; nor had she made any contract or agreement to sell the same. In addition it was found that on August 23, 1902, her application to purchase was approved by the state surveyor general, and on August 28, 1902, she presented a copy of such approval to the county treasurer of Plumas county, paid him the amount due for said land and the amount required for a certificate of purchase; that on September 2, 1902, the registrar of the state land office issued to her a certificate of purchase, and on the following day she sold and transferred by deed, for a valuable consideration, her certificate of purchase and all her rights thereunder to the defendant Thomas B. Walker; that thereafter, and on August 29, 1903, plaintiff filed his affidavit and application with the surveyor general to purchase the same land from the state, together with a protest against the application by the defendant Marsh, which resulted in the reference for trial to the said court. As conclusions of law the court found against the right of plaintiff, and in favor of the right of the defendant Marsh, to purchase the land in question; that the certificate of purchase issued to her was valid, and that the defendant Walker as the purchaser thereof from her was entitled to a patent for the land. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appeals therefrom; his appeal being accompanied by a bill of exceptions.

The appellant attacks the principal findings in the case, and insists that the evidence, instead of supporting them, shows that the certificate of purchase issued to defendant Marsh was void, because, first, said Marsh did not apply to purchase the land for her own use and benefit, within the meaning of section 3495 of the Political Code; secondly, that her affidavit accompanying her application to purchase did not show the necessary jurisdictional facts, and therefore did not constitute a legal foundation of a right of purchase; and, lastly, that it appears from the evidence that she applied to purchase the land for the benefit of a person named N. E. Sager as well as herself.

The first and last points made by appellant are based upon the testimony of the defendant Marsh and N. E. Sager, the only witnesses in the case speaking as to the circumstances surrounding the application and purchase from the state of the land, and its sale to the defendant Walker. A reference to that testimony shows that when the defendant Marsh on April 16, 1902, applied to purchase the land, she obtained a description of it from a friend of the family, N. E. Sager. She prepared the application, and sent it to the land office herself, inclosing therewith the requisite fee of $25 from money she had saved from her earnings. She testified that she had no agreement with any one to take up the land for his use and benefit, no agreement with any one that after taking it up she should turn it over to them or dispose of it to them; that her object in seeking to purchase it was because she thought she was entitled to take it up; that she took it up for her own use and benefit, knowing that she had a right at some future time, if she saw fit, to sell it; that she took it up on what is called speculation—that is, to make what she could out of it by the sale of it—that when Mr. Sager furnished her with the description of the land, and she made her application to purchase it, nothing at all was said about selling the land to any one, or at all; that she promised to pay Mr. Sager for his services in attending to the matter, preparing and making the proofs for her, and expected to do so if she sold the land and made enough out of it; that Mr. Sager told her it would cost her $800 to purchase the land from the state, and agreed to borrow that amount for her, which he did, this advance was to be secured by a mortgage when the certificate of purchase was issued; that with this borrowed money she paid the state for the land and obtained the certificate of purchase. After the certificate was issued Mr. Sager asked her how much she was willing to take for the land, that he had found a purchaser who was willing to buy it. He did not say what he could obtain for it, but she fixed the price herself at $1,200, he to make his commission and secure payment for his services out of whatever sum he might sell the land for over $1,200. Through a Mr. Hovey, a real estate dealer, Mr. Sager sold the land to the defendant Walker. Twelve hundred dollars was paid to the defendant Marsh by Sager, out of which she repaid him the money borrowed to pay for the land, and retained the balance. The defendants Marsh and Walker were strangers to each other. No negotiations relative to this land took place between them personally. Mr. Sager was not in any way connected with or acting for the defendant Walker in the transaction. There is nothing in this evidence upon which it can effectually be insisted in this court that there was any agreement or contract between defendant Marsh and Sager whereby the latter was to acquire any interest in this land. All that the evidence shows is that Marsh was to pay Sager for his services in attending to the matter for her in the land office. Payment for these services the defendant Marsh did not expect to make, nor did Sager expect to receive, until the land was sold. The agreement to pay, then, was simply a personal obligation. It did not give Sager any interest in the land. It did not disturb her absolute control over it. She could hold or sell it just as she pleased. Their agreement did not affect the title. This was to vest absolutely in the defendant Marsh, unaffected by the claim of Sager against her for the payment for his services. Their agreement did not involve any action upon her part, or the doing of anything by her whereby any interest in the land, either directly or indirectly, should accrue or be transferred to him. He had no legal right to compel a sale of the land, and, if upon a sale she neglected to compensate him for his services, he could not, under any circumstances, assert any right against the land. The only extent to which the title to be secured by Marsh figured, relative to payment for these services, was that payment therefor was to be made to Sager when the land was sold. This merely determined the time for payment. It did not give Sager any interest directly or indirectly in the land.

In Hafemann v. Gross, 199 U. S. 342, 26 Sup. Ct. 80, 50 L. Ed. 220, an arrangement similar to the one at bar was considered by the court. A party contemplating taking up public land under the pre-emption act of the United States, which contains provisions similar to our act relative to school lands, entered into a contract with a third person whereby he agreed to give said third person one-fourth of the proceeds which he might obtain by a sale of the land, after obtaining title from the United States, in consideration of said third party locating him on land and paying one-fourth of the expenses in making his final proof. It was insisted that under this agreement the land was not to be acquired by the pre-emptor for his sole use and benefit, as the federal statute required, but operated indirectly to transfer the title in part to such third party. The court, after discussing the matter fully, holds that such contract vested no interest in the land in such party, concluding (to quote briefly what was said by the court concerning such contract) that "it was simply a promise to pay money in case of a sale by the patentee, the amount of the payment to be determined by the sum received on the sale. It was a promise which in no event could be enforced against the land. It was only a personal obligation of the patentee. It might never be enforceable against him, and could not be except upon his sale of the land. Of course, it would not be contended that a simple promise to pay money by one seeking to acquire title under a homestead was not binding, and, if the only effect of the contract is to measure the sum which the patentee agrees to pay by that which he may receive when he sells the land, it cannot be held that a contract has been made for an alienation of the title in whole or in part, or that the land was not acquired for the sole use and benefit of the patentee." Neither did the arrangement between Marsh and Sager for the borrowing of sufficient money to make payment for the land give the latter any interest in it, or constitute an agreement for an interest therein. The transaction consisted simply of a loan to be repaid on a sale of the land, or to be secured by mortgage after the certificate of purchase was obtained. It became unnecessary to mortgage because the sale was made immediately upon the issuance of the certificate and obviated it. There is no law which prevents a purchaser from the state from borrowing money with which to make payment for the land under an agreement to mortgage the land to secure its repayment after the certificate of purchase is obtained.

Appellant insists, it is true, that the court should have found as a necessary inference from all the facts surrounding the purchase by Marsh that it was for the joint benefit of herself and Sager; that the fact that Sager called her attention to the land; that she was to pay him for his services relative to it; the borrowing through or from him of the money to make payment therefor, and the sale to Walker immediately on obtaining the certificate of purchase showed by necessary inference that an agreement relative to acquiring this land for the benefit of both of them existed. But both of these persons testified positively that no arrangement existed. It was for the trial court to determine what were the facts respecting the matter, and to draw all such inferences as the evidence warranted. All these were determined in favor of the defendant Marsh. In the face of the positive statements of Marsh and Sager that no agreement existed, the court would hardly be warranted in indulging in inferences to the contrary. If their statements could be considered as equivocal, an inference against the existence of any agreement prohibited by statute, and that the defendant Marsh was proceeding in good faith to acquire this land in compliance with the law, should be indulged in, rather than that she was proceeding fraudulently and by perjury to acquire title to it, and that Sager was a party to her acts.

Coming now, however, to the main contention of appellant on this appeal: It is provided by the Political Code (section 3495), among other things, that an applicant to purchase school lands not suitable for cultivation, such as the land in question here, timber land, must state in his affidavit "that he desires to purchase the same for his own use and benefit and for the use or benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever, and that he has made no contract or agreement to sell the same." It is further provided by section 3515 of the same Code that "certificates of purchase and all rights acquired thereunder are subject to sale by deed or assignment," etc. It is claimed by appellant that one who applies to purchase school land from the state must not have in contemplation at the time of the application a sale of the land when he obtains the certificate of purchase; that, if he has, he does not come within the terms of the section as a purchaser of the land for his own use and benefit; and that, as the defendant Marsh when she applied to purchase had in contemplation a sale of the land, if she could obtain a satisfactory price therefor, as soon as she obtained the certificate, her purchase with this object in contemplation was a fraud upon the state, rendering her certificate subject to cancellation. In other words, it is contended that the purchase by the defendant Marsh was solely with a view to speculation; that is, with a view of selling it after she obtained the certificate of purchase and could obtain the price she wished. But it will be observed that the Code (section 3515) authorizes a sale of the land—a sale of the certificate of purchase which carries the applicant's rights thereto—immediately it is obtained, and we can perceive no good reason why, where the law says the land may be sold when the certificate of purchase is obtained, one may not have in mind, at the time the application to purchase is made, a purpose to do with the land in the future what the law authorizes may then be done. The Code provision does not, as does the federal statute relative to the acquisition of government lands—say timber and stone lands—require the applicant to make oath "that he does not apply to purchase the same on speculation," etc. All that the Code requires is that the applicant when he applies to purchase shall do so for "his own use and benefit, and for the use or benefit of no other person," and that "he shall have made no contract or agreement to sell the same." This does not mean that the applicant must go into possession and occupy the land, and personally devote it to the uses of which it is capable. Occupation of the land at the time one applies to purchase school land is only required when it is capable of cultivation. It does not apply when the land is timber land. The provision of the section simply means that, when one makes application to purchase, he does so with the intention and purpose of deriving whatever profit or advantage may accrue through such purchase for himself alone, as contradistinguished from a purchase for the profit and advantage of some other person. As an element entering into that benefit he may properly have in contemplation a sale of the land at a profit, sometime after he has obtained his certificate of purchase, and when the law expressly authorizes such a sale.

While counsel for appellant has argued elaborately the proposition that a purchase from the state in which the element of speculation enters—the contemplation at the time of purchase of a future sale at a profit when the certificate of purchase is obtained—is a fraud necessitating the cancellation of such certificate, we do not think it necessary to follow that discussion or to pursue this matter any further than to consider the authorities cited both by himself and the respondents, and see if they tend to a solution of the question. These authorities all have reference to the construction given to the provisions of a federal statute relative to the location and purchase of a certain character of government lands, namely, stone and timber lands. They are pertinent to this inquiry because the federal statute authorizing the location of stone and timber lands contains provisions in some respects identical with, and in all similar in effect to, those of section 3495 of the Political Code, with a special provision against purchase for speculation, which our Code provision does not contain. Our section of the Political Code as it stood prior to the year 1880 contained no provision whatever requiring the applicant to swear that he desired to purchase the land for his own use and benefit and for the use or benefit of no other person, and that he had made no contract or agreement to sell it. It was amended in 1880 to so require, and the provision in that respect was undoubtedly copied from the federal statute providing for the sale of stone and timber lands of the government. This federal act provides, as to the purchase of such lands, that "the applicant must make oath that he does not apply to purchase the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit; and that he has not directly or indirectly made any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person or persons whomsoever by which the title which he may acquire from the government of the United States should enure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself." It will be noted in passing that, while following in the main the federal act, our Legislature eliminated the provision therein with reference to speculation. This omission in our statute is significant; but in view of the authorities to which we are presently to call attention, comment on it will be unnecessary. Now, this provision of the federal act, in as far as the purchase of timber lands from the government on speculation was involved, came before both the land department and the federal courts for consideration.

It is claimed by appellant that both the Interior Department and the federal courts have sustained the contention made by him that a purchase of public lands in contemplation of a future sale for a profit was such a speculation as vitiated the purchase, as not being for the sole use and benefit of the applicant. In this regard appellant relies on U. S. v. Bailey, 17 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 468, a decision of Commissioner Smith; Hawley v. Diller, 178 U. S. 476, 20 Sup. Ct. 986, 44 L. Ed. 1157; United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 131 Fed. 668, 67 C. C. A. 1. In United States v. Bailey, and Hawley v. Diller, the same timber land entries were involved and were held void as being speculative entries. But the entries involved in those cases were of vast tracts of timber land procured to be located by a land agent named Lohr, working in the interests of one Bailey. He picked up clerks, bartenders, grocerymen, school teachers, lawyers, in a word everybody who was willing to make a location, or to be concerned in it for a consideration. He induced them to make the purchase, telling them that he would buy their claims and give them $50 more than anybody else would. They made the entries solely under the inducement and he made the payments, and had the entrymen convey their claims to Bailey immediately after their entries were made. In Hawley v. Diller the timber entries were made by large numbers of sawmill employés for the use and benefit of the Martin-Alexander Lumber Company, and not in good faith to appropriate them to their own use and benefit.

These decisions are not based upon a finding that when the entries were made the entrymen, while taking the land for their own use and benefit, had in contemplation generally the sale of it in the future for a profit and hence the entry was speculative under the act, but upon a finding that the entries were made not in good faith or for the use and benefit of the entrymen themselves, but for the use and benefit of certain specified third persons. In the first cases, the entries were made under an express agreement with Lohr and for his benefit, or the benefit of Bailey, at a designated profit, and in the last case, under a tacit understanding, for the use and benefit of the Martin-Alexander Company. These cases do not support the contention of appellant that because an applicant to purchase has in mind a future sale of the land at a profit when he acquires the title, though he does not apply to purchase it for the use and benefit of some particular person, and has made no contract for its sale, he therefore does not purchase it for his own use and benefit. They are authority only to the proposition that an entry for the benefit of a particular third person, under an express or implied agreement to convey to him upon entry for an advance over the government price, is not for the use and benefit of the entrymen, which is, of course, true. But that is not this case. Here the court found that defendant Marsh did not apply for the land for the use or benefit of any third person, and that she had no contract or agreement to sell the same, which the evidence sustains, and the real point is, having in contemplation a sale in the future, whether her application to purchase with that contemplation can be said to be for her own use and benefit, and that it can we are satisfied is sustained by two authorities of the federal courts, the only tribunals to which this exact question seems to have been presented. These cases also arose under the federal timber lands act, the provisions of which, as similar to our own, we have heretofore quoted. These cases are United States v. Budd, 144 U. S. 154, 12 Sup. Ct. 575, 36 L. Ed. 384, and Olson v. United States, 133 Fed. 849, 67 C. C. A. 21.

In the Budd Case, in construing this statute relative to the purchase of timber land, the court, after reciting the facts (unnecessary to be stated here because the proposition we are concerned with is declared in the quotation we made), said: "It simply shows that Montgomery wanted to purchase a large body of timber lands, and did purchase them. This was perfectly legitimate and implies or suggests no wrong. The act does not in any respect limit the dominion which the purchaser has over the land after its purchase from the government, or restrict in the slightest his power of alienation. All that it denounces is a prior agreement—the acting for another in the purchase. If when the title passes from the government no one save the purchaser, has any claim upon it, or any contract or agreement for it, the act is satisfied. Montgomery might rightfully go or send into that vicinity and make generally known or to individuals a willingness to buy timber lands at a price in excess of that which it would have cost to obtain it from the government, and any person knowing of that offer might rightfully go to the Land Office and make application and purchase a timber tract from the government." As we understand this decision, it holds in effect that under the federal statute providing against the entry of land for speculative purposes, or for other than the sole use and benefit of the entryman, it is none the less an entry for his use and benefit under the act, because he makes the entry in contemplation of a future sale to any person who may be willing to purchase when he has secured the title.

In the Olson Case the same federal act was under consideration and involved the same proposition. The court there said: "The statute did not limit the dominion which the purchaser had over the land after its purchase from the government, or restrict in the slightest his power of alienation. The statute only prohibits his entering the land under an agreement whereby he was acting for another. He might make a valid entry of such land, though with a view of disposing of the same after he had completed the purchase, providing that at and before the time of such purchase he had not entered into an agreement with another whereby such other should receive any of the benefits of such purchase. * * * What the statute prohibited was not alone a prior agreement that the title, or any part thereof, which the purchaser should acquire should be conveyed to another, but that the land should not be acquired on speculation for the use and benefit of another. We have no hesitancy in holding its true meaning to be that any citizen of the United States may purchase land as therein provided where such purchase is for his own exclusive use and benefit, notwithstanding at the time of the purchase he may have in contemplation a future sale for a profit. What the statute denounces is that a party shall not at the time of the purchase have, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person or persons, by which the title which he may acquire shall inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself. The application for the land must be made in good faith, for his own exclusive use and benefit, and not as the agent or hireling of another to obtain the land for someone besides himself."

Under these authorities (and independent of the proposition that as section 3515 of the Political Code authorizes a sale of the land upon issuance of the certificate of purchase it could hardly be considered fraudulent to contemplate doing, when making the application, what the law says may be done in the future) we are satisfied that defendant Marsh had a right, when she made her application to purchase this land, to have in contemplation a sale of it for profit at any time after obtaining a certificate of purchase therefor. These authorities, construing the statute of the United States similar in all respects to ours, hold that it is perfectly legitimate and proper to have such a disposition of the land in contemplation when applying to purchase it, and we are not disposed to place upon our Code section a different construction than the United States Supreme Court has placed upon an act of congress containing similar provisions. These authorities construe the meaning of the words "use and benefit" in the federal act as imposing no limitation upon the entrymen as to the contemplation at the time he makes his entry of a future sale of the land when he has secured the title from the government, and, adopting that construction and applying it to similar language in our Code provision, it imposed no limitation on the defendant Marsh as to having in contemplation at the time she made her application a sale of the land on obtaining the certificate of purchase. The only limitation upon her right to purchase was that she should not apply for its purchase for the use or benefit of any other person, and should have made no contract or agreement by which the title she might obtain would inure to any person other than herself, and on these matters the court found in her favor.

The only other point made by appellant is that the application of defendant Marsh did not show the necessary jurisdictional facts, and therefore did not make the legal foundation of a right to purchase, and this is based upon her failure, being a female applicant, to show in her affidavit that she was entitled to purchase real estate in her own name as provided by section 3496 of the Political Code. In her affidavit as regards this requirement she stated simply that she was entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name. A proper compliance with the section required that she should have shown she was entitled to purchase, not simply state the fact that she was. Price v. Beaver, 73 Cal. 625, 630, 15 Pac. 356. She did, however, state the fact, though imperfectly, and, as upon the contest it appeared she was an unmarried woman and hence entitled to hold real estate in her own name, we are not inclined to hold her application void for this imperfection of statement.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. AMER. (Cr. 1,371.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1907.)

1. Criminal Law—New Trial—Grounds—Statutory Provisions.

Pen. Code, § 1181, providing that a new trial may be granted only on the grounds therein specified, is exclusive of other grounds.

2. Same—Misconduct of District Attorney.

Neither Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 5, providing for the granting of a new trial where the court has misdirected the jury in matter of law or has erred in the decision of any question of law arising on the trial, nor subdivision 6, providing for the granting of a new trial where the verdict is contrary to law or evidence, authorize the granting of a new trial for misconduct of the district attorney.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2197-2201.]

3. Same—Appeal—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

On a trial for embezzlement, testimony that a few days before the discovery of the shortage defendant paid witness a certain amount on an interest-bearing indebtedness not matured was not prejudicial.

4. Same—Trial—Instructions—Invasion of Province of Jury.

An instruction, calling attention to the testimony of a witness for the people as opposed to the testimony of a witness for defendant, which carried with it the intimation that the people's witness was to be distrusted, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1772, 1773.]

5. Same—Appeal—Harmless Error—Instructions.

Where, on a trial for embezzlement by a county treasurer, there was no question as to the truth of the uncontradicted evidence of the officers who made the official count of the money in the county treasury as to the amount and kinds of money and vouchers, etc., then in the treasury, the refusal of a requested instruction that it was the presumption of law that the report then made by them was correct could not have affected the verdict in any degree.

6. Same.

In a prosecution for embezzlement by a county treasurer, the information charged the embezzlement of an amount named, lawful money of the United States; the same being public funds of that county received by defendant for the use of the county. The uncontradicted evidence showed that at the time of the official counts of the money in the county treasury, made preceding the disclosure of the shortage, there was on hand, as a portion of the balance, in place of coin, certificates of deposit, checks, and money orders, which had been received as money by the treasurer from the tax collector, and which were apparently carried as money by him and counted as money by the auditing board. Held, that an instruction that, if the sworn statement made by defendant showed a balance of money on hand, the presumption was that the balance was lawful money of the United States, and that the county treasurer was not authorized to accept checks or certificates of deposit in payment of taxes, though given without good reason therefor, was not prejudicial.

McFarland, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

W. M. Amer was convicted of embezzlement, and from an order granting a new trial the state appeals. Order reversed, with directions to enter an order denying a new trial.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and R. R. Fowler, Dist. Atty., for the People. F. G. Ostrander, Lewis H. Smith, G. G. Goucher, and Raleigh E. Rhodes, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a new trial made by defendant after conviction of the crime of embezzlement of public funds while treasurer of Madera county. The language of the order granting the motion was such as to exclude insufficiency of the evidence as a ground of the action of the court. The trial court, according to the language of the order, granted the motion solely on the ground of misconduct of the district attorney in his closing argument to the jury. It is not claimed that there was any error of the trial court in relation to the alleged misconduct. In fact, it affirmatively appears that the learned trial judge, immediately upon the making by the district attorney of the remarks alleged to constitute misconduct, emphatically and at length correctly instructed the jury as to the law applicable to the matters referred to by the district attorney, and admonished them to disregard such remarks. The same thing was more elaborately done by the court in its charge to the jury.

The principal question presented by this appeal is as to whether, in a criminal case, misconduct of the district attorney, unaccompanied by any error of the court, can warrant the granting by the trial court of a motion for a new trial. In view of the positive and unambiguous language of section 1181 of the Penal Code, it is clear that a motion for a new trial can be granted only in the cases therein mentioned. That language in terms limits the authority of the court to grant a new trial to the grounds therein specified. That the section means exactly what it says was held by this court in People v. Bernstein, 18 Cal. 699. The statutory provision as to new trials then in force was substantially the same as the present provision, except that when that case arose newly discovered evidence was not specified as one of the grounds upon which a new trial could be granted; that ground having been subsequently added by amendment. The defendant moved for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, and this court disposed of the motion in these words: "It will be seen that the statute not only does not allow this as a ground for setting aside the verdict, but that it enumerates certain other grounds as those exclusively allowable to that end. This was done designedly, and we have no power to supply the omission. The Legislature had full power to prescribe the cause and grounds of this application. If, in any case, injustice be done in consequence of this omission, the resort is not to the courts, but to the executive." A substantially similar question was presented in People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137, 147, where this court held, expressly overruling People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 298, that an objection to the competency of a juror, taken for the first time after verdict, cannot be availed of on motion for a new trial. The court said: "In reference to a motion for a new trial, the statute has not only enumerated the grounds upon which it may be made, but has expressly excluded all others." See, also, People v. Shainwold, 51 Cal. 468; People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 199, 27 Pac. 204; People v. Simmons, 119 Cal. 1, 50 Pac. 844. Whatever may be the rights under the Constitution of a defendant on an appeal from a judgment, whether or not the remedy by motion for a new trial shall exist in any class of cases, and, if so, upon what grounds, are questions for the exclusive determination of the Legislature.

Misconduct of the district attorney is not, eo nomine, specified by the statute as a ground upon which a new trial may be granted, and, in our judgment, there is no specification therein that can, by any possibility, be held to include it. There is no claim that it is so included, unless it is covered by the language of subdivision 5 or subdivision 6 of section 1181 of the Penal Code. Subdivision 5 provides for the granting of a new trial when the court has misdirected the jury in matter of law, or has erred in the decision of any question of law arising during the course of the trial, and subdivision 6 provides for the granting of a new trial "when the verdict is contrary to law or evidence." These were the grounds specified on the motion for new trial. We have already seen that the court did not misdirect the jury in this matter, or err in the decision of any question of law arising in regard thereto. It, of course, cannot be claimed that the mere fact that the district attorney has been guilty of misconduct renders a verdict contrary to the evidence. A verdict is contrary to the evidence only when the evidence introduced upon the trial does not warrant the conclusion reached by the jury. Nor can it be held that the verdict is "contrary to law" simply because there has been misconduct on the part of the district attorney, however prejudicial to defendant's rights the court may deem such misconduct to have been. If the verdict itself is in no degree opposed to the law applicable to the case, in the light of the evidence received by the court on the trial, it is not "contrary to law," within the meaning of that term as used in subdivision 6, § 1181, Pen. Code, no matter what causes may have operated to influence the jurors to render it. That subdivision has to do solely with the verdict as rendered, and not with the causes that produced it; the sole questions thereunder being as to whether it is sustained by the evidence admitted, and as to whether it is opposed to the law applicable to the case. To give to the term "contrary to law" any broader meaning would make it include every improper influence that may have operated upon the minds of the jurors to the prejudice of a defendant, and render any further specification of such things by statute as grounds for a new trial superfluous. Improper evidence erroneously admitted by the court, evidence wrongfully received by a juror out of court, erroneous instructions as to the law, misconduct of jurors, and errors in the decision of any question of law arising on the trial, might all so operate as to make a verdict contrary to law in such a general sense, yet we find all these things carefully specified in section 1181, Pen. Code, as separate grounds for a new trial. Unless we are to hold that nothing was meant by the careful specification in section 1181, Pen. Code, of the "only" cases in which a motion for a new trial may be granted, and that any prejudicial irregularity in the proceedings not specified in any other subdivision will render the verdict one "against law," thus rendering meaningless and superfluous the express provision of the section that a new trial may be granted "in the following cases only," the provision "when the verdict is contrary to law or evidence" must be given the construction already stated. The words "contrary to law," as here used, mean no more than the words "against law," used in subdivision 6 § 657, Code Civ. Proc., in relation to the verdict in a civil case in the specification of grounds for a new trial. That section expressly provides in subdivision 1 that a new trial may be granted in civil cases for "irregularity in the proceedings of the * * * adverse party, * * * by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial," which undoubtedly includes prejudicial misconduct of an attorney of the adverse party, but no such provision was made in the section relative to criminal cases. It was held in Brumagin v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 35, that the words "against law," as there used, included no cause falling within any other subdivision of section 657, Code Civ. Proc. This narrowing of the meaning of the term from the broad general sense which would make it include every prejudicial irregularity in the course of the proceedings that may have contributed to the rendition of the verdict necessarily brings us to the construction stated, and this gives to the term the definite and specific meaning well recognized by the authorities.

It appears very clear to us that mere misconduct of the district attorney is not included within any of the statutory grounds upon which a trial court may grant a motion for a new trial. We are brought somewhat reluctantly to this conclusion, in view of the apparently well-settled doctrine in this state that the appellate court will order a new trial on account of such misconduct, where it is prejudicial to the rights of a defendant, and as long as this rule obtains it is obviously preferable that the trial court should have the power to entertain a motion on this ground. But that such a ground can avail in support of the statutory motion for a new trial can by no means be held to be settled by the decisions, and such a conclusion would be so opposed to the plain terms of the statute that we cannot assent to it. The only cases that we have been able to find, which may fairly be said to intimate that misconduct of the district attorney may be considered a sufficient ground for granting a motion for a new trial, are those of People v. Sing Lee, 145 Cal. 190, 78 Pac. 636, and People v. Sansome, 98 Cal. 235, 33 Pac. 202, both department cases. In People v. Sing Lee, supra, an order granting a new trial on this ground was affirmed, but the opinion of the commissioners shows that the point now under consideration was not suggested or considered. In People v. Sansome, supra, it was squarely held that motion for new trial was the proper remedy, but this conclusion appears to have been reached without any consideration of the language of section 1181, Pen. Code. While in very many cases misconduct of a district attorney has been considered, and in several held to be of such a nature as to necessitate a reversal, in no other case that we have found was the matter before the court solely on an appeal from an order made on motion for a new trial. The usual appeal in criminal cases in one from both judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial, and the question as to misconduct has been usually presented on such an appeal, and by a bill of exceptions. In one case (People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 71 Pac. 564) the only appeal under consideration was one from the judgment, and the judgment was reversed on the ground of misconduct of the district attorney, thus practically disposing of the one point decided to the contrary in People v. Sansome, supra. In the much-cited case of People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 Pac. 1078, where the appeal was from both the judgment and the order denying a new trial, this court declared that a judgment would be reversed for prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney. In view of the fact that the misconduct of the district attorney has so often been held to constitute a sufficient ground for reversal of the judgment, it may be that it has become a settled rule that the question of misconduct of the district attorney will be considered upon an appeal from the judgment, when presented by a proper record, and the points saved for review by exception. If, however, as appears clear, such misconduct is not one of the statutory grounds upon which the trial court may grant a motion for a new trial, an order of such court granting a new trial on that ground alone, where no other good legal ground for such action appears, is erroneous, and must be reversed on appeal.

Certain other matters are somewhat briefly urged in support of the order granting a new trial, but we entirely agree with the learned judge of the trial court that none of them was of such a nature as to warrant the granting of the motion. The testimony of the witness Price that the defendant, a few days before the discovery of the shortage in his office, paid him on an interest-bearing indebtedness not due for several months the sum of $75, even if immaterial, was not important, and could not have been prejudicial. The requested instruction numbered 35, calling particular attention to the testimony of a certain witness for the people as opposed to the testimony of a witness for the defense, carried with it the intimation that the witness for the prosecution was to be distrusted, and was properly refused. There was no question as to the truth of the uncontradicted evidence of the officers who made the official count of the money in the county treasury on December 27, 1895, as to the amount and kinds of money and vouchers, etc., then in such treasury, and the refusal to give the requested instruction 36 to the effect that it was the presumption of law that the report then made and signed by them, which corresponded with their evidence, was correct, could not have affected the verdict in any degree. The subject-matter of requested instruction 37 was fully and correctly covered by the charge of the court.

The evidence showed without conflict that at the time of the official counts of the money in the county treasury made during the two months next preceding the disclosure of the shortage there was on hand, as a portion of the balance, in place of coin, certificates of deposit of certain local banks for large amounts, and some checks and money orders for small amounts, which had been received as lawful money by the treasurer from the tax collector. Apparently these certificates, checks, and money orders were all convertible into coin by the treasurer at their face value, and they were carried as money by him, and counted as money by the auditing board. The information charged the embezzlement of $32,521.39, "or thereabouts, lawful money of the United States, the same then and there being public funds of said county of Madera, * * * which said money he * * * had received as such county treasurer for the use and benefit of said county." Under these circumstances complaint is made of an instruction given by the court to the effect that, if the regular sworn statement made by the defendant to the county auditor showed a balance of money on hand, the law presumes in the absence of proof to the contrary that such balance was in lawful money of the United States, and, further, that the county treasurer is not authorized by law to accept any checks or certificates of deposit in payment for state and county taxes, fees, or licenses, collected by any officer of the county, and is only authorized to give his official receipt when lawful money of the United States is actually paid into the treasury by the county officers. The latter portion of the instruction was simply an explanation of the presumption stated in the former portion. As an abstract proposition of law, the instruction was manifestly correct, but in view of the state of the evidence we cannot see any good reason for giving it. At the same time, we cannot conceive that, under the circumstances shown by the record, it could have operated prejudicially to defendant's cause.

The order granting defendant's motion for a new trial is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter an order denying the same.

We concur: SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.

McFARLAND, J. (dissenting). I dissent, and think that the order of the trial court granting a new trial should be affirmed.

The state Constitution provides that no person shall be compelled in any criminal cause to be a witness against himself; and section 1323 of the Penal Code declares that the neglect of a defendant to testify as a witness "cannot, in any manner, prejudice him, nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding." In the case at bar the defendant did not testify, and the district attorney, in his address to the jury, willfully and deliberately called attention to the fact that defendant had not offered himself as a witness, and based an argument against him upon the fact that he had not testified. I do not understand that any one contends that this was not a gross violation of the provision of the Code above mentioned, and of defendant's rights under it, or that it could be held to be not prejudicial, or that it should not warrant a reversal provided there is any way to review it, and that defendant's counsel took proper steps to have it reviewed. But defendant made a motion for a new trial upon all statutory grounds. The motion was granted by the trial court on account of the said misconduct of the district attorney above stated. The people appeal from the order granting the new trial, and, of course, there is no appeal by defendant from the judgment. It is therefore contended that as misconduct of the district attorney is not expressly made one of the grounds of a motion for a new trial, by section 1181 of the Penal Code, therefore, the order granting a new trial was erroneously made in the case at bar, and that, as there is no appeal from the judgment, there is no way for defendant to have the said misconduct of the district attorney reviewed, no matter how flagrant and prejudicial it may have been.

It is intimated that the point sought to be made might be considered upon an appeal from a judgment; but I do not see how that could be if it cannot be a ground for a new trial. The judgment would not show any erroneous rulings or action by the court; and on such appeal the judgment could be reversed only on the general ground that a verdict founded in whole or in part upon the effect of a violation of the law by the district attorney would be a verdict contrary to law. But subdivision 6 of section 1181 expressly enumerates as a ground for a new trial "where the verdict is contrary to law." If a verdict founded upon the misconduct of the district attorney is not a verdict contrary to law, then it cannot be touched either on appeal from the judgment or on motion for a new trial. It seems to me that such a verdict is clearly contrary to law, and therefore was within the sixth subdivision of section 1181. If a point made is that "the court has misdirected the jury in a matter of law, or has erred in the decision of any question of law arising during the course of the trial," then, of course, the motion would be based on subdivision 5 of said section; but in the case at bar the point is not that the court misdirected the jury in a matter of law. Has not the phrase in subdivision 6 "contrary to law" some meaning? Suppose that that section had only enumerated two grounds for a motion for a new trial—first, "that the verdict is contrary to the evidence"; and, second, that the verdict "is contrary to law." In that event could not a motion for a new trial be based on the ground that the verdict is against law? And yet the section, as it stands, limits the grounds "contrary to law" only by the case where the court has misdirected the jury as to some matter of law. Other kinds of verdicts contrary to law are embraced in subdivision 6, and therefore the only question is this: Is a verdict based on such misconduct of the district attorney, as is shown in the case at bar, "contrary to law?" and, in my opinion, as before stated, it is clearly so. It is founded upon and the result of a direct violation of law. And certainly in a criminal case such a construction of a provision of law as would enable a defendant to present the merits of his case should be followed, where it is permissible. The question has not been definitely settled by this court adversely to these views, and they were followed in People v. Sansome, 98 Cal. 225, 33 Pac. 202, and People v. Sing Lee, 145 Cal. 190, 78 Pac. 636. The opposite view would make section 1323 of the Penal Code a mere ineffectual and nugatory declaration which could be violated by the district attorney at his pleasure without any redress whatever on the part of the aggrieved defendant. It would be akin to Dogberry's charge to the watch: "Dog. You shall comprehend all vagrom men. You are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name. Sec. Watch. How if a' will not stand? Dog. Why, then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together and thank God you are rid of a knave."

Ex parte McMANUS. (Cr. 1,376.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1907.)

1. Constitutional Law — Uniformity — Class Legislation.

St. 1901, p. 641, c. 212, provides for the appointment of a board of architecture to provide regulations for the examination of certified architects, and makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine, for a noncertified person to hold himself out as an architect, except that the act shall not apply to a person making plans for his own buildings or furnishing plans, etc., to others whom he has fully informed that he is not a certified architect. Held, that such act is not in violation of Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21, requiring all acts to operate uniformly on all belonging to the class on which it is intended to operate, and prohibiting the granting of special privileges and immunities to some of the class not granted to all.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 651.]

2. Same—Legislative Power—Delegation.

Such act was not objectionable as a delegation of legislative power to a board of architecture, because the Legislature did not itself provide a system of reasonable rules for the examination and certification of architects, but authorized the same to be provided by the board.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 99.]

3. Same—Unreasonable Rules—Adoption—Effect.

The adopting of discriminating or unreasonable rules by the board would not affect the validity of the act, but would merely constitute a violation of its provisions; such rules being subject to vacation by a person affected by a proper proceeding for relief.

4. Habeas Corpus—Proceedings—Scope.

The adoption of discriminating or unreasonable rules for the examination and certification of architects by the state board of architecture, under the authority conferred by St. 1901, p. 641, c. 212, did not justify an attack on the validity of the act in habeas corpus proceedings by a person arrested for practicing architecture without a certificate, in violation thereof.

5. Constitutional Law — Officers — State Board of Architecture—Appointment—Delegation of Power.

St. 1901, p. 641, c. 212, providing for a state board of architecture to consist of 10 persons, to be appointed by the Governor from two specified chapters of the American Institute of Architects, or some similar institution or association of architects, is not invalid as providing an improper method for the appointment of such board.

In Bank. Application by E. C. McManus for habeas corpus. Writ denied.

Galpin, Elkins & Frost, for petitioner. Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. The petitioner was arrested, charged with practicing the profession of architecture without a certificate from the state board of architecture, and brings this proceeding on habeas corpus.

The state board of architecture was created by an act of the Legislature approved March 23, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 641, c. 212). The act was amended in 1903 (St. 1903, p. 522, c. 376); but, as this amendment does not affect the question here involved, no further reference shall be made to it. The act of 1901 provides that the state board of architecture shall consist of 10 persons, appointed by the Governor, 5 from the San Francisco chapter, and 5 from the Southern California chapter, of the American Institute of Architects, or some similar institution or association of architects, and empowers such board to grant certificates to practice the profession of architecture upon an examination of applicants therefor. As to such examination, the act provides that the board shall "formulate and adopt a code of rules and regulations for its government in the examination of applicants for certificates to practice architecture in this state; and such other rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper, not inconsistent with this act," and "should the applicant pass a satisfactory examination" grant him a certificate. It is further provided that any architect in good standing, engaged in the practice of the profession of architecture on the date of the passage of the act, and applying to the board therefor within six months from the passage of the act, shall be granted a certificate without passing an examination. The act then proceeds to declare that: "After the expiration of six months from the passage of this act, it shall be unlawful, and it shall be a misdemeanor punishable by fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500 for any person to practice architecture without a certificate in this state, or to advertise or put out any sign or card or other device, which might indicate to the public that he was an architect; provided that nothing in this act shall prevent any person from making plans for his own buildings, or furnishing plans or other data for buildings for other persons, provided the person so furnishing such plans or data shall fully inform the person for whom such plans or data are furnished that he, the person furnishing such plans, is not a certificated architect. * * *" These are the only provisions of the act necessary to refer to, as they are the only ones involved in the consideration of this application.

The claim of the petitioner is that the act in question is unconstitutional and void. It is not contended but that the Legislature has the power, for the protection of the public, to regulate the practice of any particular profession which requires the possession of special knowledge, skill, and training in its exercise, nor that the profession of architecture is not within that class. In fact, this right and its exercise with reference to architects is conceded; but it is claimed that, in attempting to exercise it under the act in question, certain provisions of our state Constitution were violated, and the act is therefore void. In this regard it is insisted that the act is violative of sections 11 and 21, art. 1, of the Constitution of this state, in this: That, while the law is one of a general nature, it does not operate uniformly upon all who belong to the class upon which it is intended to operate; but that it grants special privileges and immunities to some of the class which are not granted to all. In other words, it is contended that there is a distinct and arbitrary discrimination in favor of architects who inform their patrons they are not certificated architects, and a grant to such class of immunity from punishment which may be inflicted upon other architects who do not inform their patrons they are certificated architects. We do not perceive any force in this contention of petitioner. There is no class discrimination as to uncertificated architects, but, on the contrary, the act operates uniformly upon all that class. Any one of the class of uncertificated architects can practice his profession under the terms of the act—that is, prepare plans and other data for buildings—without rendering himself amenable to punishment, by informing his client or patron that he is not a certificated architect. This is open to all uncertificated architects. The purpose of the law in providing for certificated architects was, as we have incidentally remarked, in the interest of and for the protection of the public. The possession by an architect of a certificate of the state board of architects was in the judgment of the Legislature a sufficient guaranty to the public of the skill and fitness of its holder to pursue his profession. The further provision of the statute that an uncertificated architect might practice architecture to the extent stated therein, provided he informs his employer that he has no certificate, was equally in the public interest, because the employer is thereby placed on his guard as to whether he will employ an architect who had not obtained the certificate, which, if his skill and knowledge warranted, he could have obtained from the state board. As this provision of the law applies to all architects who have not a certificate, we cannot discover any support for the objection that any arbitrary or other discrimination as to members of that class exists. Neither do we perceive how under the act any special privileges or immunities are granted to any of the class of uncertificated architects, which are not possessed by, or extended to, all. That entire class are accorded the privilege and right to practice architecture, provided they inform their patrons that they do not hold certificates, and they are granted immunity from punishment provided they do so. Hence the same privileges and the same immunities apply to all of the class.

It is next asserted that the act is void because, in attempting to regulate a lawful occupation, the Legislature has provided no standard of proficiency, nor prescribed any rules under which the qualifications of an applicant for a certificate can be determined. It is insisted, in this connection, that it was the duty of the Legislature to have itself fixed in the act some standard or rules for determining the qualifications of applicants; that this was a legislative duty to be discharged by the Legislature itself, and a function which it could not delegate to the board of architecture, nor invest it with arbitrary power to provide a standard or rules upon the subject. It is undoubtedly a well-recognized maxim of constitutional law that authority conferred on the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by it to any other department or body; but here there is no delegation by the Legislature to the state board of architecture of the power to declare what the law shall be. That is declared by the act. It is an equally well-recognized principle that the Legislature, notwithstanding it may do things itself, may nevertheless authorize them to be done by ministerial officers or boards when it believes that they can do them more conveniently and effectually than it can itself. Especially may this be done when it is deemed proper by the Legislature to regulate in the interests of the public, through public commissions or boards constituted for that purpose, the pursuit of particular professions or occupations, as, for example, that of physicians, dentists, druggists, engineers, architects, and others, which involve the exercise of skill and the possession of special knowledge and experience. Such commissions or boards are composed, as under this act the board of architects necessarily must be, of persons technically skilled and trained in their profession or occupation, and who are usually better able to determine whether an applicant for a license or certificate to practice a given profession or occupation is competent to do so, under reasonable rules and standards adopted by them, than under those which might be prescribed by the Legislature; and if in its wisdom the Legislature authorizes such a technically trained commission or board to prescribe reasonable rules, or fix a fair standard for determining the proficiency of applicants for a license or certificate, it cannot be said that a delegation, within the constitutional inhibition, of authority to make laws is conferred, or any other authority given, than the power necessary to be exercised by them to the end that the law as completely enacted by the Legislature may properly be carried into effect. Nor is the objection of petitioner that, by the provision authorizing the board to adopt rules and regulations for the examination of applicants, discretionary and arbitrary power is conferred upon the board under which discriminating, unreasonable and unfair rules and regulations may be established. No arbitrary power is conferred on the board in this respect. The authority conferred by the terms of the statute is to pass necessary and proper rules on the subject; rules which must be reasonably adapted for the purpose of determining the qualifications of all applicants to practice the profession of architecture from an examination of the applicant on subjects pertaining to that profession. It was not necessary in the act to declare in terms that the rules and regulations which the board might adopt should be reasonable ones, although the requirement that they be necessary and proper ones amounts to the same thing. There is always implied in a grant of authority, such as here conferred, that it shall be exercised reasonably and fairly so as to effectuate the end contemplated. It may not be presumed that the authority conferred will be abused by the formulation of unreasonable or unjust rules, and from such presumption declare the act to be unconstitutional. On the contrary, the presumption is that the board will not act unreasonably or unfairly. As under the terms of the statute, as well as in contemplation of law, the authority conferred upon the board is to make necessary and proper, and hence reasonable, rules relative to the subject of the examination of applicants, it can be of no moment to consider the possibility of their formulating unreasonable or unfair ones, and hence violative of the terms of the statute. We are not advised in this proceeding whether the board has adopted any rules at all. If they should adopt rules which are not uniform, or which are discriminating or unreasonable, that could not affect the validity of the act; it would simply be a violation of its provisions. The remedy of the petitioner, if the board violates its duty in this respect, is to apply to the court under some proper and appropriate proceeding for relief. It does not justify an attack upon the validity of the act in habeas corpus proceedings.

It is concluded upon this proposition that the Legislature has the power to delegate to a commission or board, trained in a given profession or skilled in a given art, the right to fix the qualification of applicants desiring to practice such professions or art. The Legislature itself is not obliged in the law regulating such profession to fix the standard of excellence or knowledge in the given profession which an applicant for admission thereto shall be required to possess. Such requirements may be left to the sound discretion of the commission or board, which will be accountable in the courts for any abuse or unjust exercise of the discretion with which it is vested. A familiar instance of this is found in the law touching the admission of attorneys to practice before the courts of this state. Sections 275 and 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as they formerly read, declared that every applicant for admission as an attorney and counselor must have the qualifications of learning, ability, and character, and must produce satisfactory testimonials of good moral character, and undergo a strict examination in open court as to his qualifications by the justices of the Supreme Court. As the law now reads, the only change is in conferring this power of examination upon the District Courts of Appeal. A vast majority of the practicing lawyers of this state have been admitted after such examination by virtue of these sections. It would come with some shock of surprise to these members of this learned profession to be told that their licenses were void because the Legislature had failed to define the qualifications which they must possess. Other tribunals have been called upon to consider laws of similar import, and it will be found that their determinations are all in harmony, and in favor of the views above expressed. State v. Knowles, 90 Md. 646, 45 Atl. 877, 49 L. R. A. 695; Kettles v. People, 77 N. E. 472, 221 Ill. 221; In re Thompson, 78 Pac. 899, 36 Wash. 377; Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412–417, 77 Pac. 166; Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167–179, 77 Pac. 879.

The last point made by petitioner, as to the constitutionality of the manner of appointment of the state board provided for in the act, is fully disposed of in Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 413, 77 Pac. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249. While some objections are leveled against the manner of appointment provided for in the act under consideration now, in addition to those urged against the act considered in Ex parte Gerino, the reasoning and discussion in the opinion of the court in the Gerino Case embraces them all, and disposes of them adversely to the contention of petitioner.

In our opinion the act in question is not open to the claims of petitioner against its constitutionality.

The petition is denied, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco.

SHAW, J. I concur in the opinion of Justice LORIGAN. I think, however, that it does not sufficiently state the reasons for the proposition that the law does not delegate legislative power to the state board of architecture. If the statute gave power to the board to determine the qualifications necessary to entitle a person to become a certificated architect, it would be a delegation of legislative power. It does not do this, however. The statute does not expressly prescribe any standard of qualification in the applicant. It must be construed as, at least, an implied declaration that no person shall be entitled to a certificate as a licensed architect, unless he has such ordinary knowledge of the principles and science of that art or profession, and such ordinary skill in the practical application of those principles and that science as are usually possessed by those engaged therein. It is the usual standard implied in law, where no different standard is expressed by the statute. Doubtless, the statute might require a higher standard, or a lower standard; but, inasmuch as it does not expressly require any, it is to be considered as implying a requirement of the standard above stated. The provisions of the statute give the board the power to adopt rules and regulations, but it does not authorize it to require or enforce a different or higher standard than that of ordinary knowledge and skill, nor to require knowledge and skill of some other art or profession as a condition. It could not, for instance, require the applicant to display a knowledge of theology, or medical science, as a condition of receiving a certificate. The power which is conferred upon it is merely to make such examination as it shall deem sufficient to enable it to decide whether or not the applicant has this ordinary knowledge and skill. This is a task which the Legislature could not itself undertake in each individual instance. If it were a legislative act, of a character so that it could not be delegated, it would follow that it would practically be impossible for the Legislature to perform it, and consequently there could be no regulation of this or any other profession. The thing required of the board is the determination of the fact that the applicant does, or does not, have the qualifications which the law implies he must have. This is a ministerial or administrative function. Like many other ministerial acts, it involves to some degree a consideration of the effect of evidence, and is similar in that regard to judicial proceedings, but it is well settled that such acts are not so far judicial that the Legislature may not place the power elsewhere than in the court. The rules and regulations referred to in the act are merely such rules and regulations as relate to the method by which the board are to proceed in determining this fact.

HUMPHREY v. LEONARD et al. (L. A. 1,882.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK—PERSONAL INJURIES—QUESTION OF FACT.

In an action for personal injury caused by plaintiff slipping on the beveled end of a plank in a temporary driveway across a sidewalk, whether defendants were negligent held, under the evidence, a question for the court sitting as a jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1745, 1747–1750.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by E. C. Humphrey against C. Leonard and others. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendants. Affirmed.

Oscar A. Trippet, for appellant. E. W. Freeman, A. D. Laughlin, and Jones & Weller, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought his action to recover damages from the defendants for personal injuries sustained by him in crossing a sidewalk on a street in the city of Los Angeles. The cause was tried without a jury, and the findings of the court exonerated the defendants. The specific charge of negligence is that defendants, in constructing this temporary driveway of three-inch planks, laid down the plank with a beveled end, and loosely covered the whole driveway with sand; that plaintiff, a foot passenger upon the sidewalk, slipped upon this beveled end, which could not be seen by reason of the sand, and was thrown, sustaining the injuries complained of. The defense showed that it constructed and maintained a temporary roadway under license of a building ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, and the court finds "that it was necessary and proper to cover said sidewalk where said driveway passed over the same, and the manner which defendants constructed and maintained said driveway was a proper method of construction and maintaining such a driveway."

Appellant's proposition is that, the facts being undisputed, it was a question of law as to whether or not defendants were negligent, and that the finding and determination of the court is against the law and against the evidence. This, however, may not be said. It was for the court, as it would have been for a jury, considering all of the circumstances and facts as shown by the evidence, to declare whether the defendants were or were not negligent. The case in this respect is the parallel of that of Wile v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Company (Cal. App.) 83 Pac. 271, where the true rule is laid down. In this case, as in that, the defendants were called upon to exercise the care which the circumstances required in the construction and maintenance of the temporary driveway, and what was ordinary care it was peculiarly the province of the court below, sitting as a trier of the facts, to determine.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HEILBRON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Sac. 1,536.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1907.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY AND ASSESS COMPENSATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS — CONSTITUTIONALITY—POSSESSION PENDING PROCEEDING.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1254, allowing the court in a condemnation proceeding to issue a writ of possession to plaintiff at any time after trial and judgment entered, or pending an appeal, when he has paid into court for the defendant the full amount of the judgment, and such further sum as may be required by the court as a fund to pay any further damages and costs that may be recovered, as well as all damages that may be sustained by the defendant if the property is not taken for public use, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation is first made in money, or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived; and in condemnation proceedings by a railroad corporation the court may issue a writ of possession to plaintiff after trial and judgment and pending an appeal, if it has complied with the statute as to payment of money into court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, §§ 630–636.]

2. SAME.

The right to a verdict of a jury fixing the compensation guarantied by such constitutional provision is not violated by the provision of the Code which allows the court to fix the amount of the additional fund to protect the defendant in a condemnation proceeding, in the event the property is not taken for public use, since there can be no exact preascertainment of damage which has not occurred and may never arise, and since upon the trial the jury give an award to cover all loss resulting from the permanent taking, which is sufficient to pay the minor loss caused by the temporary taking.

In Bank. Application by Louise R. Heilbron for a writ of prohibition against the superior court of Sacramento county and Peter F. Shield, judge. Writ denied.

A. L. Shinn and A. M. Seymour, for petitioner. Devlin & Devlin, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The Sacramento Southern Railroad, a corporation, commenced proceedings against petitioner to condemn a strip of land for railroad purposes. Trial was had, and judgment passed for plaintiff; the damages for the value of the land to be taken and for the injury which would result to the remaining lands of defendant being assessed by a jury. Defendant then gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, and at the same time perfected her appeal from the judgment, which appeal is still pending. Plaintiff deposited in the superior court the amount fixed by the judgment, and gave notice that it would move for an order authorizing it to take possession of the land upon paying into court such further sum as should be fixed by the court "as a fund to pay any further damages and costs that may be recovered in said proceeding, as well as all damages that may be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property shall not be finally taken for public use." This motion coming on for hearing, objection was made that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the same. The court overruled this objection, and petitioner herein (defendant in the condemnation proceeding) made application to this court for a peremptory writ of prohibition, alleging that the superior court will, unless restrained, make its order authorizing plaintiff in the condemnation proceedings to take possession of her lands.

The motion of plaintiff in condemnation is wholly within the letter and spirit of section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the superior court may issue a writ of possession to plaintiff "at any time after trial and judgment entered or pending an appeal from the judgment to the Supreme Court, whenever the plaintiff shall have paid into court, for the defendant, the full amount of the judgment, and such further sum as may be required by the court as a fund to pay any further damages and costs that may be recovered in said proceeding, as well as all damages that may be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property shall not be finally taken for public use." The section further provides for the reception of the money by defendant, and that such reception shall constitute an abandonment of all defenses to the action or proceeding, "except as to the amount of damages that he may be entitled to, in the event that a new trial shall be granted." It is also provided that, "in ascertaining the amount to be paid into court, the court shall take care that the same be sufficient and adequate." Provision is then made that the integrity of the fund shall be maintained, and that any loss or diminution of it shall be immediately made good by plaintiff. Other provisions are added, all to the end of safeguarding the defendant's interest in the moneys so deposited. Petitioner attacks this section as unconstitutional. The line of argument is that article 1, § 14, of the Constitution declares that no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived, as in other civil cases; that this provision clearly contemplates a preascertainment and award before the property of the owner can be taken; that an entry into possession under section 1254 is a taking, within the meaning of the Constitution; and that, notwithstanding the carefully devised provisions of the section, whereby an amount of money sufficient and adequate shall be paid into court by order of court to cover "all damages that may be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property shall not be finally taken for public use," this sum of money is not a preascertainment by a jury of the amount of such damage, and consequently in so far as section 1254 authorizes such a writ of possession, without preascertainment in the manner guarantied by the Constitution, for the compensation to the owner therefor, if the land be not finally taken, it is in plain defiance of both the letter and spirit of the constitutional provision.

Many of petitioner's propositions may be at once conceded. The entry by plaintiff into possession of the property, under the indicated circumstances, is unquestionably the taking of private property for a public use, and may result in damage to that property—probably in all cases will result in detriment and damage to the property if the plaintiff should subsequently abandon his possession. There is, first, the detriment caused to the owner by his loss of possession, and, in addition, the abandoned structures and works which plaintiff shall have put upon the property may be of injury to the owner when possession reverts to him. Also, it may be at once conceded that there has been no exact preascertainment of the amount of such damage, and no ascertainment at all by a jury. So, finally, it may be declared that, if the Constitution does require the preascertainment of such merely possible damage, and that that preascertainment shall be made by a jury, unless a jury be waived—that there shall be, in short, a jury finding of the exact amount of injury in terms of money which would result to the defendant, in the event that at some indefinite time the plaintiff should abandon its possession and its works, or for other cause the land be not finally taken—it will be conceded at once that petitioner's argument is unanswerable. She does not, however, carry it far enough. By irresistible and irrefutable logic, if this preascertainment and payment into court of the amount of damage by a jury is necessary in the one instance, it is necessary in every instance. Therefore, if, on trial of the suit in condemnation, judgment fixing the amount of damage be awarded, and plaintiff pay this amount into court, and defendant then appeal, it can never be said that a new trial as to the amount of damage may not be ordered, and that a subsequent trial may not result in increasing defendant's award. There will never then have been an exact preascertainment by a jury of the amount of damage which the defendant sustains for the general taking of the land, until such time as the jury's award shall have been finally confirmed by the court of last resort. And it must necessarily result from petitioner's argument, carried to its logical conclusion, that in no conceivable instance can a plaintiff in condemnation have a right of entry upon the condemned property until the end of the litigation has come, with a final affirmance by the court of last resort of the amount of the jury's award. This, of course, is not the meaning of the Constitution, which, from its very reading, as well as from the construction which has been given to its language by this court, contemplates that such right of entry vests in plaintiff after an award by the jury of the amount of damage which the defendant will sustain by the taking of his property, whether that amount in the ultimate outcome of the litigation shall prove to be the true amount, or whether, as the result of appeals and new trials, the amount shall be finally determined to be more or less. The constitutional provision is framed to accomplish this result, and unquestionably section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been carefully devised and drawn to further and effectuate the constitutional intent. It was so decided in Spring Valley Water Co. v. Drinkhouse, 95 Cal. 220, 30 Pac. 218, where section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was then in all substantial particulars the same as now, was considered and its constitutionality upheld. It is there said, discussing section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "This section is not violative of any provision of the Constitution, but directly in line with that instrument wherein it treats of such matters. Section 14, art. 1, provides: 'Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner.' It would seem that the framers of both the Constitution and the statute had in view the delays incident to condemnation proceedings, and the necessity in many cases of allowing the property to be taken and used for a public use during the progress of the litigation, provided an adequate fund to fully reimburse the landowner was first paid into court."

But, returning to the specific objection here advanced, namely, that the constitutional right to the verdict of a jury is violated by a provision which allows the court, and not a jury, to estimate the damages that may be sustained by the defendant if, for any cause, the property shall not finally be taken for public use, the first answer is that there can be, from the nature of the thing itself, no exact preascertainment of damage which has not been incurred, and which never may result. The whole matter rests upon contingencies which may never arise, upon the chance of happenings which may never take place. Damage is but the measure in money for a detriment which has occurred in the past, and which may with certainty be said will occur in the future. Civ. Code, § 3283. It would challenge the astuteness of the most learned court to lay down any rule of damage for the preascertainment of an injury which may never happen at all, and the time of whose occurrence, if it does happen, not only can never be foretold, but rests equally in the will of either party to the litigation. Thus, the plaintiff might abandon the day after he took possession, when certainly the injury to the defendant in deprivation for the use of his property would not be as great as though the plaintiff had remained for a long period of time in possession, had disturbed the freehold and erected structures, valuable enough for the intended purpose, but of no value, but rather of positive injury, to the uses of the freehold as designed by the original owner. The measure of damage under such circumstances would be proportioned to the length of time of occupancy and to the character of the disturbance of the freehold. Upon the other hand, the original owner may any day change his mind, dismiss his proceedings, and accept the award which has been paid into court. Whatever may have been the preceding damage because of the entry of the plaintiff, it would end with his acquiescence. Assume, again, that for this preascertainment of damage which may never arise at all, since plaintiff may never abandon, a jury has been impaneled, and, under instructions from the court, the nature of which we admit our inability to outline, the jury makes an award for the prospective damages which it is supposed the defendant will suffer, should the plaintiff at some indefinite and indeterminate time abandon his possession—if this amount of money, so fixed by the jury, be damages, as by petitioner it is contended that it is—then there must rest with the petitioner the right of immediate acceptance, and with what result? That plaintiff would be obliged to pay a sum of money for so-called damages for an injury which he never committed, for a deprivation of the use of property to which he had a right, and which right he had never abandoned. The law does not exact impossibilities, and it must be very apparent that if this sum of money, so to be estimated and deposited with the court, is strictly damages for an injury which has not and may never have been committed, then it is incapable of exact pre-estimation until after the date of the commission of the injury. In truth, it is not damages at all, and cannot be in strictness damages, since no injury has arisen. It is a fund of money secured to the owner of the property, out of which he may make a judgment subsequently to be fixed by a jury, in case injury by abandonment is inflicted upon him. As it is not an injury which has resulted, and as, moreover, it is not an injury which ever may result, there is no constitutional injunction requiring the impossible condition of its preascertainment.

Moreover, upon the trial of the condemnation proceeding, the jury does give an award which covers both the value of the property to be taken, and the injury which will result to the owner's land by reason of its severance and of the public uses to which it may be put. As the whole necessarily includes the parts, and as the detriment caused by the permanent taking of this land must certainly be greater than the detriment caused by its temporary use, we have in the award of the jury in the condemnation proceeding a fund of money which, as it is sufficient to pay all loss to the owner by reason of the permanent taking, is certainly sufficient to pay the minor loss caused by the temporary taking. In this very fund, therefore, we have the award of a jury upon the matter of damage for temporary detention. True, its amount is not specifically segregated; but, as has been said and shown, it is an absolute judicial impossibility to specify any amount in advance of the occurrence of the injury. It will be noted that section 1254 is extremely careful in safeguarding the rights of the landowner. It requires the payment into court not only of the full amount of the judgment, but also of such further damages and costs as may be recovered in the proceeding. The costs, of course, are a minor matter and capable of reasonably exact ascertainment. The damages here contemplated are the enhanced damages which the defendant may recover under reversal and order for new trial. Those damages, however, can never be more than what he pleads his loss will be, so that he may be amply protected in this regard by the deposit of all which he claims is necessary to cover his prospective loss. In that sum is clearly contained the lesser loss which may result to him in case of entry by plaintiff and his subsequent abandonment. The Constitution merely guaranties that there shall be ascertained and paid into court, before plaintiff's right of entry attaches, the amount of the judgment, and this, notwithstanding that that judgment may be reversed, and that the defendant may ultimately obtain a verdict for a much larger amount of money. We can see no constitutional objection, and none has been pointed out to us, which would invalidate a statute which confers upon a defendant in condemnation proceedings even greater rights, and even greater security for his recovery, than that which the Constitution itself awards him. The proposition here presented, it will be seen at a glance, is entirely different from that considered in Steinhart v. Superior Court, 137 Cal. 575, 70 Pac. 629, 59 L. R. A. 404, 92 Am. St. Rep. 183. The Code section which the court was called upon to consider in the Steinhart Case provided that the plaintiff might take possession of the land sought to be condemned, before the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court and during the pendency of the action. It was held, as manifestly it must have been held, that this did violence to the constitutional provision that private property should not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court. Here this damage has been estimated and has been paid into court, and the damage, for which it is contended there should be a preascertainment, is a damage which has not arisen, which may not arise, which cannot be ascertained in advance, and for which, if it does arise, such estimation, as by any possibility could be made in advance, has been made in the judgment and award of the jury.

Summing up upon the matter: The fund to secure damages caused by temporary use, if the property be not finally taken, having been paid into court as security for such damages, it follows that it cannot be withdrawn until such damages are paid, and that the court having custody of the fund must have jurisdiction and power, after the temporary use has ceased, to ascertain the amount of the damages caused thereby and direct its payment out of the fund. This power is necessarily implied, though not expressly stated, in the Code. The owner is therefore not deprived of his property, nor is he damaged without compensation, in a legal sense. The right to have this damage for such temporary use preassessed by a jury, as we have said, is not secured by the Constitution. It is a damage which the owner has himself occasioned by his refusal to accept the award of the jury, to which he had the constitutional right, and by resorting to an appeal, which the constitutional guaranty contained in section 14, art. 1, does not give him. This right of appeal is given by the statute. The statute annexes to the right of appeal the condition that for the damages arising from the occupancy of plaintiff during its pendency, if the land is not finally taken, the owner must accept the preliminary award of the court. This condition was annexed to the right of appeal at the time when the constitutional amendment of 1904, implying a right of appeal, was adopted, and this constitutional right is to be construed as a mere affirmance or reference to the statutory right of appeal then existing with all its attending conditions.

For these reasons the application for a peremptory writ of prohibition is denied.

LASSEN IRR. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LASSEN COUNTY et al. (S. F. 4,695.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1907.)

1. Judges — Disqualification to Act — Interest.

A judge has no interest disqualifying him to try an action against an irrigating company for not supplying all the water which plaintiff claims he was entitled to, though defendant alleges plaintiff was not entitled to a fixed amount, but only to a proportion of whatever water the company might have for distribution, and that certain other persons, including the judge, have prior water rights; they not being necessary parties, no showing for making them parties being made, and any judgment which might be rendered in the case being incapable of affecting them.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Judges, §§ 190–207.]

2. Same — Bias — Objections — Who May Raise.

A party cannot have another judge called in for bias of the presiding judge where any bias must be in favor of such party.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Judges, § 224.]

3. Same—Acting as Counsel.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, disqualifying a judge to sit in an action when in it, or in a previous action involving any of the same issues, he has been attorney for either party, or when he has given advice to either party on any matter involved in the action, he is not disqualified for counselling or advising with persons not parties to the action, though asserting like claims against the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Judges, §§ 214–217.]

In Bank. Proceedings in prohibition by the Lassen Irrigation Company against the superior court of Lassen county and the judge thereof. Writ denied.

W. F. Williamson, for petitioner.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in prohibition to prevent the respondent, Hon. Frank A. Kelly, as judge of the superior court of Lassen county, from presiding in the trial of the case of A. E. Torrey v. Lassen Irrigation Company, pending in said court. The basis of the petition is that said Frank A. Kelly is disqualified to act as judge on the trial of said case by reason of interest and bias. We will assume, for the purposes of the decision, that the facts stated in the petition to demonstrate that the remedy by appeal is inadequate, are sufficient for that purpose, and we will consider the case upon its merits.

The complaint of Torrey, in the suit against the Lassen Irrigation Company, states a cause of action for damages only. It alleges, in substance, that the company is engaged in the business of diverting water from Susan river by means of storage reservoirs and diverting dams, and of selling said water to the owners of the lands within the district to which the use of said water is appropriated for the irrigation of their lands; that Torrey was entitled to receive from said company, during the irrigating season of 1905, for the irrigation of his land, consisting of 40 acres, a certain quantity of said water; that there was in Susan river and in the reservoirs of the company, during said season, sufficient water belonging to said company to supply all its customers, including Torrey, with the water to which they were respectively entitled, but that the company failed and refused to deliver any water to Torrey, whereby he was damaged, by the loss of crops, in a large sum of money, for which judgment is asked. The complaint also includes a prayer that the amount of water to which the plaintiff, Torrey, is entitled from the defendant be determined, and that his title thereto be quieted. But no facts are alleged as a foundation for such relief. The complaint shows that the amount of water to be delivered by the company to Torrey was fixed by a written contract by definite measurement, the maximum quantity being 18 acre inches each year, but not exceeding the amount necessary to irrigate the forty acres of land in question. It is not alleged that there is any dispute whatever between the parties concerning the quantity of water due to the plaintiff, Torrey, from the company, nor that the company has ever denied his right to the amount fixed by the contract, or his due proportion of the amount, in case the supply from the river proved insufficient for all those entitled. And as the only breach of duty alleged was the refusal to deliver the water for the year 1905, and it is alleged that during that year there was enough water for all the persons entitled, there appears in the complaint no ground for any dispute over the right of the plaintiff to the water of which he was deprived, and the complaint cannot be considered in any other character than as a statement of a cause of action for damages alone. The company filed an answer to this complaint, denying that Torrey was entitled to the full supply of water alleged, but admitting that he was entitled to share with a large number of other persons in whatever water the company might have for distribution. It also alleged, in defense, that certain persons, including Frank A. Kelly, and judge of said court, were entitled to prior and paramount rights in the waters of Susan river; that the company had the right only to such quantity of water as should be left in the river after the paramount rights were supplied; that, during the year 1905, the owners of these paramount rights claimed that the company was taking more water than it was entitled to take from the river, and that a complete determination of the issues in the case could not be had without bringing all those parties, including said Frank A. Kelly, into court as parties to the action. Thereupon the company filed an application for a change of venue of the case, and that another judge be called to preside at the trial. This application was denied and the respondent, as judge of the superior court, was about to proceed to sit in that capacity in the trial of the case. The object of this proceeding is to prevent him from so doing. In support of the application an affidavit was filed to that effect that the respondent, Kelly, was by reason of his ownership of the paramount right to a portion of the waters of Susan river, interested in the result of the action and in the determination of the controversy between the parties thereto, and that he is also disqualified by reason of his relationship to certain other persons, who are also owners of paramount rights in said water. Said company at the same time presented motions to have the said owners of paramount rights to the water made parties to the action, and this motion was also denied.

The owners of these paramount rights were not necessary parties to the action. The answer did not state any facts which would justify the court in determining the rights of these parties, or which would require an adjudication of their rights. And for similar reasons it did not show that Frank A. Kelly, or any of the other owners of the prior rights, were interested in the determination of the case of Torrey against the Lassen Irrigation Company. The company could defend that action by showing that the plaintiff did not have an absolute right to a certain amount of water, but only a right to a share of such water as the company itself was entitled to take from the river, and that his share of the water the company could obtain was delivered to him, or that, by reason of circumstances beyond its control and for which it was not legally responsible, its supply had failed. It could show in defense that, after the parties having preferred rights had taken their portion of the water, there was none left, or not enough to supply Torrey. This might make it necessary to prove at the trial the amount to which Judge Kelly had the prior right and the amount he actually took in pursuance thereof. It may be conceded that in weighing such evidence the judge might not be entirely unprejudiced. Nevertheless the fact that he would be required to weigh the evidence and determine the fact does not make him legally interested in the action, nor in the result thereof. It was not an action against him, and no judgment which he could render therein would in the least determine, or affect, his own property rights or interests. The only judgment that could properly be given in the action would be a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for such damages as the court should find he had suffered by the deprivation of the water, or a judgment in favor of the defendant that the plaintiff take nothing. No adjudication as to the relative rights of the defendant company and the other persons alleged to have or claim prior rights in the river would have been proper. The interest in an action which disqualifies a judge who possesses it from trying the cause is a property or personal interest, an interest in the event of the suit, in the judgment which may be rendered therein. It must affect him, either in person or property, directly or indirectly. A mere sentimental interest, or an interest in the facts which the issues make it necessary for him to determine, which may tend to induce him to give more weight to the evidence for one party than to the evidence for the other, respecting such facts, is not the interest which will disqualify him. It may tend to show his bias or prejudice, and he may be disqualified on that ground, but it will not be sufficient to disqualify him on the ground that he is interested in the action, or in the result thereof, or on the ground that he is of kin to other persons in a similar situation, or that he had been the attorney for such persons. The adjudication he might make in the case, respecting the amount of water required to supply his prior right, and the consequent amount to which the Lassen Irrigating Company was entitled, would be of no benefit whatever to him in any subsequent action or controversy. The case is therefore unlike North Bloomfield M. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315.

With respect to the effect of these circumstances as evidence of bias and prejudice of the judge sufficient to disqualify him on that ground, we may say that whatever bias or prejudice they would create in the mind of the judge concerning the action would be in favor of the Lassen Irrigation Company, not against it, and that a party cannot insist, as a matter of right, on the calling in of another jugde, solely on the ground that the judge presiding is prejudiced in his favor. He cannot obtain a writ of prohibition to prevent judicial action favorable to himself. The effort of the company, on the trial of the case, would be to prove that by reason of the water taken by Judge Kelly and the other holders of prior rights, there was not enough left to give Torrey more than he actually received, and, for that purpose, to show the prior rights to be as large as possible. The bias of the judge from his ownership of these prior rights and his relationship to the other owners, if it affected him at all, would lead him to enlarge the prior rights, and thereby to favor the company in this action rather than Torrey. This would cause no injury to the company.

Another ground of the motion was that other persons had claims against the company for the delivery of water from the company, or for damages, identical with those of the plaintiff, Torrey, and that Judge Kelly "has counselled with parties holding and making such claims, * * * and advised them of the legality and effect of their claims." It does not appear from this averment that he counselled or advised them in a professional capacity, or otherwise than as a friend, but, in any event, the statute does not disqualify a judge for counselling or advising with persons who are not parties to the action. Code Civ. Proc. § 170. It does not appear whether the advice he gave was for or against the company, and therefore the averment is not sufficient to show actual bias.

We do not think the affidavit and pleadings are sufficient to show that the judge is disqualified, or that any cause is shown for prohibition.

The writ is denied.

In re DAVIS' ESTATE et al. (S. F. 4,316.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 17, 1907.)

APPEAL—RECORD — CERTIFIED TRANSCRIPT—DESTRUCTION.

Where the Supreme Court acquired jurisdiction of an appeal by the service of notice, such jurisdiction was neither affected nor lost by the destruction of the certified transcript after argument and submission of the appeal without any proceeding for the restoration thereof.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Judicial accounting by the administrator of the estate of Jacob Z. Davis, deceased. A judgment striking the answer and petition of Laura E. Tracy and others filed in response to a petition for distribution accompanying the administrator's final act was affirmed on appeal (86 Pac. 183), after which appellants moved to vacate the decision and judgment on the appeal and to recall the remittitur. Denied.

Wm. T. Baggett and Horace W. Philbrook (W. J. Bartnett, of counsel), for appellants. Campbell, Metson & Campbell and Thomas H. Breeze, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is a motion to vacate the decision and judgment of this court rendered on appeal in the above cause, and to recall the remittitur.

It appears from the showing made in support of the motion that a duly certified and printed transcript of the record on appeal in the cause was filed in this court on June 1, 1905; that thereafter briefs were filed, and on February 27, 1906, the cause, being regularly set down on the calendar for hearing on that day, was argued orally by the attorneys for the respective parties and submitted in department one of this court for decision; that during the earthquake and consequent conflagration in the city of San Francisco in April, 1906, the office of the clerk of this court, with its contents, including the certified transcript on appeal in this case, was destroyed; that no order has ever been made by this court restoring such transcript, nor has such record in fact been restored; that on May 21, 1906, a month after such record was destroyed, the justices of department one of this court, before whom the cause had been argued and submitted on February 27, 1906, signed and filed with the clerk of this court a decision in the cause, affirming the decree of the trial court, and on June 23, 1906, the clerk issued a remittitur in the case.

It is the claim of appellants on this motion that the decision and judgment of this court, having been made against them after the transcript on appeal had been destroyed by fire and without any restoration of it, is void. We cannot agree with this view. The jurisdiction of this court on appeal is not determined by the presence or absence of a copy of the record from the trial court—the transcript on appeal. It acquires that jurisdiction immediately upon the filing of the notice of appeal in the lower court, acquires it for all purposes, and it is not divested of its jurisdiction, nor is such jurisdiction suspended, either on account of the failure to file a transcript on appeal, or the loss or destruction of it after it is filed. It is true the statute provides for a certification to this court of the record made in the trial court and upon which the appeal to this court is to be heard, but that has nothing to do with conferring jurisdiction upon this court over the appeal. That is acquired as soon as the notice of appeal is filed, and this court may exercise such appellate jurisdiction long before any transcript is filed, and independent of it. It may dismiss the appeal, stay execution in the court below, or stay further proceedings therein, and make all necessary orders in aid of the appeal. The transcript on appeal is but the statutory method of bringing to the attention of the court the particular proceedings and matters which took place in the trial court and which this court is asked to review, and this is the sole purpose and function of the transcript. As supplemental to the statute requiring such certification of the original record of the trial court to this court, our rules require that a certain number of copies, in addition to the original, shall be filed with the clerk of this court. These are vouched for by the appellant in each case as true copies, and, in this particular case, were in the possession of the court when its decision was made. We simply mention this as indicating that, while the original transcript in this case was destroyed, still duplicate copies, which had been filed with the original, were in the possession of the court when the case was under consideration and decided. Independent of this, however, we do not see how the fact of the destruction of the original transcript in any manner affected the jurisdiction of the court to dispose of the appeal. Our jurisdiction was not acquired by the filing of the transcript, and was not suspended by its destruction. That transcript was on file when the cause was argued and submitted for decision. As the only scope and purpose of the transcript is to present to the court the points involved in the appeal, it had served its purpose with the submission of the cause. In the subsequent preparation of its opinion the court could rely upon its memory of the points involved as presented in the original transcript, or refer to any copy of such transcript on file under the rules. As the filing of the transcript was not necessary to confer jurisdiction upon this court, neither was its continued existence necessary in order to authorize this court to render its decision on submission of the cause.

The motion is denied.

PRINE v. DUNCAN. (Civ. 322.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 23, 1907.)

APPEAL — MOTION TO DISMISS — FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT.

Under the rule of the appellate court requiring the transcript in a civil action to be filed within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, if there be no proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or a statement which may be urged in support of the appeal and the rule providing that, if the transcript be not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal may be dismissed, where appellant did not file a transcript within the time prescribed, or at all, and, after the trial court entered an order dismissing all proceedings for the settlement of the statement to be used on motion for new trial and all proceedings for a new trial, did not take an appeal therefrom within the time allowed by law, the appeal from the judgment will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2744.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; W. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by David Prine against Margaret A. Duncan. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Dismissed.

C. F. Purkitt and C. L. Donohoe, for appellant. Thos. Rutledge, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It appears that final judgment was entered in this case on January 15, 1906. On July 13, 1906, the defendant served notice of appeal and on July 14, 1906, filed herein an undertaking on appeal. No bill of exceptions, or statement, or statement on appeal has been settled or filed. On November 17, 1906, the trial court made and entered its order dismissing all proceedings by defendant for the purpose of settling her statement on motion for a new trial. Notice of appeal from said last-named order was not filed herein until January 17, 1907. Appellant has not requested the clerk of the court to certify to a correct transcript of the record in said cause. The papers on the motion to dismiss the appeal were filed in this court February 8, 1907, prior to which time service of notice was duly made upon appellant.

The ground of the motion is "that appellant has not filed in this court a transcript of the record in said cause or any transcript, and that on the 17th day of November, 1906, the said superior court of the county of Colusa in said cause entered its order dismissing all proceedings then pending for the settlement of the statement on said motion for a new trial, and all proceedings for a new trial of said cause instituted by said appellant, and that no appeal has been taken by said appellant from said last-mentioned order within the time allowed by law." Appellant makes no answer to said motion and has failed to appear. Rule 2 of this court (78 Pac. vii) requires that the transcript in a civil action be filed within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, provided that there be then pending no proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or a statement which may be urged in support of such appeal. Here, whatever of such proceedings as had been pending were dismissed November 17, 1906, and were no longer pending. Rule 5 (78 Pac. viii) provides that, if the transcript or the record be not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal may be dismissed on motion, upon notice given. If, however, the transcript though not filed within the time prescribed, be on file at the time such notice is given, that fact shall be sufficient answer to the motion.

There being no answer to the motion in any form and the facts above set forth being uncontroverted, the appeal from the judgment must be dismissed; and it is so ordered.

Appeal — Time for — Order Denying New Trial.

Under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3, an appeal from an order dismissing proceedings for the settlement of a statement to be used on motion for new trial and all proceedings for a new trial may only be taken within 60 days after the order is entered.

Action by David Prine against Margaret A. Duncan. Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Dismissed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial. This is the same case as No. 322, 90 Pac. 712.

It appeared that on November 17, 1906, the trial court made an order denying defendant's motion to be relieved from her default in the matter of presenting her statement on motion for a new trial and the proposed amendments of plaintiff thereto within the time required by law; and the court further ordered, on the motion of plaintiff, that all proceedings for the settlement of the defendant on motion for a new trial be dismissed. On January 17, 1907, defendant filed her notice of appeal from said order of November 17, 1906, and on the same day filed her undertaking on said appeal. No bill of exceptions or statement on appeal from said order has been settled or filed, and defendant has not requested the clerk to certify a correct transcript in said cause.

The ground of the motion is that the appeal was not taken, and the notice of the appeal was not filed with the clerk, within the time allowed by law. Appellant makes no answer to the motion and has failed to appear. The appeal was taken on the sixty-first day after the day on which the order was entered, and was not taken in time. Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3.

The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Frank H. Smith, Judge.

Action by W. H. Adams against Arthur Thornton. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See 82 Pac. 215.

Nicol & Orr and J. M. C. Murphy, for appellant. Louttit & Middlecoff, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This action was brought in replevin to recover 186¾ sacks of dried apricots, or their value, in case a delivery could not be had, together with damages for their detention. When plaintiff rested, a motion for nonsuit was made, and the court granted the motion "solely for the reason that the court feels bound by the decision of the appellate court for the Third district rendered on the prior appeal in this cause to hold that plaintiff and defendant are tenants in common of the property described in the complaint, and that this court should grant a nonsuit on such grounds."

In the decision by this court on the former appeal it was held that, "while the agreement set out and under which the parties were operating is called therein a lease, yet under the authority of Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 542, 79 Am. Dec. 147, it must be deemed only a cropping contract, and the parties are co-tenants in the fruits raised during the time of the contract, and each has an equal right with the other to the possession of the whole of said fruit, and, under the general rule, neither can maintain a suit against the other for the possession of the fruit," and the judgment was reversed on the ground that the motion for a nonsuit should have been granted. It is claimed by respondent that the aforesaid decision of this court is the law of the case, and that we must affirm the action of the trial court in granting the nonsuit in consonance with the mandate of the appellate court.

Among the decisions declaring the effect and scope of such a judgment as bearing upon the subsequent history of the litigation, the cases of More v. Calkins, 95 Cal. 436, 30 Pac. 583, 29 Am. St. Rep. 128, and McGraw v. Friend & Terry Co., 133 Cal. 589, 65 Pac. 1051, are directly in point. In the former, as we find in the syllabus, it is held that "the construction placed upon a deed of trust by the Supreme Court in its decision reversing the judgment and remanding the case for a new trial * * * is the law of the case, and the question of its correctness will not be considered upon a second appeal." And so here we cannot call in question the construction placed by this court in the former appeal upon the written contract between the parties. We are bound to hold that it constituted a cropping contract, and that by virtue of its provisions the parties became tenants in common in and to all the fruit produced, which was the subject-matter of said contract.

The only remaining question is whether the determination by the appellate court that claim and delivery would not lie in view of the evidence disclosed by the record, and that the nonsuit should have been granted at the former trial, precludes us from any inquiry into the evidence taken at the last trial to find the absence of support for the action of the court in granting the motion for a nonsuit. The proper solution of this question depends upon the consideration whether the evidence was the same or substantially the same at both trials. In the McGraw Case, supra, it is said that "in an action for negligence a motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence for the plaintiff establishes his contributory negligence, so as to preclude a recovery, raises a question of law; and the decision upon a former appeal, that a nonsuit should have been granted upon that ground, is the law of the case upon a second appeal when the evidence for the plaintiff does not warrant a different conclusion." And in Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131, it is said that "the rule has no application when the facts presented on the second appeal are materially different from those on which the decision was rendered"; citing Nieto v. Carpenter, 21 Cal. 455; Meeks v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 56 Cal. 513, 38 Am. Rep. 67; Cross v. Zellerbach, 63 Cal. 623, and Dodge v. Gaylord, 53 Ind. 365.

Turning to the record before us, we find the evidence at the latter trial materially different from that at the former. One important circumstance is disclosed which was not presented before. This constitutes a significant feature which cannot be ignored in the determination of the question whether the action can be maintained between tenants in common. It is this: After the fruit was cured and packed, it was divided into two equal parts of the same grade and value, and placed in separate piles in the house occupied by plaintiff. In view of this distinction between the two trials, was the court below justified in granting the motion for a nonsuit? The plaintiff testified: "I was in the occupation and possession of those lands during the year 1902, and had been for two years prior thereto. I had been farming them and caring for orchards thereon. I know the fruit that is mentioned in the complaint. It was grown on that orchard during the year 1902. I picked, cut, dried, and cured it. When it was cured, I sacked it in fruit sacks secured and paid for by me. After it was cut, cured, and sacked, I divided it into two equal parts, and piled it in a house on the premises occupied by me. There was a division of the dried fruit into separate piles, each pile having a separate letter. The sacks were all of the same weight and the same value. They were piled so that each pile was distinguishable from the other. After the fruit had been divided and piled as I have stated, I offered to deliver Mr. Thornton the one-half thereof. He refused to accept it. After I had offered to deliver it to him, and while I was away, he came and took all the fruit and hauled it away. I never got possession of any of it again. * * * I demanded the return of it, a Thornton refused to return it. From the time it was picked it remained in my possession until it was taken away by Thornton."

In Balch v. Jones, 61 Cal. 237, it is said: "An action of replevin or of claim and delivery of the common property is not maintainable by one tenant in common against another, nor is trover, unless there has been such a loss, destruction, or disposal of the property as amounts to a conversion, or the property is divisible in its nature and ascertainable by measurement, weight or count. In such a case a tenant in common may demand of his co-tenants, having possession of the whole, his share, and, on refusal or conversion, he may sue in trover." In Wattles v. Dubois, 67 Mich. 313, 34 N. W. 672, it is held that "the refusal by a tenant to deliver to his landlord his half of the unthreshed grain grown on the leased premises is a waiver of the tenant's right to possession for the purposes of such delivery, and the landlord has a right to the immediate possession of his half, and may maintain replevin therefor." Here, it will be observed, the defendant refused to accept his one-half which plaintiff offered to deliver. In Sutherland v. Carter, 52 Mich. 473, 18 N. W. 224, the court said: "The plaintiff was tenant in common of the grain, and after it was threshed she was entitled to her one-half thereof, and it was Carter's duty to deliver it to her when she demanded it upon the farm. It was her property, and the action will lie in such a case under the facts found in this record"; citing a large number of cases. In Morgan v. Hedges, 4 Colo. 531, this language is used: "The stipulations in the articles of agreement that appellant, Morgan, should sell the products of the ranch and keep a full account of all receipts and disbursements, involves an agreement for their possession to that end. Where tenants in common of chattels agree that one shall have exclusive possession of the chattels, the tenant so entitled may maintain replevin against his cotenant."

In the case at bar the agreement provided for the possession of the fruit by plaintiff and his delivery of one-half of the dried fruit to defendant. See, also, Newton v. Gardner, 24 Wis. 232. In Hurff v. Hires, 40 N. J. Law, 588, 29 Am. Rep. 282, it is declared: "There is a clear and well-settled distinction between the individual rights of several parties in goods of uniform kind and quality, and in those in which there is no uniformity in these respects. It is recognized in cases of a co-tenancy of personal property, readily divisible by weight or measurement into portions absolutely alike in quality and value. In such cases, either tenant may take his proper proportion, and it will be regarded as a proper severance so long as he does not take more than his share; but the rule is otherwise in case of property not severable. In that event the partition must be by agreement, or proceeding in equity." In Cobbey on Replevin, § 238, the rule is stated as follows: "An action will not lie for an undivided interest in a chattel, nor can such tenant in common sue alone as against a stranger in possession. The plaintiff must have a right to a whole and entire interest. A different rule prevails where the property can be separated into aliquot parts, and the interest is easily separable, as one-third of 60 bushels of wheat. Where corn in a single pile or crib, owned by two tenants in common, is in the exclusive possession of one of such tenants, but both being equally entitled to the possession thereof, the other joint owner, if his co-tenant refuses a division when properly demanded, may recover his portion of the grain by replevin." "Replevin will lie for separate and distinct articles capable of identification and not undivided portions of separate lots." Phipps v. Taylor, 15 Or. 484, 16 Pac. 171.

It would seem that in the present instance the evidence brings the plaintiff clearly within the exception to the general rule that one tenant cannot maintain an action for replevin against his co-tenant. All the property under the agreement was rightfully in the possession of plaintiff. He had divided it equally, and one part belonged to him. He offered to deliver to defendant the portion to which he was entitled, and defendant refused to accept it. During the absence of plaintiff defendant comes and takes all the property, and refuses to surrender the one-half when it is demanded of him. If these facts do not show cause to institute the action, it is difficult to conceive what would be sufficient. It is well settled that a motion for a nonsuit is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, that the evidence must be viewed most favorably for the plaintiff, and, if it tends to prove all the material allegations of the complaint, the motion should be denied. It may be admitted that the testimony of plaintiff at the former trial is not altogether consistent with his testimony at the latter, but the question of the credibility of the witness is not involved here, and it is to be remembered that the want of harmony in the testimony of a witness at two separate trials may of itself render inapplicable the doctrine of "the law of the case."

No doubt the learned trial judge would have denied the motion if he had not felt constrained by the former decision in the case, but we think the evidence is materially different, and hence that the motion should have been denied.

The judgment is reversed.

On Rehearing.

BURNETT, J. Respondent's petition for a rehearing seems to proceed upon the theory that the affirmative defense set up in the answer was establishd at the trial. The truth is that plaintiff was the only witness examined and his evidence tended to prove the allegations of the complaint, and not any allegation of the answer inconsistent therewith. Upon the trial of all the issues in the case it may be that defendant will be entitled to judgment, but we still think that the motion for a nonsuit was improperly granted. We are not inclined to the view that we should not consider the contention that the law of the case is not applicable because the point was not raised in the opening brief. We see no reason why we should not consider it, though it was made, not in anticipation of defendant's argument, but in answer thereto.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

5 Cal. App. 415

HARRISON v. HORTON, Auditor. (Civ. 349.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 18, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ASSISTANT CORPORATION COUNSEL—COMPENSATION.

San Francisco Charter, art. 5, c. 3, § 3, authorizes the district attorney to appoint seven assistants, to receive specified annual salaries. Plaintiff was appointed assistant under article 16, § 35, empowering the supervisors to authorize the appointment of additional deputies to any officer. Article 3, c. 1, §§ 6, 7, prohibit, except as otherwise provided by the charter, the drawing of money from the treasury unless on appropriations by the supervisors, and provides that no warrant shall be drawn except upon an unexhausted specific appropriation. The supervisors set apart a fixed sum for a fiscal year for the salaries of "the district attorney, his assistants," etc. Held that, after plaintiff's appointment, his demand for salary for his services passed beyond the supervisors' control, that he was included in the appropriation, and that it cannot be said, because it was enough for the officers named, with the exception of one assistant, the intention was to exclude him, since he was as much an assistant as either of the seven appointed under article 5, c. 3, § 3.

2. SAME—ASSISTANT IN OFFICE.

San Francisco charter creates the position of assistant district attorney, and article 5, c. 3, § 3, requires certain qualifications of him. Pol. Code, § 865, provides that assistants and deputies shall perform the duties of their principals. The assistant attorney's duties are fixed by charter and statute, and are continuing. Held, that an assistant attorney, whose salary had been fixed by the supervisors, was an officer entitled to compensation.

Appeal from Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Robert W. Harrison against S. W. Horton, as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Richard C. Harrison, for appellant. Maurice L. Asher, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This appeal is from a judgment denying appellant's application for a writ of mandamus, to compel the respondent to audit a demand upon the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco for the salary of appellant, as assistant district attorney, for the month of July, 1906. It is conceded that there is money in the general fund in the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco sufficient to pay the claim, that such money has not been appropriated to the payment of any claim or demand upon the said treasury, and that proper demand has been made upon the respondent.

The respondent contends that the board of supervisors had made no specific appropriation of money for the payment of appellant's salary for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1906, and upon this ground claims that his refusal was justified, and this was the view taken by the judge of the superior court. It will therefore be necessary to consider the nature of the demand, and the law relative thereto. Under the charter of the city and county of San Francisco (section 3, c. 3, art. 5) the district attorney is authorized to appoint seven assistant district attorneys, who shall each receive an annual salary of $3,600. The district attorney appointed seven assistant district attorneys under the authority above cited, and appellant was not one of the seven so appointed. The charter further provides (section 35, art. 16) that, when any officer shall require additional deputies, application shall be made to the mayor, who shall make investigation as to the necessity for such additional deputies, and, if he find the same necessary he may recommend to the supervisors to authorize the appointment of such additional deputy, and thereupon the supervisors, by an affirmative vote of not less than fourteen members, may authorize such appointment and provide for the compensation of such deputy. It will thus be seen that it was the intention of the framers of the charter to prevent the appointment of deputies unless deemed necessary by the principal officer, the mayor, and 14 of the supervisors. Application having been made by the district attorney to the mayor, and the mayor, finding it to be necessary, recommended to the supervisors the appointment of an additional assistant district attorney. Upon such recommendation the board of supervisors, on the 29th day of May, 1905, duly adopted an ordinance authorizing the district attorney to appoint an additional assistant district attorney at a salary of $250 per month, which ordinance was duly approved by the mayor. On January 8, 1906, the district attorney, in pursuance of the charter, and the ordinance so adopted by the board of supervisors, duly appointed the appellant such additional assistant district attorney. Appellant duly qualified, took the oath of office, and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and his appointment has not been revoked or annulled. He performed the duties required of him as such assistant district attorney for the month of July, 1906, and has never been paid therefor. Having performed the services for the city, by the express appointment of the district attorney under the authority of the charter, he should be paid, unless the charter plainly prohibits such payment. The contention is that the payment is prohibited by reason of the charter (sections 6, 7, c. 1, art. 3), which provides: "Except as otherwise provided in this charter, no money shall be drawn from the treasury unless in consequence of appropriations made by the supervisors, and on warrants duly drawn thereon by the auditor. No warrant shall be drawn except upon an unexhausted specific appropriation." Does this provision apply to the salary of an assistant district attorney?

The appellant, after his appointment and qualification, held the office by the same title and from the same source as the seven other assistant district attorneys. His compensation was different, and perhaps the duration of his term less certain; but he was one of the assistant district attorneys, and may be said to be the eighth one. Seven were appointed under the direct authority of the charter. Appellant was appointed under the authority of the ordinance, which, in turn, was authorized by the charter. After the ordinance was passed, it must be read into and as a part of the charter for the purposes of this case, and when so read the district attorney had the authority to appoint eight assistant district attorneys. The charter is itself a law of the state. People v. Williamson, 135 Cal. 418, 67 Pac. 504. The ordinance was a statute of the city and county of San Francisco, consistent with and authorized by the charter, and when the ordinance was passed and the appellant appointed he received his appointment under a law of the state, to wit, the charter. The appointment is of the same weight and dignity as if the ordinance had been embodied in the charter at the time of its adoption. Murphy v. City of San Luis Obispo, 119 Cal. 625, 51 Pac. 1085, 39 L. R. A. 444; City of San Luis Obispo v. Fitzgerald, 126 Cal. 279, 58 Pac. 699. An assistant district attorney is in fact a deputy district attorney. People v. Turner, 85 Cal. 432, 24 Pac. 857; Garnett v. Brooks, 136 Cal. 585, 69 Pac. 298. The charter contains the provision (section 15, c. 1, art. 3) that "the board of supervisors shall authorize the disbursement of all public moneys except as otherwise specifically provided in this charter." The charter specifically provides for the salary of the district attorney and his seven assistants. When the ordinance was passed, it specifically provided for the salary of the eighth assistant, and this with the direct authorization of the supervisors. We cannot persuade ourselves that the salaries of the district attorney and of his assistants shall go unpaid because the board of supervisors did not specifically set apart a fund sufficient for their payment in full. The charter does not contemplate that the machinery of the district attorney's office shall be stopped by reason of the errors or willful neglect of the board of supervisors—an independent branch of the city government. The object of the charter is to provide safeguards against the willful and careless expenditure of the public moneys by the board of supervisors, but the board of supervisors has nothing to do with the payment of the salaries of the officers of the city. Such salaries are fixed by law and must be paid.

In Cashin v. Dunn, 58 Cal. 581, the auditor refused to audit the salary of plaintiff, who had been appointed a deputy in the office of the superintendent of streets, on the ground that the board of supervisors in fixing the tax levy for the current fiscal year had not appropriated a sufficient amount to pay the salaries of the deputies appointed under the law, and that the allowance was prohibited by the act of February 25, 1878, known as the "one-twelfth act." The court held that the "one-twelfth act" had no application "to the auditing and payment of demands for salaries of officers whose appointment is provided for and salaries fixed by law." St. 1877–78, p. 111, c. 101. The writ was ordered to issue. In Welch v. Strother, 74 Cal. 413, 16 Pac. 22, the defendant refused to audit the demand of the plaintiff for his salary as deputy clerk for the month of July, 1887. The appropriation made by the board of supervisors was insufficient, and the "one-twelfth act" was relied upon. The court said: "Salaries are not liabilities against the treasury which rest upon any authorization or contract by the board of supervisors, or any other officer. They are fixed by law, and not subject to the control of such officers. They are payable out of the general fund, and are not limited to any particular part of that fund which the board may choose to set apart for their payment." The writ was issued. In Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412, 33 Pac. 1128, which was an application for a writ of mandate against the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco to compel the payment of the plaintiff's salary as chief clerk of the register of voters, it was held that such salary was payable out of the general fund without regard to the revenues of the previous years. The opinion states: "Our conclusion is that the payment of the salary of a public officer whose office has been created and salary fixed by law, either statutory or constitutional, is not within the provision of said section 18 of article 9 of the Constitution; that his salary is to be paid out of said general fund when there is sufficient money therein without regard to revenues of separate years; and that it was a duty specifically enjoined by law upon respondent to pay the said audited demand of petitioner when it was presented on said 3d day of July." To the same effect, see City and County of San Francisco v. Broderick, 111 Cal. 302, 43 Pac. 960; People v. Black, 120 Cal. 553, 52 Pac. 840; Stevens v. Truman, 127 Cal. 155, 59 Pac. 397. The principle upon which all the above cases were decided is that the restrictions which the organic act imposes upon the setting aside of funds and payment of money out of the treasury do not apply to the payment of demands arising out of liabilities which are placed by law beyond the control of the board of supervisors. The board of supervisors had control in the first place of the question as to whether or not they would authorize the appointment of appellant as assistant district attorney. After having authorized his appointment, and after his receiving the appointment and performing the services, the demand for the salary in payment of such services is beyond the control of the supervisors. The cases cited were all relative to the restrictions of the Constitution or the one-twelfth act, but they apply in their reasoning with equal force to the charter of the city and county of San Francisco. The provisions discussed in the cases cited were as stringent as the provisions of the charter.

The late case of Jackson v. Baehr, 138 Cal. 266, 71 Pac. 167, arose after the adoption of the present charter. It was there held that the fact that the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco had set apart a special fund for the fees of the trial jurors in criminal cases, and that this fund was exhausted, is no defense to a mandamus to compel the auditor to draw his warrant upon the county treasurer for fees of jurors for each day's attendance upon the court. It is there said: "It is claimed by the defendant that the board of supervisors has set apart $16,000 for trial jurors in criminal cases, and that this fund is exhausted. That he is expressly forbidden by the charter of the city and county to draw any warrant except upon an unexhausted specific appropriation. It is sufficient in answer to this to say that the superior courts are state courts, and criminal cases concern the state and are state affairs. The charter provides that the income and revenue of the city shall be apportioned and kept in separate funds. Among the various funds mentioned is the general fund, which shall consist of moneys received into the treasury and not specifically appropriated to any other fund." It was certainly not intended by the charter to prohibit the payment of any claim out of the general fund, and yet this would be the result of respondent's contention that "no warrant can be drawn except upon an unexhausted specific appropriation." It has been held that the controller cannot refuse to draw a warrant for a salary fixed by law merely because the Legislature had failed to make a specific appropriation. That the fixing of the salary payable monthly out of any money not otherwise appropriated was sufficient. Humbert v. Dunn, 84 Cal. 57, 24 Pac. 111.

We have discussed the case thus far without reference to the question that an appropriation was in fact made. The bill of exceptions shows that prior to July 1, 1906, the board of supervisors made a budget, and appropriated for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1906, "$36,200 for the salaries of district attorney, his assistants, clerks, stenographer, and bond and warrant clerks." Appellant was one of the assistant district attorneys, and included in the appropriation. It cannot be said that, because the appropriation was enough for the officers named with the exception of one assistant district attorney, the intention was to exclude this appellant. He was as much an assistant as either of the seven first appointed. The appropriation may become exhausted before the end of the fiscal year, but it certainly was not short for the very first month of the year.

Respondent claims that the appellant was not an officer, that his employment was only temporary, and that no annual salary was fixed. There is no merit in such contention. The charter (section 3, c. 3, art. 5) provides that the assistant district attorneys shall each, at the time of his appointment, be qualified to practice law, and to practice in all the courts of the state, and must have been so qualified for at least two years next preceding his appointment. Under the Political Code (section 865) the assistant or deputy possesses the powers and may perform the duties of his principal. The position was created under the charter, and by its express authority. The compensation was fixed by the body authorized in the charter to fix it. The duties are fixed by the charter and by statute and are continuing duties. Such duties will continue while the place continues, although the person might be changed. This in our opinion made the appellant an officer within the rule prescribed by the authorities. Mechem on Public Officers, § 38; U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. (U. S.) 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747; Patton v. Board of Public Health, 127 Cal. 397, 59 Pac. 702, 78 Am. St. Rep. 66.

The judgment is reversed.

5 Cal. App. 451

MINER v. RICKEY. (Civ. 284.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 25, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

Where no abuse of discretion is shown, the denial of a motion to amend a pleading will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3825.]

2. SAME—AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

The denial of a motion to amend a pleading is not prejudicial where the case is tried on the theory that the issue sought to be set up in the amendment is in issue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4106-4108.]

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CERTAINTY.

Where, in an action for legal services, the defendant relied on a settlement of the claims for services, instructions containing the expression "all accounts prior to said settlement" was not uncertain; it referring to all services performed prior to the settlement.

4. SAME—ISSUES—PLEADINGS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for legal services, the complaint was framed on the theory that plaintiff rendered services for defendant individually, and defendant relied on denials in his answer of the allegations of the complaint, without setting up the defense that any services were rendered for a firm of which he was a partner, but evidence showing a partnership liability was received without objection, defendant was entitled to an instruction that if the services were rendered at the request of defendant for the firm, and plaintiff knew that the request was made for the firm, the verdict should be for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 587–595.]

5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—ACTION FOR SERVICES.

The value of legal services in an action for compensation therefor cannot be shown by declarations of third persons not under oath.

6. EVIDENCE—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In an action for legal services pursuant to an employment by defendant, the testimony of a witness that he was authorized by a third person to employ an attorney to assist in the prosecution of cases, that he consulted plaintiff, and employed him, was hearsay.

7. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—ACTION FOR SERVICES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for legal services in suits involving state lands, the testimony of a witness to a conversation with the land register, in which he stated that the interest on school lands sometimes was not demanded for a number of years, was inadmissible to rebut an unfavorable inference drawn against plaintiff from the fact that the cases in which he claimed to have performed services were allowed to remain on the calendar undisposed of for years, when, on motion, they could have been dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mono County; Clark Howard, Judge.

Action by R. S. Miner against T. B. Rickey. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Parker & Parker and Jas. F. Peck, for appellant. Richard S. Miner, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought for legal services and was tried before a jury. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $480. The appeal is from the judgment on a bill of exceptions.

The first point urged in the brief of appellant for reversal is based upon the ruling of the court in denying the motion to suspend the trial until the determination of another action pending in the Circuit Court of the United States. We understand, however, from the oral argument that appellant has abandoned this position, and therefore we shall not discuss it.

Complaint is made of the refusal of the court to allow the defendant to amend his answer. The motion to amend, it is claimed, was promptly made at the close of plaintiff's case, and was based upon the testimony of plaintiff himself. By the amendment it was proposed to set up a "settlement of all the claims and demands existing between the plaintiff and Richard Kirman and T. B. Rickey as copartners, in which settlement a balance of account was struck between the plaintiff and defendant, and in which settlement there was found to be due and owing from the said Richard Kirman and T. B. Rickey as copartners to the plaintiff the sum of $168.50, which said last-mentioned sum was then and there paid by defendant to the plaintiff and received by plaintiff in payment and discharge of the said balance so then found to be due by said settlement." The pertinency of defendant's application to amend is pointed by his contention that, if he incurred any liability at all to plaintiff, it was solely as a member of the firm of Kirman & Rickey, a copartnership. As often held, the power of the court should be liberally exercised in allowing amendments so as to present causes upon their merits, and yet, where no abuse of discretion is shown, the action of the lower court in denying a motion to amend should not be disturbed by the appellate tribunal. While the motion in the present instance might well have been granted, yet it is manifest that the ruling did not prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant, as the cause was tried upon the theory that the settlement was in issue.

The criticism by appellant of the instructions given by the court, and found at folios 933 and 936 of the transcript, we deem inapt and unjustifiable. We think there is no uncertainty in the expression, "all accounts prior to said settlement." It obviously refers to all services for said firm performed by plaintiff prior to said settlement. It would not be contended that the settlement would affect any services rendered thereafter or performed at any time for the defendant individually.

Again, it is urged that the instruction defining a partnership liability and also the following should have been given to the jury: "This is an action against T. B. Rickey individually, and, if the jury find from the evidence that the items sued upon in this action were rendered by plaintiff, and that such services were rendered by plaintiff at the request of the defendant, who at the time of making the request was acting as one of the copartners of a copartnership composed of Richard Kirman and T. B. Rickey, and that the plaintiff knew at the time of such request that the defendant's request was made as such copartner for the copartnership, then your verdict should be for the defendant." To appreciate the force of this contention, it should be remembered that the complaint was framed upon the theory that plaintiff was employed by and rendered services for the defendant individually. The defendant relied simply upon the denials in his answer of the material allegations of the complaint. No affirmative defense was set up, except one in relation to the motion to postpone the action, which at the trial was withdrawn. The evidence introduced by plaintiff was sufficient to support his claim. Defendant's evidence, received without objection, tended to prove that whatever liability existed in favor of plaintiff was against a partnership of which the defendant and the said Richard Kirman were the members. In this state it has been held that, when "several persons contract together with the same party for one and the same act, they shall be regarded as jointly and not individually or separately liable in the absence of any words to show that a distinct as well as entire liability was intended to fasten upon the promissors. Especially is this the rule as to the legal liability of partners upon their partnership obligations." Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 620, 11 Pac. 456, and cases cited. It might be contended that, where defendant claims as a defense that the obligation is joint and not separate, he should plead it affirmatively, but the obvious answer here is that it was treated as though an issue in the case. The evidence of the partnership liability was received without objection, and hence defendant was entitled to the instruction to which we have referred, as it was addressed to the question of a material variance between the complaint and the evidence.

Again, hearsay testimony of a prejudicial nature was admitted over the objection of defendant. The most serious error in this respect is in relation to the testimony of one David Hays. Nearly all of his testimony was improperly admitted, but we shall refer to only a few of the questions and answers disclosed by the record. He was asked: "Were you authorized by Turner and Dobin, the plaintiffs in these actions, to employ an attorney to help in the prosecution of these cases?" He answered substantially that he was. Again: "Now state what you did do, if anything." The witness answered: "Well, I went to different persons that were practicing law to engage them to act in cases for the association. Mr. Miner: To whom did you go? A. Well, I went to Judge Goodall * * * and Mr. Miner, the plaintiff. Q. Now, how often did you come to me and consult me in that matter? A. I think I may have gone to you, one time or another, five or six times, and you stated, 'I don't know as I have the right——' Mr. Miner: State what I said generally. A. Employed on the other side in some of those instances of which I speak by Kirman & Rickey. Mr. Miner: Was any amount, was any sum mentioned, that I could get, if you recollect, providing I would prosecute the land cases? A. Well, I suggested that you might make a few thousand dollars by serving the sheep men association, that we needed you. You said you could not take any case."

It is idle to argue the incompetency of the foregoing testimony. It is hearsay pure and simple. The effect it might have upon the jury it is easy to surmise. The plaintiff understood its significance, because he made three futile efforts to induce the trial judge to admit it, but at the fourth attempt his pertinacity and importunity were finally rewarded—but upon what ground it does not appear. Plaintiff, in the oral argument, admitted that the ruling is somewhat questionable, but suggested that the evidence might be admissible to prove the value of his services. But it is clear that it was not addressed to the issue as to the reasonable value of his services. But, if it related to that matter, it would still be hearsay and inadmissible. The value of services cannot be shown by declarations of third persons not under oath. The evidence was undoubtedly offered to corroborate plaintiff's testimony as tending to increase the probability that he was employed by defendant. We cannot say, of course, what weight was attached to this testimony by the jury, but by its admission, in the somewhat turgid phraseology of appellant, "every rule of evidence was violated and the defendant's rights ruthlessly disregarded."

Mr. Joe A. Brown, another witness, was allowed also over objection to testify to a conversation with the register of the state land office, in which he stated that the "interest on school lands sometimes was not demanded for a number of years, and there couldn't only be two reasons for that—one would be that the land had not been listed to the state, and the other that there might be suits pending." This evidence was offered for the purpose of rebutting any unfavorable inference that might be drawn against plaintiff from the fact that the cases against defendant, and in which plaintiff claims to have performed the services that are the basis for the present suit, were allowed to remain on the calendar undisposed of for years when upon motion they could have been dismissed. The objection to this evidence likewise should have been sustained.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. SWAIN. (Cr. 38.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 22, 1907.)

1. Criminal Law—Preliminary Examination—Magistrates—Jurisdiction.

Pen. Code, § 807, defines a magistrate as an officer having power to issue a warrant for the arrest of one charged with an offense; section 808 authorizes justices of the peace to act as magistrates; section 811 provides that when an information is laid before a magistrate of the commission of a public offense, he must examine on oath the prosecutor and witnesses; section 872 provides that, where it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed and there is sufficient cause to believe accused guilty thereof, the magistrate must make an order holding him for trial; and section 1426 provides that proceedings before a justice for a public offense of which he has jurisdiction must be commenced by complaint, etc. Held, that proceedings before a magistrate and those before a justice of the peace are different, and a justice of the peace exercising the powers of a magistrate has equal authority as such with other officers designated as magistrates, and on examination of one charged with grand larceny on determining that the crime has not been committed he must discharge the accused, and cannot bring him to trial on the charge of petit larceny under the complaint on which the preliminary examination was held.

2. SAME — FORMER JEOPARDY — PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—DISMISSAL—EFFECT.

A justice acting as an examining magistrate of one charged with grand larceny, on finding the evidence insufficient, entered an order for the trial of accused on the charge of petit larceny on the complaint, on which the preliminary examination was held. On the day fixed for trial the prosecution on motion of the district attorney was dismissed for the reason that accused had been indicted by the grand jury for grand larceny which included the offense charged in the complaint. On the trial of the indictment, the defense, under the plea of former acquittal, offered the proceedings before the justice. Held, that the court properly excluded the same, notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 1387, providing that an order of dismissal shall be a bar in other prosecutions for the same offense, etc.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

W. E. Swain was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

McCoy & Gans, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was prosecuted by indictment for the larceny of four head of hogs, alleged to be of the value of more than $50, and the property of one E. J. Blossom, and was found guilty by the jury of the crime of petit larceny. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Upon his arraignment upon the charge alleged against him in the indictment, the defendant interposed a plea of "not guilty," and also a plea "that he has already been acquitted of the offense charged in said indictment, and particularly of the offense of petit larceny included therein by the judgment of dismissal of the justice court of Red Bluff township, in the county of Tehama, state of California, rendered at Red Bluff, in said county and state, on the 22d day of March, 1906."

The only point urged here, and upon which a reversal of the case is asked, is founded upon the ruling of the trial court excluding certain testimony bearing upon the plea of "former acquittal." It appears from the record that on the 21st day of February, 1906, and about one month prior to the finding and filing of the indictment upon which the defendant was tried, as before explained, a deposition or complaint was filed by one E. J. Blossom before and with the justice of the peace of Red Bluff township as a magistrate, charging the defendant with the crime of grand larceny, said complaint or deposition alleging the asportation of eight head of hogs "of the value of $70, the same being the personal property of said E. J. Blossom." An examination of the defendant was had before the magistrate upon this charge, and, after hearing all the evidence offered and taking the matter under advisement, the magistrate finally made the following order in the case: "It does not appear to the court from the evidence adduced at the hearing of this case that the crime of grand larceny has been committed by the defendants (the appellant was jointly charged with one Peter McNett), but there is sufficient reason to believe that the crime of petit larceny has been committed by said defendants. Wherefore it is ordered that said defendants be brought to trial before this court under the complaint filed herein on the 21st day of February, 1906, on the charge of petit larceny." An order was then made setting the case for trial for March 22, 1906. Upon the last-mentioned day the defendants, with their counsel, appeared and announced themselves ready for trial, whereupon the district attorney made a motion to dismiss the case pending before the magistrate, who granted said motion "for the reason that it is made to appear that the defendants have been indicted by the grand jury of Tehama county, for grand larceny, which includes the offense charged in the complaint in this action, which said indictment is now pending in the superior court of the county of Tehama, state of California, a certified copy of which last-mentioned indictment has been produced and filed in this court." It was the refusal of the court to allow proof of the proceedings thus briefly narrated before the magistrate which constitutes the alleged error of which complaint is here made.

The claim is that the dismissal of the proceeding against the defendant by the magistrate after the latter had made an order that the accused be put upon his trial for a misdemeanor under the deposition upon which he had been examined amounted to his acquittal of the lesser offense, and that, therefore, the prosecution, under the indictment, based upon the same transaction, was barred. This position is the equivalent of the contention that the magistrate, having once legally acquired as such authority to preliminarily examine a felony charge, is also in the same proceeding and by the same means invested with jurisdiction to exercise his powers as a justice of the peace and as such to try the accused upon any lesser offense included within that charged in the deposition, without the interposition of the formal complaint required by section 1426 of the Penal Code. This contention is obviously without merit. The act of the magistrate, after discharging the accused upon the felony charge, in ordering the defendant to appear before him as a justice of the peace for trial upon a misdemeanor upon the complaint or deposition charging the felony, was in excess of that officer's jurisdiction, and therefore wholly nugatory and void. Under our law the following persons are magistrates: (1) The justices of the Supreme Court. (2) The judges of the superior courts. (3) Justices of the peace. (4) Police magistrates in towns or cities. Section 808, Pen. Code. A magistrate is defined to be "an officer having power to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a public offense." Section 807, Pen. Code. Section 811 of the Penal Code provides that "when an information is laid before a magistrate of the commission of a public offense, triable within the county, he must examine on oath the informant or prosecutor, and any witnesses he may produce, and take their depositions in writing, and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them." Section 1426 of said Code reads: "All proceedings and actions before a justice's or police court, for a public offense of which such courts have jurisdiction, must be commenced by complaint under oath, setting forth the offense charged, with such particulars of time, place person, and property, as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of, and to answer the complaint." It is readily to be observed from the foregoing provisions of our Penal Code that proceedings in criminal cases before a magistrate and those before a justice of the peace are entirely different and distinct, and are designed to accomplish widely different purposes. The proceeding before a justice of the peace acting in his ex officio capacity of magistrate is one of the two methods authorized under our system for the inauguration of a prosecution upon ordinary felony charges. The proceeding authorized by section 1426 of the Code involves a trial, of which the justice of the peace as such has jurisdiction under the law, and is, of course, analogous to a trial for a felony in the superior court. Under the law a justice of the peace, when exercising the powers of a magistrate, has equal authority as such with the justices of the Supreme Court and judges of the superior courts when acting in a similar capacity. The jurisdiction of all those officers, when acting in the ex officio capacity in question, extends only to taking and hearing evidence upon the felony charge, and after hearing the proofs making an order either discharging the accused, or holding him to trial for the offense shown by the depositions to have been committed by him. Section 872, Pen. Code. Surely it would not for a moment be contended that a judge of the superior court, acting as a magistrate, could, after discharging the defendant upon the felony charge, make a valid order requiring him to appear for trial before a justice of the peace, under the complaint upon which he had been preliminarily examined, for some misdemeanor of which the evidence might show him to be guilty.

The cases cited in the briefs of appellant do not in any aspect of the question presented sustain his position. On the contrary, we are of the opinion that the case of People v. Smith, 143 Cal. 598, 77 Pac. 449, relied upon by him, harmonizes with the view of respondent. In that case the defendant had been charged by a formal complaint in a justice court with the crime of petit larceny. Over an objection by the defendant's counsel, the court, on motion of the district attorney, dismissed the complaint in order to enable the prosecuting officer to file a felony charge against the accused; said felony charge consisting of the crime of petit larceny alleged against him in said complaint, and a prior conviction of burglary. The authority for this proceeding is found in section 1385 of the Penal Code, which provides: "The court may, either of its own motion or upon the application of the district attorney, and in furtherance of justice, order an action or indictment to be dismissed. The reasons of the dismissal must be set forth in an order entered upon the minutes." Upon the trial in the superior court upon the felony charge, the defendant, having entered a plea of former acquittal, offered the proceedings of dismissal in the justice court in evidence to sustain that plea; it being admitted that the information upon which he was being tried upon the felony charge "embraced the same charge contained in the complaint charging the defendant with petit larceny, filed in the justice court" and dismissed, etc. Under an objection by the district attorney the evidence was disallowed. It was contended that the ruling was error because of the following provision of section 1387 of the Penal Code: "An order for the dismissal of the action, as provided in this chapter, is a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense, if it is a misdemeanor; but it is not a bar if the offense is a felony." The court held that the circumstances of that case did not bring it within the provisions of section 1387; that the defendant, having been previously convicted of the crime of burglary, his subsequent perpetration of the crime of petit larceny was an act constituting a felony, under the terms of section 666 of the Penal Code. Here, as seen, the appellant was never charged by a complaint, as required by section 1426 of the Penal Code, with the crime of petit larceny. The mere declaration by the magistrate that the evidence taken at the preliminary hearing of the felony charge disclosed a case of petit larceny against the accused, and the order that he be required to appear for trial under the complaint or deposition charging the felony amounted to no more than such a declaration and order by a private citizen. It was, as we have declared, an attempt upon the part of the magistrate to exercise authority not within his jurisdiction as such officer—a mere attempted usurpation of power. It will, of course, be conceded that a magistrate's order discharging a defendant does not operate as a bar to a second hearing of the charge either by the magistrate himself or by a grand jury. Pen. Code, § 999; Patterson v. Conlan, 123 Cal. 454, 56 Pac. 105.

From the foregoing reasons, it follows that the court's ruling disallowing the testimony was clearly within the law.

This being the only point urged upon this appeal, the judgment and order appealed from will therefore be affirmed.

ARCHIBALD ESTATE v. MATTESON.

(Civ. 306.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 24, 1907.)

1. TRIAL—NONSUIT—DETERMINATION OF MOTION.

A motion for a nonsuit operates as a demurrer to the evidence, and the court in considering it must assume that all the facts given in evidence to support the material allegations of the complaint are true.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 359, 373, 374.]

2. SAME — QUESTIONS OF LAW OR FACT — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence and presumptions arising therefrom are legally sufficient to prove the material allegations of the complaint, instead of merely raising a conjecture that the facts alleged are true, a motion for nonsuit should be denied, though the evidence is conflicting.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 332.]

3. APPEAL—INVITED ERROR—RIGHT TO REVIEW.

A party bringing out on cross-examination objectionable testimony cannot complain thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3599.]

4. TRIAL—MOTION FOR NONSUIT—DETERMINATION.

On a motion for a nonsuit, the relevant testimony, though inadmissible, but admitted either without or against objection, must be given the effect of its probative force.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 373, 374.]

5. SAME—MONEY RECEIVED—ACTION — QUESTIONS FOR JURY—NONSUIT—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a corporation for money had and received, the evidence held to establish a prima facie case, rendering a nonsuit erroneous.

6. TRIAL — HEARING ON MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

The question of the credibility of witnesses cannot arise on a motion for a nonsuit, except in so far as the rule requires for the purpose of the motion that the testimony shall be given the benefit of its probative power.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 373, 374.]

7. SAME.

Where plaintiff's proof in support of his complaint establishes a prima facie case, and defendant elects to offer no proof, it is for the jury or court sitting as a jury, to determine whether or not plaintiff on the merits is entitled to a recovery, and in such case there is no presumption as to the truth or falsity of the testimony, and the court or jury may accord to the evidence such weight as, in subordination to the rules of law, it may decide that it is entitled to.

8. SAME.

Where a motion for a nonsuit is submitted to the court sitting as a jury, it is not for the court to base its determination of the motion on what it might do in dealing with the facts as a jury, but solely on the proposition of whether the facts as proved are such as to make out a prima facie case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the Archibald Estate, a corporation, against A. H. Matteson. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed. See 84 Pac. 840.

R. L. Hargrove, for appellant. Raleigh E. Rhodes, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff corporation brought this action to obtain judgment from the defendant for the sum of $1,050, alleged to have been loaned by the former to the latter. When plaintiff rested its case, the court, upon the application of defendant, granted a nonsuit, and it is from this judgment of nonsuit, upon a bill of exceptions, that this appeal is taken.

This cause has previously been before this court on an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, and the judgment reversed. Archibald Estate v. Matteson, 84 Pac. 840. The reversal was based upon the proposition, according to the opinion filed in the case that there was evidence disclosed by the record tending to establish the material averments of the complaint, and that therefore the court erred in ordering a nonsuit. The learned judge of the court below, in granting a nonsuit in the case now before us, filed findings of fact and conclusions of law. He also filed a written opinion (which is incorporated in the opening brief of counsel for appellant) setting forth the reasons upon which he reached his conclusion upon the motion for a nonsuit. There was but one witness, W. J. Archibald, secretary of corporation plaintiff, produced upon behalf of plaintiff, and his testimony, together with certain documentary evidence, introduced into the record all the facts upon which plaintiff seemed to have relied and from the character of which the court felt justified in making its ruling, resulting in the granting of the nonsuit. From the evidence thus adduced, we learn that the Archibald Estate was organized as a corporation on the 11th day of May, 1904; that on the 4th day of June, 1904, there was held by the directors of the corporation a meeting, at which, with the transaction of other business, J. F. Archibald was elected president of the corporation or of the said board of directors thereof, and W. J. Archibald, the witness (and a nephew of J. F. Archibald), was made secretary; that on June 4, 1904, J. F. Archibald, the president, etc., executed a deed transferring to said corporation all the real and personal property of which he was seised and possessed; and that on July 5, 1904, he turned over to the corporation by check all the money he had on deposit in the Commercial Bank of Madera, amounting to the sum of $3,082.55. This check and the deed conveying the real and personal property to the corporation were offered and received in evidence. On the 4th day of June, 1904, the board of directors of said corporation passed and adopted the following resolution, which was admitted in evidence as a part of the minutes of the proceedings of the board of that day: "Resolved, that the president of this corporation be and he is authorized, empowered and directed to draw from any bank or person or corporation in which may be deposited any of the money or funds of this corporation, upon his own signature and request, and the signature of the secretary shall not be necessary to draw said money or funds." The sum claimed to have been loaned by plaintiff to defendant was received by the latter in two different amounts or installments in the form of checks. These checks were received in evidence, and were as follows:

"Madera, Cal., September 1, 1904.

"Commercial Bank of Madera. Pay to the order of A. H. Matteson the amount eight hundred dollars.

"$800.00 [Signed] J. F. Archibald, Pres."

Indorsed: "A. H. Matteson." Across the face is stamped: "Paid, 9—2—04."

"No. ———.

"Madera, Cal., October 22nd, 1904.

"Commercial Bank of Madera. Pay to the order of A. H. Matteson amount two hundred fifty dollars.

"$250.00 [Signed] J. F. Archibald, Pres."

Indorsed: "A. H. Matteson." Across the face is stamped: "Paid, 10—2—04."

The evidence shows that J. F. Archibald died on the 13th day of November, 1904. The witness W. J. Archibald stated that said checks were drawn on the funds of the corporation. The pass book of the Archibald Estate issued by the Commercial Bank of Madera, showing that the corporation had sufficient money on deposit in that institution to cash said checks, was admitted in evidence. Witness Archibald testified that the bank in which the money of plaintiff was deposited was instructed to pay money on checks issued by J. F. Archibald and signed by him as president, in accordance with the resolution to that effect adopted by the board of directors on the 4th day of June, 1904. He further testified that the deceased, J. F. Archibald, had no money in his individual name on deposit in said bank; that he had held conversations with deceased prior to his death, in which the latter had declared that he had loaned the money to the defendant; that on the 21st day of November, 1904, the board of directors of the plaintiff held a meeting at which a resolution was adopted directing that a demand be made upon the defendant for the payment to the corporation of the sum of money in dispute; that previous to the institution of this suit he held a conversation with the defendant, who then admitted having received the money on the checks heretofore referred to; that there was no written evidence, either by note or mortgage or other written contract, of the alleged transaction between the plaintiff and defendant; that during the lifetime of the deceased, and after the organization of the corporation, all moneys withdrawn from the Commercial Bank of Madera by the corporation were so drawn by checks signed "J. F. Archibald, Pres." On cross-examination this witness admitted that there was no record either in the minutes of the proceedings of the corporation, or in any other book kept by it for the purpose of preserving the history of its business dealings, of the alleged transaction between plaintiff and defendant. He admitted that J. F. Archibald paid personal bills and accounts against himself through checks upon the Commercial Bank signed by him as "Pres." He further admitted that he knew nothing of the transaction to which this controversy relates, except such knowledge with reference thereto as he had obtained from an inspection of the checks after they had been cashed and turned over to plaintiff by the bank, and such information as he had gathered from the deceased in conversations with him upon the subject before his death, and that learned from the defendant himself in a conversation a short time preceding the commencement of this action. In other words, the witness admitted having no personal knowledge of the transaction.

The facts thus detailed are substantially all that were presented by plaintiff and upon which it rested its case. The complaint is in the ordinary and usual form in actions for money had and received, and is verified. The answer denies the averments of the complaint, and sets up a special defense to the effect that said cause of action "is barred by the provisions of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure," and "particularly subdivision 1 of said section," and by way of a plea in abatement alleges that if the defendant is indebted to plaintiff in the sum sued for, or in any other sum, the action is prematurely brought for the reason that cause therefor has not accrued to plaintiff, etc. But it does not appear definitely from the answer how or why the action is barred or was prematurely commenced, nor does the evidence furnish any light upon the subject. The only question, therefore, demanding inquiry and discussion, is whether or not, from the standpoint of the evidence, received upon the merits of the transaction, the court erred in its order granting the nonsuit. We know of no rule of law more firmly rooted in the procedure of our system of jurisprudence than that which forecloses a court from ordering a nonsuit where the evidence presented by the plaintiff tends to establish the material averments of the complaint. A motion for a nonsuit in purpose and effect practically operates as a demurrer to the evidence, and must therefore assume that all the facts given in evidence to support the material allegations of the complaint speak the truth. The consequence of the rule as thus stated is that a motion for a nonsuit presents for the decision of the court a pure question of law. Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 41; Donahue v. Gallavan, 43 Cal. 576; Schroeder v. Schmidt, 74 Cal. 460, 16 Pac. 243; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 311, 27 Pac. 737; Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Co., 123 Cal. 631, 56 Pac. 776; Wright v. Roseberry, 81 Cal. 87, 22 Pac. 336. The sole question therefore is: Does the evidence tend to prove the material averments of the complaint? If it does, then the judgment of nonsuit cannot stand. The evidence must, of course, establish a prima facie case. The proof must be sufficient to raise more than a mere conjecture or surmise that the fact is as alleged. Janin v. London, etc., Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82. But where the evidence and the presumptions reasonably arising therefrom are legally sufficient to prove the material allegations of the complaint, a nonsuit should be denied. Felton v. Millard, 81 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. 533, 22 Pac. 750. Or, even where there is a conflict in the evidence, and some evidence tends to sustain the plaintiff's case, a motion for a nonsuit should not be allowed. Pac. Mut. L. I. Co. v. Fisher, 109 Cal. 567, 42 Pac. 154; Wassermann v. Sloss, 117 Cal. 425, 49 Pac. 566, 38 L. R. A. 176, 59 Am. St. Rep. 209. The record here shows that certain testimony given by the witness Archibald was purely secondary or hearsay, and should have been excluded, and it may be stated that where objection was interposed against such evidence the court promptly and properly sustained the objection. But most of the objectionable testimony referred to was brought out by the defendant himself upon the cross-examination of Archibald. But it is nevertheless argued by counsel for respondent that such testimony is not competent in any view of the proposition to be considered in the determination of the question of whether or not a nonsuit should have been granted. If it were within the province of this court, upon an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, to review errors involved in admitting incompetent testimony, the respondent would hardly find himself in a position to complain. A party cannot take advantage of his own fault or wrong. This is, however, a proposition which cannot enter into the consideration of the question of whether a nonsuit should or should not have been granted, for even if evidence be erroneously admitted against objection, but tends to prove the averments of the complaint, full effect must be given to it upon motion for a nonsuit. Wright v. Roseberry, supra. The rule, in other words, is that where, upon a motion for a nonsuit, the testimony is relevant, but may be inadmissible under some rule of evidence, and is admitted either without or against objection, it must be given the effect of its full probative force. "Error in admitting evidence for the plaintiff cannot be reviewed on a motion for a nonsuit." O'Connor v. Hopper, 102 Cal. 528, 36 Pac. 939. And in the consideration of a motion for a nonsuit it is the duty of the court to view the testimony in the strongest and most favorable light for the plaintiff.

Do the facts as developed by the evidence, and of which we have presented an epitome, sufficiently meet the criterion established by the rules thus declared, or, in other words, do they make out a prima facie case for plaintiff? A résumé of the record as briefly given here will show that there is proof that all the property, real and personal, including the money he had on deposit in the Commercial Bank, was transferred by J. F. Archibald to the Archibald Estate corporation; that the corporation authorized said Archibald to draw any moneys belonging to it and on deposit in any bank or with any corporation or person on his check, signed by his name as president of the corporation; that he had no money credited to his individual account in the Commercial Bank of Madera; that the defendant admitted having received the sums of money involved in the amount in dispute; that the checks through and by which said sums were paid to defendant by the deceased were issued on said Commercial Bank and signed by said J. F. Archibald as "Pres."; that said money has not been returned or repaid to either plaintiff or to the deceased; that the deceased in his lifetime stated to the secretary of the corporation that said loan had been made to said defendant. We think the evidence, and "the presumptions reasonably arising therefrom," strongly tend to establish the material averments of the complaint, or at least sufficiently so tend as to compel, under the principles as declared by the courts, a denial of a motion for a nonsuit. These facts must, as seen, be assumed upon the motion to be true, and, so assuming them to import verity, and giving them full effect, is there any ground for doubting that they are of sufficient probative force to persuade the conclusion that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff? The fund drawn upon to secure the money received by the defendant is shown without question to have been that of plaintiff. The authority of Archibald to draw the money as indicated is under the proof equally without question or doubt. The receipt of the money by the defendant is an uncontroverted fact in the record, and that the deceased was acting for the corporation, and not for himself individually, in the transaction with the deendant, is an inference or presumption of fact reasonably arising from the manner in which the checks were signed and from the fact that the fund upon which they were drawn was that of the plaintiff. It must certainly be admitted that the last-mentioned fact warrants a much stronger inference that the transaction, so far as J. F. Archibald's participation in it was concerned, was by and for the plaintiff, than it would afford in the establishment of respondent's contention that Archibald acted in his individual capacity in loaning the money to defendant. It is true that there is no evidence of the history of the transaction to be found in the records or books of the Archibald Estate, but this circumstance, in our opinion, does not materially detract from the strength of the other testimony, for such omission may or might be accounted for upon reasons perfectly consistent with contractual relations involving the transaction between the plaintiff and defendant. Whatever significance might be attached to the circumstance, either for or against the contention of plaintiff, by the jury or the judge acting as such in the determination of the facts upon the merits of the case, is a matter which cannot concern the decision upon the motion. If the other admitted evidence tends to prove the material allegations of the complaint, the circumstance to which we refer is, as to its effect upon the ruling upon the motion, of no importance in any point of view. The same observations are equally applicable to the point established by the evidence that the president of the corporation was accustomed to liquidating personal or private accounts against himself through checks upon the bank, signed by him as "Pres." There is nothing in this fact necessarily incompatible with the contention that Archibald, in loaning the money to defendant, was acting for the corporation. The findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court below were, of course, unnecessary and inappropriate. In fact, the learned judge of the court below, in his written opinion, declares that, "while undoubtedly this is an unusual and an apparently unnecessary proceeding, still I feel that under the decision heretofore rendered by the Court of Appeal in Archibald Estate v. Matteson, nothing else remains to be done."

The question raised by the motion, as observed, is one purely of law, and we cannot see how the court's findings of facts from the evidence before it can in any degree aid or strengthen the conclusion reached, for, as we have seen, the motion must admit the truth of the facts shown by the evidence, and by consequence it is the evidence alone upon which we must rely for light to guide us to a conclusion. The question of the credibility of witnesses cannot arise on the motion, except in so far as the rule requires for the purposes of the motion that the testimony shall be given the full benefit of its probative power. In his written opinion giving his reasons for granting the motion, the learned judge of the trial court says: "* * * It certainly seems to me that it would be an anomalous proceeding, after the trial judge, in any case, tried without a jury, had determined that the evidence was insufficient to support a judgment, to refuse a motion for a nonsuit, and, if the defendant then chose to rest upon the evidence offered on behalf of plaintiff, to order a judgment in favor of defendant. If this course were pursued, it would be in effect a confession of error in refusing a nonsuit. The case would be entirely different if the trial were had before a jury, whose province it is to decide the facts, for it is unquestionably the settled law of this state that a nonsuit will not be granted when there is any evidence whatever tending to sustain plaintiff's cause of action." We think the fallacy involved in the reasoning of the learned trial judge lies in the fact of overlooking the extent of the responsibility in the proof of the ultimate fact resting upon the plaintiff. As we have undertaken to demonstrate, the plaintiff must, in support of his averments, offer sufficient proof to make out at least a prima facie case. When he has done this, he has presented a case which he is entitled to have submitted to the jury, which is only putting in another form the declaration of the rule that in such a state of the record, when plaintiff has closed his case, the granting of a nonsuit is not justified. When he has thus rested his case, he is entitled to know what excuse, justification, or defense, if any he has, the defendant may offer against the claims of his complaint. If the defendant elects to offer no proof, it is then for the jury to determine whether or not the plaintiff, upon the merits of the case, as presented, is entitled to a recovery. And in such case there is, of course, abstractly speaking, no presumption to be indulged as to the truth or falsity of the testimony as given, for, the case being then submitted upon its merits, the judge or jury trying the facts may accord to the evidence such weight as it, not arbitrarily, but in subordination to rules of law governing that determination, may decide that it is entitled to, or may give it no weight whatever.

The trial judge is also in error as to the intimation in his opinion that there is any difference in the power and duty of a court, upon a motion for a nonsuit, merely for the reason that a jury has been waived by the parties, and the questions of fact are to be submitted to the arbitrament of the court. The motion is not, of course, addressed to the court, sitting as a jury, when the latter has been waived, but is a question of law alone submitted to the judgment and decision of the court, as such, and the jury or the court acting in that capacity has no more concern with it than it could have with the decision of a question upon demurrer to a complaint or other pleading. In the case of Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Co., 123 Cal. 631, 56 Pac. 778, the court says that "the rules as to a nonsuit are the same, whether the trial is by the court or by the jury." When, therefore, a motion for a nonsuit is submitted to the court, acting also as a jury, it is not for the court to base its determination of the motion upon what it might do in dealing with the facts as a jury, but solely upon the proposition of whether the facts as proved are such as to make out a prima facie case. If the facts upon their face, when plaintiff rests, are sufficient to justify the submission of the case to a jury, then they are, of course, enough to submit to the court when acting as a jury, notwithstanding the court's opinion that, upon the merits, they are not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a recovery, and under such circumstances the motion should be denied.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed.

McELLIGOTT et al. v. KROGH et al.

(Sac. 1,466.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 6, 1907.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS—VALIDITY OF LOCATION—CORNERS ON LAND NOT VACANT.

Where the discovery of mineral-bearing vein is made on land subject to location, that the corners were not placed on unappropriated land subject to location does not render the location entirely void; but it is valid to the extent that such location is within the marked boundaries and on unappropriated land.

2. SAME.

Where a mining location made in good faith includes within its boundaries more than Rev. St. U. S. § 2320 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1424], permits, being 300 feet on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface, it is void only to the extent of the excess.

3. SAME.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2320 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1424], declaring that no mining claim shall exceed more than 300 feet on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface, though locators did not place a monument at an intervening point on the line between the end monuments, as under their mistaken belief as to the accuracy of the location of the end monuments there could be no necessity for it, yet they were entitled to have a line established on the correction of the location of one of the end monuments, which would include the corrected corner, that point, and the original corner not corrected, where no part of such line was more than 300 feet from the middle of the vein.

4. SAME.

On the correction of this corner, the court was not required to fix the boundary line as a straight line between the corner corrected and the original corner not corrected.

5. SAME—EXTRALATERAL RIGHTS.

Where the apex of a vein between two points is outside a mining claim and entirely within another, no extralateral rights in favor of the owners of the former claim can apply as to the segment of the vein between such points.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action in ejectment brought by plaintiffs, the owners of a mining claim known as the "Granite King," against the defendants, the owners of another mining claim called the "Live Oak." These claims join each other; the Live Oak lying to the east of the Granite King as originally staked on the grounds, and the latter overlapping the former to a considerable extent. The Live Oak was located October 28, 1898;

the Granite King on August 28, 1899, nearly a year later. Neither claim has been patented.

We incorporate herein a copy of the map used in evidence in the case and made part of the findings of the court, in order to illustrate the points made on this appeal:

The principal controversy, though not the only point in the case, is as to the correct boundary line betweeen the two locations. As the Live Oak location was the senior one, it became necessary for the trial court, in order to determine the easterly boundary of the Granite King location, to determine first the proper legal position of the westerly side line of the Live Oak location. This the court (referring now to lines, points, and letters indicated upon the above copy of the map) did, as follows: It first determined and fixed the apex of the Live Oak vein trending as indicated on the map. It then found the original northwest corner, as established by the locators of the claim, to have been set at a point indicated on the map by the letter O, being 320 feet from the Live Oak vein, measured at right angles therefrom to said point O. The southwest corner, letter A, it found to be well within the 300-foot limit. It found the westerly line of the Live Oak location as originally staked by the locators to be a straight line connecting these original corners O and A. The court, having so found these original corners as staked and the line connecting them, proceeded then to move the northwest corner in, fixed it at a point exactly 300 feet from the apex of the Live Oak vein—letter C—and thus established a new legal northwest corner. The court then, having established this new legal corner, found the legal westerly line of the Live Oak location, and hence the common line dividing the two locations, to be a straight line projected from this newly established 300-foot corner, C, to the original southwest corner, A. Having thus established the common boundary between the two claims, the court further found that the apex of a well-defined vein or ledge existed in the Granite King territory, which apex extended southerly, as indicated on the map, in a course from the "Mariposa grant line" at the letter X, and very close to the established common boundary between the two claims, until it crossed "Turner's wire fence line" at a point Y; that this ledge dipped to the east at an angle of 35 or 40 degrees; and that within a few feet of its apex it passed underneath the surface of the Live Oak location. In addition, it was found that respondents were entitled to exercise extralateral rights on said vein on its dip underneath the Live Oak surface territory, and the court awarded them such rights in the judgment. The court further found that all of the Granite King location lying to the west of the line designated on the map as "Turner's wire fence line" was not owned by respondents, but had been patented as agricultural land long prior to the date of the Granite King location; and that all of the Granite King location lying to the north of the line designated on the map as "Mariposa grant boundary line" was not owned by respondents, but was part of said grant long prior to the date of making such Granite King location. It was then found by the court that respondents were entitled to a triangular-shaped piece of territory bounded westerly by "Turner's wire fence line," northerly by the "Mariposa grant boundary line," and easterly and southerly by the westerly side line of the Live Oak location, as established by the court.

These are the principal facts as found by the court, and all that are necessary to be stated in order to consider the points presented on this appeal. As we have said, the main question on this appeal is as to the correctness of the action of the court in fixing the position of the common boundary between these two locations; but, before approaching a consideration of that point, it is proper first to briefly consider another point urged by appellants—that the location of respondents (the location of the Granite King) was entirely void. This contention of appellants is based on the fact that not one of the corners of the Granite King location was on ground that was vacant and open to appropriation; that every corner but one was placed on patented ground (on the Mariposa grant or Turner's patented agricultural land), and that one (the southeast corner) was placed within the limits of the Live Oak location. It is true that the corners were placed as appellants contend they were, but we do not perceive how this could affect the rights of respondents as to land which was within such boundaries and subject to location. The court found that the location of respondents was made in good faith, and in substantial compliance with the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426]. The discovery was made by respondents upon lands subject to location, and their location notice posted thereon in a monument on the lode, and the boundaries were traced upon the ground so that they could be readily found. We are referred to no authority which holds that the corner monuments of a location must be placed upon vacant or unappropriated lands subject to location, in order to constitute a valid location. The basis of the title or right to a mining claim is the discovery of the mineral-bearing vein. The posting of the location notice and marking of the boundaries is simply to give notice that a mining location by virtue of the discovery is claimed. Of course, if the discovery and location are made on lands belonging to another—either patented land or land taken under a previous valid location—the location is void; but that is not this case. Here the discovery and location were on lands subject to location within the boundaries laid out, and such location was valid to the extent that the lands upon which the discovery was made and the location notice posted were within the marked boundaries, and were public and unappropriated lands. This was the view the lower court took. In as far as the location conflicted with the Mariposa grant, the patented agricultural land of Turner, and the prior Live Oak location, the court rejected it and limited it in area to the triangular piece as represented on the map. Thereby the court, rejecting the excess of land upon which the Granite King location could have no valid claim, held the location good as to the lands within the limits of the claim upon which a valid location was entitled to be made, and we make no question but what this was proper. Doe v. Tyler, 73 Cal. 21, 14 Pac. 375; West Granite Co. v. Granite Co., 7 Mont. 356, 17 Pac. 547; Perigo v. Irwin (C. C.) 85 Fed. 904.

Having disposed of this preliminary matter, we now approach the principal point in the case—the correctness of the location by the court of the common boundary line between the two locations. As we have said, the Live Oak location being the senior one, it was necessary to establish its westerly boundary line in order to fix the easterly limits of the junior Granite King location, and this the court proceeded to do, as we have already shown, by first fixing the apex of the Live Oak lode, extended from its center lode monument along a straight line connecting such monument with its north center lode monument. Having done this, the court then found that while the southwest corner of the location A was inside the 300-foot limits, measured from such lode, the original northwest corner, O, as placed by the locators, was 320 feet from said lode, an excess of 20 feet over the authorized legal side line limits. It then drew in this original corner, established it at C, 300 feet at right angles from the lode, and determined the westerly side line of the Live Oak location to be a straight line measured from said new northwest corner, C, as fixed by the court to the original southwest corner (the line C, A).

Counsel for appellants claim that the court erred in so establishing the said westerly line of the Live Oak location, and that it should have established the westerly line of said location along the line C, B, A, so as to include within the Live Oak location the triangular area embraced within those lines, and which was within 300 feet of the lode, and we think this contention of appellant is correct. The Revised Statutes of the United States (section 2320 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1424]), which declare the width of lode locations, provide that "no claim shall exceed more than 300 feet on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface." This provision of the statute defining the lateral rights of a claim is equally a declaration that as to all the surface of a lode claim which is within 300 feet of either side of the apex of the vein at its surface, and which is included within the boundaries as staked by the locator, he is entitled to have his right of title confirmed. A locator is not bound to absolute accuracy in laying out the boundaries of his claim, nor, as a penalty for having included within his side boundaries more than the statute allows as lateral rights, is he to lose any portion of the surface of the claim located, which is properly within these statutory limits. When he includes within its boundaries more than the law permits, he is entitled nevertheless to hold to the limit which the law authorizes within the limits laid out, and only the territory embraced within his boundaries which is in excess of these limits is to be rejected. As said in Lindley on Mines, § 362: "It frequently happens that the locator marking his surface without the aid of chain or compass includes within his boundaries an area in excess of the statutory limit. The courts uniformly hold that such a location, where it injures no one at the time it is made, and where it has been made in good faith, is void only to the extent of the excess." This is the general rule and is declared as the rule obtaining in this state, in Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 528, 533, 14 Pac. 182, 185, where it is said: "The location is good for as much as the party is entitled to hold, and void for the excess only." And in Howeth v. Sullenger, 113 Cal. 547, 552, 45 Pac. 841, 842, where the declaration is made that "it often happens that claims are located covering more than * * * 600 feet in width; * * * the location being void only as to the excess." Counsel for respondents cite nothing to the contrary. Now, while the westerly boundary line of the Live Oak location, as originally laid out, included more surface territory than its locators were entitled to as lateral limits under the statute, still, within the rule announced, the lower court should have established the western boundary line of this location so as to include all territory within the limits staked which was within 300 feet of the ledge, and only have rejected the excess. When the court established the westerly line of the Live Oak as a straight line between the points C and A, and rejected the triangular area between it and the line C, B, A, it rejected territory which was not only within the original boundaries as staked, but was within the statutory lateral limits authorized by law. There is no pretense that this triangular area was not within such limits. Measuring from any point along the middle of the vein, the line C, B, A was within 300 feet of the vein, and hence defined the statutory lateral limits to which the Live Oak location had a right to extend, and the lower court should have established it as the westerly boundary line of such location.

Respondents contend that, because the locators of the Live Oak established their westerly line as a straight line between their improperly located northwest monument, O, and their properly located southwest monument, A, when the court established C as the proper northwest corner, the court was also required to establish the westerly boundary line as a straight line between C and A; that, in order to have had the court establish the western boundary line as C, B, A, the locator should have placed a monument at B. But the locators were only required in law to establish monuments at both ends of their westerly side line. They were not required to place intervening monuments, and as they believed the northwest corner to be properly located by them 300 feet from the lode, as the southwest corner was, there could be no occasion to place a monument at B, because that point was within their westerly side line, as they thought they had correctly monumented it. Because they did not place a monument at an intervening point, when, under their mistaken belief as to the accuracy of the location of the end monuments, there could be no necessity for it, did not make them any less entitled to have a line established which would include territory along that line which was within 300 feet of the lode and within the side line as originally marked out. The right of the locators to have such territory included within a line established for that purpose between the northeast and southwest corners did not depend upon the fact whether intervening monuments had been established by them, but because it was within 300 feet of the lode and within the boundary line as originally monumented at both ends.

Nor was the court required to fix the boundary line as a straight line between the northwest corner as established by the court, and the southwest corner, along the line C, A. There is no law which requires the side lines as originally located to be straight lines. As is said by Lindley, in his work on Mines (section 366): "As long as they keep within the statutory width, they may have angles and elbows. * * *"

Nor is there in this case any question relative to establishing a boundary line between two original corners where ordinarily a straight line would be drawn from one to the other. Here the court properly discarded one of the original corners (the northwest), "drew it in," as the mining phrase has it, and established it at a true distance of 300 feet from the lode. This corner had no existence till established by the court, and had nothing to do with fixing the original western boundary as the locators staked it. As they fixed this corner, the line therefrom embraced this triangular piece. If, as the law says, the locators are entitled to a surface area of a width extending 300 feet from the center of the vein, and their boundary line as originally extended between their monuments included this strip, we are at a loss to understand why the court could not have fixed corners so that lines drawn therefrom would include the territory within the statutory limits and which was embraced in the original location. The power of the court to fix corners was not limited to fixing the proper northwest corner at C (300 feet from the vein), and authority only left to draw a straight line from there to the original southwest corner. The court had a right to fix as many corners as were necessary to give the locators of the Live Oak the territory which was within their original location and within the lateral rights defined by the statute. It had no right to fix a line which would exclude any territory within 300 feet of the vein and within the lines of the original location. When, therefore, the court drew in towards the lode the original northwest corner from where the locators had erroneously fixed it at O, and established that corner at C, it was the duty of the court to then also ascertain, with that corner so established, how much of the original Live Oak location was within the statutory limits, and to have fixed the westerly boundary accordingly. As point B was within those limits and within the original boundary, it was the duty of the court to have established another corner at that point, and to make the line C, B, A the westerly side line of the Live Oak location, instead of the straight line C, A. And such a rule of adjustment as to a boundary line originally established by a senior locator in good faith is not only just and proper, but it cannot be said, with any substantial merit, that it works an injury to a subsequent locator who establishes his boundary line within that of the senior location. Such junior locator, when he intrudes upon the monumented side line of a prior locator, knows where the original side line of the senior location is, and where the vein of that location is, and he intrudes with his location at his peril. He knows, even if one of the corners is outside the 300-foot lode limit from the vein, that the surface territory within the side line measured from its end monuments is all at least within 300 feet of the vein. He knows that the law entitles the locator to a side line measured from the vein to not exceeding 300 feet from it, and has no valid ground of complaint when the court gives a senior locator only the ground which he originally located and then extending no further from the lode than the statute said it might.

Now, as to the only remaining point—the question of extralateral rights: It is insisted that respondents are entitled to none at all as to the segment of the vein P, I, which, it will be observed, under the view we take of the proper location of the westerly line of the Live Oak location, lies entirely within that location. This is no doubt true. As the apex of the vein between those points is outside the Granite King location, and entirely within that of the Live Oak, no extralateral rights in favor of respondents can apply to it. Lindley on Mines, § 591.

It is further insisted, however, that, as to the other segments of the vein within the Granite King location, the respondents are entitled to no extralateral rights, because the end lines of their claim are not parallel; that, according to the map incorporated in the findings, the end lines of the Granite King, instead of being parallel, converge in the direction of the dip of the vein. And it is also insisted that if they are entitled to such rights, notwithstanding the end lines of the claim are not parallel, but converging, each segment of the vein from X to I and from P to Y must be treated as if it were a distinct and separate vein and apply to the northerly and southerly points of termination of each segment a perpendicular plane parallel to the respective northerly and southerly end lines of the claim, giving extralateral rights to the respondents between such perpendicular planes, extended easterly in the direction of the dip of the vein until they converge. Interesting as these questions may be, we do not think, under the findings as made, we can dispose of them, and it is possible that in this case we may never be called on to do so. It cannot be determined from the finding of the court as to these end lines whether they are parallel or converging. The court makes the map, a copy of which we have inserted herein, a part of its findings in the case, and then, as to the end lines of the Granite King location, finds "that the end lines of said Granite King location are substantially parallel to each other as they were originally laid out and located, as will appear from said map." Now, if the court had simply found that these end lines were substantially parallel to each other, we would encounter no difficulty, because, with the end lines established as parallel, no question could arise but the respondents were entitled to extralateral rights. But the court goes further and finds that they are substantially parallel as appears from said map. As the map is part of the findings, it must be taken into consideration in examining that finding. When we do so, we find that not only are the end lines not substantially parallel as drawn on the map, but to a large degree are converging lines. The finding is therefore inconsistent and conflicting in its own terms, forming no basis for a solution of the question of extralateral rights, and makes it unnecessary to discuss them until it is definitely determined how the end lines are located—whether parallel or converging. These lines will doubtless be accurately fixed on a new trial, and the finding of the court as to extralateral rights relative to them may be subject to no contention between the parties.

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed.

United States-Great Britain Treaty July 12, 1889, art. 3, 26 Stat. 1509, provides that no person surrendered by or to either country shall be tried for any offense committed prior to his extradition other than the offense for which he was surrendered. Article 6 provides that the extradition of fugitives under the treaty and the treaty of 1842 shall be carried out in conformity to the laws regulating extradition in force in the surrendering state. The Canadian extradition act is said to provide that it does not authorize the issue of an extradition warrant to any state or country in which the person may be tried after extradition for any other offense than that for which he was extradicted, unless assurance is first given that he shall not be so tried. Rev. St. U. S. § 5275 [U. S. Comp. 6. Habeas Corpus — Scope of Inquiry — Matters of Defense.

That defendant in a perjury prosecution is charged with matters forming the basis of another prosecution is not a ground for discharge on habeas corpus, acquittal, or conviction in one trial, being a matter of defense to be relied on in the other.

In Bank. Application of George D. Collins for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded.

George D. Collins, in pro. per. Wm. Hoff Cook and Hiram T. Johnson, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. A writ of habeas corpus was issued on the application of George D. Collins, who claimed to be unlawfully restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. A return was made and a hearing had.

Before proceeding to a consideration of the merits of the application, it may be well to here repeat what was orally stated at the hearing regarding the practice of this court on habeas corpus. The function of the petition is to secure the issuance of the writ, and, when the writ is issued, the petition has accomplished its purpose. The writ requires a return by the officer or other person having the custody of the prisoner. To such return the petitioner may present exceptions, raising questions of law, or a traverse, raising issues of fact, or both. Where the return is not subject to exception—that is, where it sets forth process which on its face shows good ground for holding the prisoner, such process being produced at the hearing (Pen. Code, § 1480), and the traverse alleges matter tending to invalidate the apparent effect of such process—the burden of proving such new matter is on the petitioner. The remarks in Re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 Pac. 180, are to be taken as referring only to the case where, by agreement of the parties and the consent of the court, the petition is treated as a traverse to the return, and its averments are not disputed. This course has frequently been followed in this court; but, where it is followed, it does not require the respondent to file, in addition to the return, a pleading specifically denying the affirmative allegations of the petition (treated as a traverse), nor does it shift the burden of proof as to such allegations from the petitioner to the respondent. To adopt the analogy of pleadings in civil actions, the return is the complaint, and the traverse is the answer; new matter set up in the traverse is deemed denied, and must be proved by the party alleging it.

In this case the petitioner filed exceptions to the return, which were overruled. He then filed a traverse. Evidence was taken, and the substantial facts disclosed are the following: On the 13th day of July, 1905, an indictment charging the petitioner with the crime of perjury alleged to have been committed in the city and county of San Francisco on the 30th day of June, 1905, was found by the grand jury and filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Said indictment was designated in said superior court by No. 16,130. After the alleged commission of said crime, and prior to the finding of the indictment, Collins had departed from the jurisdiction of said court and gone to the city of Victoria, in the province of British Columbia, Dominion of Canada. Steps were duly taken to demand his surrender pursuant to the extradition treaty between the United States of America and Great Britain, and on the 27th day of October, 1905, Collins was surrendered and extradited, and removed from the city of Victoria to the city and county of San Francisco. Being there arraigned upon said indictment, he pleaded not guilty, and the case went to trial. Such trial resulted in a disagreement of the jury in the month of December, 1905, and a second trial has not since been had. In the course of said trial, the defendant became a witness, and testified in his own behalf, making certain statements under oath which were, after the disagreement of said trial jury, made the basis of a second indictment for perjury found on the 29th day of December, 1905. This second indictment filed in the superior court, and numbered 16,415, charged Collins with having committed perjury in giving his testimony in his own defense on the 12th day of December, 1905. The district attorney proceeded to trial upon the second indictment against the objection of Collins, and such trial resulted in a verdict of conviction, whereupon judgment was pronounced. An appeal from the judgment was taken and is now pending in the District Court of Appeal.

The principal contention of the petitioner is that, inasmuch as he was extradited from the Dominion of Canada upon a specific indictment (No. 16,130), the state of California could not try him upon any other charge until his trial upon the original charge had first been brought to a final conclusion, and he had been given a reasonable time within which to return to the country from which he had been extradited. So far as relates to international, as distinguished from interstate, extradition, this is undoubtedly the general rule. Commonwealth v. Hawes, 13 Bush (Ky.) 697, 26 Am. Rep. 242; State v. Vanderpool, 39 Ohio St. 273, 48 Am. Rep. 431. The subject was very fully considered by the Supreme Court of the United States in the leading case of United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 7 Sup. Ct. 234, 30 L. Ed. 425, where the court, after considering all of the authorities then existing, reached the conclusion that under a treaty of extradition providing for the surrender of persons accused of specific crimes, taken together with sections 5272 and 5275 of the Revised Statutes [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3595, 3596], "a person who has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court by virtue of proceedings under an extradition treaty can only be tried for one of the offenses described in that treaty, and for the offense with which he is charged in the proceedings for his extradition, until a reasonable time and opportunity have been given him, after his release or trial upon such charge, to return to the country from whose asylum he had been forcibly taken under those proceedings."

In the Rauscher Case, as well as in every other case that has been called to our attention, the crime for which it was sought to try the extradited prisoner was one alleged to have been committed prior to his extradition. In the present case, on the contrary, the crime with which Collins was charged, and of which he was convicted, was committed after his surrender by the authorities of the country in which he had sought a refuge, and after his return to the state of California. The question is whether the immunity against prosecution for another offense, declared in United States v. Rauscher and similar cases, extends to an offense committed subsequent to the extradition. No doubt there is language in United States v. Rauscher, general in its terms, which, taken without regard to the facts before the court, would lend countenance to the view that the prisoner is, until the conclusion of his trial for the offense on which he was extradited, and for a reasonable time thereafter, absolutely immune from prosecution on any other charge. It is an elementary doctrine, however, that expressions in judicial opinions are to be read in the light of the facts before the court, and it is necessary, therefore, to consider the grounds upon which the decision in this class of cases went in order to determine whether those grounds are applicable to the case of a crime committed after the extradition. The reasoning of United States v. Rauscher is substantially this: That in the absence of treaty there is no obligation upon any country to surrender to another persons who are charged with crime in the latter country. That as a matter of comity such surrender might be made, but that, if made in pursuance of a demand or request for the surrender of a person accused of a specific crime, there is an implied undertaking on the part of the country receiving the surrender that such surrender is asked and received for the purpose of putting the accused on trial for that crime, and for no other purpose. When a treaty is adopted, providing for the surrender of persons accused of specific crimes, the same implied obligation exists, more particularly in view of the provision generally found in treaties of extradition that, before any surrender shall be made, there must be some proof of the commission of the offense. To permit a country to seek the extradition of a person found in another country upon the ground that he is charged with the commission of a specific offense covered by an extradition treaty, and then, when his surrender has been granted upon that ground, to try him for some other offense, would make it possible to evade the provisions of the treaty, and to use it as a pretense for securing possession of the person of a prisoner whom it was not designed to try for the charge upon which his extradition was nominally sought, but for some other offense which might or might not be in itself extraditable. In the language of the court in the case under consideration, "it is impossible to conceive of the exercise of jurisdiction in such a case for any other purpose than that mentioned in the treaty, and ascertained by the proceedings under which the party is extradited, without an implication of fraud upon the rights of the party extradited and of bad faith to the country which permitted his extradition."

The doctrine, then, seems to rest ultimately upon the view that the treaty of extradition is intended to provide for the surrender of persons who may have fled from one country to another after committing one of a number of designated crimes, and that it would be a breach of international faith to use the provisions of this treaty for any other purpose than the one which is stated in the demand for the surrender, namely, that the prisoner may be put upon his trial for the specific offense designated in the proceedings. In the absence of this limitation, it would be possible to make up a fictitious case coming nominally within the terms of the treaty, and, having secured possession of the prisoner, to then disregard the charge upon which he was extradited, and proceed to try him upon some other offense which could not have been made the basis of extradition, because not covered by the treaty, or a charge on which extradition, even if the crime charged was named in the treaty, might have been refused. But no such considerations apply to the case of an offense committed after the surrender and return of the accused. While it may be the policy of a country in which a person has taken refuge to grant him the right of asylum except as against a specific charge of a crime covered by a treaty of extradition, such country, after it has once extradited him, cannot be concerned in securing for him immunity for new crimes committed after his return to the demanding country. The obligation assumed by the country demanding the surrender is that such surrender will not be used for the purpose of putting the prisoner on trial for any other offense which he may be claimed to have committed before he sought the asylum of the foreign country; but we cannot see that there would be any breach of international faith in compelling him, in common with other persons within the jurisdiction, to assume responsibility for any offense which he may commit after his return. In such case there is no possibility of the extradition proceedings being used as a subterfuge to pursue the accused for an offense other than the one for which he was extradited. In the absence of any authority compelling such conclusion, we are not prepared to hold that a person extradited under a treaty may, after his return, and pending his trial upon the extradition charge, commit any crime, however atrocious, with absolute security against prosecution until he shall have had an opportunity to return to the country from which he was taken.

The immunity of an extradited prisoner from prosecution for any offense other than the one for which he was extradited rests, not upon any absolute right in him to have an asylum in the land in which he has taken refuge, but primarily upon the rights of the sovereignty which has surrendered him, and has done so pursuant to a treaty. This is illustrated by the many cases holding that where an accused is forcibly seized in another country, and transferred by violence, force, or fraud to this country, without resort to any extradition treaty, he cannot rely on the circumstances of his removal to defeat his prosecution and trial when here. Ex parte Scott, 9 Barn. & C. 446; Lopez & Sattler's Cases, 1 Dearsley & B. C. C. 525; State v. Smith, 1 Bailey, Law (S. C.) 283, 19 Am. Dec. 679; State v. Brewster, 7 Vt. 118; Dow's Case, 18 Pa. 37; State v. Ross, 21 Iowa, 467; The Richmond v. U. S., 9 Cranch (U. S.) 102, 3 L. Ed. 670. See, also, Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421; In re Mahon (D. C.) 34 Fed. 525. "The fundamental principle upon which the doctrine of these cases rests is this: The criminal himself never acquires a personal right of asylum or refuge from the consequences of his crime anywhere. The government of the state or country to which he flees may insist that he shall not be extradited from there unless by its consent and under such conditions as it shall assent to." Hawley on International Extradition, 15. In the Rauscher Case itself, there are one or two expressions indicating that the court intended to limit the doctrine declared to cases of offenses committed prior to the extradition. In speaking of the right of the accused, the court says: "That right, as we understand it, is that he shall be tried only for the offense with which he is charged in the extradition proceedings and for which he was delivered up; and that if not tried for that, or after trial and acquittal, he shall have a reasonable time to leave the country before he is arrested upon the charge of any other crime committed previous to his extradition." And at another place the opinion refers to the immunity from arrest, trial, and conviction for a crime "not enumerated in the extradition treaty and committed before his removal." (The italics are ours.)

Much force is added to the view that the accused is not protected from prosecution for crimes committed subsequent to his extradition by a consideration of the terms of the treaty under which Collins was surrendered. The treaty involved in the Rauscher Case was that of 1842 with Great Britain. That treaty merely provided for the surrender by the respective contracting governments of persons charged with certain enumerated crimes; the surrender to be made upon such evidence of criminality as would justify arrest and commitment for trial in the country which was asked to surrender the accused. There was no express limitation as to the crimes for which the accused might be tried after surrender. Such limitation was held by the court to be implied in the nature of the treaty itself, and there was no occasion to define its precise extent. In 1889 the United States of America and Great Britain concluded an extradition convention, which, after referring to the treaty of 1842, made certain further provisions. Article 3 of the treaty of July 12, 1889, 26 Stat. 1509, reads as follows: "No person surrendered by or to either of the high contracting parties shall be triable or tried for any crime or offense, committed prior to his extradition, other than the offense for which he was surrendered, until he shall have had an opportunity of returning to the country from which he was surrendered." By this provision the contracting governments reduced to an express and definite agreement the exemption which had been before implied. It seems clear that, in limiting the exemption to crimes committed prior to extradition, the contracting parties indicated their intent that persons surrendered should not be exempt from prosecution for crimes subsequently committed. If under the former treaty there was any exemption for such subsequent crimes (which as we have said was not in our opinion the case), such exemption was removed by the new treaty.

It is urged that the effect of article 3 of the treaty with Great Britain is modified by the provisions of article 6 of the same treaty, providing that: "The extradition of fugitives under the provisions of this convention and of the said tenth article (of the Treaty of 1842 [8 Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 576]) shall be carried out in the United States and in Her Majesty's dominions, respectively, in conformity with the laws regulating extradition for the time being in force in the surrendering state." 26 Stat. 1510. We are not furnished with any copies of the laws of the Dominion of Canada, and none are at the present time accessible to us. On the hearing the petitioner, after qualifying as a witness regarding the laws of Canada, testified that the extradition act of Canada provided that: "This act shall not authorize the issue of a warrant for the extradition of any person under the provisions of this statute, to any state or country in which, by the law in force in such state or country, such person may be tried after such extradition for any other offense than that for which he was extradicted, unless an assurance shall first have been given by the executive authority of such state or country that the person whose extradition has been claimed shall not be tried for any other offense than that on account of which such extradition has been claimed." For the reasons already stated, we do not think that this statute was intended to protect persons surrendered from trial for subsequent offenses; but, if it was, its only effect was to lay down a rule for the government of officials of the Dominion of Canada. They may, under this act, have had the right to refuse to surrender the accused without receiving the assurance referred to in the act. If they did surrender him without such assurance, the rights of the United States and of the state of California after receiving the prisoner were limited only by the provisions of the treaty, and that treaty, as we have seen, did not prevent trial for a subsequent offense.

In this connection it may be observed that the petition for the writ of habeas corpus alleged as a fact that the warrant of extradition issued by the Canadian government, and upon which the prisoner was returned to this country, contained an express provision that the petitioner "should not be tried or triable for or on account of any other offense than the one upon which such extradition shall be granted * * * until after the final conclusion of his trial for said offense and until his final discharge from custody or imprisonment for or on account of such offense, and thereafter, until he has had a reasonable opportunity of returning to the country from which he was taken on said extradition." The original warrant was destroyed in the conflagration of April 18, 1906. Without deciding that the language quoted, if inserted in the warrant, would affect the right of the state to try the accused on the second indictment, it is sufficient to say that the evidence taken on the hearing absolutely negatives the claim of the petitioner, and shows conclusively that no such language was inserted in the warrant. There is, in our opinion, nothing in the provisions of section 5275 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which conflicts with the views herein expressed.

It is further contended by petitioner that the perjury with which he was charged in the second indictment consisted in swearing to some of the same matters which formed the basis of the charge of perjury in the first indictment. From this it is argued that a verdict of acquittal on the first charge would be conclusive in favor of the defendant on any subsequent trial. U. S. v. Butler (D. C.) 38 Fed. 498; Coffey v. U. S., 116 U. S. 436, 6 Sup. Ct. 432, 29 L. Ed. 681; Cooper v. Com., 51 S. W. 789, 106 Ky. 909, 45 L. R. A. 216, 90 Am. St. Rep. 275. Similarly, it is claimed, a verdict of conviction on the first charge would preclude a conviction on the other. We need not decide whether the principle invoked has any application to the facts here presented. In any event, such acquittal or conviction in one trial is matter of defense to be relied on in the other. It does not go to the jurisdiction, and affords no ground for release on habeas corpus. For these reasons we are satisfied that the state of California did not violate any treaty obligation of the United States, or any right of the accused, in putting him to trial upon the second indictment, and that he is properly held in custody by the sheriff pursuant to the judgment of conviction.

The sheriff also claims to hold the petitioner by virtue of a bench warrant issued upon the first indictment, namely, the one which was the basis of the extradition proceedings. As to this the petitioner claims to have been released on bail. The destruction of the public records of the city and county of San Francisco in the conflagration of April, 1906, makes it difficult to determine the truth of this claim. The evidence upon it is conflicting. We have reached the conclusion that the weight of evidence is to the effect that the prisoner, after having given bail upon this charge, voluntarily surrendered himself into custody, and that he has not since given bail. Nor has he offered any evidence in support of his allegation that his trial on this charge has been unreasonably postponed against his objection, and that the prosecution has no bona fide intention of putting him to trial on this indictment. He is therefore properly in custody of the sheriff on the bench warrant issued under the indictment in case 16,430, and the extradition proceedings thereon, as well as the judgment of conviction in case 16,415.

Petitioner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff to be held in pursuance of process in both cases.

151 Cal. 363

TRACY v. MUIR et al. (S. F. 3,720.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1907.)

1. WILLS—PROBATE—DISTRIBUTION—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Fraud in obtaining decrees of distribution which were in strict accord with the terms of a will, and which necessarily followed the decree admitting the will to probate, cannot avail, if the probate itself cannot be attacked.

2. WILLS — REVIEW — FRAUD — PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

An heir not a party to a will contest is not injured by frauds perpetrated on the trial of the contest with a view to secure a verdict sustaining the will, for the only effect of a decree admitting the will to probate is to fix the time within which he must under the statute himself contest the will.

3. TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—SUIT TO ESTABLISH—COMPLAINT.

A complaint in a suit to declare that distributees under a will hold property as trustees for plaintiff alleged that plaintiff resided in a foreign country, and for several years after the probate of the will she had no knowledge of the forgery of the will, nor of any conspiracy between the distributees and others to obtain for them by means of a forged will the property of decedent. There was no allegation of want of actual knowledge within a year after the probate of the will of such court proceedings as were evidenced by the records of the court. Held, that it must be presumed that plaintiff had knowledge of the order admitting the will to probate, either at the time it was made or very shortly thereafter and in time to contest the will, so that the complaint did not state a cause of action.

4. WILLS — PROBATE — JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS.

The determination of the question of the genuineness of an instrument purporting to be a will is exclusively for the court to which the proof of wills is confided, and its decision is final and conclusive, and, in the absence of statute providing otherwise, not subject, except on an appeal to a higher court, to be questioned in any other court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 904–910.]

5. SAME—PARTY AGGRIEVED—REMEDY.

One having actual notice of proceedings admitting a will to probate in time to make his contest, and failing to take advantage thereof by appearing and contesting within the time allowed by law, cannot obtain relief, unless he was prevented from appearing and contesting by fraud of those procuring the probate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 911–916.]

6. TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—SUIT TO ESTABLISH—COMPLAINT.

A complaint in a suit to declare that distributees under a will hold property received thereunder as trustees for plaintiff alleged that plaintiff had been deprived of property to which she would have succeeded as heir by means of a false and forged will, established in a court having jurisdiction to determine its validity, by perjured testimony. It also alleged a conspiracy between the distributees and others to obtain for the distributees by means of a forged will the property of the decedent. The action was brought after the expiration of the time within which to bring a suit to contest the will. Held, that the complaint did not state a cause of action; for whether the forgery and perjury complained of were the result of a conspiracy was immaterial to a determination of plaintiff's rights to pursue the property in the hands of the distributees.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—NOTICE OF JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1303, providing that a will may be probated on 10 days' notice by publication or by posting the same in public places, is not unconstitutional as depriving an heir of a decedent of his property without due process of law when applied to a nonresident heir who could not receive a notice in time to permit her to appear.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 930.]

8. SAME—EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1304, providing that copies of the notice of the time appointed for the probate of a will must be served on the heirs of the testator resident in the state, if known to the petitioner, is not violative of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, as discriminating against nonresidents because of a failure to make any provision for personal notice to nonresidents; the fact of nonresidence being a sufficient reason for a difference in the manner of notice.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Laura E. Tracy against Elizabeth M. Muir and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William T. Baggett and George W. Monteith, for appellant. Campbell, Metson & Campbell (Thomas H. Breeze, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants, given upon sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint. The action was one in equity to obtain a decree adjudging defendants, Elizabeth Muir and Isabella Curtis, to hold certain property distributed to them by decrees of partial distribution in the matter of the estate of one Jacob Z. Davis, deceased, as trustees for plaintiff, a daughter of a deceased brother of said Davis and one of his heirs at law, and the other heirs at law. The distribution to defendants was in accord with the terms of a document purporting to be the olographic will of said deceased, which was filed for probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco upon November 16, 1896, and which, after contest instituted and maintained by certain heirs not including plaintiff, was upon August 15, 1897, admitted to probate as the last will of deceased. Within the year after probate allowed for contest, a contest was instituted by heirs other than plaintiff, which was on stipulation of the parties thereto dismissed, and the probate of the will was never revoked.

The main basis of plaintiff's claim that defendants should be held to be trustees as to the property so distributed to them is that the will so admitted to probate was in fact a forgery, made by defendants and divers other persons pursuant to a conspiracy to obtain for defendants, by means of a forged will, the property of Davis, and that such persons, in the carrying into effect of such conspiracy, offered such forged will for probate, and procured the probate thereof by means of false and perjured testimony, the fraudulent concealment from the court of genuine writings of the deceased which would have shown the forgery, and the fraudulent procurement by the conspirators of three of their secret agents and co-conspirators upon the jury which tried the contest before probate and rendered the verdict sustaining the will. Plaintiff was not a party to such contest, and never appeared in the probate proceeding until August 18, 1900, when she filed her petition contesting the validity of said will and asking that the probate thereof be revoked upon the same ground now urged in behalf of the pending proceeding. A demurrer to her petition was sustained and relief denied by the probate court, and upon appeal to this court the ruling of the lower court was affirmed; it being held that, notwithstanding the residence of plaintiff outside of the country, her failure to contest within a year after the decree of probate was made barred her from the relief sought in the probate proceeding. Estate of Davis, 136 Cal. 590, 594, 69 Pac. 412. At the time of the death of Davis, the offering of the will for probate and the probate thereof, "and for a long time thereafter," plaintiff was an actual resident and inhabitant of the city of Honolulu, in the then republic of Hawaii. She did not learn of the conspiracy or discover any of the frauds until May 1, 1900. She subsequently filed a petition to revoke the probate heretofore mentioned. The defendants were not heirs at law of Davis, being merely nieces of his deceased wife. The notices given of the original application for probate were given in full accord with the statutes of this state relative to such notices, but plaintiff also alleges that these statutes, as to nonresidents of the state, are unconstitutional and void, in that they are repugnant to the constitutional guaranty of due process of law, and deny persons subject to the jurisdiction of the state the equal protection of its laws. This is substantially, so far as is material, the case made by the amended complaint. Fraud in obtaining the decrees of partial distribution is also alleged, but we do not regard these allegations important if the probate of the will cannot be successfully attacked in some way. As already stated, such decrees of distribution were in strict accord with the terms of the will, and necessarily followed the decree admitting the will to probate. Unless plaintiff can succeed in charging defendants as trustees because of the fraudulent procurement of probate of a forged will, it is clear that she must fail, for she can have no independent right to complain of a distribution in full accord with the terms of a will, the probate of which has not been revoked, and which is unassailable either by proceedings to revoke the probate, or in an equitable action to have the distributees thereunder decreed to be trustees for her. See In re Davis' Estate (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 183, 186.

Passing for the moment the question as to the validity of our statute relative to the notice to be given of an application for probate of a will, and assuming that the probate court had jurisdiction of the proceedings as against this plaintiff, the question presented is as to whether an action in equity can be maintained for the purpose of having the beneficiaries under a forged will, the probate of which has been obtained by such frauds as are alleged in the amended complaint, declared trustees for those who would but for such will have succeeded to the estate.

It is to be stated at the outset that, in view of the provisions of our statutes relative to probate of wills, it is manifest that plaintiff could not have been injured by the frauds alleged to have been perpetrated on the trial of the contest before probate for the purpose of securing a verdict sustaining the will, and is in no position to complain thereof. This includes, of course, the alleged fraudulent introduction of certain agents of the conspirators upon the jury which tried that contest. Plaintiff was not a party to that contest, and was in no degree estopped or concluded by the result thereof. Estate of Cunningham, 54 Cal. 556. The only effect as to her of the decree entered upon that contest was to fix the limit of time within which she might herself contest the will. Under the express terms of the statute, she could at any time within one year after the probate have contested the will upon any of the grounds that could have been urged against it before probate, and upon such contest no different measure of evidence or manner of procedure from that required before probate was essential to a successful attack. See Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 421, 437, 73 Pac. 1070, 74 Pac. 441. If on such a contest after probate the genuineness of the will is not sufficiently proved, the probate must be annulled and revoked. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1327, 1329, 1330.

It must also be borne in mind that, under the allegations of the amended complaint, neither of the defendants nor any of their alleged co-conspirators sustained any fiduciary relations to the plaintiff or the other heirs at law. They were absolute strangers, asserting as against the world the genuineness of an instrument which would give the beneficiaries under the will the property of the deceased as against the heirs, and they occupied no position of trust or confidence which imposed upon them any special duty as to plaintiff.

It is further to be observed that the amended complaint is destitute of allegation of any act on the part of any of the alleged conspirators, the effect of which could have been to prevent the plaintiff from appearing in the probate court at any time within one year after the probate, and contesting the will upon all or any of the grounds specified in the statute, including the very ground upon which she here bases her claim, viz., that the will had never been executed by the deceased, but was a forgery.

It is also to be noted that there is no allegation that plaintiff had not learned, prior to the offer of the alleged will for probate, of the death of deceased, or that she did not then know that he was, at the time of his death, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, and it was not alleged that she did not have actual knowledge of the admission of the will to probate in ample time to have enabled her to contest it within the year after probate. Her complaint appears to have been carefully drawn, with a view to excluding anything like an allegation of want of actual knowledge within such year of such proceedings in the matter of said estate as were matters of public record, except in regard to the petition for revocation filed within the year by Anna Wilson and others, which it is alleged she did not know of until August 14, 1900. Her general allegations in regard to want of knowledge are that at the time of the death of deceased and up to the time of the admissions of the alleged will to probate, August 17, 1897, "and for a long time thereafter," she was actually living in Honolulu, and that prior to May 1, 1900, "she did not know of the conspiracy hereinbefore mentioned, nor of any fact or circumstance connecter therewith, nor did she know of the forgery of said will, nor that the same was not genuine, nor did she have any knowledge whatever prior to that date of any fraud, conspiracy, deception, or concealment specified and referred to in paragraph V of this complaint." There is in this no allegation of want of actual knowledge within the year after probate of such court proceedings in the matter of the estate as were evidenced by the records of the court; the allegations being confined to actual knowledge as to the conspiracy, and the forgery and the falsity of the alleged will, and the fraud, deception, and concealment practiced in obtaining its admission to probate. In the absence of positive averment to the contrary, it must be presumed that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the order admitting the will to probate made nearly a year after its offer for probate, either at the time it was made or very shortly thereafter and within time for contest. See Hecht v. Slaney, 72 Cal. 363, 14 Pac. 88; Tynañ v. Kerns, 119 Cal. 451, 51 Pac. 693. Whatever might be the effect of the presence of some such feature in the case, we are satisfied that, under the circumstances above stated, the unrevoked probate decree must now be accepted as conclusive upon the question of the genuineness of the will. If plaintiff cannot be allowed in this action to show that the will was not the genuine will of deceased, it is needless to say that no cause of action cognizable by a court of equity is stated by her amended complaint.

It appears to be firmly settled by the overwhelming weight of authority that, under such a system as exists in this state for the admission of wills to probate, the determination of the question of the genuineness of an instrument purporting to be a will is solely and exclusively for the court to which the proof of wills is confided, and that its decision therein is final and conclusive, and in the absence of "state law, statutory or customary," providing otherwise (O'Callaghan v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101), not subject, except on an appeal to a higher court, to be questioned in any other court, or to be set aside or vacated by the court of chancery on any ground (State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233, 266, 81 Am. Dec. 118; Broderick Will Case, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 503, 22 L. Ed. 599, and authorities there cited; Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 19, 41 Pac. 814). Under this rule, as long as the probate stands, the will must be recognized and admitted in all courts to be valid, the unrevoked decree of probate standing as absolute and conclusive proof of its genuineness. This rule is stated to be an exception to the general doctrine that a court of equity may set aside judgments obtained by fraud or mistake, and it has been suggested by some of the courts and writers that no satisfactory ground can be discovered for such an exception. However this may be, it is a rule that is firmly established by the authorities, and one that has been declared and applied by this court. In the leading case of State v. McGlynn, supra, the matter was exhaustively discussed and the authorities reviewed. It is unnecessary to here restate the reasoning of the court in that case, or to attempt to add thereto. In the Broderick Will Case, supra, upon a full discussion of the question, it was held by the United States Supreme Court, as stated by this court in Langdon v. Blackburn, supra, that "a court of equity has no jurisdiction to avoid a will or to set aside the probate thereof on the ground of fraud, mistake or forgery, this being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of probate, and also that a court of equity will not give relief by charging the executor of a will or a legatee with a trust in favor of a third person, alleged to be defrauded by the forged or fraudulent will, where the court of probate could afford relief by refusing probate of the will in whole or in part." This rule we take to be absolute, at least in every case where there has been no breach of duty arising from a fiduciary relation on the part of those securing the probate of the will, no such extraneous fraud as operates to prevent the heir from appearing in the probate court and there contesting the will and exhibiting fully his case against the same, and no lack of actual knowledge of the pendency of the probate proceeding operating to deprive the heir of an opportunity to so appear in the probate court and make his contest. The case of such lack of actual knowledge is stated as a possible exception, in view of the doctrine declared in Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 344, 28 Pac. 563, 16 L. R. A. 361, 27 Am. St. Rep. 143, and in Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 Pac. 1007, to the effect that when a judgment has been obtained upon a false and fraudulent claim upon constructive service of summons, and the party against whom it is obtained had no actual notice of the pendency of the action in time to appear therein and set up his defense, a court of equity will relieve such party from the judgment, and because it has been suggested here that this doctrine may be applicable in the matter of a decree admitting a will to probate. In some or perhaps all of the cases just suggested equity might grant some appropriate relief as between the parties, if the complaining party has not been guilty of laches, but as to this we do not decide. This is not such a case. A proceeding for the probate of a will is a proceeding in rem.

By the offer of the will for probate the proponents tender to the world the issue as to its genuineness. Any person interested may appear and contest the instrument so offered upon various grounds, including all grounds substantially affecting its validity or the question of its due execution. Failing to appear and contest before probate, the right exists for a full year after probate. One who must be held to have had actual notice of the proceedings in time to make his contest, and who fails to take advantage of the opportunity afforded of opposing the will by appearing and contesting within the time allowed by law, must, at least unless he can be held to have been prevented from so appearing and contesting by some fraud of those procuring the probate, be held concluded by the decree as to any matter concerning which he could have obtained relief by a contest. It can be no excuse for his failure to appear and contest that he did not know that the alleged will was not genuine. That it was genuine was one of the very issues tendered him by his adversary, which he was called upon to meet within the time allowed by law or forever thereafter admit.

The three California cases relied on by plaintiff—Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 Pac. 282, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98, Aldrich v. Barton, 138 Cal. 220, 71 Pac. 169, 94 Am. St. Rep. 43, and Silva v. Santos, 138 Cal. 536, 71 Pac. 703—are not in point here. None of them involved any question as to the effect of a decree admitting a will to probate. In addition to this, there was present in the first two cases fraud operating to prevent the injured party from presenting his case in the original proceeding, while in all of the cases the persons whose misconduct was held sufficient to impose an involuntary trust upon the beneficiaries of their acts sustained a fiduciary relation to the persons defrauded. This is disputed by counsel for plaintiff as to the case of Sohler v. Sohler; but an examination of the opinion will show that the statement in the opinion of the learned judge of the trial court to that effect is correct. The statement of Mr. Pomeroy in his Equity Jurisprudence (section 919) that, where "a probate is obtained by fraud, equity may declare the executor or other person deriving title under it a trustee for the party defrauded," must be taken as referring only to such cases as those we have already referred to as possible exceptions to the rule. Such was the case of Barnsley v. Powell, 1 Ves. Sr. 284, cited by him, where a deed of consent to the probate had been fraudulently procured. It cannot be held to include such frauds as could have been relieved against by the probate court by refusing the probate of the will, where the injured party had actual notice of the probate proceeding in time to make his contest, and was not prevented from so doing by some fraud of the other party.

The allegations as to conspiracy add nothing to the legal effect of plaintiff's complaint. The sum and substance of that complaint is that she has been deprived of property to which she would have succeeded as heir by means of a false and forged will, established in the court having the jurisdiction to determine as to its validity by perjured testimony. Whether or not the forgery and perjury were the result of a conspiracy appears to be entirely immaterial in determining her rights to pursue the property in the hands of the beneficiaries. We are unable to see, as suggested by counsel for plaintiff, that such a conspiracy could operate to change what would otherwise be intrinsic fraud into extrinsic fraud. See Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 134, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159.

The alleged invalidity of our statute relative to the notice to be given of an application for probate of a will (sections 1303, 1304, Code Civ. Proc.) as to nonresidents who have no actual notice, is principally based upon the claim that the notice thereby provided for is wholly inadequate to enable one, situated as was this plaintiff, in any contingency to receive the notice in time to appear and contest the probate of the will on the original hearing. The notice provided by section 1303, Code Civ. Proc., is one of at least 10 days, the same to be given publication. Plaintiff was at that time a resident of Honolulu, in the then republic of Hawaii, and could not have received the notice in time to permit her to so appear. The effect of a provision making such notice sufficient is, it is urged, to deprive one situated as was this plaintiff of her property without due process of law. This particular contention has been before made in this court by this appellant, and overruled. It was held in Estate of Davis, 136 Cal. 590, 597, 69 Pac. 412, that inasmuch as the rights of the nonresident heir are in no way concluded by the decree, he having an entire year thereafter in which to attack the will on the same grounds and for the same reasons that he could attack it before probate, the measure of evidence demanded of him for a successful attack being no different in the two cases, due process of law is in no degree denied to the nonresident heir by the provision as to notice of the original hearing. This ruling was affirmed in the matter of Davis' Estate (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 183, the court saying: "Whether or not this be a proper case for applying the doctrine of res adjudicata or that of the law of the case, we are satisfied with the conclusion reached and adhere to it." In O'Callaghan v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 117, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101, the United States Supreme Court has decided a practically similar question in the same way. That case arose under the laws of Washington, the claim being made that the failure to give notice of an application for the probate of a nuncupative will, as required by the statute, made the admission to probate of such will a violation of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The laws of Washington as to a contest within one year after probate were substantially similar to ours. It was held that, conceding for the purposes of argument that absence of notice might afford substantial ground to contend that rights protected by the Constitution of the United States had been violated, if by its omission the parties were deprived of or lost their right to deny the will or question its probate, the full right given by the statute was a complete answer to the claim made under the federal Constitution.

The further contention that section 1304, Code Civ. Proc., requiring, in addition to the constructive notice provided for, personal notice to be mailed to or personally served on heirs of the testator residing in the state, but making no provision for such personal notice to nonresident heirs, is violative of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, as discriminating against nonresidents, we think to be entirely without merit. The very fact that one is a nonresident of the state is, from the necessities of the case, a sufficient reason for a difference in the manner of notice, and has always been recognized as such. If the manner of notice provided for an absent party is reasonable and adequate for that purpose, he cannot complain thereof on the mere ground that it is different from the notice provided for residents. He has not been deprived of due process of law. See, also, Estate of Davis, 136 Cal. 590, 595, 69 Pac. 412. The other federal questions suggested are disposed of by what has already been said upon the merits of the case.

For the reasons given above, the amended complaint failed to state a cause of action.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment.

TATE v. AITKEN et al. (Civ. 314.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 6, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 5, 1907.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—ACTS OF AGENT—RATIFICATION.

Though a contract authorizing real estate brokers to sell plaintiff's land was not signed by plaintiff, it was none the less his act, where his wife signed it with his approval, and he subsequently ratified her act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 662; vol. 26, Husband and Wife, §§ 139–147.]

2. SAME — ACTION BY PRINCIPAL FOR ACCOUNTING—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to recover money wrongfully retained by real estate brokers held to show that they were plaintiff's agents; that, as such, they agreed to sell the land to another for $1,300, which sum was paid to them; that after such sale they represented to plaintiff that the land could be sold for no greater sum than $800; that plaintiff, relying on the misrepresentation, accepted $800, and conveyed the land to the brokers, and they conveyed it to the third person.

3. SAME—AUTHORIZATION AND RATIFICATION OF AGENT'S ACTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action based on a contract made by plaintiff's wife held to show that her acts were authorized and ratified by plaintiff.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—OPTION TO PURCHASER — AUTHORITY TO SELL — BROKERS — REAL ESTATE—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

A writing in express terms empowering and authorizing real estate brokers to sell land for $1,000, or as much less as the owner might take, binding the brokers to accept as remuneration any sum they might obtain in excess of the sum stipulated that the owner should receive was a contract of agency, and not an option to the brokers to purchase the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by C. M. Tate against A. B. Aitken and another. Defendants appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

M. J. Cheatham (W. P. Johnson, of counsel), for appellants. John J. Wells, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff commenced this action for the purpose of recovering the sum of $500 alleged to be due him from defendants, said amount representing, it is alleged, the difference between the sum paid to plaintiff by the defendants for a piece of land belonging to the former and the sum received for said land by said defendants on a sale of the same to a third party; the transaction involving such sale having been conducted, it is averred, by defendants as agents of plaintiff. Plaintiff was given judgment for $200, from which and the order denying a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The defendants at and for some time prior to the date of the institution of this action were copartners, engaged in the business of buying and selling real estate at the town of Corning, in Tehama county. The plaintiff at the same time was the owner of "lot numbered 2, in the block numbered 11, in Richfield colony, in the said county of Tehama." In the month of July, 1904, the plaintiff employed said defendants as agents, conferring upon them full authority to sell said lot, agreeing to pay them for their services in effecting the sale thereof so much as they might receive therefor in excess of a certain amount fixed and stated in a certain written agreement to be hereafter noticed. It is charged in the complaint "that on the 1st day of July, 1905, the defendants bargained and agreed with one W. L. Yound to sell and convey to him the said property for and in consideration of the sum of $1,300, which sum the said Yound then and there paid to the defendants." It is further alleged "that thereafter the defendants, while still the agents of plaintiff, for the purpose of making the sale of the said property, represented to plaintiff that they could sell the said property for the sum of $800, but not for any greater sum, and they prevailed upon the plaintiff to accept the said sum of $800, in full as payment for the said property." The plaintiff, it is alleged, thereupon executed a deed, conveying said property to defendants, and that the latter paid to him the sum of $800; that immediately after said transaction, "and as a part thereof," the defendants conveyed said property to said W. L. Yound, the latter paying to the defendants therefor the sum of $1,300. The answer, after denying that the land was sold to defendants under the circumstances alleged in the complaint, and denying that plaintiff employed them as agents to sell said land, admits that the defendants purchased it at the price mentioned, but declares that plaintiff sold the same to them upon his "own volition and without any inducements on the part of defendants other than the ordinary inducements usually made in transactions of this character." The sale of the land to Yound for the sum of $1,300 is also admitted. The answer, as a "further and second defense," sets out the alleged written agreement to which we have previously referred, the same being signed by Mrs. K. M. Tate, the wife of plaintiff, and by the defendants, dated July 14, 1904, and by the provisions of which the defendants were purported to be given power and authority to sell the land described in the complaint "for the sum of $1,000.00, or as much less as he [plaintiff] may take at any time therefor," and it was also stipulated in said agreement that the defendants for the services of negotiating and consummating such sale should retain, as their commission, "all over the above mentioned sum." It is then alleged that in the month of May, 1905, and after the execution of the said written contract, "plaintiff, pursuant to the terms thereof, informed defendants that he would reduce the price of the property named therein from $1,000.00 to $800.00." The defendants further admit that, when they purchased said land from plaintiff, they were negotiating with said Yound for the sale of the same to him, etc.

The evidence offered by plaintiff in support of the allegations of his complaint shows, briefly stated, the following facts: That Mrs. Tate, wife of plaintiff, signed the written contract, set out in the answer, by the request and consent of the plaintiff, authorizing defendants to sell the property mentioned in the pleadings, upon the terms as therein stipulated; that plaintiff himself was also to have signed said contract, but failed to do so; that plaintiff approved the act of his wife in making and signing said contract; that on July 1, 1895, while plaintiff was absent from home, the defendant Case called at his residence, and stated to plaintiff's wife that he (Case) had a purchaser for the property if the price were reduced from $1,000 to $800; that Mrs. Tate asked time in which to consult her husband with regard to the proposition, but that Case advised her to take $800 for the property, as that was as much as could be obtained for it, and that in selling it for that sum they (the defendants) would receive no commission; that finally Mrs. Tate consented to take the responsibility of authorizing the sale of the property for the amount mentioned; that, when plaintiff returned home, his wife related to him the facts of the transaction which had occurred between her and the defendant Case; that he approved and ratified her action in the acceptance of Case's proposition to pay $800 for the land by the execution of a deed conveying the property to defendants, and left the same "at the bank" to be delivered to defendants upon the payment of the sum agreed upon; that defendants paid plaintiff the amount and received the deed, which bore date of July 5, 1905. The foregoing represents in substance and effect the testimony given by Mrs. Tate. There was introduced in evidence a document, signed by the defendants, and dated July 1, 1905, purporting to be an acknowledgment by them of the receipt from W. L. Yound of the sum of $1,300, "payment in full Lot 2, Blk 11, 34 acres more or less, Richfield." The plaintiff testified that his wife had told him of the conversation with Case, and that, believing therefrom that the sum of $800 was all that he could get for the property, conveyed the same to defendants for that sum. He stated, in reply to a question asked on cross-examination, that his wife acted for him in the matter, and that he had ratified her acts. Mr. Yound testified to having paid to defendants the sum of $1,300 for the property on the 1st day of July, 1905. These are in brief the facts as shown by the evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff.

The defendants, while admitting having entered into the contract for the sale of the land to which they and Mrs. Tate had subscribed their names, testified that subsequent to the execution thereof the price of $1,000 called for by said contract for said property was verbally changed by plaintiff to $800. The defendant Case testified as follows: "On Friday, the 30th day of June, I told her [Mrs. Tate] we had some parties looking at the place, and that we had hopes to sell. I explained to her and told her the price we were asking for the place was $1,300; that we often had to make trades, and I expected if we sold the place, to have to make a deal and trade it off. I went specifically to ask her if she would take less than $800. It was understood that $800 was the price. It had been talked again and again. I asked her, in case we couldn't make a sale to do any better, if we should turn it down, if we couldn't get the $800 for her, and she said she would rather not take less than $800. I told her then that, if she was satisfied to take the $800, to come down the next morning to make out the deed, and we would take our chances on selling the place. Before I had gone out to Mrs. Tate's, I had taken Mr. Yound out to look at the place, and on Saturday I took him out again. In the afternoon of Saturday Mr. Yound came back to the office, and after some little talk he decided to take the property at $1,300. * * * He then paid us the $1,300. After he had paid us the mnoey for the place, I went out and told Mrs. Tate that she could come in and have the deed fixed up and then we would pay her the money. She understood that Mr. Aitken, and I had bought the place from her on Friday evening. We told her we would take the place and take the chances on selling it. We were taking it under and in pursuance of that contract." Defendant Aitken corroborated the testimony of Case as to an alleged conversation with Mrs. Tate in the former's office in which the latter, it was claimed, said that she would be satisfied to receive $800 for the property, and that she did not care how much defendants made over and above that sum. There was testimony to the same effect by one R. B. Aitken. In rebuttal, the plaintiff and his wife testified that, having heard, after the conveyance of the property to the defendants, the latter had sold the same for $1,300, they called on the defendant Case, repeated to him what they had learned, and he then insisted that they had received but $800, for the property from Mr. Yound, etc. The court found that the defendants were the agents of plaintiff for the sale of the property; that as such agents of plaintiff they "bargained and agreed with one W. L. Yound to sell and convey to him the said property for and in consideration of the sum of $1,300, which said sum the said Yound then and there paid to defendants"; that defendants, after such sale to said Yound, represented to plaintiff that the sum of $800 could be obtained for said property, and that it could be sold for no greater sum; that plaintiff, relying on such representations, and being in ignorance of the negotiations for the sale of the land by defendants to Yound, accepted the sum of $800 therefor, and thereupon conveyed the same to defendants; that thereafter defendants conveyed the land to Yound.

The appellants undertake to avoid the effect of the judgment against them upon the ground that, as they seem with earnestness to contend, as to the transaction responsible for this action, they were not at any time acting as, or were, in fact the agents of plaintiff. This contention is urged mainly upon the proposition that the written contract which purported to authorize them to sell the property was not in fact or in law the act of plaintiff because it was not signed or executed by him. But the evidence as presented by the record justifies no such assumption. While it is true that the agreement empowering the defendants to sell the property for plaintiff does not bear his signature, and on its face appears to carry with it no other or further authority than that which his wife by her own individual act sought to confer, the testimony of the latter, which upon this point not only stands in the record absolutely uncontroverted but without any attempt at contradiction whatever, is to the effect that her husband, who was employed in a store at Vina, and had little opportunity to give personal attention to the matter, authorized her to see the defendant, Case, "and put the property in his hands as our agent"; that she called at the office of Aitken & Case, "and Dr. Case wrote out a contract with me, and I signed it, and the arrangement was that the first time my husband was in town he would call at the office and sign it, too, and it was so understood when I left Dr. Case." She further testified that her husband approved her act in signing the agreement, and had said to her that he would himself sign it at some later time. Her testimony with reference to this agreement was corroborated by her husband, who was made to say by the attorney for the appellants himself, on cross-examination, that his wife had acted for him in the transaction. Moreover, the actions of plaintiff, as disclosed by the evidence, clearly show that he ratified the acts of his wife, both in the execution of the agreement with the defendants and in the sale of the property to them. After the property had been placed in the hands of appellants for the purpose of selling it for the plaintiff, the former advertised it over their firm name for sale for the sum of $1,300 in the Corning Observer, a newspaper published at Corning, and this advertisement came under the observation of and was known to Mrs. Tate, and, while it does not directly so appear from the evidence, it is a most reasonable conclusion that plaintiff also must have known of said advertisement.

That the representation made by Case to Mrs. Tate in the conversation after the defendants had virtually made a sale of the property to Yound, to the effect that the sum of $800 was as much as could be secured for the land, was untrue, and resorted to for no other purpose than to obtain a larger commission from the sale than the defendants could otherwise hope to receive, we think is indubitably established by the testimony of Case himself. According to his evidence, after he was undoubtedly satisfied that he could sell the land for $1,300, he asked Mrs. Tate if she would not take less than $800 for it because that sum could not be obtained for it, and that she refused to accept anything less than that amount, whereupon he told her that he would take it at that figure, and requested her to call at his office with the deed transferring it to defendants. It is true that he says that this conversation occurred on June 30th, the day before the sum of $1,300 was paid to his firm by Yound for the land; but Mrs. Tate says it took place on the evening of July 1st. The court found the fact as testified to by Mrs. Tate, and it is sufficient to say that, from a careful consideration of the whole record, we are fully satisfied and in perfect accord with that finding. It is quite evident that, when Case declared to Mrs. Tate that the sum of $800 could not be obtained for the land, he thus made a statement having no foundation in fact, for, accepting his own word, when he discovered that she was unwilling to part with the property for less than that amount, he told her he would buy the property at that price. This, too, in the face of repeated asseverations that he would be unable to make any profit on the sale of the property, unless he could secure it for less than $800. It is also a circumstance of considerable significance that when Case, according to his own statement as a witness, after receiving the sum of $1,300 for the property—which event occurred, it will be recalled, before his firm acquired title to it—called on Mrs. Tate at her house, and requested her to "come in and have the deed fixed up and then we would pay her the money," said absolutely nothing of having already sold the land to Yound. The whole affair, as it is protrayed by the evidence before us, so far as it concerns the part taken in it by the defendants, appears to bear the marks of the ambidexterity by which transactions involving real estate deals are too often characterized. The evidence fully supports the findings of the trial court, and there is no reason which the record discovers justifying the fostering of any doubt that the judgment is just and that it should be sustained. Counsel have directed our attention to the law and some cases bearing thereon with reference to the elements, the existence of which is essential to the establishment of the relation of principal and agent. We have no fault to find with the principles thus stated and presented; but, under the facts as shown by the record, they have no force here. The evidence sufficiently shows that the acts of Mrs. Tate in the transaction, from its inception to its conclusion, were first authorized and subsequently ratified by the plaintiff. They show, as we have stated, that the defendants were, as to the sale of the property, at all the times mentioned in the complaint, agents of the plaintiff, and that they did not, in the part of the transaction involving the final disposition of the land, act in good faith with their client.

Counsel have made an attempt to maintain that the agreement, by the provisions of which defendants were made the agents of plaintiff for the sale of the property, amounts only to an option to purchase said property by the defendants. This contention is not supportable. The writing, in express and unequivocal terms, empowers and authorizes defendants, as agents of the plaintiff, to sell the property "for the sum of $1,000, or as much less as we may take at any time thereafter," and the defendants in unmistakable language agree as agents to sell the property and to accept as their remuneration therefor any sum which they might succeed in obtaining for it in excess of that which it was stipulated plaintiff should receive for it.

The only errors urged are based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and therefore, having disposed of those against the contention of appellant, it follows that the judgment and order appealed from must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

BEAUMONT v. SAMSON et al. (Civ. 325.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 2, 1907.)

1. CERTIORARI—GROUNDS—PUBLIC OFFICERS—TITLE TO OFFICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 803, which provides that an action may be brought by the Attorney General in the name of the people against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, or any franchise, quo warranto, and not certiorari, is the proper remedy to try the rights of persons to exercise the functions of town offices.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, § 4.]

2. SAME—EXCESS OF JURISDICTION.

Certiorari lies under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, when "an inferior tribunal board or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded" its jurisdiction, "and there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy and adequate remedy," and its office is not so much to determine the valid existence of the tribunal, etc., while acting in a judicial capacity, as it is to determine whether its jurisdiction has been exceeded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Certiorari by J. B. Beaumont against W. H. Samson and others as board of supervisors of Thomas county. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See 89 Pac. 137.

Frank Freeman, for appellant. W. A. Fish, Dist. Atty., and McCoy & Gans, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Certiorari. This is an appeal from the judgment and order of the superior court of Tehama county denying plaintiff's application for a writ of review and dismissing the proceedings therein.

Proceedings were taken before the board of supervisors of said county which resulted in an order of said board declaring the territory in said order described to be "duly incorporated as a municipal corporation of the sixth class, under the name and style of the town of Corning." The purpose of the action is to set aside, vacate, and annul all of said proceedings and to obtain a decree that said incorporation is invalid.

Several questions arising in the case have been discussed, and among others it is contended by respondents that plaintiff had a plain, speedy and adequate remedy by quo warranto, and that this latter, and not certiorari, is the appropriate remedy, and it was so held by the learned trial judge. We think the point well taken, and this makes it unnecessary to notice other questions.

It appeared that, pursuant to the order of the board, the persons named as trustees of said town of Corning entered upon the discharge of their duties, and were so acting at the commencement of this action. Whether or not a de jure corporation, the officers elected to exercise its powers and functions assumed to act under the authority conferred by the proceedings taken by the board of supervisors, and we think the organization constituted a de facto corporation. The good faith of these officers in so acting is not called in question, nor is it disputed that they were acting under the authority supposed by them to be conferred by the proceedings leading up to the formation of an assumed valid and legal corporation. At most, the acts of these trustees constituted a usurpation of or an intrusion into a public office, and their authority so to do, it seems to us, cannot be properly determined otherwise than by the method pointed out in section 803 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, commonly called proceedings by quo warranto. The writ of review, or certiorari, lies when "an inferior tribunal board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded" its jurisdiction, "and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy and adequate remedy." Section 1068, Code Civ. Proc. The office of this writ is not so much to determine the valid existence of the tribunal, board, or officer, while acting in a judicial capacity, as it is to determine whether the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer has been exceeded. "The character of the act or determination sought to be reviewed, rather than the tribunal or officer by which the act or determination is made, is the test for determining whether the writ should be issued, for it is only a determination which is made 'when exercising judicial functions' that can be reviewed." Quinchard v. Board of Trustees, 113 Cal. 664, 668, 45 Pac. 856.

In 17 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. p. 412, it is said: "Certiorari to ministerial boards or officers is not the proper remedy to try the title to an office or the right to exercise corporate functions. Quo warranto is the only remedy which affords complete relief, and, although questions regarding the legality of an election may be collaterally raised and determined by certiorari in determining the validity of laws or ordinances of municipal bodies, yet, for the purpose of directly testing the right to a public office, quo warranto, and not certiorari, is the proper remedy. Nor is certiorari allowed for the purpose of bringing up a certificate of incorporation or other proceedings for the purpose of enabling the court to determine the legal existence of an alleged corporation. For the purpose of determining such questions, the proper remedy is by scire facias or quo warranto, so that the corporation may be in court." See cases cited in footnotes. In the case of State v. Osburn et al., 51 Pac. 837, 24 Nev. 187, the action was for a writ to review the proceedings of the city council of the city of Reno, Nev. The statute relating to this writ is substantially the same in that state as in California. The question of the constitutionality of the act incorporating the city of Reno was raised, and the court, in passing upon that question, said: "We are not determining whether the city council of that city exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering bonds to be sold for the purposes indicated, * * * but we are passing upon the rights of the respondent to exercise the functions of city council, and upon the validity of the corporate existence of the city of Reno. This we do not believe we have the power or authority to do, under the limitations of the regulative statute above cited." The court then proceeds to show that the question of corporate existence "must and can be determined by another proceeding, plain, speedy and adequate." Reference is then made to the statute regulating proceedings in quo warranto as furnishing the true remedy.

The cases are numerous in our reports where the form of action was quo warranto to determine the right to enjoy a franchise or exercise the powers of a municipal or other corporation. People v. Town of Linden, 107 Cal. 94, 40 Pac. 115, cited by appellant, is an instance. Our attention has been called to but one case where the action by writ of review seems to have been resorted to for the purpose of determining the validity of the proceedings of a board of supervisors resulting in the incorporation of a town. The question now before us was not raised in that case. Furthermore, the opinion is careful to state the limitation of the inquiry solely to the correction of errors or irregularities within the jurisdiction of the board while exercising judicial functions. Many acts connected with the statutory proceeding for the creation of a municipal corporation are shown to be legislative or ministerial, and not within the corrective force of writ of review. It would seem to us that a remedy incapable of determining the validity or invalidity of all the steps taken by the board of supervisors would be inadequate to an inquiry as to the validity of the corporation created by the board. And then, too, every consideration requires that the corporation thus created should be a party to the action and have its day in court.

The judgment discharging the writ and dismissing the proceedings is affirmed.

DE LONG v. MILLER & LUX. (Sac. 1,450.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907. On Rehearing, June 15, 1907.)

HIGHWAYS—DEFECTS—LIABILITY OF PERSON CAUSING DEFECTS — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for injuries to a traveler on a highway, caused by a defect therein, evidence examined, and held not to show that the defect was caused by the negligent act of another.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by A. De Long against Miller & Lux. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Frohman & Jacobs, Frank H. Short, and J. K. Law, for appellant. F. G. Ostrander and F. W. Henderson, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. The complaint alleged that on or about the 27th day of June, 1900, plaintiff was riding in a buggy along a certain public highway in Merced county known as the "Wilson Ranch Road"; that the defendant wrongfully and negligently caused water to flow over, along, and across said highway by means of a dam constructed and maintained by the defendant across a slough at a point about one-half mile from the highway, whereby the waters of the slough were turned out and spread over the adjoining land and caused to run over and across the highway; that this water formed a deep hole in the highway, which was covered by said water so it could not be seen; that while the plaintiff was riding along this highway the front wheels of his buggy ran into said hole, and plaintiff was violently thrown from the buggy, striking against one of the wheels of said buggy, whereby he sustained great bodily injury, to wit, a double inguinal hernia; that plaintiff fell into the water and was chilled, thereby contracting rheumatism. The plaintiff sought to recover damages in the sum of $25,000. The answer denied that any water was caused to flow along or across the highway by reason of the dam referred to in the complaint, but, on the contrary, averred that the water on the highway was the natural overflow water from the San Joaquin river and the sloughs running from said river. It denied plaintiff's alleged injuries, and set up an affirmative plea of contributory negligence. At the trial the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. A motion for new trial was made by defendant, and, upon said motion being argued and submitted to the court, it was ordered that the motion be granted, unless plaintiff should agree to a reduction of $3,000 from the amount of $10,000 found by the verdict of the jury. This reduction was agreed to by the plaintiff, and the court denied the motion for new trial. From the order denying the motion for new trial, this appeal is taken.

The principal point made by the appellant, and the only one which need be considered here, is that there was no evidence to show that any water, which may have been upon the highway at the place where plaintiff claimed to have been thrown from his buggy, was caused to flow there by reason of the dam mentioned in the complaint.

The road in question is the county road running from Merced to Los Banos in the county of Merced, and plaintiff was on his way from Merced to Los Banos when the accident is alleged to have occurred. From the maps showing the surrounding territory and the testimony concerning the topographical conditions, it appears that the road traverses a stretch of low lands running southerly and westerly from the left bank of the San Joaquin river. The river runs, at this part of its course, in a northerly and westerly direction, through flat and low lying lands on either side. The road from Merced crosses the river by means of a bridge at a point known as "Dickenson's Ferry"; and runs thence southerly across these low lying lands to a bridge over a slough designated in the evidence as "Middle Slough"; thence continuing in the same direction for some distance across other low lands to another bridge across Salt Slough. Middle Slough runs out of the San Joaquin river in a westerly direction several miles above Dickenson's Ferry. Some distance to the west of the point where it is crossed by the road, Middle Slough connects with Salt Slough, a slough emerging from the San Joaquin river at a point higher up than Middle Slough. Salt Slough, after its junction with Middle Slough, runs in a northerly and westerly direction until it again rejoins the San Joaquin river. The land inclosed by the San Joaquin river and Salt Slough forms an island known as "San Luis Island," all of which is composed of flat and bottom land intersected by numerous sloughs and swales. These low lands have always been flooded for a considerable portion of each year by water overflowing the banks of the San Joaquin river. A large part of this territory, including the portion of the island inclosed between the road in question, the San Joaquin river, and Middle Slough, is owned by the defendant, which has been conducting farming operations upon it and has erected certain dams and levees for the purpose of irrigating the land and controlling the flow of the flood waters from the river. It appears that the defendant had constructed a dam across Middle Slough at a point about one-half mile upstream from the road, and the contention of the plaintiff at the trial was that this dam had caused water, which would have remained within the banks of the slough or returned to it, to be diverted to the north and west, and thence to run across the road, causing and covering up the hole into which the plaintiff's buggy fell.

The principal witness upon whom plaintiff relied in attempting to establish his theory of the case was one H. H. Henderson, a surveyor. The map introduced by plaintiff was prepared by Henderson, and he testified at length concerning it and regarding the conditions existing in the territory in question. From Henderson's testimony it appeared that the road in question was elevated above the surface of the adjoining ground for a considerable distance after it left Dickenson's Ferry. After it reached the end of this elevated portion (or "grade" as it is called in the testimony), the road ran over the natural surface of the ground for a distance, and then came to a second and shorter piece of grade, after which it continued over the natural surface of the ground (except at a point where there was a culvert) until it reached the bridge over Middle Slough. According to Henderson's testimony, the first continuous grade was 8,653 feet in length. There was then a stretch of 447 feet ungraded; then a second grade of 324 feet, from the end of which the road ran 1,626 feet to a culvert over a low place, and thence 3,746 feet to the bridge across Middle Slough. A point near the end of the second grade of 324 feet is marked "B" on Henderson's map, and Henderson's testimony was to the effect that there was, in June, 1900, a hole in the road at this point, and that this hole was covered to a greater or less extent by water which had been diverted thither by reason of the dam in Middle Slough referred to in the complaint. While the defendant insists that the evidence, taken as a whole, is insufficient to justify the inference that any water was diverted by the dam so as to cross the road at point B, it may be assumed, for the purposes of this discussion, that Henderson's testimony tended to establish this fact. If there were evidence on the part of plaintiff to show that the injuries sustained by him occurred by reason of his buggy falling into a hole at this point, it might well be said that there was enough to justify the jury in finding that the injury complained of was caused by the act of the defendant in maintaining its dam across Middle Slough.

But a careful examination of the testimony demonstrates that the hole into which plaintiff claims to have fallen was not situated at point B on the map, but, on the contrary, was located at least 1,000 feet to the north of this point. There were no witnesses to the accident except the plaintiff and his son, who were riding together in the buggy. The son was driving. According to the son's testimony, they started in the buggy down the grade from Dickenson's Ferry, and had driven for some distance when they struck water. While they were passing through this water, they got into the hole, and the plaintiff was thrown out. The hole was about at the end of the first grade. The water began at a point where the first of a series of stakes was set. (The uncontradicted evidence of the man who set the stakes shows that the first of them was set at or near the end of the first long grade.) The plaintiff himself testified that about a mile and a quarter beyond the bridge "it looked as though water had passed over the road there, and pretty soon we could see the stakes on each side of the road, and as we got down a little further the water was deeper. * * * We were driving along the grade when we first struck the water. After we struck the water, we went along, and all of a sudden our left front wheel dropped right down into a hole up to the axle." He testified further that they had traveled about eight or ten rods between the stakes before they struck the hole. This testimony shows conclusively that the hole into which the buggy fell could not have been the hole found by Henderson at point B at the end of the second grade. If we assume that Henderson's map accurately defined the length of the first grade, the point where the accident occurred was some hundreds of feet north of point B. The second grade itself was 324 feet in length, and between the first grade and the second there was a distance of 447 feet, little, if any, of which had, according to the testimony of the De Longs, been traversed. But, in addition to this, it appears conclusively from the transcript that Henderson was in error in fixing the end of the first grade at the point where it is shown on the map, and that in 1900, at the time of the accident, that grade in fact ended at a point some 600 feet north of the point shown by Henderson as the end of that grade. It appears that, while the accident occurred in 1900, the action was not commenced until 1902, and the trial took place in 1904. Henderson made his survey and map in the latter year, and represented the road as it then appeared. It is true that he testified that he had been over the road repeatedly in 1900, in fact that he had been over it within a day of the accident to De Long, and that the grade as indicated on his map was in the same condition it had been in 1900. But he was not clear and certain in his statement that the first grade had not been lengthened since 1900, and, in view of all the testimony, it is perfectly evident that his memory was at fault in this respect. The defendant called eight witnesses, all of whom testified that the southerly 600 feet of the first grade had been added in the year 1901, and had not existed in 1900. These witnesses included a supervisor of Merced county, who had been in charge of that portion of the road in 1900 and 1901, and had had the last 600 feet graded in the fall of 1901, the roadmaster who had actually extended the grade, and other officials and residents in the neighborhood, who were thoroughly familiar with the circumstances testified to. In view of the fact that Henderson's map was prepared from surveys made four years after the occurrence of the accident, and that his statement that the grade was in the same condition in 1900 that it was at the time of his survey was based merely upon a recollection not positively asserted, there cannot be said to be a substantial conflict on this point, and it must be taken as an established fact that the first grade in 1900 ended at a point 600 feet north of the end of the grade as shown on Henderson's map. If this be so, the accident to the plaintiff must have occurred at a point at least 1,000 feet north of point B, the point at which Henderson found a hole, and the point where, as shown by his testimony, the water diverted by the dam across Middle Slough would cross the road.

We do not find in the record any evidence tending to show that the water which crossed the road at the point where, according to the testimony of plaintiff and his son, the accident occurred, was caused to be there by reason of the dam mentioned in the complaint. The testimony of the witnesses, who established the fact that the last 600 feet of the first grade were added in 1901, shows that this portion of the grade was constructed across a particularly low piece of ground, which was always flooded whenever there was any water in the surrounding country. Henderson's testimony fails to show that water diverted by the dam reached the point at or near the end of the first grade where the accident occurred, and his statement as to the elevations of the ground at various points affords no ground for the inference that such water did reach this point. The only evidence pointed to as sustaining the contention is that of the witness Tucker. He testified that he had seen the water flowing across the grade as the result of the diversion from Middle Slough at the dam, that he had seen it "run up on the grade about a mile and a half; different places ran over the grade." But he subsequently modified this statement by stating, "Just a short piece of the grade will overflow from that water, about sixty feet," and later, on cross-examination, stated that, "It was running 60 feet over the grade on the short piece there," evidently referring to the second grade ending at point B. At a later point he stated that he had found some water on the main grade, running over the main grade about eight or ten feet wide. But as this was stated to be about half a mile from the south end of the main grade, it is apparent it could have had no connection with plaintiff's injuries, even if we are to attach any importance to testimony so vague and uncertain as that given by this witness. Plaintiff's case seems to have been tried upon the theory that the accident occurred at point B, and his main effort was to show that any overflow of the road which existed at that point was caused by the erection of the defendant's dam across Middle Slough. Assuming that this effort was successful, it appeared that the injury to plaintiff occurred at an entirely different point, and as the plaintiff failed to show that any act of the defendant caused the condition of the road at this point, the evidence must be held to be insufficient to justify the verdict.

Many other points are made by the appellant; but, in view of the conclusion reached regarding the evidence, it will be unnecessary to consider any of them.

The order denying a new trial is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing, and from the judgment of the court. A careful examination of the evidence convinces me that the testimony of the plaintiff and his son does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the accident occurred at or in the immediate vicinity of the end of the grade as it existed in 1900, or, in other words, at a point 1,000 feet, or thereabouts, north of point B. They were testifying from recollection, and did not pretend to locate with precision the position of the hole into which they drove, and, while plaintiff places it 8 or 10 rods from the end of the first grade at one time, he puts it at 20 rods in another part of his evidence, and describes it as one-third of the way "across the water." "Across the water," in that connection, meant the overflowed space between the end of the long grade and the beginning of the short grade, which, at the time of the accident, was 1,047 feet wide, so that according to this testimony the hole was located over 300 feet from the end of the first grade, and the most trustworthy evidence in the case—the levels established by actual survey—shows that water diverted by the dam of defendant not only might have reached that point, but in seeking its own level must inevitably have overflowed all the low ungraded part of the road up to the terminus of the long grade as then existing.

MARLOW et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(L. A. 1,895.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1907.)

1. Carriers—Ejection of Passenger—Tickets—Identification of Purchaser.

Where a passenger tendered a ticket containing a provision that she would sign her name, and otherwise identify herself as the original purchaser, and was ejected as not sufficiently identified, held, that the passenger's identification as the original purchaser of the ticket was sufficient to satisfy a reasonable man, and that her ejection was wrongful.

2. Same—Damages—Excessiveness.

Where a married woman, with a nursing child, was wrongfully ejected from defendant's train at an intervening station, where she was left without money, and was there aided in telegraphing her husband and obtaining a night's lodging, a verdict awarding her $500 damages was not excessive.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Edward Marlow and wife against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley, for appellant. Byron Waters and Wm. Wylie, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs brought their action to recover damages for the unlawful ejectment of Mrs. Marlow from a train of defendant upon which she was a passenger. The cause was tried before the court, which gave judgment for plaintiffs in the sum of $500, from which judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

Plaintiff Edward Marlow had purchased for his wife a ticket entitling her to travel from Maricopa to Los Angeles and return. She was upon her return trip from Los Angeles to Maricopa when she was ordered from the train by defendant's agent. Her ticket contained following provision: "That I, the original purchaser, will sign my name and otherwise identify myself as such purchaser, whenever called upon so to do by any conductor or agent of the line or lines over which the ticket reads." This agreement was signed by Mrs. Marlow.

Appellant's first point is that there is no evidence showing that plaintiff identified herself by signature or otherwise in accordance with the terms of the ticket, and that she was therefore not entitled to passage thereon. The facts are that Mrs. Marlow was traveling with a nursing baby about a year and a half old, and that her trunk had been checked through to her destination.

The train agent of defendant had asked for her signature while the train was in motion. While admitting a similarity, he expressed himself dissatisfied with a comparison which he made between the signature written for him, and that upon the face of the ticket. Mrs. Marlow protested that the ticket was honestly hers, and asked for an opportunity to sign when the train was not in motion. She did so sign repeatedly, and still the train agent was unsatisfied. He asked her if she knew anybody on the train, or if there were any identifying marks upon her clothing. She knew nobody on the train, and was unable to show the required identification marks. She still protested, however, that it was her ticket, declared that she had not money sufficient to pay her fare, but announced her willingness to pledge a ring, and begged to be allowed to continue her journey to Maricopa, where she assured the agent that friends would identify her. The ticket was signed "Mrs. Edward Marlow," and the identification marks upon the ticket described the owner as "female, stout, middle aged, light eyes, dark hair." That the plaintiff had in charge a nursing baby was at least some evidence that she was a married woman, and it is not contended that in person she did not meet the description above given. Nevertheless, and despite her protest, her ticket was taken by the train agent and was reported to the conductor, and it became the conductor's duty to cause her to leave the train, which unpleasant duty he performed with courtesy. Mrs. Marlow was thus left at Colton with the care of a nursing, frightened, crying child, without her trunk, and without money. She was aided in telegraphing to her husband and in obtaining a night's lodging.

These facts present a different case from that of Southern Ry. Co. v. Barlow, 104 Ga. 213, 30 S. E. 732, 69 Am. St. Rep. 166, cited by appellant. That case holds merely that, under a contract such as this, a validating agent who was not satisfied with the signature alone was justified in requiring other evidence of identity, and that the mere opinion of a hotel clerk as to the genuineness of the signature was no better evidence than the signature itself. Central Georgia Ry. Co. v. Cannon, 32 S. E. 874, 106 Ga. 828, a case also relied upon by appellant, was one where the plaintiff, against the advice of the agent, printed his name on the ticket instead of writing it in the first instance, thereby making it impracticable to identify himself by writing. The court very properly declared that it was incumbent upon such purchaser as a condition precedent to having the ticket signed and stamped to furnish such proof of his identity, and of the fact that he was the original purchaser, as would be sufficient to satisfy a reasonable man, and that under such a contract the validating agent was entitled to call for other proof of identity than that offered merely by the holder writing his name. Certainly the evidence, as above pointed out, presents an entirely different case from those referred to, and furnishes what should have been sufficient assurance of plaintiff's right to travel.

Under this contract the agents of defendant were not made the absolute arbiters, as appellant contends, upon the authority of Church v. Shanklin, 95 Cal. 626, 30 Pac. 789, 17 L. R. A. 207. The utmost which the agents could require was reasonably satisfactory evidence of identification. Church v. Shanklin was a case under contract whereby title to real estate was to be perfected "to the satisfaction of Church & Cory, attorneys," and this court held that the expression of their satisfaction with the title was what the parties had stipulated should be had, and that Church & Cory thus became umpires and arbiters whose judgment was final. Such, as we have said, is not the case here presented, nor will it be said that, under the circumstances indicated, the judgment was excessive.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; LORIGAN, J.

HUYCK et al. v. RENNIE et al. (L. A. 1,899.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Competency of Witnesses—Discretion—Review.

The exercise of a trial court's discretion in determining whether a witness was an "intimate acquaintance" of testator, in order to entitle the witness to give his opinion as to testator's mental condition, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, would not be disturbed on appeal, unless a clear abuse of discretion appeared.

2. Evidence — Opinion Evidence — Mental Capacity —Witnesses—Competency—Intimate Acquaintances.

Where one witness had an acquaintance with testator which was of a mere casual character, and another knew him only through having given him massage treatments on three occasions, neither was an "intimate acquaintance" of testator, required, by Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10, to qualify him to testify as to testator's mental condition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2198.]

3. Wills — Testamentary Capacity — Evidence—Time.

Where, on an issue of testamentary capacity, it did not appear that witness saw testator on the date the will was executed, a question calling for witness' opinion as to whether testator possessed sound and disposing mind and memory on that day was properly disallowed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 116-120.]

4. Same.

While evidence as to testator's mental condition at times more or less remote from the date of the will is admissible, the time to which the witness' testimony relates must be specified, and must have reference to a time when the witness came in contact with testator.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 120.]

5. EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE—WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—INDEFINITENESS.

A question calling for a witness' opinion as to testator's mental capacity prior to a specified date was objectionable for indefiniteness as to time.

6. SAME—HEARSAY.

On an issue as to testamentary capacity, a question whether witness knew whether any one conversed with testator, or endeavored to dissuade him from the belief that a marriage would take place between himself and witness' niece, was objectionable as calling for hearsay evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1168–1173.]

7. SAME — KNOWLEDGE OR BELIEF OF ANOTHER.

On an issue as to testator's mental capacity, questions calling for testator's belief as to whether he would marry witness' niece, and whether witness knew if her niece had any intention of marrying testator, were properly disallowed.

8. WILLS—MENTAL CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

On an issue as to testator's mental capacity, evidence of statements or actions by testator indicating his belief that he would marry a certain lady was competent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 133.]

9. WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in a will contest, one of proponent's attorneys who drew the will was called as a witness for contestants, and testified concerning the directions and instructions given by decedent for drawing the will, fixing the date as subsequent to the making of certain deeds, he was properly allowed to state on cross-examination whether the making of the deeds had any effect as to his desire in the testamentary disposition of the rest of his property.

10. WILLS—MENTAL CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

On an issue as to testator's mental capacity, a lease, identified by testator's attorney who drew the will as one executed by testator after negotiations conducted in witness' presence, was admissible to show testator's business capacity; a proper foundation having been laid by the witness' testimony as to the execution of the lease, together with the proof of due execution afforded by the notarial certificate of acknowledgment attached, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1948, 1951.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 128, 130.]

11. EVIDENCE—PRELIMINARY EVIDENCE—IDENTIFYING DOCUMENTS.

It is not error to overrule an objection to a question, merely preliminary, for the purpose of identifying a lease intended to be introduced in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 1594.]

12. APPEAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where a lease was admitted in evidence without objection, defendant was not prejudiced by the overruling of a preliminary question as to whether witness had prepared it, which question the witness answered in the negative.

13. EVIDENCE — OPINION — SUBJECT OF INQUIRY.

On an issue of testamentary capacity, a witness testified concerning testator's ability to conduct his business affairs, and, after giving the details of transactions between himself and testator, was asked whether, in a particular transaction, testator received as much, in witness' estimation, as was coming to him; witness having knowledge of all the facts. Held, that the question did not relate to a proper subject of expert or opinion evidence, and was objectionable as calling for the conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 2149–2160.]

14. TRIAL—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

A request to charge that the jury were not bound in a will contest by the testimony of the witnesses to the will, but if they were not satisfied with the testimony of such witnesses, as against the testimony of others, they might reject the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, was properly refused as calculated to discredit such subscribing witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 490, 531–533, 577–581.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Suit by Monte Ingall Huyck and others against Eva J. Rennie, as administratrix of the estate of Andrew L. Huyck, deceased, and others, to set aside the probate of testator's will. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

G. W. Meals (W. H. Johnson, of counsel), for appellants. Sheridan & Fox and Richards & Currier, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Andrew L. Huyck died on October 18, 1901, leaving an alleged will, which was, on the 4th day of December, 1901, admitted to probate by the superior court of Santa Barbara county. Some of the decedent's heirs at law commenced this proceeding to revoke the probate, on the grounds of insanity and undue influence. Issue having been joined, the case went to trial before a jury. At the trial, the contestants abandoned their claim of undue influence, and the verdict of the jury was in favor of proponents on the other issue. A motion for new trial was made and denied, and contestants appeal from the order denying their motion. There is no contention that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the jury in its finding that the decedent, at the time of the execution of his will, was of sound and disposing mind. It is urged that the court erred in certain rulings made during the trial, and the points so made will, so far as their importance seems to require, be considered.

1. Several witnesses, called by contestants, were not permitted to state their opinion as to the mental sanity of the decedent. Under our Code, such opinions may be given by "intimate acquaintances" of the person whose mental condition is in question. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10. In the cases of two of the witnesses, Lenz and Boyer, the proponents objected that the required intimacy had not been shown, and the objection was sustained. The trial judge must determine, in the first instance, whether or not a proposed witness as to sanity is or is not an "intimate acquaintance" within the meaning of the Code provision. His determination of this question will not be disturbed on appeal, unless a clear abuse of discretion appears. "And so it has been held, and wisely, that the trial judge is to be accorded wide discretion and latitude in this respect; and his ruling will not be disturbed except where the evidence is so lacking as to leave no room for question that the discretion has been improperly exercised." People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 255, 46 Pac. 1073; People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711; People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 Pac. 177; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093. The testimony of witness Lenz may well have been viewed as showing that his acquaintance with decedent was of a merely casual character. Boyer had given massage treatment to the decedent on three occasions, which afforded the extent of his opportunities for observation. There was no abuse of discretion in excluding the opinions of these witnesses.

The witness De Rome qualified as an intimate acquaintance. It did not appear, however, that he had seen the decedent within several months of the 15th day of May, 1900, the date of the execution of the will. He was asked whether he had an opinion as to "whether or not Mr. Huyck, about the 15th day of May, 1900, was possessed of a sound and disposing mind and memory." The question was objected to on the ground, among others, that "the evidence does not establish that Mr. De Rome saw Mr. Huyck on the 15th day of May, 1900." The court sustained the objection, saying that "the law only contemplates that a witness of that character shall testify to the mental capacity of the person at the time he has an opportunity to observe." We think the ruling, and the remarks made in support of it, entirely sound. The "intimate acquaintance" is allowed to give his opinion merely because he has had exceptional opportunities for observing the mental condition of the person in question, and the result of his observation cannot be given adequate expression except in the form of an opinion. But such opinion must be based on the witness' observation, and should be limited to some period of time at which the witness has come in contact with the person whose mental condition is the subject of inquiry. What has just been said applies as well to the point made regarding the testimony of the witness Cook.

Mrs. Calvert testified that she had known the decedent for 15 years. She was asked to give her opinion as to whether he was of sound and disposing mind and memory. The question was not directed to any specific period, and by its terms had reference to the entire 15 years of the witness' acquaintance with decedent. The court sustained an objection to the question on the ground of indefiniteness as to time. The ruling was manifestly correct. While evidence as to the mental condition of a testator at times more or less remote from the date of the execution of the will is admissible, the court may properly require the party offering such evidence to specify the time to which it relates, in order that its weight may be intelligently estimated. For the same reason, it was not error to sustain objection to the questions put to the witness Cook, in which he was asked whether, "prior to May 15, 1900," Huyck was able to attend to his business transactions, or to find his way on the public streets. In each of these instances the objection was made and sustained on the specific ground of indefiniteness as to time. This objection could easily have been obviated by the putting of another question, and appellants should have adopted this method of eliciting the desired testimony.

2. Mrs. Calvert testified that the decedent, Huyck, a man of advanced years, had told her that he was going to marry her niece, a girl of seventeen. She was then asked: "Do you know whether any one conversed with him or endeavored to dissuade him from the belief that a marriage would take place between himself and your niece?" Proponents' objection was properly sustained, as the question called for hearsay, and hence incompetent, testimony. The answer to a further question, "Did he, or did he not, continue in his belief?" was likewise properly excluded, as was the answer to a third question, "Do you know whether or not your niece had any intentions of marrying him?" A witness cannot testify as to the knowledge or belief of another. Sneed v. Marysville Gas & Electric Co. (Cal. Sup.) 87 Pac. 376. Evidence of statements or actions by the testator indicating his belief would have been competent, but contestants did not frame their questions so as to call for such evidence. It is argued that the existence of a delusion regarding a marriage was material, but the materiality of a fact does not permit a party to establish it by incompetent testimony.

3. E. M. Sheridan, one of the attorneys for the proponents, had drawn the will. He was called by the contestants and examined at some length regarding the circumstances attending the preparation and execution of the instrument. During this examination he testified that he had drawn the will according to the testator's instructions; that he had read the will, when drawn, to the testator; that the testator had spoken to him on prior occasions regarding the will; and that, while the will was being prepared, he and the testator had discussed its various provisions, section by section. He was also examined as to other wills. On cross-examination he was asked the following questions: Q. "Now, you say you fix this date about the will as being subsequent to July 9, 1898, on account of the making of certain deeds? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did the making of those deeds according to any statements to you, have any effect as to his desire in regard to the testamentary disposition of the rest of his property?" The objection to the last question, on the ground that it was not cross-examination, was overruled. There was no error in this. The contestants having questioned the witness regarding the directions and instructions given by the decedent for the drawing of his will, it was proper cross-examination to go fully into all that was said by the testator to the witness regarding his testamentary wishes. The question called only for statements as to such wishes. If the answer went further than this, the contestants' remedy was to move to strike out so much of the answer as was objectionable. This they did not do.

4. The witness Sheridan identified a certain lease as one that had been agreed upon between the decedent and others after negotiations conducted in the presence of the witness. To the offer in evidence of the lease the contestants objected, on the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; the proper foundation for its introduction has not been laid." There was no merit in the objection, and it was properly overruled. The lease was material as tending, in some degree, to show the business capacity of the testator; being an act of the testator himself, it was competent evidence, and the proper foundation had been laid by the testimony of the witness, coupled with the proof of due execution afforded by the notarial certificate of acknowledgment attached. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1948, 1951. A second lease was produced, and the witness was asked whether he had prepared it. There was no error in overruling this objection to this question, which was merely preliminary and for the purpose of identification. Furthermore, the question was answered in the negative, and the lease referred to was offered and admitted in evidence without objection.

5. Jules Klein was called by the proponents. He testified fully concerning the ability of decedent to conduct his business affairs. After giving the details of a certain transaction between Huyck and himself, he was asked whether, in this transaction, Huyck "received as much, in your estimation, as was coming to him; you having knowledge of all the facts at hand." The objection to this as incompetent, and calling for a conclusion of the witness, was good, and should have been sustained. The subject of the inquiry was not one calling for expert or opinion evidence. The witness should have been required to state the facts and circumstances of the transaction, and the jury could then have drawn its own inference as to whether or not Huyck had received an advantage. But the ruling worked no substantial injury. The witness testified without objection that, in his opinion, Huyck was a man who "could fully keep or control the interests of his property and subserve his own interests." He had also testified that in this particular transaction Huyck had looked sharply to his interests. The answer to the objectionable question added nothing to the force of what was already before the jury.

6. The court gave to the jury full and fair instructions on the law governing the issue to be determined. No exception was taken to any instruction given. After the cause had been submitted to the jury, they were brought into court and had instructions and testimony read to them. At this point, the contestants orally requested an instruction to the jury "that they are not bound in finding their verdict under the testimony of the witnesses to the will, or that if they are not satisfied from their testimony as against the testimony of others, that they may exclude the testimony." The court properly refused to comply with this request. It is unnecessary to cite authorities to the point that, in this state, where, under the constitutional provision, judges are prohibited from charging juries as to the facts, it is improper for the court, in its instructions, to select the testimony of particular witnesses as entitled to special weight or consideration. Similarly, it is improper to indicate that less regard is to be paid to the testimony of one witness than to that of another. The requested instruction was calculated to discredit the subscribing witnesses. The weight to be given to the testimony of these, as of all other witnesses, was solely for the jury, and the court had so instructed, both on originally submitting the cause, and again in response to the request for the instruction in question.

There is no other point meriting attention. On a view of the entire record, we perceive no error affecting the substantial rights of the appellants.

The order is affirmed.

(L. A. 1,609.)

1. VENUE — CHANGE — SUCCESSIVE APPLICATIONS.

Where successive applications are made for change of venue, it is the duty of the court to consider the last application, and decide it with reference to the conditions existing at that time, and not with reference to the conditions existing at the time of the original demand.

2. SAME—LACHES.

On August 4, 1903, defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint, accompanied by a demand for a change of venue, accompanied by affidavits of certain of defendant's officers, which motion was denied without prejudice on November 9, 1903. On November 16, 1903, defendant made a second application on the same proof, and an additional affidavit of its secretary, and this application being denied on December 23, 1903, defendant's demurrer was submitted and overruled, and defendant was given time to answer, pending which defendant applied for leave to file a new application for change of venue, based on two additional affidavits of defendant's officers, which stated no new facts. This motion was heard on March 4, 1904, and granted, whereupon the motion for a change of venue was presented and forthwith denied. Held that, though the court might have granted the motion at the time it was last presented, the denial thereof was sustainable as a proper exercise of discretion, because defendant had lost its right to a change by laches.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Beauchamp H. Smith against Pelton Water Wheel Company. From an order denying defendant's motion for a change of venue, it appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., and Lorigan, J., dissenting.

Rigby & Rigby and G. C. De Garmo, for appellant. J. F. Conroy, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from an order denying a motion for change of venue. After the taking of the appeal, Wm. T. McArthur was substituted as plaintiff. The order appealed from was made on March 4, 1904. The action was begun in July, 1903. On August 4, 1903, the defendant appeared and filed a demurrer to the complaint, accompanied by a demand and notice of motion for a change of place of trial and two affidavits of Edward L. Brayton, vice president of the defendant. The ground of the motion, as stated, was that the county of Los Angeles was not the proper county for the trial of the cause, inasmuch as the plaintiff was a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and its place of business and residence was the city and county of San Francisco. This motion was denied without prejudice on November 9, 1903. On November 16, 1903, the defendant filed a second notice of motion for the change of venue, based on the prior demand and affidavits, and also on the affidavit of David Donzel, secretary of the corporation, additional thereto. The grounds of this motion were the same as before, with the addition that the contracts sued on were neither made in the county of Los Angeles, nor to be performed there, and that the obligation did not arise, nor the breach thereof occur, in that county. This motion was duly presented on briefs on November 20, 1903, and was denied by the court on December 23, 1903. On January 15, 1904, the demurrer to the complaint was submitted to the court for decision, and on January 25, 1904, the court made an order overruling the demurrer and allowing the defendant 10 days within which to answer. This time to answer was afterward extended by the court on the defendant's application. Before the time to answer, as extended, had expired, the defendant filed a notice of motion for leave to renew the former motion for change of venue. This notice stated that the motion was to be based on the affidavits before filed, on two other affidavits by the same parties, and upon the former demand and the papers on file in the case. The ground of the motion for leave to renew was that the former motion had never been heard upon the merits. The notice also stated that the motion for change of venue would be made upon certain grounds set forth at length therein, which were in substance the same as set forth in the notice of November 16, 1903. The new affidavits of Brayton and Donzel stated no additional facts in support of the motion for leave to renew, nor did they contain any new matter relating to the grounds of the application for a change of venue. They merely stated with greater detail the facts set forth in the former affidavits. The record shows that the motion to change the venue had been previously heard upon the merits. The motion for leave came on for hearing on March 4, 1904, and it was granted, whereupon the motion for change of venue was again presented and forthwith denied.

It was the duty of the court, upon the last presentation of the application for change of venue, to consider and decide it upon the conditions as they existed at that time, and not upon the conditions existing at the time of the original demand. The demand was filed in August, 1903. Two attempts were afterwards made to present the motion upon the merits. No reasons were apparent why it could not have been done as well at either of those times as upon the latter hearing, and at the second hearing the same facts were shown as upon the last hearing. There is nothing to show that all the facts bearing upon the application were not as well known to the vice president and secretary of the corporation defendant at the time of the demand as they were on March 4, 1904. In the meantime the motion had been twice denied, the demurrer to the complaint had been overruled, time had been allowed the defendant to answer the complaint, and, at its request, this time had been extended. Under these circumstances, it was a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court whether to grant the motion or refuse it, conceding, as we do for the purposes of this case, that the court could again entertain such a motion after it had been once decided. In Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 79, the court says: "It has always been held that such motions, being dilatory, must be prosecuted with diligence." And further: "If he [the defendant] relies on the fact that the action is brought in the wrong county, he ought to move for, or at least demand, a transfer on his first appearance in the cause." Page 80. "The rule is uniform that an application for a change of venue on this ground should be made at the earliest opportunity." 4 Encyc. of Pl. & Pr. 421; Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642; Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 246. And if it is made afterwards the applicant must "explain any seeming lack of diligence on his part." 4 Encyc. of Pl. & Pr. 422. If we concede, therefore, that the court might have granted the motion at the time it was last presented, it must be also conceded that the court had the power, in its discretion, to refuse it because of the lack of diligence displayed by the defendant in prosecuting it. If the defendant, as it claims, had the right to a change of venue to San Francisco at the time the demand was made, and if this right was shown by the affidavits produced upon the last hearing, we must presume, in view of the decision of the lower court, that it was of the opinion that the right had been lost by laches, and that it denied the motion upon that ground.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SMITH v. PELTON WATER WHEEL CO.

(L. A. 1,695.)

1. JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—VACATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizes the vacation of a judgment taken against a party through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or inexcusable neglect, provided the application is made within a reasonable time, in no case exceeding six months after such judgment, order, or proceeding is taken. Held, that the six months' limitation is merely a limitation on the power of the court to grant any relief, regardless of the merits of the application, and does not prevent the court, in the exercise of discretion, from refusing such an application made within less than six months because not made within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 265.]

2. SAME—NEGLIGENCE.

Where a default judgment for failure to answer was rendered against defendant, who was represented by local and nonresident attorneys, after the time to answer had been several times extended, defendant's application to set aside such judgment, not made until more than four months after its attorneys had notice of the entry thereof, was properly denied; the only excuse being that one of the nonresident attorneys who had charge of the matter had been ill during a portion of the time, and that the resident attorney erroneously believed that an appeal taken from the denial of an application for a change of venue operated to stay further proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 269, 281, 288.]

3. APPEAL—DISCRETION—REVIEW.

The exercise of a trial court's discretion on an application to set aside a default judgment will not be interfered with on appeal, unless it plainly appears that such discretion has been abused.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Beauchamp H. Smith against the Pelton Water Wheel Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion to vacate the same, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., and Lorigan, J., dissenting.

Rigby & Rigby and G. C. De Garmo, for appellant. J. F. Conroy, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. These are appeals by defendant from a judgment given against it for $5,642.95, and from an order denying its motion to vacate and set aside such judgment. The judgment was given upon the failure of defendant to answer after its demurrer to the complaint had been overruled; its default for not answering having been duly entered. After the taking of the appeals, Wm. T. McArthur was substituted as plaintiff.

It is admitted that no error or irregularity is shown by the judgment roll. The only contention made on these appeals is that the lower court erred in denying the motion to vacate and set aside the default and judgment. The motion to vacate was based on the ground that the default and judgment were taken against defendant through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. The action was commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county on July 28, 1903. On August 14, 1903, a demurrer to the complaint was filed by a San Francisco law firm retained by defendant. This law firm continued in charge of the case for defendant throughout the proceedings in the lower court, but employed a Los Angeles attorney as associate counsel. The demurrer was overruled January 25, 1904, with leave to defendant to answer within 10 days. The Los Angeles attorney was regularly notified of this action of the court on February 5, 1904, and informed by opposing counsel that the plaintiff was urging a speedy trial, and that the answer must be filed in due time, or a default would be entered. Orders extending the time to answer were obtained from the court; the last expiring about March 12, 1904. In the meantime, on March 9, 1904, defendant perfected an appeal from an order theretofore made in the action refusing to grant its motion for a change of place of trial from Los Angeles county to the city and county of San Francisco. No answer was filed, and on March 16, 1904, the default of defendant and judgment for plaintiff in accord with the prayer of the complaint were regularly entered. It is undisputed that both the Los Angeles and San Francisco attorneys had actual knowledge of the entry of judgment during March, 1904. No intimation of any intention to move to vacate the default and judgment was given until July 16, 1904, four months after their entry. On that day notice of such a motion to be made on July 22, 1904, accompanied by copies of certain affidavits and a proposed answer and cross-complaint, was served on plaintiff's attorney. The only reason advanced for the failure to answer was that the Los Angeles attorney mistakenly believed that defendant's appeal from the order refusing to change the place of trial operated as a stay of all proceedings pending the appeal, and therefore did not cause an answer to be filed. Counter affidavits were filed, and in one of these affidavits it was alleged that subsequent to the entry of the judgment some of plaintiff's witnesses had disappeared, and plaintiff no longer knew where they could be found. The motion to vacate was denied on August 3, 1904, but, by leave of the court, it was renewed on August 12, 1904; additional affidavits being presented on behalf of both parties, and denied. The evidence before the lower court showed that the San Francisco law firm at all times retained control and management of the case for defendant, and prepared the various pleadings, notices of motions, and affidavits; the Los Angeles attorney acting under their direction. The only excuse given for the delay in instituting proceedings to vacate the default and judgment was that given by the senior member of the San Francisco firm, to the effect that for over two months after learning of the default and judgment he was suffering from ill health, and was not in regular attendance at his office, and could only attend to his business occasionally; that thereafter he was engaged to the utmost of his capacity in court work and other business that needed prompt attention; that his partner was not familiar with the facts, and was not in the habit of handling litigation of this character; and that ever since the entry of default and judgment he had been in frequent correspondence with his associate in Los Angeles, and from time to time had explained to him that the papers for the motion were in course of preparation, and why they were delayed.

Passing without consideration other points made in support of the order denying defendant's motion, we are satisfied that the order must be affirmed upon the ground that the delay in applying for relief was such, under all the circumstances, as to warrant the lower court in holding that the application was not made within a reasonable time. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc., authorizes the granting of relief to a party or his legal representatives, from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, "provided, that application therefor be made within a reasonable time, but in no case exceeding six months after such judgment, order, or proceeding was taken." The six months' limitation there provided is simply a limitation upon the power of the court to grant any relief, regardless of any question either as to the merits of the application, or as to whether or not the application was made within what might be held to be a reasonable time under the circumstances. Under this statute, in addition to being made within the six months' period, the application must be made within "a reasonable time," and what is a reasonable time in any case depends upon the circumstances of that particular case. The question as to whether the application has been made within a reasonable time is one to be determined in the light of the circumstances of the case by the court to which the application is addressed. In the determination of that question, a large discretion is necessarily confided to that court. It is well-settled law in this state that the appellate court will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion of the lower court on an application of this nature, unless it is plainly made to appear that such discretion has been abused, and this rule is applicable whether the motion for relief has been granted or denied. See O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 Pac. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105; Moore v. Thompson, 138 Cal. 23, 70 Pac. 930; Winchester v. Black, 134 Cal. 125, 66 Pac. 197, and cases there cited.

The delay of nearly four months in the matter of making the application, after full knowledge of the facts, accompanied by the failure to give any intimation to the opposing party of an intention to so apply, certainly required some satisfactory explanation to warrant a conclusion that the application was made within a reasonable time. Was the explanation given satisfactory? The court below must here be presumed, in support of its order, to have concluded that it was not, and we are of the opinion that the court was amply warranted in so concluding. The evidence was also sufficient to support a conclusion upon the part of the lower court that relief could not be granted to defendant after this long delay without injuriously affecting plaintiff's rights. Under these circumstances, we cannot say that the court was not justified in concluding that the application had not been made within a reasonable time, and should be denied.

As to certain language used by this court in Wolff v. Canadian Pac. Ry., 89 Cal. 332, 337, 26 Pac. 825, in affirming an order vacating a default judgment, relied upon by defendant, it is sufficient to say that it is not applicable here, for the reason that the delay was not assented to by the plaintiff, and the court was warranted in concluding that the vacating of the judgment on an application so long delayed would be injurious to plaintiff's rights.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MONTECITO VALLEY WATER CO. v. CITY OF SANTA BARBARA et al.

(L. A. 1,863.)

1. WATERS—MISAPPROPRIATION—DEGREE.

Where, in a suit to determine water rights, it was found that defendant B. was unlawfully depriving plaintiff of 2½ inches perpetual flow of water, the court properly required him to deliver such amount to plaintiff out of the waters conveyed by defendant from his tunnel into plaintiff's pipe line, and refused to allow defendant to discharge such water into the bed of the stream from which the water was taken, where it would be lost by percolation and evaporation.

2. SAME—RIPARIAN OWNERS—USE OF WATER.

A riparian proprietor is not entitled to take water from a stream for use on land which was valueless for agricultural purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, §§ 33–35.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by the Montecito Valley Water Company against the city of Santa Barbara and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant James L. Barker appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Day, for appellant. George H. Gould and Canfield & Starbuck, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The facts, conditions, and circumstances of this case may be learned by a reference to Montecito Valley Water Co. v. City of Santa Barbara et al., 144 Cal. 578, 77 Pac. 1113, which was another appeal in the same litigation. This is an appeal by James L. Barker, who the court found was unlawfully depriving the respondent of 2½ inches perpetual flow of water. The court required appellant to deliver this 2½ inches to respondent "out of the waters conveyed by defendant from his said tunnel in his said flume or conduit into the box or appliance connected with the pipe line constructed or to be constructed by plaintiff," etc. Appellant's contention is that he should be allowed to discharge this water into the bed of the stream 1,300 feet above respondent's dam. The effect of this unquestionably would be that respondent would lose the water, because the intervening Eaton tunnel would draw down a portion of it, and, the bed of the stream having become dry, the rest would be wasted by percolation and evaporation. Appellant's contention then is that, notwithstanding that he is a wrongdoer, he should be permitted to dispose of the waters, of which he has unlawfully deprived respondent, in such a manner as to do neither himself nor the respondent the slightest good. The judgment which the court rendered contained a wise provision for the conservation of these waters, and the direction for their disposition by appellant was not only clearly within the equitable powers of the court, but wholly just.

Appellant's claim to the waters as a riparian owner is not pressed with much seriousness, and this is natural, considering that there is no pleading as to his riparian need for use of these waters, either as to quantity or amount of land upon which they are to be employed. Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 89 Cal. 410, 26 Pac. 889. Moreover, it is without dispute in the case, and so declared upon the appeal in the Montecito Valley Water Co. v. City of Santa Barbara et al., 144 Cal. 578, 77 Pac. 1113, that the lands upon which the waters are derived are valueless for agricultural purposes, and the waters are carried for use to cities, towns, and fertile lands beyond the watershed. A riparian proprietor's claim to make such use of the waters of a stream is of course without legal foundation.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

1. APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — OVERRULING DEMURRER.

Overruling a demurrer based on the ground of ambiguity, uncertainty, or unintelligibility is not reversible error if the demurrant was not misled by the defects in the pleading, and the cause was fairly tried upon its merits.

2. TIME—COMPUTATION—TAX SALE—PUBLICATION—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Pol. Code, § 3767, providing that a tax sale must not be less than 21 days from the first publication of notice thereof, and section 12, providing that the time in which an act is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, etc., sufficient notice of a tax sale held June 18th was given where it was first published May 28th.

3. TAXATION — TAX SALE—CERTIFICATE—SUFFICIENCY.

Under the express terms of Pol. Code, § 3776, the only amount required to be stated in a tax sale certificate is the amount of the assessment, and a certificate is not invalidated by failure to separately set forth the amount of the penalties, costs, and charges.

4. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF LAND—SUFFICIENCY.

The description of land in a tax sale certificate and deed was not insufficient for failing to state the base and meridian, where the county was named and there was but one tract which could have answered the description.

Error in a tax sale certificate fixing the date when the period of redemption would expire was cured by the express terms of St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59.

7. SAME—TAX DEED.

A tax deed conveying land "with appurtenances," etc., conveyed no more than was assessed or included in the certificate of sale.

8. SAME—STAMPING TAX BILLS—NECESSITY.

A tax sale was not subject to attack for the nonobservance of Pol. Code, § 3680, providing that, whenever property sold for taxes remains unredeemed, upon each subsequent assessment the assessor must enter the fact of the sale, and the date thereof, and that upon all bills or statements "sold for taxes" and the date of sale must be written or stamped, since under the express terms of section 3787 a tax deed is conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings.

9. Same—Power of Legislature.

While the Legislature may not make a tax certificate or deed conclusive as to any of the essentials of listing, valuation, and apportionment, or notice, it may make it conclusive as to matters or things which in the first instance the Legislature might not have required to be done, and which are in their nature nonessentials.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1557.]

10. Same—Constitutional Provision.

Const. art. 5, § 14, providing that all grants and commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the people, signed by the Governor, etc., does not apply to the sale of lands acquired by the state for delinquent taxes, and, since the state may dispose of such lands in any way not plainly violative of the Constitution, the Legislature may make the tax collector or any other person its agent and attorney in fact to pass legal title to the lands.

Action by the Bank of Lemoore against John J. Fulgham. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant and an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

Chas. G. Lamberson, for appellant. O. E. Larkins, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. When this case was in department it was decided without reference to the curative act found at chapter 59, p. 63, of the Statutes of 1903. This was so because the briefs made no mention of, and placed no reliance upon, the provisions of that act. In Baird v. Monroe (Cal. Sup.) 89 Pac. 352, this act and its effect are considered. It is held to be constitutional and to relieve tax certificates and deeds from the irregularities and informalities enumerated. Consideration of the case at bar must, therefore, be had in the light of this curative act.

Plaintiff's appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was tried for the purpose of quieting title to certain real property situated in Tulare county. Plaintiff claims title as the successor in interest of George H. Davis, who, it is conceded, was on the first Monday of March, 1896, the owner of the property. Defendant deraigns title under a sale to the state for delinquent taxes, and the subsequent deed to him from the tax collector, dated October 1, 1903. Various objections are made by the appellant to the validity of the proceedings, which were held by the trial court to have vested title in the defendant. But preliminarily plaintiff interposed a demurrer to defendant's answer, and urges that the demurrer should have been sustained. The demurrer was both general and special. The general demurrer was properly overruled. The answer denied plaintiff's allegation of ownership, and thus raised a direct issue upon this matter. Defendant filed his supplemental answer, and there undertook to set forth in detail the nature of his title. While there may be some foundation for the criticism that the pleading in this regard is somewhat ambiguous or uncertain, there was no such ambiguity or uncertainty as to have prejudiced plaintiff in meeting the issues which the answer tendered. It is plain therefrom that defendant was relying upon the tax title and nothing else. Even an error in overruling a demurrer upon the ground of ambiguity, uncertainty, or unintelligibility is not reason for reversal, if it appears that the demurring party was not misled by the defects in the pleading, and that the cause was fairly tried upon its merits. Alexander v. Central L. & N. Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 Pac. 410; Jager v. California Bridge Co., 104 Cal. 542, 38 Pac. 413; Stephenson v. Deuel, 125 Cal. 656, 58 Pac. 258.

Coming thus to the specific objections urged against the sufficiency of the tax deed, the published notice of sale declared that unless the taxes, with costs, etc., were paid, the property would be sold to the state on the 18th day of June, 1897, and the sale actually took place on that day. The first publication of this notice was made upon the 28th day of May, 1897. Section 3767 of the Political Code provides that the sale must not be less than 21 nor more than 28 days from the time of the first publication. It is insisted in this case that the sale was premature. But, as the sale did not take place until the twenty-first day, excluding the day of publication, it must, under section 12 of the Political Code, and the decisions of this court upon the matter, be held to have taken place in accordance with the requirements of the statute. Hannah v. Green, 143 Cal. 19, 76 Pac. 708; Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 514; Wilson v. His Creditors, 55 Cal. 476; Dean v. Grimes, 72 Cal. 442, 14 Pac. 178. The certificate of sale which was offered in evidence recited that the amount of the tax levied on the property was $19.20, and that the "penalties, costs, and charges which have since accrued thereon amount to the further sum of $———." It is urged that the amount for which the property was or should have been sold is thus not stated, but there were further recitals that the sale was made to the state, "for the amount of said taxes of every kind charged against said property, and penalties, costs and charges, to wit, the sum of $20.66." There was sufficient evidence in the certificate to show that the penalties, costs, and charges in view of the statutory provisions of the Political Code governing such charges, costs, and penalties were $1.46—the difference between the amount of the tax as stated, and the amount of the tax with added penalties, costs, and charges for which the property was sold. The only amount which is required to be stated is "the amount of the assessment" (Political Code, § 3776), and this was stated. It did not invalidate the certificate if it failed to separately set forth the amount of the penalties, costs and charges.

The description of the property in the certificate and deed was as follows: "Situate, lying and being within the said county of Tulare, state of California, and described thus: S. ½ of N. ½ Sec. 13 T. 19 S. R. 23 E." It is urged that this description was insufficient to identify the property for its failure to state the base and meridian. But, as the property was described as in the county of Tulare, there was but one piece of land which, by any possibility, could have answered this description, and the failure to name the meridian was unimportant in view of this fact. A court takes judicial notice of the system of surveys prevailing in the state. Harrington v. Goldsmith, 136 Cal. 168, 68 Pac. 594. The error in the certificate in fixing the date when the five-year period of redemption would expire is cured by the curative act of 1903, above referred to. Baird v. Monroe, supra. In fact, the sale by the state did not take place until after the full five-year period had elapsed. The deed conveyed the real property "with appurtenances," etc. There was by this no more conveyed than was assessed or included in the certificate of sale. The fact that appurtenances were recited in the deed would not convey more property or less than if the phrase had been omitted. Pellissier v. Corker, 103 Cal. 516, 37 Pac. 465; Williams v. Harter, 121 Cal. 47, 53 Pac. 105; Sparkes v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186. Section 3680 of the Political Code provides that whenever property has been sold for taxes, and remains unredeemed, upon each subsequent assessment the assessor must enter the fact that the property has been sold for taxes, and the date of the sale, and upon all bills or statements there must be written or stamped the words, "Sold for taxes," and the date of sale. This memorandum was not made. The parties paying the subsequent taxes did not receive this notice that the property had been sold. It is urged that this was a notice which the law required to be given to the owner of the property, and that a failure to give this notice amounted to a deprivation by him of his property without due process of law, since the law had provided this means of notice. But section 3787 of the Political Code makes the deed from the state conclusive evidence upon this matter. Of course, it is true that the Legislature has not the power to make such a certificate or deed conclusive as to any of the essentials of the listing, valuation, apportionment, or notice (Cooley on Taxation, pages 355–356; 1 Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 640), but it can make the certificate or deed conclusive as to matters or things which in the first instance the Legislature might not have required to be done, and which are in their nature, therefore, nonessentials. The notice here under consideration differs entirely from the notice of proposed sale given by publication—a notice designed to afford the property owner protection, and enable him to pay his taxes before title shall pass from him. Such notice he is entitled to receive, and such notice in the case at bar he did receive. The requirment for the stamping upon the subsequent assessment or tax receipts of the words, "Sold to the state," may have been designed to serve a twofold purpose—that of convenience to the fiscal officers, and of continued notification to the taxpayer that his property had been sold. But there is nothing in the law which makes the giving of such a notice essential. No rights of the taxpayer would be violated if such a provision for notice were not required at all, and therefore, as we have said, it is but a convenience and not a right which the Legislature has provided for. It is quite within its power to do away with this provision, or, as here, to hold that the tax deed shall be conclusive evidence that it was given. De Treville v. Smalls, 98 U. S. 525, 25 L. Ed. 174; Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 Pac. 58; Klumpke v. Baker, 131 Cal. 81, 63 Pac. 137, 676. Section 14, art. 5, of the Constitution provides that "all grants and commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the people of the state of California, sealed with the great seal of the state, signed by the Governor, and countersigned by the Secretary of State." It is contended that, as the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, the scheme of the present revenue law, whereby the tax collector makes, on behalf of the state and as its agent, the deed to the purchaser of such lands, is violative of this constitutional provision, and that, therefore, the deed is void. In answer to this it may be said that it is perfectly apparent from a reading of the constitutional provisions touching the public lands of the state that lands, title to which might thus be acquired by the state for delinquent taxes, were never within its contemplation. Indeed, it is well settled that lands which originally have been part of the public domain, and have become subsequently private property, on reverting to the state or other sovereignty by escheat, forfeiture, or otherwise, are not within the purview of the general land laws relating to the disposal of public lands, but will require special authority for their disposition. Governeur v. Robertson, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 332, 6 L. Ed. 488; Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480 (Gil. 358); Magruder v. Esmay, 35 Ohio St. 222; 2 Cooley on Tax., page 858. In consideration of the further fact that the state's power of taxation is a paramount power and a necessary incident of sovereignty, such lands may be disposed of in any way that is not, in and of itself, plainly violative of constitutional provisions.

For these reasons, we conclude that the state had full power to make the tax collector, or any other person, its agent and attorney in fact, for the passing of the legal title.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; SLOSS, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I am not prepared to say that I dissent from the judgment in this case, but there is one point upon which I should greatly desire to hear further and fuller argument.

The law (Political Code, § 3680) provides that whenever land has been sold to the state for failure to pay the taxes, and remains unredeemed, there shall be entered upon each subsequent assessment book, immediately after the description of the property, the fact that said property has been sold for taxes, with the date of the sale, and that upon all bills or statements of or for taxes subsequently accruing upon the same property up to the time of redemption or conveyance by the state, there shall be legibly written printed, or stamped the words, "Sold for taxes," with the date of sale. The object of this law is plain. It is intended not only to give notice to the delinquent taxpayer, but to his grantees every year for five years, of the fact of the delinquency and sale, and the necessity of effecting a redemption. The utility and necessity of such a provision in order to prevent the grossest injustice to owners of real property is obvious. The payment of taxes is largely intrusted to agents. Agents for that purpose have often proved unfaithful or negligent, and the absent owner who has provided the money to pay the taxes, relying upon this law for timely warning of any neglect on the part of his agent to make the payment, may, if this law is disregarded, find himself at the end of five years despoiled of his property by the misconduct of the state's agents, notwithstanding the state has all the time been receiving from him the taxes subsequently levied, while his title was being secretly undermined. Of course, it can be seen that the Legislature so far from intending such a consequence, has provided ex industria an effective means of preventing it, and such a provision should not be placed in the same category with those merely formal and unessential directions which have no semblance of benefit to the taxpayer. The state in this instance has given assurance to the person who continues to pay taxes on property that has been sold on account of the delinquency of his grantor, or agent, or trustee, or ancestor, that it will not forfeit his rights without express and repeated warning. To say that after thus lulling him into a fancied security the state can make a false recital in a tax deed conclusive evidence of a notice that has never been given as to disregard a principle of equity, which it seems to me ought to bind even a sovereign state.

I think that upon more mature consideration the court might have found a way to decide the cause according to its manifest equity.

HOFFMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 4,755.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 12, 1907.)

1. RECORDS—LOST RECORDS—PROCEEDINGS TO SUPPLY—ESTABLISHMENT OF TITLE.

St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59, providing for the establishment and quieting of titles to real estate in case of a loss or destruction of the public records, provides that plaintiff shall file with his complaint an affidavit stating that he does not know and has never been informed of any other person who claims, or who may claim, any interest in, or lien upon, the property adversely to him, or, if he does know or has been informed of any such person, then the name and address of such person. If the plaintiff is unable to state any one or more of the matters required, "he shall set forth and show, fully and explicitly, the reasons for such inability." Held, that a showing of diligence in making inquiry to ascertain whether there are other persons having or claiming interests is not necessary to give jurisdiction, and an affidavit that plaintiff did not know and had never been informed of any other person who claimed or might claim an interest adverse to plaintiff was sufficient.

In Bank. Mandamus by Robert O. Hoffman to compel the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and Frank J. Murasky, as judge thereof, to pronounce a judgment in favor of relator in proceedings by him under St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59, for the quieting of title in case of a destruction of the public records. Writ awarded.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for petitioner. Costello & Costello and Page, McCutchen & Knight, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to pronounce a judgment in a case presented to that court for determination.

The petitioner instituted a proceeding under the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1906, for the establishment and quieting of titles to real estate in case of a loss or destruction of the public records, commonly known as the "McEnerney Act." St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59. The proceeding was numbered 125 in said court and was entitled "Robert O. Hoffman, Plaintiff, v. All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon The Real Property Herein Described, Defendants." The matter was duly presented to the superior court, and it thereupon found that the petitioner had sufficiently made out his case to entitle him to the relief provided in the statute and prayed for in the petition, and that the proceeding was in all respects regular, with the supposed exception that the affidavit filed with the complaint, as required by the statute in question, was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to proceed to judgment.

The affidavit was made by the petitioner. So far as material it is as follows: "I am the plaintiff in the above-entitled action. I have and claim an estate of inheritance in, and am in the actual and peaceable possession of, that certain real property [describing it]. The character of my estate, right, title, interest, and claim in and possession of said real property is as follows, to wit: I am the owner in severalty and in fee simple of said real property. I am in the actual and peaceable possession thereof, by myself, claiming title thereto adversely to the whole world. My estate, right, title, interest, and claim in and possession of said real property have existed during the period of five months. I obtained said estate, and all my right, title, interest, and claim in and possession of said real property from Henry A. Arnold. I have never made any conveyance of said real property, or any part thereof, or any interest therein. There is no existing mortgage, deed of trust or other lien on said real property. I do not know and have never been informed of any other person who claims, or may claim, any interest in or lien upon said real property, or any part thereof, adversely to me." The supposed defect in the affidavit is that it does not state what inquiry, if any, was made by the plaintiff to determine whether or not there was at that time any other person in existence who claimed, or who might claim, any interest in, or lien upon, the said property, adversely to the plaintiff. It is conceded that the court ought to proceed to give judgment for the petitioner as prayed for, unless this defect deprives it of power to proceed otherwise than to require of the plaintiff another and more perfect affidavit and to proceed anew from the beginning. The court took the latter view and refused to render judgment.

The theory that a showing of diligence in making inquiry to ascertain whether or not there are other persons having or claiming interests in the property is necessary to give jurisdiction to the court is based on a misconception of the effect of the statute. The part of the act which is supposed to contain this requirement is section 5, which, so far as material, is as follows: "At the time of filing the complaint, the plaintiff shall file with the same his affidavit, fully and explicitly setting forth and showing (1) the character of his estate, right, title, interest or claim in, and possession of the property, during what period the same has existed, and from whom obtained; (2) whether or not he has ever made any conveyance of the property, or any part thereof, or any interest therein, and if so when and to whom; also a statement of any and all subsisting mortgages, deeds of trust, and other liens thereon; (3) that he does not know and has never been informed of any other person who claims, or who may claim, any interest in, or lien upon, the property, or any part thereof, adversely to him, or if he does know or has been informed of any such person, then the name and address of such person. If the plaintiff is unable to state any one or more of the matters herein required, he shall set forth and show, fully and explicitly, the reasons for such inability." The language of the third clause above quoted does not require a statement that there are no persons in existence who claim, or who may claim, an adverse interest, if, in fact, the plaintiff has no knowledge or information of any. In that case all that is required is that he shall state his own lack of personal knowledge and information that such persons exist. This is a fact which inheres in his own consciousness and of which he, alone, can have knowledge. The only inquiry necessary to enable him to make the statement required in the statute on this point, is a scrutiny of his own mind and memory. It is a matter which he could not be "unable to state" and to which the last clause above quoted can have no application. That clause relates exclusively to the other matters required in the affidavit. For instance, if the plaintiff knew, or had been informed, that there were adverse claimants, it would be necessary for him to state that fact in the affidavit. He might, however, be ignorant of the names or addresses of such persons. In that event it would be his duty to make diligent inquiry to ascertain such names and addresses. If such inquiry proved ineffectual, it would be necessary for him to give the "reasons for such inability," and this would include a statement of the steps taken by him in making the inquiry, so that the court could determine whether or not the reasons were sufficient. Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342; Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 Pac. 216, 70 Pac. 732. But, as to the positive statement that "he does not know and has never been informed of" any adverse claimants, the rule must be the same as in the case of an affidavit for publication of summons based on the fact that the defendant is a nonresident of the state, under similar statutes. The positive statement of the plaintiff to the fact is sufficient, without giving the reasons for the statement, or the inquiry made to ascertain the fact. Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 69, 13 Pac. 73; Furnish v. Mullan, 76 Cal. 646, 18 Pac. 854; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 415, 77 Pac. 1007; Johnson v. Miner, 144 Cal. 785, 78 Pac. 240. This question was referred to, but not decided, in the case of Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan (Cal. Sup.) 88 Pac. 363, in which the statute was held to be valid. It is there said: "It is not clear that section 5 of the act requires a statement of the examination and inquiry made by the plaintiff to enable him to aver that 'he does not know, and has never been informed of' any person claiming adversely." The point was again before the court in the same case upon the petition for rehearing, but upon the filing of the petition in this case it was left open for further consideration. We now conclude that, by the terms of the statute, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to state positively, in the language of the section above quoted, "that he does not know and has never been informed of" any adverse claimant, and that thereupon, if the affidavit and proceedings are otherwise regular, the court will have jurisdiction to proceed to trial and judgment.

Something is said further in the same connection, in the case last cited, in regard to the duty of the plaintiff to make inquiry and the knowledge that would be imputed to him, if he should be aware of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the existence of adverse claimants. These considerations would be of importance and the neglect to make such inquiry might be of great weight, on the question of the fraud or bad faith of the plaintiff, in any subsequent attack upon the decree upon the ground that there was extraneous fraud of the plaintiff in making a false affidavit to obtain jurisdiction. The affidavit, on this point, may be false in fact, and the plaintiff may know it to be false. This, if proven, would go far toward establishing the fraud, upon such subsequent suit. So, in any case, an affidavit to a fact, made to obtain process and secure jurisdiction, may be false, with like effect. The law, however, assumes good faith, and does not presume fraud. In any case where constructive service is authorized, it is unnecessary, unless the statute expressly, or by implication, requires it, that the existence of good faith or the absence of fraud on the part of the plaintiff, in the preliminary steps to acquire jurisdiction of the proceeding, should be affirmatively shown upon the face of the record, either in the affidavit or elsewhere. If fraud or bad faith in this respect was practiced, it does not affect the jurisdiction of the court, nor render the decree invalid on its face. The remarks on that subject in the opinion referred to are not to be considered as intended to declare that the rule on the subject applying to proceedings under this statute is in any respect different from that applying to other final judgments upon constructive service. In Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, supra, the validity of this statute, from a constitutional point of view, was elaborately discussed and the statute was upheld. Some of the same objections are again presented in a somewhat different form.

It is argued that constructive service is permitted only because of necessity, and that no such necessity can arise from the mere fact that the plaintiff in the particular case has no knowledge or information of the existence of outstanding claims or interests in the property inconsistent with the title alleged in plaintiff; that this alone cannot justify the dispensing with personal service upon the owner of such outstanding claim, and that, before substituted service upon him can be allowed under the Constitution, it must, at least, appear that the plaintiff has made diligent inquiry to learn of the existence of such interests; and that as the statute requires no inquiry on that point, but only a statement of the plaintiff's ignorance and want of information, it would operate to deprive the owners of such unknown interests of their property without due process of law. We are unable to perceive any substantial difference in this respect between this and other instances wherein constructive service is authorized by statute. It has long been thoroughly established that, when necessary in order to reach property within the state, constructive service may be made upon nonresidents, or persons absent from the state. Eitel v. Foote, 39 Cal. 441; Perkins v. Wakeham, 86 Cal. 581, 25 Pac. 51, 21 Am. St. Rep. 67. In such cases the statute requires no showing of inquiry as to the fact of nonresidence, or absence, but allows service by publication only, upon the bare affidavit of the plaintiff that such is the fact. In the case of the probate of a will, or the distribution of the estate of a deceased person, a mere general notice posted or published, referring only to the estate and not addressed to any person by name, is held to be sufficient to constitute due process of law upon all interested persons, known and unknown. Estate of Davis, 136 Cal. 590, 69 Pac. 412; Crall v. Poso Irr. Dist., 87 Cal. 147, 26 Pac. 797. The same is true of many other kinds of proceedings affecting property within the state. 17 Ency. Pl. & Pr., 31, 38; Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, supra. In the case of proceedings in estates above mentioned, no affidavit or other proof of the necessity for dispensing with personal or actual notice is required. The Legislature itself has decided that the necessity exists. It arises, in part at least, from the nature of the proceeding and the object to be accomplished, namely, a conclusive and effectual disposition of the estate. This cannot be had unless a notice can be given which will bind all persons whatsoever with respect to the property. An equal necessity appears here. The records having been destroyed, the ordinary sources of knowledge of outstanding claims and means of proof of title are wanting, and hence the title cannot be satisfactorily established or quieted, except by similar means. The Legislature has accordingly provided for a general notice to all persons interested, to be given upon the filing of an affidavit by the plaintiff to the truth of the facts specified in section 5 of the act. The Legislature is primarily the judge of this necessity, and of the degree and character of the proof by which it is to be established, in case it chooses to require proof in each particular case. Matter of Empire Bank, 18 N. Y. 216. The only limitation upon this power with which we are concerned here is that the occasion or fact, upon which the Legislature has authorized such service, must be sufficient to show a reasonable necessity for the service prescribed. We cannot say that there was not, in the present instance, reasonable cause for the proceeding in question, nor that the affidavit prescribed does not present facts which show a reasonable necessity for the constructive service.

In this connection it is proper to say that in determining whether or not due process of law is afforded other statutes applicable to the proceeding may be considered. The provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply in such cases. Any person interested in the property and having no actual notice of the decree may come in at any time within a year after its rendition, and by showing that he has not been personally served with process, and stating facts constituting a good defense to the proceeding—that is, facts sufficient to show that he has a valid adverse interest in the property—he may have the decree vacated as to him and be allowed to answer to the merits. Gray v. Lawlor (Cal. Sup.) 90 Pac. 691.

It is again contended here, as in the former case, that courts have no power to adjudge unless there is an actual controversy; that title to real property cannot be quieted until it has been questioned; and hence that the proceeding is purely administrative or ministerial, and not a judicial function, and that therefore, the statute is an unauthorized delegation of administrative power to the judicial department of the state. This objection also was considered in the former case of Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, supra. It was further considered and again held to be unfounded in Robinson v. Kerrigan (Cal. Sup.) 90 Pac. 129. For a full discussion of the question, as also of the various other objections urged upon the present hearing, we refer to the opinions in those cases. The petitioner had the right to demand the action of the superior court upon the case as presented. We cannot assume to direct that court as to the decision it shall render in the matter. But it is bound to give final judgment, either by granting the decree prayed for, or by denying it and dismissing the proceeding.

Let a writ of mandate issue, commanding the superior court and the judge thereof to proceed to render judgment in the proceeding aforesaid.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.

TELLER v. BAY & RIVER DREDGING CO. et al. (Sac. 1,362.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1907.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—PERSONS LIABLE—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

A dredging company under contract to cut through a levee and excavate a ditch, stipulating that it would be ready to commence work at a specified time and place, fixing the compensation, for the sole use and service of the dredger and crew by the other party, binding the company to furnish a dredger in first-class working order and an efficient and diligent crew, and authorizing the termination of the contract on the other party being dissatisfied with the work or with the progress thereof, is an independent contractor, and liable to a third person for injuries sustained in consequence of his land being flooded by reason of a failure to properly rebuild the cut made in the levee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, § 68.]

2. DAMAGES—GROWING CROPS—DESTRUCTION.

The measure of damages for the total destruction of a growing crop is the value of the crop in the condition it was at the time and place of destruction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 266.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT—INJURIES TO CROP—COMPUTATION OF DAMAGES.

In an action by a tenant entitled to three-fourths of a crop for the total destruction of the crop while growing, the court in arriving at the value of the crop at the time of its destruction found the probable yield of the crop and the market value thereof, deducting therefrom the cost of producing and marketing the crop, and deducting therefrom one-fourth of such value as the landlord's share. Held the true measure of damages.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by J. R. Teller against the Bay & River Dredging Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant the Bay & River Dredging Company, it appeals. Affirmed.

Jackson Hatch, Walter H. Linforth, and Louttit & Louttit, for appellant. Plummer & Dunlap and Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought his action to recover damages for the unlawful flooding of his lands and consequent injury to his growing crop. The judgment of the trial court held the dredging company alone responsible and awarded damages. That company appeals, advancing two contentions: First, that Henry Brack and his associates were alone responsible; and, second, that the court (the cause was tried without a jury) adopted an incorrect rule for the measure of damages, the application of which rule resulted in an excessive award against appellant. Appellant entered into a contract with defendant Frankenheimer Bros. as follows: "We, the undersigned, do hereby agree with Frankenheimer Bros. that our 20-foot ditching dredger, shall on or before the 25th day of May, 1903, be at the point in the South Fork of the Mokelumne, to be designated by said Frankenheimer Bros., ready to commence work cutting through the Brack Tract levee at a point above stated, and shall so commence. It is understood that Frankenheimer Bros. are to pay $70 per day of 22 working hours for the sole use and service of above-named ditcher and full crew for the construction of two and one-half miles of ditch; that no other costs shall be assessed to them for any other service whatsoever. We hereby agree that our dredger shall be in first-class working order, and that the crew will be efficient and diligent in the prosecution of the work, which we agree will be done in a good and workmanlike manner. The time for which $70 per day of 22 working hours is to be paid shall commence when the ditcher starts cutting through the levee, and shall end when the ditcher shall have finished cutting its way out. It being further understood and agreed that if at any time during the progress of the work aforesaid, Frankenheimer Bros. are dissatisfied with the work done by said ditcher, or with the progress of such work, that they may immediately terminate this contract on paying to the undersigned the amount due to us, at the rate above mentioned, for the time during which said ditcher has been actually employed. Any overtime said ditcher may work to be at the above named rate of $70 per day of 22 hours." The dredger was at the point designated and duly commenced work. To excavate the ditch, it was necessary that the dredger should pass from the river through the levee, and so on to the lands of defendants. This was accomplished without injury. Before cutting through the levee the crew of the dredger, under the direction of the captain, constructed a back dam behind the dredger to restrain the water from flowing in through the gap in the levee. The lumber which was used in building this dam was furnished by Frankenheimer Bros. The ditch was constructed along a line indicated by the defendant Brack, who, with Frankenheimers, was a lessee of the land. The ditch work was completed and the dredger ready to leave on July 14th. Prior to this date the captain requested Brack to supply him with lumber with which to build a back dam as the dredger again cut the levee for its exit to the river. This lumber was furnished, but no dam was constructed, and before the dredger was taken out through the cut the inflowing waters inundated a large portion of plaintiff's land, completely destroying a growing crop of beans and potatoes.

We think, upon the face of this contract, as well as from the evidence of the surrounding circumstances which was properly received, that the dredging company was an independent contractor, and solely responsible for the negligent omission to construct the back dam. It is true that Frankenheimer Bros. were to have the "sole use and service of the ditcher and full crew," but it does not appear that they had any control over the ditcher, its captain, and its crew, other than the general right which would belong to any owner to designate the place of performance and the general character of the work. The provision to the effect that, if Frankenheimer Bros. became dissatisfied with the work or its progress, they might terminate the contract, is at variance with the theory that they exercised any right of active control, since, if so, there would have been the power to employ and discharge men, and there would have been no occasion for dissatisfaction in this regard. The corporation contracted that the dredger would be manned by an efficient and diligent crew, and that the work should be done in a good and workmanlike manner. When attention is paid to the evidence of the attendant and surrounding circumstances, the conclusion that the dredging company was an independent contractor becomes the more irresistible. Before going to the work, the captain of the dredger received his instructions from an officer of the defendant company, by whom all of the crew were employed and paid. The dredger was entirely under the supervision and control of its captain, and he, in turn, received his instructions from the officers of the company, saving alone the general instruction as to the location and character of the work to be performed. The Frankenheimer Bros. neither had, nor attempted to exercise, any power of hiring or discharging the members of the crew, and the court finds upon sufficient evidence that neither Brack nor the Frankenheimers had, or attempted to exercise, any control over the captain or crew of the dredger in the performance of the work, and that the appellant and its employés had full control of the work, and were in no way subject to the direction of the other defendants, save as to the place where the canal was to be excavated. Moreover, upon the face of these facts, it would be a conclusion amounting almost to absurdity to say that the Frankenheimers, who were shown to be no more than farmers and unskilled in dredging work and in the use of dredgers, should be held accountable for the necessary details in the proper performance of an undertaking such as this, and that it was, or ever could have been, contemplated that they, and not the dredging company, knew how the work should have been performed, and that a back dam was necessary for its proper performance, and that they had undertaken the legal responsibility of such construction. It is concluded upon this point, therefore, that the trial court was correct in attaching the responsibility to the appellant corporation. Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 595, 45 Pac. 1017; Hedge v. Williams, 131 Cal. 459, 63 Pac. 721, 64 Pac. 106, 82 Am. St. Rep. 366; Frassi v. McDonald, 122 Cal. 401, 55 Pac. 139; Louthan v. Hewes, 138 Cal. 119, 70 Pac. 1065; Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 97, 78 Pac. 337.

It is contended that the court erred in arriving at the amount of damage sustained by plaintiff. In strictness the contention is not that the court erred in declaring the measure of damage, but that it erred in arriving at the damage under a statement of the true measure. The true measure of damage for the total destruction of a growing or standing crop is the value of the crop in the condition it was at the time and place of destruction. Such is the unquestioned rule, and such was the rule the court declared in the following language, which language, as the cause was tried without a jury, is copied from the opinion of the trial court: "In arriving at the value of the crops as they then stood (at the time of their destruction) and in the condition in which they were, the court has adopted, as the best means available, the probable yield of each tract multiplied by the market value of the crop, deducting therefrom the cost of producing and marketing said crops, and deducting therefrom the one-fourth of such value as and for the landlord's share, and has awarded the remaining three-fourths to the plaintiff, as the assignee of the tenants so sustaining such loss."

The question thus turns upon the mode of ascertaining the value of a growing crop at the time of its destruction. The appellant contends that the rental value of the land, with the cost of labor and materials up to the time of destruction expended in producing the crop, with legal interest at legal rate thereon, furnishes the correct method of arriving at this value. Such a method finds support and has been adopted by the Supreme Court of South Carolina in the case of Horres v. Berkeley Chemical Co., 35 S. E. 500, 57 S. C. 189, 52 L. R. A. 36. The objection to this method is that it is not a determination of value at all. It is but a determination of cost, which, while always an element of value, never furnishes its exact measure. By such a method of computation nothing is allowed for the fact that the crops, simply as growing crops, and before maturity, are necessarily an expense and not a profit to the owner. They are of value to him, not as growing vegetation upon his land, but because in the course of nature they will come to fruition, and so have a market value, and so will bring to him profit for his disbursement and expenses in their care and maintenance. Moreover, in taking cost as the measure of value, there is lost sight of the fact that by the destruction of the crop it cannot for that year at least be replaced, and that the very possibility, aside from the reasonable expectation, of future profit is forbidden to the agriculturist. And, finally, that cost cannot be the measure of the detriment under such circumstances ought to become patent from consideration of the fact that if you should upon successive years destroy the farmers' crops, and in full compensation therefor pay him only the money which he had expended in their growth up to the time of destruction, you could in a very short time starve to death every agricultural community in the United States. The true rule in arriving at the value at the time of destruction is that laid down by the trial court and abundantly supported by authority. The Supreme Court of Utah well states the proposition (Lester et al. v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. et al., 76 Pac. 341, 27 Utah, 470, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988): "In cases of destruction of growing crops it is proper and important to introduce and admit evidence showing the kind of crops the land is capable of producing, the kind of crops destroyed, the average yield per acre of each kind on the land not destroyed and on other similar lands in the immediate neighborhood, cultivated in like manner, the stage of growth of the crops, at the time of injury or destruction, the expense of cultivating, harvesting and marketing the crops, and the market value at the time of maturity, or within a reasonable time after the injury or destruction of the crops. And," proceeds that court, "while all such evidence may be considered by the jury in determining the amount of damages, if any, still the true measure of compensation is the value of the crops in the condition they were in at the time of their injury or destruction." In Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62, the introduction of such evidence as the means of arriving at value is distinctly approved, and the same proposition is recognized as containing the true element for determining damage in Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 289. And that such is the generally accepted rule is abundantly established. 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 330; Jones on Ev. § 384; Sutherland on Dam. §§ 120, 1023; Sedgwick on Dam. § 191.

For these reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). I dissent from the order denying a rehearing and from the judgment of the court.

This case grows out of a contract exactly parallel to a hiring by the hour of a carriage, horses, and driver from a liveryman. In such a case the carriage, team, and driver are put at the sole use and service of the hirer, but he does not assume to direct the driver how to guide his horses, or what precaution he must observe in order to avoid collision with other vehicles. As to such matters the driver takes his orders from his employer, the liveryman, and for any injury caused by his dereliction in those particulars the liveryman is responsible. But, as to the direction in which he is to drive and the places to which he is to go, he takes his orders from the hirer, and, if he should be directed by him to drive into an inclosed field on the hirer's ranch and on returning to leave the gate open behind him, allowing cattle to enter and destroy the tenant's crops, I should think the hirer, and not the liveryman, would be responsible for that damage. As I construe this contract, the Frankenheimers hired the dredger and crew just as one would hire a carriage and driver. They had nothing to do with the operation of the dredger. As to that the crew took orders from the defendant, who by its officers did nothing more than to send the dredger and crew to a point outside the levee selected by the Frankenheimers (just as a liveryman sends his carriage to your door). At that point they took charge to the extent of directing it to cut its way in through the levee, and thereafter to excavate a certain canal. From the time it commenced cutting its way in until it should cut its way out it was subject, as to its movements, to their exclusive control, and their control was to last just as long as they were willing to pay $70 per diem. When it came to cutting out, it was for them to decide whether they would pay at the rate of $70 a day for the time required to construct a back dam, or whether they would take the risk of cutting out without a back dam. Undoubtedly they had the power (and as between them and the defendant were bound to exercise it) to forbid the cutting of the levee before a back dam was constructed, and they should be held responsible for the consequences of their choice. The loss of plaintiff's crops was caused by them—not by the appellant.

As to the rule of damages, the decision seems to be in conflict with the decision in Crow v. San Joaquin, etc., 130 Cal. 314, 62 Pac. 562, 1058.

I think the judgment should have been reversed.

STIMSON v. HANLEY, Street Superintendent, et al. (L. A. 1,887.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1907. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1907.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACTS—SUFFICIENCY OF BIDS.

Where bids were invited for the paving of a street as one work, bids for less than the whole work were not in response to the invitation, and might be disregarded.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Charles M. Stimson against James Hanley as street superintendent of Los Angeles and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank G. Finlayson and A. B. McCutchen, for appellant. W. B. Matthews, Leslie R. Hewitt, Bicknell, Gibson & Trask, and Dunn & Crutchen, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was rendered for defendants. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff is the owner of certain city lots in the city of Los Angeles abutting on Ninth street, between the east line of Center avenue and the east line of Santa Fé avenue, and the city council of said city duly passed a resolution of intention that certain street work be done on said Ninth street between the two points above stated. The board determined that the contemplated work was of more than local and ordinary public benefit, and declared external boundaries of a district to be benefited by the improvement and to be assessed to pay the cost thereof; and it also found that the cost of improvement was exceeding 50 cents a foot on each line of the street, and determined that bonds should be issued to represent the cost, as provided by statute. No objection was made by appellant to these proceedings. The work or improvement ordered consisted of paving, guttering, and curbing Ninth street between the said two terminals, and constructing certain culverts. An invitation was duly given for sealed proposals or bids for doing the work, and no objection was made by appellant to any of the proceedings down to this point. Bids were opened on the day fixed for that purpose, and it then appeared that the defendant, the Fairchild-Gilmore-Wilton Company, a corporation, and which we will call hereafter for brevity the Fairchild Company, had bid for the whole work at the rate of 17½ cents per square foot for the paving, 5 cents per lineal foot for the curbing, 15 cents per square foot for guttering, and $12.50 per lineal foot for the culverts. Only one other bid was made for the whole work. This was of Andrew Holloway, but it was for a larger amount than the bid of the Fairchild Company. There was also another bid by C. Clifford for the curbing alone, which was lower than the bid for the Fairchild Company for that part of the work; and there was also a bid by Charles Stansbury for the guttering and culverts, which was lower than the bid of the Fairchild Company for the said item. The board awarded the contract to the Fairchild Company, and this action was brought to enjoin the defendant James Hanley, who is street superintendent of said city, from entering into the contract with the Fairchild Company pursuant to said award. The sole contention of appellant is that the order of the council was erroneous and without warrant because the Fairchild Company was not the lowest bidder, and that it was not the lowest bidder because another person who bid only one part of the work had bid lower on that part. We do not think that this contention is maintainable. The purpose of the council was to improve Ninth street between the said terminal points into a completed street, and to receive bids for the necessary work to accomplish that result. The resolution of intention and the invitation for bids speaks of the thing to be done as a "work" or "improvement"—in the singular—and evidently contemplates that this "work" is to be dealt with as a unit. The invitation for bids was clearly for this "work" as a whole, and a bid for less than the whole work was not in response to the invitation, and was properly disregarded. The Fairchild Company's bid for the whole of the work was in perfect response to the invitation, the estimate of the cost of one part of the work was manifestly based upon the consideration that it was to do the whole work, and it was under no obligation, legal or moral, to undertake any of the work less than the whole. The council had the right, as it admitted, to have this work done under one contract, and there is no reason to think that it contemplated four distinct contracts with four assessments, warrants, etc. Four separate contractors, each claiming to do his part of the work at his convenience, would lead to conflicts and confusion, while one contractor for the whole could do each part of the work at the appropriate time. Moreover, the determination by the council that the work was of more than ordinary importance, calling for the creation of a distinct district, and the declaration that bonds should be issued to represent the cost, were evidently based on the improvements as one work, and would be inconsistent with a contemplation of several independent contracts with different contractors, to be followed by different assessments, warrants, series of bonds, etc.

Appellant contends that his point is supported by two cases heretofore decided by this court—Los Angeles Lighting Company v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 156, 39 Pac. 535, and Bates v. Twist, 138 Cal. 52, 70 Pac. 1023—but we do not so construe those cases. In the first-named case there was involved only the right of the lot owners to protest against the contemplated improvement; and it was there held that when the contemplated improvement included several classes of work, an effectual protest might be made as to some of the classes of work, without objection being made to all, the court saying that "the owner may protest against a portion of the work included in the resolution without including in his protest all of the work embraced therein." But this proposition does not reach the question of the validity of a bid which is involved in the case at bar. In Bates v. Twist there had been a resolution of intention providing certain improvements on N street in San Francisco, and also of street work of various kinds upon streets other than N street. The resolution ordering the work done did not include all the work included in the resolution of intention, and it was contended that for this reason the contract and subsequent proceedings were void. The court held the contract valid, and made a distinction between work ordered on a part of a particular street, and work to be done at different parts of the city—which it was held might be all included in one resolution of intention. The court say: "It may often happen, as in the present case, that the public interest requires the improvement of streets situate in widely separated parts of the city, and, if so, no reason is shown or can be suggested why the board may not cause such improvements to be included in the same resolution of intention, without requiring them to be contracted for by the same individual," and then the court proceeds as follows: "The designation by it of a street or a portion of a street which is to be improved, with a description of the work to be done thereon, becomes thereby a distinct and separate improvement, whether it be the only improvement specified in the resolution of intention or in the resolution ordering the work, or whether other improvements are included with it." All this is entirely in accord with the views hereinafter expressed. Moreover, in Bates v. Twist reference is made to Treanor v. Houghton, 103 Cal. 54, 36 Pac. 1081, and the court say that in Treanor v. Houghton: "The city council of San Jose ordered the improvement of Julian street between First street and the eastern limits of the city. The improvement thus ordered was an entirety within the principles above stated and should have remained so throughout the subsequent proceedings." In the same case of Treanor v. Houghton the subject is elaborately discussed and the conclusion reached is that the resolution of intention to improve a particular piece of street, although the improvement may consist, as it usually does, of two or more classes of work, must be considered as a unit, and the work must be let under a single contract, and that the "city council has no power to award separate contracts in such a case for the performance of a single improvement."

Our conclusions are that the Fairchild Company was legally the lowest bidder and entitled to have the contract; that there is no valid reason why the defendant, the street superintendent, should not enter into the contract with the other defendant which was awarded by the council; and that the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

5 Cal. App. 541

Ex parte HAASE. (Cr. 47.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 16, 1907.)

1. Criminal Law — Judgment — Determination of Degree of Offense.

Pen. Code, § 1192, declares that upon a plea of guilty of a crime divided into degrees the court must, before passing sentence, determine the degree. Section 1017 declares that, if the defendant pleads guilty, the plea shall be substantially that defendant pleads that he is guilty of the offense charged. Held that, where to an information charging burglary in general terms so as to include both degrees defendant pleaded guilty of burglary in the first degree, no substantial right of defendant was invaded by the court's failure to determine the degree of the offense, as required by section 1192.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2494.]

2. Same—Presumption of Jurisdiction.

Where the record does not show whether the court determined the degree of the offense on a plea of guilty of burglary in the first degree to an information charging burglary in general terms so as to include both degrees, as the court is required to do by Pen. Code, § 1192, upon a plea of guilty of a crime divided into degrees, and judgment was pronounced for burglary in the first degree, on collateral attack on the judgment, the presumption is, if any be necessary to support the judgment, that notwithstanding the plea of guilty in the first degree the court heard evidence and determined that the offense was burglary in the first degree.

Application by Henry Haase for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

R. T. McKisick, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Petitioner asks to be discharged from the custody of the warden of the state prison on the ground that the "judgment and sentence were and are void, that said court had no authority in law to enter said judgment or to pronounce said sentence; that the same are in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and are nullities." The return to the writ shows that petitioner is imprisoned by virtue of a commitment issued out of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of San Bernardino in the following form: "The district attorney, with the defendant, who had heretofore waived counsel, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the nature of the information filed against him for the crime of burglary committed on the 6th day of October, 1904, of his arraignment and plea of guilty on the 8th day of October, 1904, of burglary in the first degree. The defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replied he had none. And, no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, thereupon the court rendered its judgment that, whereas, the said Henry Haase having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of burglary in the first degree, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said Henry Haase be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at Folsom for the term of eight years."

It is insisted that the court had no jurisdiction to sentence the defendant because of its failure to determine the degree of the crime. In this connection petitioner cites section 1192 of the Penal Code, which provides: "Upon a plea of guilty of a crime distinguished or divided into degrees the court must, before passing sentence, determine the degree." And, in response to the suggestion that the defendant by the form of his plea obviated the necessity of the court's actual determination of the degree, attention is directed to section 1017 of the same Code, providing for the form of the plea as follows: "Every plea must be oral and entered upon the minutes of the court in substantially the following form: (1) If the defendant plead guilty, 'The defendant pleads that he is guilty of the offense charged.'" The usual and proper practice undoubtedly is to charge in general terms in the information the offense of burglary without specifying the entry as having been made in the day or nighttime. If the defendant then pleads guilty, the plea should be, in orderly sequence, "Guilty of the offense charged," to wit, burglary. The duty would then be cast upon the court to determine the degree before passing sentence. And, if the court failed to determine the degree, it would be prejudicial error. People v. Jefferson, 52 Cal. 452. But what objection could be urged against an information charging burglary in the nighttime? The effect would be simply to confine the plea or the trial to the crime of burglary in the first degree. People v. Smith, 136 Cal. 208, 68 Pac. 702. But if the defendant were arraigned upon such an information and should plead guilty of "burglary in the first degree," and were sentenced to eight years in the penitentiary, it could not be said that the judgment was void or even voidable. In such a case the plea would be equivalent to that "of guilty of the offense charged" and it would be a substantial compliance with the requirement of the statute.

When, as in the case at bar, the information charges burglary in general terms so as to include both degrees, why should the defendant be precluded from pleading in harmony with the facts guilty of either one of said offenses if he so desires? How is any substantial right of the defendant invaded if the court accepts his confession that the crime was committed in the nighttime instead of calling a witness to prove such fact? Ordinarily the court would determine the degree by the examination of witnesses, but it would seem to be entirely unnecessary where the defendant—presumably upon sufficient information as to the nature and consequences of the offense—confesses in effect that he committed the crime in the nighttime and is therefore guilty of burglary in the first degree.

But, aside from the foregoing consideration, it is manifest from the record before us that petitioner is not entitled to his discharge. The only question admittedly that we can consider upon this application is the jurisdiction of the court below to sentence the defendant. Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342; Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 405; In re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 14 Sup. Ct. 323, 38 L. Ed. 149. Again the proceeding of habeas corpus is not a substitute for appeal. Ex parte Long, 114 Cal. 159, 45 Pac. 1057; Keller v. Davis, 95 N. W. 1028, 69 Neb. 494. And, in reviewing the record of a court of general jurisdiction, it must be remembered that every intendment is in favor of the judgment, and that the want of jurisdiction must affirmatively appear. This is a collateral and not a direct attack, and, in order to entitle petitioner to his discharge, the record must show that the judgment is a nullity.

In Re Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 603, 36 Pac. 11, Mr. Justice Harrison, speaking for the court, said: "More than 200 years ago it was said in Peacock v. Bell, 1 Wm. Saund. 74, that 'the rule for jurisdiction is that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior court but that which specially appears to be so; and, on the contrary, nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior court but that which is so expressly alleged'; and this rule has been so frequently repeated as to have become a maxim in the law. This presumption extends to everything necessary for the support of the judgment, as well those facts which are necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the defendant as those which are necessary to sustain its decision of fact or conclusion of law thereon. * * * The fact that the court has rendered a judgment implies a determination by it, before it assumed to hear the controversy, that it had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, and of the defendant against whom the complaint was directed. * * * Its determination upon this question is to be made upon evidence of some nature; * * * and if its conclusion is incorrect it is merely error which can be reviewed only upon a direct appeal. Even though it should determine the question without any evidence before it, the same presumption of verity attends its decision upon this point as upon any other issue which it may determine without evidence. Nor does this presumption of its jurisdiction to make the decision depend upon the existence of any record of the decision. * * * If it makes a record of the facts giving it jurisdiction, or of its exercise of such jurisdiction, there is no occasion to invoke any presumption. It is only when the record is silent that the necessity for presumption arises." It would seem impossible to add anything to the foregoing statement of the rule. The doctrine is announced also in the late case of Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 674, 74 Pac. 301, through Mr. Justice Angellotti, as follows: "Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment, and any condition of facts consistent with the validity of the judgment will be presumed to have existed rather than one which will defeat the judgment. Unless the record of the judgment itself affirmatively shows that the court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment, the judgment is not void upon its face." See, also, In re Brown, 32 Cal. 49.

In the case at bar it is not required that the record shall show that the court heard evidence and determined the degree of the offense, even if we assume that under the peculiar circumstances such determination was necessary. The only material parts of a judgment are the statement of the offense for which the defendant has been convicted, omitting therefrom all that is contained in the previous papers and therefore not necessary to be repeated, and the sentence of the court. In re Ring, 28 Cal. 253. Hence here the commitment, which is merely a certified copy of the judgment, is properly silent as to whether the court formally determined the degree or whether any evidence on the subject was received. If necessary, however, to support the judgment, it must be presumed that, notwithstanding the plea of guilty of burglary of the first degree, the court heard evidence and determined that the offense was committed in the nighttime and was therefore burglary of the first degree. There is no ground for the contention of petitioner that it appears affirmatively that no such proceeding was had. The affidavit of the clerk verifying the minutes of the court was received in evidence at the hearing, but it simply discloses the fact that the record is silent as to whether the court determined the question as petitioner claims it should have done before passing sentence.

We have not referred to many of the decisions cited and suggestions made by counsel, as we deem the foregoing decisive of the issue.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner is remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

PETERSON et al. v. CHAIX et al. (Civ. 255.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 20, 1907. On Rehearing, May 15, 1907.)

1. EVIDENCE — PAROL EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT—EXISTENCE OF AMBIGUITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, declares that, when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, no evidence of the agreement other than the writing, except in certain cases, shall be admitted, but provides that it shall not be held to exclude evidence of the circumstances under which the agreement was made, as defined by section 1860, or to explain an extrinsic ambiguity. Section 1860 declares that, for the proper construction of an instrument, the circumstances under which it was made may be shown. Civ. Code, § 1625, declares that the execution of a contract in writing, shall supersede all the oral negotiations. Held, that the terms "about" and "more or less," used in a contract of sale of "about" 250 tons of grapes "more or less," did not create such an ambiguity in the contract as to the amount intended to be sold, as would let in extrinsic evidence or previous or contemporaneous conversations to show intent.

On Rehearing.

2. SAME.

Extrinsic evidence of the terms of a contract of which merely an incomplete memorandum has been made is admissible only as to such matters concerning which the memorandum is silent, or as to which terms are used which import ambiguity or uncertainty.

3. SAME.

Whatever the law implies from a contract in writing is as much a part of the contract as that which is therein expressed; and to the extent that the contract, with that which the law implies, is clear and complete, it cannot be varied as added to by extrinsic evidence.

4. SAME.

Extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show that a contract is partly written and partly oral, if the matter proposed to be made part of the contract by such evidence is inconsistent with the terms of the writing.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action upon a contract for the sale of certain grapes. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiffs had judgment, from which, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

It is averred in the complaint that on September 22, 1902, plaintiffs entered into a contract with defendants, whereby plaintiffs agreed to sell and deliver to defendants at their winery in Santa Rosa, and defendants agreed to buy and receive, the crop of grapes owned and grown by plaintiffs on their vineyards near said city for the season of 1902, said grapes to be of sound quality, but not required to contain any specified percentage of sugar, and that defendants agreed to pay to plaintiffs for the same, cash on delivery, the sum of $27 per ton; that prior to October 27, 1902, plaintiffs delivered to defendants, under said contract, 256.817 tons of said grapes and defendants then and there duly received and accepted the same under said contract, amounting to $6,934.05; that plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver the balance of their said crop to defendants, but defendants gave plaintiffs notice that they, defendants, "would not receive or accept or pay for any more of the said crop and then and there refused to receive or accept any more of said grapes"; that there remained undelivered of said crop 166.155 tons of grapes of quality called for by said contract; that after defendants' said refusal, to wit, on October 28, 1902, plaintiffs sold to the best advantage said remaining grapes (except 10 tons hereinafter mentioned), receiving therefor the sum of $20 per ton, amounting in the aggregate to $3,123.10, and that the difference between said sum and the sum agreed by defendants to be paid is $1,093.08; that there remained undelivered to defendants 10 tons of grapes, which by reason of defendants' said refusal became decayed and valueless. Defendants by their answer admitted the delivery to them agreeably to the contract of 239.291 tons, but alleged that 17.495 tons delivered to defendants prior to August 27, 1902, were of inferior quality, for which defendants agreed to pay the reasonable market value, which they allege was and is $317.43, and admit an indebtedness of $6,778.30, which sum they allege they tendered to plaintiffs prior to the commencement of this action, and that plaintiffs refused to receive the same, and they aver a present willingness to pay said sum to plaintiffs. Defendants deny specifically the allegations of the complaint, except as to the above admissions. The court made findings in accordance with the facts set forth in the complaint, and found that "no contract or agreement other than the one above mentioned (i. e., alleged in the complaint) was ever made between plaintiffs and defendants for the sale and purchase of plaintiffs' said crop of grapes for the season of 1902." The court also found that no tender had been made by defendants, as to which finding the matter may be dismissed, as it is not now claimed that any tender was made by defendants.

It appeared by the opening statement of counsel for plaintiffs and during the examination of the first witness called by plaintiffs that a written contract was entered into by the parties, defendants acting through one Hood, admittedly their agent, plaintiffs, however, claiming that it was but a part of the contract. This instrument bears date as alleged of the contract pleaded in the complaint, and is as follows: "Santa Rosa, Sept. 22nd, 1902. In consideration of one ($1.00) dollar, paid to me in hand, I sell and promise to deliver to Chaix & Bernard at James G. Hood's winery at Santa Rosa, Cal., about 250 tons grapes more or less tons of grapes, at the stipulated price of $27.00 per ton cash after delivery. Grapes to be of sound quality. ~~and not less than (22) Twenty-Two per cent. of sugar.~~ Seller: Peterson Bros. Buyer: James G. Hood." The last clause shown in the contract as erased was so erased before signing. Over the objection of defendants, the plaintiffs were permitted to introduce the testimony of several witnesses as to the circumstances leading up to the signing of the above memorandum, to show that the sale was intended to include the entire crop of plaintiffs' grown upon their vineyards, explaining the varieties of grapes and estimated tons of each, that the grapes were not to be subject to the sugar test. In short, witnesses were permitted to testify to all the conversations and details relating to the transaction that took place during the negotiations and contemporaneously with the signing of the contract. Upon objections being interposed and after argument, the court remarked: "My understanding is that all these matters of the conversation precedent are merged in a written contract, but under section 1860 of the Code of Civil Procedure I will permit the question and you can take your exception." The objections and ruling ran to all this line of testimony, of which there was much, and present the principal question before us. Respondents' view of the matter as stated in the brief is that "the writing of September 22d is only a commercial memorandum, and does not purport to fully set forth all of the contract of sale and purchase of the grapes"; and hence all the circumstances attending the making of the contract may be inquired into.

Section 1860, Code Civ. Proc., upon which reliance is placed, reads as follows: "For the proper construction of an instrument, the circumstances under which it was made, including the situation of the subject of the instrument, and of the parties to it, may also be shown, so that the judge be placed in the position of those whose language he is to interpret." This section is not to be read as applicable to every contract that may come before the court for interpretation. It has its limitations, and must be read in connection with other provisions of our Codes. To give it a literal and universal application would bring it into direct conflict with section 1856, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest, no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing, except in the following cases: (1) Where a mistake or imperfection of the writing is put in issue by the pleadings; (2) Where the validity of the agreement is the fact in dispute. But this section does not exclude other evidence of the circumstances under which the agreement was made, or to which it relates, as defined in section eighteen hundred and sixty, or to explain an extrinsic ambiguity, or to establish illegality or fraud." In the present case there is no allegation or proof of mistake, of invalidity of the contract, or of fraud. Section 1625, Civ. Code, must also be read and harmonized with section 1860, Code Civ. Proc. It reads: "The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the oral negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter, which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument." From these and other sections which might be cited it is plain that section 1860 is to be restricted in its application. The court said in Balfour v. Fresno C. & I. Co., 109 Cal. 221, 225, 41 Pac. 876, 877: "If the language of the contract be, as defendant contends, plain and unambiguous, and susceptible of but one construction, then the objection was good, and the evidence properly excluded. If, however, the language employed be fairly susceptible of either one of the two interpretations contended for, without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import, or some established rule of construction, then an ambiguity arises, which extrinsic evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of explaining. This is not allowing parol evidence for the purpose of varying or altering the contract, or of putting a different sense and construction upon its language from that which it would naturally bear, but for the purpose of showing the circumstances under which the language was used, and applying it according to the intention of the parties"—citing section 1860, Code Civ. Proc., and cases. In Johnson v. Pugh, 110 Wis. 167, 85 N. W. 641, it was broadly contended that testimony of the circumstances surrounding and leading up to the making of a written contract is always admissible, not for the purpose of changing or varying the terms of the written instrument, but for the purpose of putting the court in possession of the circumstances of the parties at the time of the making of the contract. "Not so," said the court. "Where there is no ambiguity in the contract either in its literal sense or when it is applied to the subject thereof, it must speak for itself entirely unaided by extrinsic matters. Where such ambiguity does exist, then evidence of the circumstances under which the contract was made is proper to enable the court in the light thereof to read the instrument in the sense the parties intended, if that can be done without violence to the rules of law."

The meaning of section 1860 may be discovered in the light of the foregoing decisions. Before resort can be had to extrinsic evidence, the language employed in the contract must not only be "fairly susceptible of either one of the two interpretations contended for," but this must be "without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import," and it must also be "without doing violence to * * * some established rule of construction." Balfour v. Fresno C. & I. Co., supra. It is no part of the office of construction to add to the contract or take from it, but it is to ascertain what the parties intended by what they have said. If there be no ambiguity in the contract, it must speak for itself. It is true, as provided in section 1861, Code Civ. Proc., that, although "the terms of a writing are presumed to have been used in their primary and general acceptation," still evidence is admissible to show "that they have a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar signification, and were so used and understood in the particular instance, in which case the agreement must be construed accordingly." Such was the case of Higgins v. Cal. P. Co. 120 Cal. 631, 52 Pac. 1080, cited by respondents, where the terms used were "short tons." It was there held that it is not necessary that the contract should expressly indicate a local, technical, or peculiar signification but "that it may be shown by evidence that the language is used in a technical, local, or peculiar sense, and not merely that evidence may be introduced to show what such meaning is when language is so used." That case, however, was not intended to change the rules above mentioned. The rules stated in sections 1860 and 1861 do not apply where the terms used in the contract are free from ambiguity or are not used in a technical, local, or peculiar signification. The Code rule enunciated in section 1856, Code Civ. Proc., has been frequently enforced by our Supreme Court and was the rule before being incorporated into the Code. Goldman v. Davis, 23 Cal. 256. See of later cases Schurtz v. Romer, 82 Cal. 474, 23 Pac. 118; West Coast L. Co. v. Apfield, 86 Cal. 335, 24 Pac. 993; Beall v. Fisher, 95 Cal. 568, 30 Pac. 773. And also McDonald v. Poole, 113 Cal. 437, 45 Pac. 702, construing section 1625, Civ. Code. Among cases in other jurisdictions the following may be consulted with profit. They come down finally to the simple proposition that, where there is no uncertainty of sense, there is no room for construction. Hart v. Hart, 117 Wis. 639, 94 N. W. 890; Fawkner v. Smith W. P. Co., 88 Iowa, 169, 55 N. W. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 230. If it be claimed that the contract is incomplete, it must so appear upon inspection before parol evidence is admissible to complete it, and such evidence must be consistent with and not contradictory of it. Brantingham v. Huff, 174 N. Y. 53, 66 N. E. 620, 95 Am. St. Rep. 545; Ferguson C. Co. v. Manhattan T. Co., 118 Fed. 791, 55 C. C. A. 529.

In the case here the only terms which have given rise to any controversy are the terms "about" and "more or less," as applied to the quantity of grapes sold. The sugar test was stricken out, and it so appears upon the face of the contract. There is no uncertainty that the plaintiffs agreed to sell and deliver 250 tons of grapes at a place named, and that the buyer was to pay $27 per ton upon delivery, the grapes to be of sound quality. The material question which has arisen between the parties as to the meaning of the contract is the single question of quantity agreed to be sold and delivered. Parol evidence was not admitted to show that the terms "about" and "more or less" had a local or technical or otherwise peculiar signification, and were so understood in the particular instance, but the evidence was introduced to prove that it was part of the agreement that the buyer should receive all the grapes grown by the seller on the several vineyards mentioned by the witnesses, that when the matter of quantity in the vineyards was under discussion, and the estimate of plaintiffs was from 250 to 290 tons, defendants said it would make no difference as to the amount, for they would take all the grapes that plaintiffs had. Plaintiffs made an unsuccessful effort to show by parol that the terms "more or less" had by custom among buyers and sellers of wine grapes a local and peculiar signification which meant all grapes grown by the seller. Defendants objected to the testimony, however, and the objection was sustained. It seems to us that the conversations occurring when the parties were estimating the quantity thought to be on the vines should be regarded in the light of opinions which were to form some safe quantity to name in the contract which plaintiffs were willing to agree to sell and deliver and not as part of the contract itself. So important a matter as that the buyers agreed to take all the grapes grown by the sellers, regardless of quantity, should have found expression in the contract, either directly or by introducing some extrinsic ambiguity, and, not having been so expressed, cannot now be added thereto by parol. This additional quantity is 166 tons, or 60 per cent. greater than the quantity stated in the contract by the sellers. Possibly, had this large excess been suggested during these conversations, the buyers would have hesitated to say that it made no difference as to the quantity. However this may be, the terms "about" and "more or less" have frequently found their way into contracts, and courts have without disagreement held that they introduce no ambiguity, and that extrinsic evidence of previous or contemporaneous conversations is not admissible to show what the parties meant by their use, unless the contract on its face makes reference to some independent circumstances to identify the goods sold.

Both parties cite Brawley v. United States, 96 U. S. 168, 24 L. Ed. 622. This is a leading case and has been often cited. It lays down certain rules for the guidance of courts in the construction of similar contracts. In that case the contract was to deliver at a certain army post "880 cords of sound, first quality of merchantable wood, more or less, as shall be determined to be necessary, by the post commander, for the regular supply," etc. It appeared that the quartermaster's department had made an estimate of the quantity required and had accordingly advertised for 880 cords. The bids were opened April 15, 1871, and the contract was awarded May 6th, but, though dated on that day, was not executed until June 14th. About June 18th the post commander notified plaintiff, the claimant, that but 40 cords of wood would be required and forbade his hauling any more to the government yard. He had, however, at great expense, before the contract was signed, gone forward and cut the full quantity and hauled it near to the yard. The court held that "the substantial engagement was to furnish what should be determined to be necessary by the post-commander for the regular supply for the year," and plaintiff failed in his action. The opinion is valuable for its concise and accurate statement of the rules governing similar contracts. Said the court, by Mr. Justice Bradley: "Where a contract is made to sell or furnish certain goods identified by independent circumstances, such as an entire lot deposited in a certain warehouse, or all that may be manufactured by the vendor in a certain establishment, or that may be shipped by his agent or correspondent in certain vessels, and the quantity is named with the qualification of 'about,' or 'more or less,' or words of like import, the contract applies to the specific lot, and the naming of the quantity is not regarded as in the nature of a warranty, but only as an estimate of the probable amount, in reference to which good faith is all that is required of the party making it. In such cases the governing rule is somewhat analogous to that which is applied in the description of lands, where natural boundaries and monuments control courses and distances and estimates of quantity. But when no such independent circumstances are referred to, and the engagement is to furnish goods of a certain quality or character to a certain amount, the quantity specified is material, and governs the contract. The addition of the qualifying words, 'about,' 'more or less,' and the like, in such cases, is only for the purpose of providing against accidental variations arising from slight and unimportant excesses or deficiencies in number, measure, or weight. If, however, the qualifying words are supplemented by other stipulations or conditions which give them a broader scope or a more extensive significancy, then the contract is to be governed by such added stipulations or conditions. As if it be agreed to furnish so many bushels of wheat, more or less, according to what the party receiving it shall require for the use of his mill, then the contract is not governed by the quantity named, nor by that quantity with slight and unimportant variations, but by what the receiving party shall require for the use of his mill; and the variation from the quantity named will depend upon his discretion and requirements, so long as he acts in good faith. So, where a manufacturer contracts to deliver at a certain price all the articles he shall make in his factory for the space of two years, 'say a thousand to twelve hundred gallons of naphtha per month,' the designation of quantity is qualified not only by the indeterminate word 'say,' but by the fair discretion or ability of the manufacturer, always provided he acts in good faith. * * * Reference is made to the previous negotiations which led to the making of the contract, the bid of the claimant, the fact that the contract was awarded to him on his bid as early as May, and that, on the faith and expectation that the quantity named would be wanted, he had cut the 880 cords of wood before the contract was signed. All this is irrelevant matter. The written contract merged all previous negotiations, and is presumed, in law, to express the final understanding of the parties. If the contract did not express the true agreement, it was the claimant's folly to have signed it. The court cannot be governed by any such outside considerations. Previous and contemporary transactions and facts may be very properly taken into consideration to ascertain the subject-matter of a contract, and the sense in which the parties may have used particular terms, but not to alter or modify the plain language which they have used."

The importance of the question and the earnest contention of respondent that the lower court ruled correctly is our justification for a still further notice of some of the many cases in which the matter has been considered. In Shickle v. Choteau H. & V. Iron Co., 84 Mo. 161, the opinion, as rendered in the Court of Appeals, 10 Mo. App. 242, was adopted. The contract read: Your proposal for four hundred tons, more or less, of wrought scrap, consisting of one, one-half and three-eighth plate blacksmith scrap, and lot of gas pipes from Southern Hotel, and other scrap, as shown your Mr. Fusz, at twenty-two dollars per net ton in our yard, is accepted. You can commence hauling same at your convenience." The court said: "Defendant admitted the purchase and receipt of the iron at the price mentioned and nonpayment of the balance claimed, but by way of counterclaim alleged that said iron was delivered in part performance of the contract above under which they claimed that it was agreed that defendants were to have all the scrap iron in plaintiff's yard. Evidence was offered to show that at the time the terms were agreed upon the parties were in the yard containing the scrap and made estimates of the quantity, and defendants offered to prove that it was then agreed that they were to have all the scrap iron." The court held this evidence inadmissible. As reported in 10 Mo. App., the court said: "The words 'more or less' in a written contract are never understood to permit more than a small departure from the quantity named in the contract. Such being the meaning affixed by law to the words 'more or less' in a written contract, the use of such words does not create such an ambiguity in the contract as will let in parol explanation. The words '400 tons more or less' are to be taken, not as mere words of expectation, but as words of contract limiting and defining the quantity to be sold. Morris v. Levison, 1 C. P. Div. 155; Leeming v. Snaith, 16 Q. B. 275. The construction put upon the contract by the defendant has the effect of erasing from the contract the words '400 tons.' This cannot be done. It is well settled, in interpreting any written instrument, that such a meaning shall be put upon it as will, if possible, give effect to all its parts." In Cabot v. Winsor et al., 1 Allen (83 Mass.) 546, the contract was as follows: "Sold to Nath'l Winsor Jr. & Co. for account of Stephen Cabot, Esq., five hundred (500) bundles, more or less gunny bags at 10c. per bag." It appeared in evidence that both parties knew that the object of the defendant in making the purchase was to fill the ship Hesperus then lying at India Wharf, and that at the time of the purchase it was uncertain what number of bundles would be needed for that purpose. Only 200 bundles were actually taken on board of the Hesperus, that being all that proved to be necessary to fill the ship. The remainder, about 275 bundles, were left on the wharf. Defendants claimed that under the contract they were to have 500 bundles, or more or less than that number, as might reasonably be found necessary to fill the ship, or at their election; and that as they did not require any more than the 200 bundles for that purpose, and as they in fact never received any more than that number, they were only bound to pay for 200. But it was held at the trial that there was no latent ambiguity in the contract, and that its construction was for the court. Defendants offered to prove by parol that both parties understood the contract differently and that it was not intended to cover more than enough to fill the ship, and they offered to prove the declarations and acts of the plaintiff before, at the time of, and after the making of the contract, for the purpose of showing that he so construed it; but the judge excluded the evidence. On the appeal the Supreme Judicial Court said: "We are unable to perceive any ground on which it can be held that this contract falls within any of the exceptions to the familiar and well-established rule which excludes all parol evidence in the construction of the written agreements of parties. The language in which it is expressed is not technical, nor is it alleged to have any peculiar or local signification, or to have been used with reference to any custom or usage, which would vary or change its natural and ordinary meaning. Nor are the terms of the contract rendered uncertain or doubtful by reference to extrinsic facts, so as to create a latent ambiguity. The words 'more or less,' which seem to have given rise to the contention between the parties, have a plain, ordinary, and popular signification, and are often used in contracts relating both to real and personal estate." After speaking of the sales of merchandise, especially in large quantities, where these terms are frequently used in connection with the specific quantity named in the contract, the court said: "But in such cases parol evidence is not admitted to show that the parties intended to buy and sell a different quantity or amount from that stated in the written agreement. On the contrary, it is held to be a contract for the sale of the quantity or amount specified; and the effect of the words 'more or less' is only to permit the vendor to fulfill his contract by a delivery of so much as may reasonably and fairly be held to be a compliance with the contract, after making due allowance for an excess or short delivery arising from the usual and ordinary causes, which prevent an accurate estimate of the weight or number of the articles sold." It was held that the readiness to deliver 475 bundles was sufficient compliance, and that "a variation of 5 per cent. in so large a quantity was not such a deficiency as to fall outside of the fair and reasonable limit of short delivery." In Creighton v. Comstock, 27 Ohio St. 548, the sale was of timber "supposed to be twenty-three thousand feet white pine timber, more or less, now lying in the river immediately under said Creighton's logway in the Ohio River at Columbus." A delivery of 16,000 feet was held to be insufficient, and involved too great a variation or deficiency to be brought within the meaning of the term "more or less." In Holland v. Rea, 48 Mich. 218, 12 N. W. 167, the court held that 473,000 feet of lumber would not satisfy a call for 500,000 feet, "more or less." See, also, the rule stated in Kirwan v. Van Camp Packing Co., 12 Ind. App. 1, 39 N. E. 536.

Respondent cites the case of Day v. Cross, 59 Tex. 595. In that case the sale was of all the cattle of certain brands, 10,000 head, more or less, except a certain number of the cattle of certain brands. The court held that it was not a guaranty as to the number of the cattle in said marks and brands, but a contract for the sale of the marks and brands, and that the seller was only bound to exercise good faith, care, skill, and energy to collect the cattle, taking them from the range where they were accustomed to run at the making of the contract. Here the controlling feature was the marks and brands, and not the designated number as indicating what was sold. In Tilden v. Rosenthal, 41 Ill. 385, 89 Am. Dec. 388, by the written contract defendant agreed to deliver on a certain day "262 head, more or less, of good fat cattle * * * to average thirteen hundred pounds, and are the cattle known as the McCoy and Bishop lot, now being fed in the vicinity of Council Bluffs, Iowa." Plaintiffs tendered 178 head, which defendants refused to receive and plaintiffs brought suit for this number. The court held that the phrase "more or less" was used by the parties to cover such trifling deficiencies in number as might be caused by the ordinary casualties of death or loss. "But," said the court, "the deficiency was nearly one-third of the whole number contracted for. We are not prepared to say that, when a person contracts for a lot of cattle containing 262 head, he shall accept 178." See cases collected in Benjamin on Sales, § 692 et seq. For discussion of rule in sale of land see Belknap v. Sealey, 14 N. Y. 143, 67 Am. Dec. 120, and note; Harrell v. Hill, 19 Ark. 102, 68 Am. Dec. 202.

Appellants make no point in their brief as to the 17 tons for which they allege that they agreed to pay the market value. The sole question discussed relates to the liability of defendants for the 166 tons of grapes which they refused to accept.

Our conclusion is that in accepting the 256.817 tons defendants became liable therefor at the contract price, but that they were not bound to accept the excess tendered by plaintiffs and refused by defendants.

The judgment and order are reversed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

It is urged in the petition for rehearing that the written memorandum did not constitute the whole of the agreement entered into, the remaining portion being verbal, without which latter there was no complete agreement; that this is a case "where a verbal contract is entire, and a part only in part performance is reduced to writing"; and that in the decision heretofore rendered due consideration was not given to the contention of respondents in these particulars.

We think the case, as to the matters above referred to, should be again examined.

The rehearing is granted. The cause will be placed at the foot of the April calendar and the parties notified hereof.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

On Rehearing.

In their petition for rehearing plaintiffs urged that the written memorandum did not constitute the whole of the agreement between the parties; but that there were conditions resting in parol, which were an essential part thereof, and that the case presents an instance "where a verbal contract is entire, and a part only in part performance is reduced to writing," and hence parol testimony was admissible to establish the complete agreement. We do not think that an extended discussion is called for in disposing of plaintiffs' contention. It may be conceded, and as we understand defendants' position they admit, that where the contract appears to be merely an incomplete memorandum, or to be partly in writing and partly in parol, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show what the mutual stipulations were. But this is true only as to such matters concerning which the written memorandum is silent or as to which terms are used which import ambiguity or uncertainty; i. e., which on their face admit of doubt as to what the parties meant by their use. There is another principle to be observed, namely, that whatever the law implies from a contract in writing is as much a part of the contract as that which is therein expressed; and to the extent that the contract, with that which the law implies, is clear, definite, and complete, it cannot be added to, varied, or contradicted by extrinsic evidence. A still further principle is not to be overlooked, namely, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show that a contract was partly written and partly oral if the matter proposed to be made part of the contract by such evidence is inconsistent with the terms of the writing. We may add a still further and salutary rule, which has been recently given careful and extended discussion by this court, in the case of Hale Bros., Inc., v. Milliken, (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 365, and it is this: While it is competent in construing a contract to show the situation of the parties, the subject-matter of the contract, and acts of the parties under the contract, as tending to show how they understood it, still this cannot be done to the extent of varying or contradicting a written contract, where such contract is certain, complete, and unambiguous. The foregoing principles are stated to be the law in the very well-reasoned case, supported by cited authorities, of Fawkner v. Smith Wall Paper Company, 88 Iowa, 169, 55 N. W. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 230. In that case the memorandum read as follows: "On demand I promise to deliver to the order of E. F. Fisher Eight hundred dollars (less twenty per cent. discount), in wall paper, at wholesale prices, good, clean, assorted stock out of my store on Fifth Street, Des Moines, Iowa. No storage. Lew Smith Wall Paper Co." The defendant pleaded that at the date of making the order, and of its acceptance by Fisher, the wholesale price for good, clean, assorted wall paper, and the price upon which said order was based, and at which said paper was to be delivered by the defendant to, and accepted by, the payee was agreed upon, and set forth on a card then shown Fisher; that the schedule of prices printed upon the card was then agreed upon between the parties to said order as the then wholesale prices at which paper was to be delivered, and said card accompanied the order, as a part of it, and a part of the contract fixing the wholesale price of said paper. Defendant was permitted to prove at the trial that, when the contract was made between the parties, he handed the plaintiff's assignor a card, having printed thereon a price list of wall paper, and that he was to take the paper mentioned in the contract at the prices stated on the card. It was not attached to or made part of the written contract or referred to in it. The evidence was objected to, as tending to vary and contradict the written contract of the parties. Defendant claimed that the evidence was admissible as constituting part of the contract; that, though it was on a separate piece of paper, still it was in fact but a part of and altogether constituted but one contract. The Iowa Supreme Court held that the lower court erred in admitting the evidence. In speaking of the terms "wholesale price," the court said: "There is no claim that the schedule of prices, as set forth on the card introduced in evidence, was to be a part of the written contract, and was omitted by accident, mistake, oversight, or fraud. No such issue is presented. The evidence objected to would work a material change in the terms of the contract. It shows that the paper was to be received at a price which was agreed upon when the contract was executed, and outside of the provisions of the written contract. It measured the amount of paper that should be received under the written contract by the then wholesale market price, when the written contract measured the amount of paper to be delivered under it by the wholesale price at the time of demand made for the goods."

In the case here the sole controversy relates to the quantity of grapes which defendants agreed to receive. It is true the contract is silent as to the agreement of defendants to receive any of the grapes. But they did receive them and no question arises as to this. The law would have implied an agreement to pay at the stipulated price for all grapes received by them of the quality named. True, also, that the contract is silent as to the varieties of the grapes, but as all bore the same price, and as no dispute arose upon this point, the fact is immaterial. So also as to the omission to state when the delivery was to be made or whence the grapes were to come. Reduced to the actual matter in controversy, the sole dispute was whether plaintiffs could prove by parol testimony that defendants had agreed to receive all of plaintiffs' crop, or to receive 166 tons of grapes in excess of the "250 tons more or less," specified in the written memorandum. It is not necessary to repeat the observations upon this point heretofore made. We are still of the opinion that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to materially add to the quantity mentioned in the memorandum. The principle invoked by respondents, when rightly applied, affords them no relief.

For the reasons stated in our former opinion and herein, the judgment and order are reversed.

HEALDSBURG ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER CO. v. CITY OF HEALDSBURG. (Civ. 301.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 20, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—INJURIES TO PROPERTY—TORTS BY AGENTS—LIABILITY.

A municipality is not liable for injuries to property resulting from torts committed by its agents acting outside the scope of the powers conferred on it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1566, 1584.]

2. SAME.

A complaint, in an action against a city for the malicious destruction of private property, which alleges that the street commissioner was directed to destroy the property, and which shows that the city itself destroyed the property, without averring any agency through whom it was accomplished, and which shows that the acts complained of were outside of any general or special powers given to the city, states no cause of action against the city.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1546.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; A. G. Burnett, Judge.

Action by the Healdsburg Electric Light & Power Company against the city of Healdsburg. From a judgment for defendant on sustaining a general and special demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & Lukens, for appellant. J. A. Barham, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action for damages alleged to have been caused by the oppressive, malicious, and violent acts of defendant, resulting in the destruction of parts of plaintiff's plant and with intent to compel it to discontinue business. A general and special demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff failing to amend, judgment passed for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

It is alleged in the amended complaint that plaintiff is a corporation formed under the laws of this state for the purpose of supplying electric light and power to the residents of the city of Healdsburg, and that plaintiff ever since March 15, 1899, has been and on that day was lawfully so engaged. The complaint then describes the property and apparatus constituting plaintiff's plant; avers, in paragraph 7, that the said plant was not injurious to health or offensive to the senses or in any wise interfered with the comfortable enjoyment of life or with the free use and passage of the public parks and streets of said city and in no manner constituted a nuisance, public or private. That on February 6, 1899, defendant, "well knowing the premises but solely with the design and intent to oppress this plaintiff, and to compel it to discontinue its business aforesaid, duly passed an ordinance designated 'Ordinance No. 81,' in the words and figures as follows." Then follows the ordinance, which purports to prescribe the kind and character of the material to be used in the construction, maintenance, and repair of electric lighting plants, or systems now in use in the city of Healdsburg, or to be hereafter erected therein. The amended complaint next charges that with like intent the said city on the same day duly passed ordinance No. 82, which declared certain described electric poles and wires to be a nuisance. It is next alleged that with like intent defendant, on March 10, 1899, served written notice upon plaintiff, directing it "within four days from the hour of 7 o'clock of the forenoon of the 11th day of March, 1899," to abate and remove all its unpainted electric poles now standing, etc., and all wires conducting electricity not properly insulated. Defendant was further directed to comply with the provisions of said ordinances Nos. 81 and 82, copies of which were attached to said notice. It is then alleged that on March 14, 1899, all the trustees of defendant met, and with like design and intent to oppress plaintiff, and compel it to discontinue its business, passed a resolution, which is set forth in full, and which in substance recited the notice given plaintiff of March 10th; that the time in which plaintiff should comply therewith would expire at 7 o'clock a. m. of March 15, 1899; that said plaintiff has not abated or removed said nuisances, etc., therefore, resolved "that the street commissioner * * * be, and he is hereby, instructed to abate and remove said nuisances, commencing at 7 o'clock a. m., March 15, 1899, and that he employ sufficient assistance to accomplish that purpose." It is then averred that "thereupon said defendant, * * * on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1899, wantonly and willfully intending and devising to oppress this plaintiff, and to compel it to discontinue entirely its business at the city of Healdsburg, forcibly and violently cut, uprooted, threw down, broke and so injured divers parts of the plant and property of the plaintiff as to prevent the plaintiff entirely from continuing its business aforesaid at Healdsburg." That "by reason of said acts" the plaintiff was obliged to wholly discontinue its business to its damage in the sum of $20,000. There is no allegation in the complaint that plaintiff ever had or now has the right to erect poles or wires in said city. The defendant demurred for insufficiency of facts, and also specially on the grounds of uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility.

In its brief appellant makes the following statement: "The plaintiff was engaged in a lawful business at Healdsburg, mainly producing and supplying the city of Healdsburg and its residents with electric light and power. The business was not in itself a nuisance, and could only become so in the manner of conducting it. But for the purposes of this demurrer the allegations of paragraph 7 of the complaint are conclusive upon the defendant, and the only refuge remaining for the defendant is to plead that the acts complained of are ultra vires the municipal corporation. This in fact is what counsel for the defendant did in the court below, and it is for the correction of the error in so holding that this appeal is prosecuted." Appellant limits the discussion to the single question: Is a municipal corporation liable for the torts of its agents and servants whose acts are concededly ultra vires? We shall confine ourselves to this single question, and we shall also assume, as conceded, that the acts complained of were ultra vires. We take it, when counsel use this phrase, it is with knowledge of its import, i. e., that it denotes, in the present case, an act or acts of tort done on behalf of the corporation, not within the scope of the powers conferred upon it. It is charged that defendant wantonly, willfully, and with intent to oppress plaintiff, and to compel plaintiff to abandon its business, "forcibly and violently cut, uprooted, threw down, broke, and so injured divers parts of the plant and property of the plaintiff as to prevent the plaintiff entirely from continuing its business aforesaid." It does not appear by direct averment whether this was pursuant to said ordinances and orders set forth; nor does it appear that the alleged injuries were done by the street commissioner pursuant to the order of the defendant. On the contrary, it appears that the defendant itself did the alleged mischief, without averring other agency through whom it was accomplished. We are unable to discover any lawful authority for the destruction of plaintiff's property in the manner alleged. That it was ultra vires in the strictest sense of that phrase seems clear. Whatever may be the doctrine in other jurisdictions, it is settled law in this state that a municipality cannot be held liable for injuries to private property thus perpetrated. The principle was applied in Wichmann v. City of Placerville, 147 Cal. 162, 81 Pac. 537, in a matter of contract obligation, where it was held that the ultra vires acts of a municipal corporation are absolutely void; and we believe there is no distinction in the application of the principle between such acts arising out of contract and in tort. In Sievers v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 648, 47 Pac. 687, 56 Am. St. Rep. 153, the doctrine of respondeat superior was quite fully discussed, where the injury complained of was to private property, resulting from certain street grading. The court there said: "In the performance of its governmental or public functions, the corporation is either deemed a public agency, a mandatary of the state, as in Barnett v. Contra Costa County, 67 Cal. 77, 7 Pac. 177, and therefore not liable to be sued civilly for damages, or it is considered, in the performance of these functions, to be clothed with sovereignty, and therefore not liable in an action. Lloyd v. Mayor of New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347. Where the injury results from the wrongful act or omission of an officer charged with a duty prescribed or limited by law, the officer is not treated as the servant or agent of the corporation in the performance of the duties enjoined, but is held to be the servant and agent of, and controlled by, the law, and for his acts the municipality will not be held liable." This case was referred to in Ukiah v. Ukiah Water & Imp. Co., 142 Cal. 173, 75 Pac. 773, 64 L. R. A. 231. 100 Am. St. Rep. 107, where it is stated to be the established rule in this state that a municipality is not liable for damages occasioned by the negligence of its officials or employés, citing, also, Huffman v. San Joaquin Co., 21 Cal. 426; Chope v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364, 4 L. R. A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113. In Chope v. City of Eureka, it was held that, in the absence of a statutory provision imposing the liability, a municipal corporation is not liable for personal injuries to individuals occasioned through the neglect of the officers of the corporation to properly perform their duties. Mr. Dillon says: "If the act complained of lies wholly outside of the general or special powers of the corporation as conferred in its charter or by statute, the corporation can in no event be liable to an action for damages, whether it directly commanded the performance of the act, or whether it be done by its officers without its express command." 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 968. See Winbigler v. City of Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 36; also extended note in Goddard v. Inhabitants of Harpswell, 84 Me. 499, 24 Atl. 958, 30 Am. St. Rep. 373, 376.

Plaintiff seems to have been careful to show that the acts complained of were outside of any general or special powers given defendant, and to frame its pleading upon the theory, contended for now, that, though ultra vires, defendant was liable for its alleged acts. We think plaintiff has misconceived the law as applied in this state.

The judgment is affirmed.

HINER v. HINER. (Civ. 316.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 16, 1907.)

COURTS—COURTS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION—SUPREME COURT—EQUITY.

An action for separate maintenance is an equitable action, and an appeal therein lies directly to the Supreme Court, under Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity, except such as arise in justice's court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Action by Alice E. Hiner against J. F. Hiner for separate maintenance. From an order granting alimony, etc., defendant appeals. Case transferred to the Supreme Court.

J. F. Thompson, for appellant. J. W. Oates, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff is the wife of defendant, and brings the action for separate maintenance for herself and three children of the marriage. The complaint alleges that in October, 1902, plaintiff and defendant were residing together in the county of Chehalis, state of Washington; that in said month defendant abandoned and willfully deserted plaintiff, and has never returned to plaintiff or to their said residence, but still continues to abandon and desert plaintiff; that defendant came to California shortly after October, 1902, "and is now a bona fide resident of Sonoma county"; that "plaintiff ever since October, 1902, has been and is now a bona fide resident of said Chehalis county, state of Washington"; that defendant is possessed of considerable means, setting forth a description of property alleged to be owned by him; and that plaintiff, when so abandoned and deserted by defendant, was left with no means of income and with property "of but little value, and plaintiff now has no means of support." Plaintiff alleges that she is in need of $100 per month from October, 1902, thenceforth "for her support and for the support of her said minor children"; that "under the laws of the state of Washington the plaintiff has a cause of action against defendant for divorce." The prayer of the complaint is that it be decreed that plaintiff "has a cause for divorce against defendant; that $100 per month is a proper amount for the support of plaintiff and her said minor children, and has been ever since said desertion of plaintiff by defendant." Attorney's fees are also prayed for in the sum of $250, and $100 pending the trial of the action, and for costs and expenses of suit, and "that the same may be made a charge upon said land and premises," and for such other relief as may be meet and proper. Plaintiff gave notice to defendant that at a time stated she would move the court for an order requiring defendant to pay plaintiff $100 per month, commencing at the filing of the complaint; also for $400 attorney's fees, and $300 for costs and expenses; that said motion would be heard upon the pleadings and upon certain affidavits, copies of which were served with the notice. The matter came on to be heard upon said papers and upon counteraffidavits filed by defendant, and upon the hearing the court made an order that defendant forthwith pay $210 as and for alimony, $50 costs of suit, and $100 as attorney's fees, and directed that execution issue to enforce collection of the same. The appeal is from this order, and is taken directly to this court.

Section 137 of the Civil Code provides for the payment of alimony "where an action for divorce is pending." As amended in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 205, c. 205), it also provides further: "When the wife has any cause of action for a divorce as provided in section ninety-two of this Code, she may, without applying for a divorce, maintain in the superior court an action against him for permanent support and maintenance of herself or of herself and children. During the pendency of such action the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary for the prosecution of the action and for support and maintenance, and execution may issue therefor in the discretion of the court. The final judgment in such action may be enforced by the court by such order or orders as in its discretion it may from time to time deem necessary, and such order or orders may be varied, altered, or revoked at the discretion of the court." It was held, in Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 7 Pac. 456, 635, 8 Pac. 709, that divorce is an action in equity within the meaning of the Constitution, conferring appellate jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court; and in Benton v. Benton, 122 Cal. 395, 55 Pac. 152, it was held that in actions for divorce, with application for alimony or allowance for support pendente lite, the cause of action is divorce, and the support of the wife pending suit is an incident. Hardy v. Hardy, 97 Cal. 125, 31 Pac. 906, was an action for maintenance, without applying for a divorce. The statute gave the action then "when the husband willfully deserts the wife." The court said: "Proof of willful desertion by the husband is therefore an essential element in the plaintiff's cause of action." As the statute now reads, we should hold it to be an essential element of the plaintiff's cause of action that the wife should show "a cause of action for divorce as provided in section 92" of the Civil Code. To do this she must appeal to the equity side of the court, and hence it would seem to follow that the action for maintenance must be addressed to the equity powers of the court. If, however, this reasoning be doubtful, the language of the section removes all doubt. The judgment contemplated is a judgment confided to the discretion of the court, and may be enforced at its discretion by order or orders, and these orders may with like discretion be varied, altered, or revoked. Clearly, a jury trial could not be demanded to assess an amount which rests wholly within the discretion of the court, and which may upon cause shown be taken away by the court. The Supreme Court is given appellate jurisdiction "in all cases of equity, except such as arise in justice's court." Article 6, § 4, of the Constitution. The appeal, in our opinion, should have been taken directly to the Supreme Court, and not to this court. By the same section it is provided that, where the appeal is not taken to the proper court, it shall not be dismissed, "but the cause shall be transferred to the proper court upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just, and shall be proceeded with therein as if regularly appealed thereto."

It is therefore ordered that the cause be transferred to the Supreme Court; the costs to attend the final disposition thereof by that court.

Ex parte FOWLER. (Cr. 43.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 18, 1907.)

1. INFORMATION—CHARGING A DIFFERENT OFFENSE THAN THAT IN COMMITMENT.

An information charging a different offense than that for which the accused was committed has no proper basis, and the district attorney has no authority to file it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 322.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS—GROUNDS OF REMEDY—INVALIDITY OF PROCEEDINGS IN CRIMINAL CASE.

Where an accused was committed for assault with a deadly weapon, and the superior court ordered the papers returned to the committing magistrate for recommitment, and the magistrate thereupon committed the accused for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and an information was filed by the district attorney charging the accused of that crime, the validity of the information based on the new commitment cannot be considered in habeas corpus, since the superior court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the legality of the proceedings therein can be considered only in that court or by the Supreme Court on appeal.

3. INFORMATION — TIME OF FILING — MANDATORY EFFECT OF STATUTE.

Pen. Code, § 809, providing that an information shall be filed within 30 days after examination and order of commitment, is mandatory, and, unless good cause for the delay is shown, as provided by section 1382, the superior court acquires no jurisdiction to try an accused on an information filed after that time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 153.]

4. SAME—EXCUSE FOR NOT FILING WITHIN STATUTORY PERIOD.

Where a district attorney filed an information in due time, which was set aside because the commitment on which it was based did not appear to sufficiently state the offense charged therein, and by order of the court the papers were returned and a new commitment filed, and a second information based thereon was filed more than 30 days after the original commitment, the facts are sufficient to excuse delay in filing the information, within the intent of Pen. Code, § 1382, providing that, unless good cause to the contrary be shown, the court must dismiss the prosecution where an information is not filed against the accused within 30 days after he has been held to answer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 153.]

Habeas corpus by Elmer Fowler. Writ dismissed.

Ben. Berry and B. T. Fowler, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Petitioner, who is held under restraint by the sheriff of Merced county, under an information charging him with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, makes this application for his release from the custody of said sheriff on habeas corpus.

On January 20, 1907, a complaint or deposition was filed in the justice court of township No. 3 of Merced county, charging the petitioner with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon. Upon an examination of the charge on the 31st day of January, 1907, the magistrate made and entered an order, obviously attempting to commit the petitioner for trial in the superior court for the offense of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. On the 14th day of February, 1907, the district attorney of Merced county filed in the superior court an information charging petitioner with the crime for which the magistrate thus attempted to order him committed. Upon appearing in court for arraignment under said information, on the 4th day of March, 1907, petitioner made a motion to set the same aside on the ground that prior to the filing thereof he had not been legally committed for the offense charged therein. On the following day the court made an order granting petitioner's motion by setting aside said information, and made the further order "that the clerk of said court return all the papers to the committing magistrate for recommitment." The order made by the magistrate and entered in his docket, committing petitioner for trial, reads as follows: "Whereupon the case being submitted, it is by the court ordered that Elmer Fowler be held to answer to the superior court upon a charge of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, committed as follows: That said Elmer Fowler on or about the 20th day of January, 1907, at Los Banos, in said county of Merced, state of California, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously did assault one James Cowan, a human being, with a deadly weapon, to wit, a loaded pistol with intent to commit murder." On the 8th day of March, 1907, the magistrate made the following entry in his docket: "* * * Received March the 8th, 1907, from county clerk of order of superior court directing of return of papers for recommitment." Thereafter, and on the 13th day of March, 1907, the following order was entered in his docket by the magistrate: "March 13th, 1907. People vs. Elmer Fowler. Wherefore, the papers being returned for recommitment, it appearing to me that the offense of assault with intent to commit murder has been committed as follows: That on or about the 19th day of January, A. D. 1907, Elmer Fowler did unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought assault one James Cowan in the town of Los Banos, Merced county, state of California, with a deadly weapon, to wit, a loaded pistol, with intent then and there to kill and murder said James Cowan, and there is sufficient cause to believe the within Elmer Fowler guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to the same," etc. The same order in substance and effect was thereupon indorsed by the magistrate on the complaint filed with him on the 20th day of January, 1907. The new or amended commitment, with the other "papers," having been by the magistrate returned to the clerk of the superior court, a new information was, on the 21st day of March, 1907, filed in said court by the district attorney, charging petitioner with the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. On the 30th day of March, 1907, upon his appearance for arraignment upon the charge alleged in said information, petitioner "moved said superior court to set aside the information upon the ground that, prior to the filing thereof, he had not been legally committed for the offense charged in said information, and upon the further ground that on the 13th day of March, 1907, the committing magistrate was without jurisdiction to make and enter the judgment and order holding the petitioner to answer before the superior court for trial for the offense therein indicated; that the indorsement of said judgment and order upon the complaint by the committing magistrate was void and the information based upon such indorsement was void." The court denied the motion. Upon the same day, and after the court refused to grant petitioner's motion to set aside the information, a motion was made by petitioner "to dismiss the prosecution of said charge upon the ground that the information had not been filed within thirty days from the time the preliminary examination was held and petitioner held to answer before the superior court of said county of Merced on the 31st day of January, 1907." This motion was denied by the court.

The petitioner thus presents two points or grounds upon which he claims to be entitled to his release: (1) "That the committing magistrate was without jurisdiction to make and enter his judgment and order on the 13th day of March, 1907, and hence the commitment based thereon is void." (2) That the said information was not filed in the superior court within 30 days after the petitioner had been examined and committed, as required by section 809 of the Penal Code. It will be observed that the defect in the original commitment consisted in the failure of the magistrate to properly designate or describe the offense for which it was his evident intention to commit the petitioner. The complaint or deposition charged an assault with a deadly weapon, and the other depositions or testimony presumably developed, in the judgment of the magistrate, a case of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. The magistrate entered an order in his docket, attempting to commit petitioner for the last-mentioned assault, but omitted, in his description thereof, the words "with malice aforethought," which are indispensably essential to the description or charging of that offense. The district attorney, in the information based upon that order of commitment, charged the petitioner with the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. The superior court, upon motion, set aside the information because it appeared that the petitioner had not been legally committed for the offense charged in said information, and ordered the clerk of said court to "return all the papers to the committing magistrate for recommitment." The course pursued by the court thus far was regular, if the order of commitment involved only an irregularity. The information, based upon a commitment which held petitioner for an offense different from that charged in such information, had no proper basis on which to rest, and the district attorney was not authorized to file it. People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 601, 24 Pac. 384; sections 872, 997, 998, Pen. Code.

But it is contended that a new information should have been based upon the original order and in conformity thereto; that the court, having once made the order committing the petitioner for assault with a deadly weapon, which said order was entered in his docket, lost all further jurisdiction of the case, and could do nothing further with reference thereto than to correct some irregularity, if any existed, in such order of commitment; that the proceeding had by him with regard to the "papers returned for recommitment" involved not simply the correction of an irregularity or defect in the order of commitment, but constituted the making of an entirely new order, committing petitioner for an entirely different and distinct offense from that for which he was originally held. We are of opinion that this point presents a question which cannot be reviewed in this proceeding. Ex parte Nicholas (on habeas corpus) 91 Cal. 641, 28 Pac. 47. The so-called new information charged the petitioner with an offense of which the superior court has jurisdiction, and it gave the court jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner, and the court therefore had jurisdiction, upon the motion to set aside the information, to hear and determine "whatever questions of law or fact were involved in the motion, and its decision, although it may be erroneous, is not void. On the contrary, it is valid and binding until reversed on appeal." Ex parte Nicholas, supra; Ex parte Walpole, 85 Cal. 362, 24 Pac. 657. If there was any irregularity in the order of commitment by the magistrate affecting the substantial rights of petitioner, it was subject to review, first in the superior court, upon motion to set aside the information based upon such order of commitment, and then by this or the Supreme Court upon appeal; but it is not a ground for discharging the prisoner on habeas corpus. Ex parte Walpole, supra. It is elementary that, when a court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation and of the persons of the parties litigant, it has jurisdiction to make errors as well as to not make them. This is, of course, only putting in another form the rule that such errors are not reviewable in an extraordinary proceeding, or in a proceeding the sole purpose of which is to try the question of jurisdiction. In other words, jurisdiction is "the power to hear and determine," and, when a court has once determined a proposition within its jurisdiction, such determination, whether right or wrong, is at an end and is conclusive until challenged, through some motion or in some other proper legal proceeding. It may, however, be suggested (though it need not be here decided) that it at least seems clear that the magistrate attempted to make an order committing the petitioner for the very offense for which he finally ordered him to be committed, and that the attempt was ineffectual only because of the omission in the order of certain technical words necessary to the description of the crime. It would at least appear to harmonize with common sense to hold that where the language of the order is such as to lead to no other rational conclusion than that the magistrate intended to commit the prisoner for a certain offense, but fails to do so merely because he has not described the same in the order of commitment with the technical nicety and precision which is required in stating the offense in an indictment or information, it amounts only to an irregularity which it is within the power and authority of the magistrate to correct upon being directed to do so by the superior court. We find nothing in any language used in Ex parte Branigan, 19 Cal. 133 et seq., in conflict with this suggestion. Of course, we are not to be understood as suggesting that a magistrate, after once committing an accused for a certain offense, may thereafter change his order and commit him for another and distinct offense. Nor is there anything involved in our suggestions upon this point to be construed as a disapproval of the opinion in the case of People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 597, 76 Pac. 490. On the contrary, we think that that case with great clearness straightened out certain propositions which had theretofore been misconceived and misunderstood, and expounded them in accordance with the real intention of the lawmakers. The opinion in that case is not, however, in point here, if the suggestion we have made that the omission in the order of commitment was but a mere irregularity be sound. If the suggestion is erroneous, then the Nogiri Case would no doubt be an authority upon appeal, if the case ever reaches that point.

The second point urged is, we think, without substantial merit. The proposition involved in this point is whether or not there was failure on the part of the district attorney, in the matter of the filing of the information, to comply with the mandate of section 809 of the Penal Code. That section requires that an information shall be filed within 30 days after the examination and the order committing a defendant for trial in the superior court. It has been held that this provision is mandatory, and that default by the district attorney in filing an information within the time limit prescribed therein, unless good cause therefor be shown, forfeits his right as such officer to do so at all upon the commitment returned by the magistrate, and that the superior court cannot, under an information filed after such time, acquire jurisdiction to try the prisoner for the offense therein charged. In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 Pac. 828, 56 L. R. A. 513, 85 Am. St. Rep. 178. At least, the court held in that case that subdivision 2 of section 1382 of the Penal Code, which provides that the prosecution against a defendant must be dismissed, the trial not having been postponed upon the application of defendant, unless good cause be shown therefor, if the defendant is not brought to trial within 60 days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information, is imperative and mandatory. We can see no reason why the same may not be said of subdivision 1 of that section, prescribing the time limit of 30 days within which the information must be filed. The only question here, then, is: Was the filing of the new or second information by the district attorney more than 30 days after the date of the making of the original order, or, perhaps more correctly speaking, the attempted order committing the petitioner for the crime of assault to commit murder, an idle and nugatory and void act and the information thus filed insufficient to confer upon the superior court jurisdiction to try said petitioner thereunder? The power of the court, upon setting aside an information for the reason that it does not charge the offense for which the prisoner has been committed, or because of any irregularity in the order of commitment, to order a new information to be filed, or directing any irregularity in the order of commitment to be rectified by the magistrate, and a new information based thereon filed, is unquestioned and conceded. Sections 997 and 998 of the Penal Code; People v. Thompson, supra; Ex parte Walpole, supra; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 515, 36 Pac. 16. If section 809 of the Penal Code could be held to be applicable to a case where an information has been dismissed or set aside and a new one directed by the court to be filed in its place, and such new information is filed more than 30 days after the time at which the order of commitment was made, we are of the opinion that the conditions which gave rise to the necessity for the filing of the new information after the 30 days after the original order of commitment has been made constitute the "good cause" contemplated by section 1382, supra, as an excuse for a failure to file the information within the time prescribed by said section 809, supra. But it seems to us that the Supreme Court has settled this question in a number of cases. In the case of People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 221, 76 Pac. 1029, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice McFarland, says: "There is nothing in the point that the second information was not filed within 30 days after appellant was held to answer. The provision of section 809 of the Penal Code has no reference to the new information which may be directed by the court after a demurrer sustained to the information." There can be no distinction upon principle between the case of a demurrer sustained to an information and where the information has, upon motion, been set aside. In the Case of Begerow, supra, the court, among other things, said: "* * * And, indeed, a mistrial is not a trial, within the meaning of the Constitution or statutory provision. The fact that there has been an attempted trial may constitute the good cause which the prosecution is required to show to excuse delay. * * *" (Italics ours.) So, as we have suggested, the fact that the district attorney has attempted to file an information within the 30 days, and has failed, should be, we think, sufficient cause to excuse the delay which, but for the order of the superior court setting aside the information—an order which the law commanded should be made—would not have occurred. In the cases of People v. Thompson, supra, and People v. Lane, supra, and, in short, in every case where the point has been presented to and noticed by the court, it is declared that there is no necessity, after an order setting aside an information, upon the ground of irregularity in the order of commitment, to go into another examination of the charge in order to justify the filing of a new information. It would certainly entail upon both the people and the defendant great inconvenience and expense if a re-examination of the charge were necessary where an information had been set aside or dismissed because of some irregularity in the order of commitment or by reason of a failure of the district attorney to keep within the terms of the order of commitment in drafting and filing the information. The Legislature could have had no such intention, and surely there can be found no reason for justifying the courts in giving the law a construction which would produce a result so unnecessary. But such a construction would inevitably be required if the true rule is, as contended by petitioner, that a second information, directed to be filed in the place of one filed within the time, but set aside, must be filed within 30 days after the order of commitment is made.

For the foregoing reasons, the writ will be discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Ex parte WOOD. (Cr. 57.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 30, 1907.)

1. INFANTS — JUVENILE DELINQUENTS — INCARCERATION—JURISDICTION—STATUTES.

St. 1889, p. 116, c. 108, § 20, subd. 1, provides that it shall be lawful for the board of trustees of the state reform school for juvenile offenders to receive minors between the ages of 8 and 18 years committed to custody by any judge of a superior court on the written complaint of the minor's parent or guardian, alleging incorrigibility, etc. Held, that a superior court had no jurisdiction to commit to a reform school, under such section, a female over 18 years of age at the time of commitment; nor had the board of trustees of such institution any power to receive and retain her in custody.

2. SAME—AGE—MAJORITY.

Civ. Code, § 25, defines minors to include males under 21 years of age and females under 18 years of age; and section 26 provides that the age of a minor must be calculated from the first minute of the day on which he or she was born to the same minute of the corresponding day completing the period of minority. Held, that where petitioner's daughter was born on March 17, 1889, she completed her minority and became an adult at the commencement of the day on March 16, 1907, prior to her commitment on that day to a reform school as a minor delinquent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Infants, § 1.]

Application by Lawrence D. Wood, on behalf of his daughter, Julia A. Wood, for writ of habeas corpus. Writ granted, and petitioner's daughter discharged.

Hugh J. Crawford, for petitioner. J. G. North, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Application made by Lawrence D. Wood, on behalf of his daughter, Julia A. Wood, for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the superintendent of the Whittier state school.

On March 16, 1907, a complaint was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county by one A. C. Dodd, wherein it was alleged that Julia A. Wood, a female, was a minor under the age of 18 years; that she was guilty of incorrigible conduct; and praying that she be committed to the Whittier state school. At the hearing, had on the day of filing the complaint, it was by the court adjudged that said Julia A. Wood was an incorrigible under subdivision 1 of section 20 of an act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An act to establish a state reform school for juvenile offenders, and to make an appropriation therefor," approved March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 116, c. 108), and the acts amendatory thereof, and that she was a fit subject for commitment to said school; and thereupon the court, on said 16th day of March, 1907, made an order committing her to said Whittier state school until she arrived at the age of 21 years.

Among other grounds urged in support of the issuance of the writ, it is contended that said Julia A. Wood was not a minor at the date of said adjudication and commitment, and hence the court had no jurisdiction to order her committed to said institution as an incorrigible under subdivision 1 of section 20 of said act, which is as follows: "It shall also be lawful for the said board of trustees, under such rules as they may prescribe to receive into the care and guardianship of said institution, whenever it may be convenient so to do, minors between the ages of eight and eighteen years, committed to custody in any of the following modes: (1) Minors committed by any judge of a superior court of this state on the complaint, in writing, filed and due proof thereof made by the parent or guardian of such minor, showing that by reason of the incorrigible and vicious conduct or nature of such minor, he is beyond the control and power of such parent or guardian, and that from a regard for the future welfare of such minor and the protection of society, it appears that such minor should be placed in the care of such institution." It will thus be seen that it is only minors between the ages of 8 and 18 years who may be lawfully received under the protecting care of said institution by said board of trustees, with the further provision contained in subdivision 1, which makes it applicable to minors committed as therein provided. Clearly, the court had no right under this provision to adjudge said Julia A. Wood guilty of incorrigible conduct and commit her to said institution, unless she was a minor. Nor did the board of trustees of said institution have any power to receive and retain her in custody, unless she was at the time of such commitment "between the ages of eight and eighteen years." It appears that she is a female, and was born on March 17, 1889. By section 25 of the Civil Code minors are defined as: "(1) Males under twenty-one years of age; (2) females under eighteen years of age." And section 26 of the Civil Code provides that "the periods specified in the preceding section (i. e., section 25) must be calculated from the first minute of the day on which persons are born to the same minute of the corresponding day completing the period of minority." It thus conclusively appears that the said Julia A. Wood completed the period of her minority at the commencement of the 16th day of March, 1907, and that at the time of said adjudication and commitment she was of full adult age. Ganahl v. Soher, 5 Pac. 80. The respondent has presented no argument nor authority in justification of the action of the court, and we find no warrant in subdivision 1 of section 20, under which the proceedings were had, authorizing the commitment of adults to any such institution upon the charge that they are guilty of incorrigible conduct. The benefits of the Whittier state school, according to the title of the act as amended in 1893, were intended for juvenile delinquents only.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to pass upon the question as to the power of the court to commit her for a period extending three years beyond the time when she arrived at adult age, as well as other questions presented by the petition.

It is therefore ordered that the said Julia A. Wood, on behalf of whom said application is made, be discharged.

TEICH v. ARMS. (Civ. 305.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 30, 1907.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LANDLORD'S TITLE—DENIAL—ESTOPPEL OF TENANT.

While a tenant is estopped to deny the title of his landlord so long as it remains as it was at the time the tenancy commenced, the tenant is not estopped to plead that the title under which he entered has expired or been extinguished during the tenancy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Landlord and Tenant, § 176.]

2. TAXATION—SALES FOR TAXES—RIGHTS OF OWNER—POSSESSION.

Pol. Code, § 3817, provides that in all cases where real estate has been sold or may be sold for taxes to the state, and the state has not disposed thereof, the person whose estate is sold or his successors in interest shall be entitled to redeem at any time before the state shall have disposed of it. Held, that the owner of land sold to the state for taxes prior to a sale by the state is entitled to possession, with the right to redeem.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LANDLORD'S TITLE—TERMINATION—EFFECT—PAYMENT OF RENT.

Civ. Code, § 1463, provides that a covenant to pay rent runs with the land. Section 821 declares that a person to whom any real property is transferred or devised, on which rent has been reserved, or to whom any such rent has been transferred, is entitled to the same remedies to recover rent as his grantor or devisor had; and section 1111 provides that grants of rents or reversions or of remainders are good and effectual without attornments of the tenants. Held, that where property leased to defendant was sold to the state for taxes prior to the execution of the lease, and during the term was sold by the state to a bank, the landlord's title and right to possession were terminated by the deed to the bank, which was a complete defense to the landlord's suit against the tenant for unlawful detainer for nonpayment of subsequent rent, notwithstanding section 1948, providing that the attornment of a tenant to a stranger is void unless made with the consent of the landlord or in consequence of a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Landlord and Tenant, § 1211.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Unlawful detainer by Annie E. Teich against S. Arms. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

S. L. Strother and M. K. Harris, for appellant. Frank H. Short and F. A. Fee, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an ordinary action for unlawful detainer. The complaint alleges the execution of a written lease for one year from August 1, 1904, for the monthly rental of $35, payable on the first of each month; that defendant entered into the occupation and possession of the premises; that on January 16, 1905, a demand in writing was made upon defendant to pay $175, the amount of rent unpaid, or surrender possession within three days; that defendant refused to do either, and the prayer is for the rent due and for damages. The answer sets up as a defense that on June 26, 1897, the property was sold to the state for delinquent taxes, and June 24, 1903, the deed was regularly made to the state; that thereafter on August 6, 1904, the property was sold and conveyed to the San José Safe Deposit Bank of Savings; and that thereupon said bank entered into possession and leased and hired the premises to defendant, and on or about the 15th day of August, defendant entered into possession as the tenant and lessee of said bank and has continued as such and has paid to the bank all the rent due. The judgment was for defendant. The plaintiff brings the appeal from the judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial.

Appellant admits the regularity and validity of the tax proceedings, and does not question the sufficiency of the conveyance to the state and to the bank. The only controversy, she says, is as to the effect of the deeds upon the relation to each other of plaintiff and defendant. The vital question is: Was the transaction set up in the answer sufficient in law to destroy the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to this action and absolve defendant from any liability to pay rent to plaintiff? The question was presented to the trial court when defendant offered in evidence the deed from the state to the bank. The objection was made that "said deed is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial in this case on the ground that a tenant in possession could not dispute his landlord's title or attorn to a stranger; that the said deed constituted no defense to this action."

At the outset it is contended by appellant that the question of title is foreign to the issue in unlawful detainer. As a general proposition, this is undoubtedly true. It is always true when we limit it to the title of the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the lease. This follows from the nature of the action. The question at issue is not title, but the right to the possession. Hence evidence of title could only be received as showing the right to the possession of the property, and this evidence could not be directed to the time of the execution of the lease, for the simple reason that on well-known principles of equity the defendant, having entered into the possession of the property by virtue of his recognition of plaintiff's title, is estopped from thereafter denying it. In Mason v. Wolff, 40 Cal. 250, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Temple, said: "Here the question of title is not involved and cannot be raised. In a certain sense the suit is brought upon the lease, and the consequence of entering into that contract can only be avoided by showing some fraud or mistake which would have been sufficient to set aside the lease itself." In that case, it will be observed, the errors reviewed consisted in the improper admission of evidence which did not question the validity of plaintiff's title, but it is obvious the rule stated by the court, in its general application, is correct. To the same effect are Bostwick v. Mahoney, 73 Cal. 239, 14 Pac. 832, Felton v. Millard, 81 Cal. 541, 21 Pac. 534, 22 Pac. 750, and Knowles v. Murphy, 107 Cal. 113, 40 Pac. 113, where, through Mr. Justice Harrison, it is declared as follows: "It was immaterial, for the purposes of this action, whether the deed from the defendants to Salor was absolute or by way of mortgage. The question of title was not involved, and the defendants could not avoid the obligations assumed by them by reason of the lease by showing that Salor did not have the title of the premises which he demised to them." In all the foregoing cases, the title considered was the title at the time of the execution of the lease, and the doctrine announced is not only correct on principle, but it accords with all the authorities. But defendant is not estopped from contending that since the execution of the lease the title of plaintiff has been extinguished; and such evidence may be material as tending to show that plaintiff since the transaction with defendant has lost the right to the possession of the premises, and that the relation of landlord and tenant no longer exists between the parties. The authorities so hold. In Jackson v. Rowland, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 670, 22 Am. Dec. 557, the Supreme Court of New York said: "A tenant cannot dispute the title of the landlord so long as it remains as it was at the time the tenancy commenced, but he may show that the title under which he entered has expired or has been extinguished." Greenleaf declares the same rule: "The tenant may always show that his landlord's title has expired, or that he has sold his interest in the premises, or that it is alienated from him by judgment and operation of law." 2 Greenleaf, 253. Our own courts have so decided. In McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 596, it is said: "Although as a general rule a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title, he may show that it has terminated"—citing Chitty on Contracts, p. 296. In Wheelock v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 317, again it is declared: "The right to maintain the action depends upon the existence of a tenancy, and a tenancy once created is presumed to continue so long as the tenant remains in possession. This presumption may be rebutted, however, for the rule which estops a tenant from disputing the title of his landlord does not preclude him from showing that the tenancy has been determined." And in Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 244, Mr. Justice Sanderson, speaking for the court, reaches the same conclusion: "Whether a tenant can dispute his landlord's title depends upon a variety of circumstances. * * * One exception to the general rule is where the tenant has been ousted by title paramount he may plead it; also, that the landlord's title has ceased or become extinguished."

In the case at bar the defendant did not question the title under which he entered. He did not dispute plaintiff's possession or right to the possession at the time of the execution of the lease. The effect of the deed to the bank was to extinguish plaintiff's title and right of possession, and since it did not become operative until after the creation of the defendant's tenancy, it was admissible under the authorities cited. By the recitals of the deed it appears that before the execution of the lease the property had been sold to the state, but the evidence was not offered nor received for the purpose of attacking plaintiff's title at the time she leased to defendant. On the contrary, this deed shows that the state simply held the property for security with the right of possession and redemption in plaintiff until the deed was executed to the bank some days after defendant went into possession. Section 3817, Pol. Code, as it now stands, provides that: "In all cases where real estate has been sold or may hereafter be sold for delinquent taxes to the state, and the state has not disposed of the same, the person whose estate has been or may hereafter be sold, his heirs, executors, administrators, or other successors in interest shall at any time after the same has been sold to the state and before the state shall have disposed of the same have the right to redeem such real estate," etc. At the time of the lease, therefore, the plaintiff was in possession of the land; she had a right to the possession and the right to redeem. That included the title as far as involved in the transaction between plaintiff and defendant. When, however, the state "disposed of the same" on August 6th, the right to redeem was foreclosed, the right of plaintiff to remain in possession no longer existed, plaintiff's title was completely extinguished, and the whole interest was conveyed to the bank. In the American and English Encyclopedia of Law (volume 27, p. 982), we find the general doctrine announced as follows: "The general rule is that until the expiration of the time for redemption and the execution and delivery of a deed the title to the land sold for the taxes remains with the original owner, and the purchaser acquires only a lien for the amount of his bid with interest, etc. The purchaser is not entitled to possession or to rents and profits; but after the execution of the deed the grantee is vested under the statutes in most jurisdictions with an interest in fee to the exclusion of all prior interests and incumbrances." The deed to the bank undoubtedly vested in it the entire estate in and to the property. The covenant to pay rent runs with the land. Section 1463, Civ. Code. By virtue of the conveyance from the state, the bank became entitled to the rent accruing after said conveyance and could have maintained an action therefor. The rule was different at common law. In Taylor's Landlord and Tenant it is stated as follows: "No person can take advantage of a covenant or condition except he be a party or privy thereto; consequently the assignee of the reversion could at common law neither sue nor be sued upon covenants contained in a demise, whether such demise were for life or for years. * * * The principle seems to have followed from that provision of the feudal law which prevented a lord from transferring his seigniory without the consent of his vassel. * * * But as experience showed that property best answers the purpose of civil life when the transfer and circulation are free, this restraint upon alienation was gradually removed by the English statutes, particularly by 32 Henry VIII, c. 34. * * * By it the privity of contract, together with the privity of estate, was transferred to the assignee of the reversion, who then stood, with regard to a tenant, in the same position as the lessor did before he parted with the reversion."

We now come to the consideration of the cognate proposition stated by appellant that the bank is a "stranger," and therefore the attempted attornment to it by defendant was void. Section 1948 of the Civil Code is cited, which provides that: "The attornment of a tenant to a stranger is void, unless it is made with the consent of the landlord, or in consequence of a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction." Whatever the scope of the section, we think it does not apply to the facts of this case. The bank is in sufficient privity with plaintiff in regard to the title as not to be a "stranger," within the contemplation of the statute. We can see in principle no difference between the facts here and where the landlord has himself conveyed all of his interest to a third party. In such a contingency no question could be raised as to the right of attornment to the grantee. Section 821 of the Civil Code is applicable here as it would be in case the plaintiff had directly conveyed the land to the bank, and it provides that: "A person to whom any real property is transferred or devised, upon which rent has been reserved or to whom any such rent has been transferred is entitled to the same remedies for recovery of rent * * * as his grantor or devisor might have had." And for the protection of the tenant it is provided in section 1111, Civ. Code, that: "Grants of rents or reversions or of remainders are good and effectual without attornments of the tenants; but no tenant who before notice of the grant shall have paid rent to the grantor must suffer any damage thereby." In McDonald v. Hanlon, 79 Cal. 442, 21 Pac. 861, it is held that: "While real property is occupied by a tenant from month to month, where the owner makes a lease in presenti to a third person for five years, such other person may without entering into possession, and without attornment to him, change the terms of the tenancy, and upon nonpayment of the increased rent may maintain an action of unlawful detainer." See, also, Dreyfus v. Hirt, 82 Cal. 621, 23 Pac. 193; McDonough v. Starbird, 105 Cal. 19, 38 Pac. 510; Franklin v. Palmer et al., 50 Ill. 200. We have examined all the cases in other jurisdictions cited by appellant. Some support her contention, while others are opposed to it. We think the law in this state was properly determined by the court below.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

5 Cal. App. 485

PRESTON v. HIRSCH. (Civ. 304.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 1, 1907.)

1. Trial—Reception of Evidence—Rulings—Reservation.

Where, in a suit to quiet title, rulings on evidence were reserved by consent of both parties, it was not error for the court, in its final disposition of the case, to sustain the objections to the evidence which were specific, without stating reasons for the rulings; the matter being such that the objections could not have been obviated by other evidence supplied through unobjectionable means.

2. Evidence—Records—Certified Copies.

Civ. Code, § 1160, provides that a recorded copy of a patent shall have prima facie the same force and effect as the original, for title or for evidence, until the original letters patent are recorded; and Code Civ. Proc. § 1833, declares that a copy of such record certified by the recording officer is prima facie evidence. Held that, where a copy of a patent to land certified by the Commissioner of the General Land Office was recorded in the county where the land was located, a certified copy of such record was admissible without a showing that the original patent could not be produced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 570-579, 1302-1314.]

3. Taxation—Tax Sales—Proceedings.

The power to sell land for unpaid taxes being purely statutory, the proceedings to effect such a sale must strictly comply with the statutory requirements.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1263.]

4. Same—Tax Deed—Recitals—Year of Assessment.

Under Pol. Code, § 3786, requiring a tax deed to recite the matters recited in the certificate of sale, and section 3776, requiring the certificates to state the name of the person assessed, the description of the land sold, the amount paid therefor, and that it was sold for taxes, giving the amount, year of assessment, and the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed, a tax deed failing to state the amount of the taxes and subsequent charges for which the land was sold, and reciting that the property was assessed in the year "188– for the years 1888, and 1889," was void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, §§ 1507-1515.]

5. Same—Aider by Certificate.

A defective tax deed cannot be aided by reference to the certificate of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1543.]

6. Same—Certificate—Caption.

The caption of a certificate for the sale of land for taxes, being no part of the certificate, is ineffective to aid the certificate so as to supply an omission of the year for which the property was assessed.

7. Same—Clerical Misprision.

An omission to recite the year for which land in controversy was assessed in the certificate of the sale of the land for taxes was not a mere clerical misprision, which could be avoided under Pol. Code, § 3885, authorizing disregard of irregularities.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1378.]

8. Same—Quieting Title—Payment of Taxes.

Where, in a suit to quiet title against the holder of a tax title in which the rights of the state were not involved, it appeared that the tax sale certificate was fatally defective and conveyed no title, defendant was not entitled to claim that plaintiff could not recover, because no redemption had been made, and because he made no offer to pay the taxes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1586.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. O. White, Judge.

Action by J. W. Preston against Maurice Hirsch. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. McNab, for appellant. J. W. Preston, pro se.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to quiet title. Plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant appeals on bill of exceptions.

Plaintiff deraigns title from the government by patent to his immediate predecessor and a deed from the patentee to him. Appellant relies wholly upon his tax title. The levy was made for the year 1890–91. It was stipulated by counsel for plaintiff that the assessment, for which the attempted sale was made, was regular, and that all proceedings in relation to the delinquent tax list were duly and regularly done and made, and also all proceedings in regard to said levy, assessment, and delinquency were regular up to the time of the issuance of the tax collector's certificate of sale of the same. Defendant thereupon offered in evidence the following records in the order named: (1) The tax collector's certificate of sale to the state; (2) his deed to the state; (3) the controller's notice to the tax collector directing the sale of the property at auction; (4) affidavit of publication of controller's notice; (5) the deed by the tax collector to defendant. Plaintiff objected to the certificate of sale as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial because not a certificate under the law. Particularly it was objected that no money was paid by any one at the sale, or at the date of the sale, as required by section 3776 of the Political Code as it read in 1890 and 1891; also, that the certificate does not state the year of the assessment, but leaves the date blank, as it reads: "Said property was assessed in the year 18—, * * * to T. Barnhart," etc.; also, that the law then in force did not provide for the payment of any money, and no money was paid, and hence no valid certificate could be made because the prerequisite facts as contained in the statute were not and could not be complied with. It was agreed "between the court and counsel that the final admissibility of said certificate should be argued in briefs to be submitted in court," and the evidence went in subject to the future ruling of the court. Defendant next offered in evidence the tax collector's deed. Plaintiff objected to its introduction on the grounds: (1) That it had not been shown either by the deed or other evidence that the 30 days' notice required to be given by the purchaser to the party on whose land the taxes have been assessed, as required by section 3785 of the Political Code, as amended in 1891 (St. 1891, p. 134, c. 121), has been given; (2) that no proof has been made that any notice of any kind has been served as required by said section 3785; (3) that the deed does not recite what the certificate of sale recites as to the time when the state would be entitled to a deed, i. e., "the date when the state would be entitled to a deed and the date of the certificate of sale are not one and the same as stated in the deed"; (4) the language of the certificate and in the deed is not the same and does not mean the same, in short, "the language of the deed is that the state would be entitled to a deed the very day the certificate is dated"; (5) "the deed does not recite the facts contained in the certificate which the Political Code (section 3786) required." The court reserved its ruling as before. The authorization for the sale issued by the controller was admitted to have been filed January 2, 1903, and in due form. The affidavit of publication of notice of sale was objected to on the ground that it does not contain a correct estimate of the minimum price at which the land must be sold, as required by section 3897 of the Political Code; that the auditor neglected to include in his estimate what are called penalties, and hence the amount at which the land was advertised to be sold was too small to comply with the provisions of said section. The ruling of the court was reserved as in the preceding offers. No point was made that the authorization of the controller, after being received, was not published. The deed of the tax collector to defendant was then offered in evidence, to which plaintiff objected on the grounds: (1) That there is no certificate of sale to support the deed to the state; that there was no notice given as required by section 3785; that the deed could not recite the facts as contained in the certificate, "because no such deed or certificate was validly in existence." (2) That the deed purported to recite that the certificate of sale stated the land to have been assessed in the year 1890; whereas, the certificate does not recite that fact. (3) That the deed states the purchase price less than the amount of the delinquent taxes, costs, penalties, and accrued expenses, as required by section 3897.

1. At the close of the evidence, the cause was submitted, and thereafter the court, in making its decision, sustained the reserved objections without giving any reason in support of its ruling. Defendant claims that this was prejudicial error, citing Mayo v. Marzeaux, 38 Cal. 445, and Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 204, 29 Pac. 491. In these cases the Supreme Court strongly condemns the practice of suspending the rulings upon evidence, and especially advises that where the evidence is rejected at some subsequent period in the trial it is the duty of the court to give its reasons for the ruling. Raymond v. Glover, 122 Cal. 471, 55 Pac. 398. A case might be presented where the postponement of the decision would deprive the losing party of the opportunity to supply the evidence through unobjectionable means, and if this should clearly appear the ruling might be prejudicial error, if an early and timely ruling had been requested and denied. In the present instance, however, the objections were specific, and defendant was fully apprised of the grounds, and presumably counsel had the opportunity to place their views touching the objection before the court. Furthermore, the evidence was matter of official record and could be supplied in no other way than that resorted to. Defendant could not, therefore, have been injured by the delay in ruling upon the evidence. It may be added that reserved rulings are generally with the consent of both parties, which was the case here, and no court would decline to make rulings whenever it was shown to it that further delay might prejudice the rights of one or both of the parties. It is quite unusual for trial courts to state their reasons for rulings in admitting or refusing evidence; and the instance would have to be peculiarly exceptional where, of the omission to give a reason for a ruling, prejudicial error could be predicated.

2. Plaintiff offered in evidence a certified copy of a copy of a United States patent to George Lynch, plaintiff's grantor. Defendant objected to its introduction upon various grounds, among them that there was no showing that the original could not be produced. It appears that a copy of the patent duly certified to be such copy by the Commissioner of the General Land Office was recorded in the county of Mendocino on September 24, 1903. The document offered in evidence was a copy of this record duly certified by the county recorder. The copy of the patent thus recorded "shall have prima facie the same force and effect as the original, for title or for evidence, until said original letters patent be recorded." Civ. Code, § 1160. The copy of this record certified by the recording officer is prima facie evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1833. The document was properly admitted in evidence.

3. The objections made to the certificate of sale have already been stated. It is well settled that proceedings on tax sale are in invitum, and to be valid must be stricti juris. The power exercised is purely statutory, and the steps directed by the statute must be strictly pursued. People v. C. P. R. R. Co., 83 Cal. 393, 398, 26 Pac. 303. It was held in Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 Pac. 761, that under section 3786 of the Political Code, requiring a tax deed to recite the matters recited in the certificate of sale, and section 3776, requiring the certificate of sale to state "the name of the person assessed, the description of the land sold, the amount paid therefor, and that it was sold for taxes, giving the amount and the year of the assessment, and specifying the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed," a tax deed, reciting that the property was assessed "in the year 188–, for the year 1888 and 1889," is void for failure to state the year of the assessment. It was also held that such a deed cannot be aided by reference to the certificate of sale; also, that the amount of the taxes and subsequent charges must be correctly stated. The same would be true of the certificate of sale in so far as the statute prescribed what must appear therein. The body of the certificate failed to state the year for which the property was assessed. Appellant claims that this omission is supplied by the caption of the certificate. It reads: "18— No. 203. No. ———, Book ———, Page ———, Sub. ———. Certificate of Sale of Real Estate. Sold for the Non-Payment of State and County Taxes for the year 1890." Then follows the formal certificate, reading: "State of California, County of Mendocino—ss.: I, J. M. Standley, Tax Collector," etc. The caption is no part of the certificate to which the tax collector certified, and cannot be referred to in aid of the certificate in a matter required by statute to appear therein. Nor was the omission of the year a mere clerical misprision to be avoided as an irregularity by section 3885 of the Political Code, as claimed by appellant. It is also contended that the certificate transferred the title subject only to defeasance by redemption (Teralta L. Co. v. Shaffer, 116 Cal. 518, 48 Pac. 613, 58 Am. St. Rep. 194), and redemption was never made; and that plaintiff cannot have his title made clear when the evidence shows that he has been divested of title, citing Peterson v. Gibbs (Cal. Sup.) 81 Pac. 121. Finally, that plaintiff cannot have his title quieted while in default in the payment of his taxes; that he must come into court with clean hands, or go out empty-handed. The answer to these various contentions is: First, that the certificate, being fatally defective, conveyed no title; and, secondly, the action is not against the state, nor does it in any wise affect the rights of the state. The maxim of equity invoked by appellant is not open to him in this case.

4. Appellant has, with commendable consideration, called our attention to the case of Johnson, Administrator, v. Taylor et al. (not yet officially reported or published in California Decisions) 88 Pac. 903, holding adversely to appellant's contention as to the validity of the tax deed. This concession renders further examination of the case unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

YICK WO v. UNDERHILL. (Civ. 311.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 13, 1907.)

1. EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF PRELIMINARY EVIDENCE.

There is sufficient preliminary proof for introduction, in an action by a restaurant keeper for the price of meal tickets, of his book of account, kept in the Chinese, he testifying to his business; that he kept the book in connection with such business; that it contained the original entries made at the time of the transactions; that he kept no other book; that, when he delivered a meal ticket, he immediately put it down in the book; and that the entries were all made by himself, and other witnesses testifying that the entries as to the price of meal tickets corresponded with the fixed charge therefor, and that plaintiff wrote part of the entries at the time of the transaction in their presence.

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Overruling an objection to a question is harmless; the answer not being responsive, and establishing nothing.

3. TRIAL—EMPLOYMENT OF INTERPRETER.

4. INNKEEPERS—MEAL TICKETS—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

Testimony of a witness, in an action by a restaurant keeper for meal tickets sold to defendant's intestate, that he worked for deceased, and was paid by him a fixed sum and his board, and that this board was furnished by plaintiff, is competent, and tends to support plaintiff's claim.

5. EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

An entry in the book of account of a restaurant keeper of a loan made by him to another, a transaction not connected with the business, is not proof of the loan.

An entry in the book of account of a business man of a transaction not connected with his business does not render the book incompetent as to transactions connected with the business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Yick Wo against M. E. Underwood, administratrix of J. H. Underhill, deceased. From an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. P. Laird and E. B. Coil, for appellant. W. W. Kaye and Thomas Scott, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from an order denying a new trial. Plaintiff was the keeper of an eating house at Mojave, and Underhill, deceased, was a saloon keeper and ice deale in the same town. Plaintiff issued meal tickets representing 21 meals for a consideration of $5. Some of Underhill's employés took their meals at plaintiff's place of business. For these, meal tickets were issued to Underhill and he delivered the same to his employés, and when he settled with them he took from their wages the price of the meals so furnished by plaintiff. The court finds that the price and value of such meals so furnished Underhill's employés was $80; and, in addition, that during Underhill's life plaintiff loaned him $500 in money. Appellant was duly appointed administratrix of Underhill's estate, and plaintiff duly presented his claim against the estate for the price and value of such meals so furnished and the amount of such loan; and, the same being rejected, he brings this action. The court gave judgment for plaintiff. No appeal from the judgment was perfected within time, and the only appeal is from the order denying a new trial.

It is urged that the court erred in permitting plaintiff's book of accounts to be read in evidence, because no preliminary proof was first made entitling it to be received. The book was kept in Chinese characters, and plaintiff was properly permitted to testify as to his business; that he kept the book offered in evidence in connection with his business; that this book contained the original entries made at the time of the transactions; that he kept no other books; that, when he delivered a meal ticket, he immediately put it down in the book; that the entries were all made by himself. We think this sufficient preliminary proof, coupled with the evidence of other witnesses that the entries as to the price of meal tickets corresponded with the fixed charge therefor, and that plaintiff wrote part of the entries at the time of the transaction in the presence of such witnesses and in the book offered in evidence, all of which tended to show that the book was fairly and honestly kept. What credit should be given such entries in such book was for the trial court to determine. Were it even conceded that plaintiff was not competent to testify as to its correctness and fairness, an attempt to prove such fact by plaintiff himself was abortive. A question was asked him in relation thereto and objected to, but the answer was not responsive and established nothing, and no prejudicial error is apparent in the ruling of the court. There is some evidence in the record outside of this book which tended to sustain the finding of the court that meals to the value of $80 were furnished on and before the 12th day of June, 1904, and the price thereof unpaid. There was no error in permitting a witness to translate to the court this book so kept in Chinese characters.

There was no error in permitting the witness Taylor to testify that he was paid a fixed sum and his board by Underhill and that this board was furnished by plaintiff. It was competent evidence and tended to support plaintiff's contention.

The entry of cash loaned which appears in the book of accounts received in evidence would not of itself justify a finding in that regard. The book was competent as to the transactions connected with the plaintiff's business, and an entry therein disconnected from such business would not affect its admissibility as to those matters properly entered, but such entry was not proof of the loan. There is ample proof outside of the book to warrant the finding that plaintiff made the loan and that it was unpaid. While much of the evidence in the case was conflicting, it was for the trial court to determine the facts from such evidence, and such findings will not be disturbed.

The further point is made that plaintiff declares upon an indebtedness existing June 12, 1904, while the findings are that the indebtedness on account of the meals furnished was contracted between February 12 and June 21, 1904, the latter date being that of the decease of Underhill. The record shows that $80 of this indebtedness was contracted on and before the date alleged in the complaint, and that so much thereof as was contracted after June 12th, to wit, $20 thereof, was not considered and did not enter into the judgment. The court only rendered judgment for that portion of the account which was contracted within the time alleged in the complaint.

We find no error in the record prejudicial to appellant, and the order is affirmed.

(Court of Appeals, Second District, California. May 13, 1907.)

1. SALES—RESCISSION BY PURCHASER—FAILURE TO PERFORM—COMPLAINT.

A complaint demanding judgment for $1,000, alleging merely that plaintiff paid defendant $1,000, in consideration of which defendant agreed to cause to be issued to plaintiff shares of a corporation then in process of organization, that 20 days later defendant refused to perform the contract, or to return the $1,000, and that thereupon plaintiff demanded return of said sum, and defendant refused and refuses to return the same, fails to state a cause of action for the rescission of the contract of purchase, because not showing a reasonable time for performance had elapsed.

2. ATTACHMENT — DISSOLUTION — INSUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

A complaint failing to state a cause of action, and not being amended on motion to dissolve an attachment because of such failure, the motion should be granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by S. M. Pinkiert against D. S. Kornblum. From an order, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Goldberg & Meily, for appellant. W. Joseph Ford and James L. Irwin, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from an order denying motion to dissolve an attachment.

The verified complaint alleges that on the 9th day of May, 1906, plaintiff paid to defendant the sum of $1,000, in consideration of which defendant agreed, in writing, to issue, or cause to be issued, to plaintiff 5,000 shares of the capital stock of a corporation then in process of organization, each share of the par value of $1; that on the 29th day of May, 1906, defendant refused to perform said contract, or to return the said $1,000; that plaintiff thereupon demanded the return of said sum, and defendant refused and refuses, etc., to pay the same to plaintiff. The demand is for judgment against defendant for $1,000 and costs of suit. The affidavit avers an indebtedness of $1,000 "upon an express contract for the direct payment of money, to wit, for money obtained by said defendant at his special instance and request from said plaintiff," etc. The motion to dissolve the attachment was based upon two grounds, to wit, that the amount of plaintiff's claim as stated in the affidavit does not conform to plaintiff's complaint, and that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. There appears to be a variance between the complaint and affidavit, but it is not the one specified in the motion. If the complaint stated sufficient facts to entitle plaintiff to recover at all, it would not state a cause of action on an express contract, but we do not regard this as material here.

Plaintiff fully paid for personal property which was never delivered to him. He was entitled therefore to rescind the contract for failure of consideration (Civ. Code, § 1689), or to affirm the contract and bring an action for its breach (Civ. Code, § 3309). In the former case he would be entitled to a judgment for the return of the money paid, in the latter, to a judgment for damages measured by section 3336 of the Civil Code. The complaint is entirely lacking in the allegations necessary to the last-mentioned cause of action, and, if sufficient to state such a cause of action, it would not support an attachment. Considered as a complaint to rescind, it appears also lacking in allegations necessary to show that the time for performance on the defendant's part had elapsed. His refusal to comply with plaintiff's request to perform on May 29, 1906, may have been entirely consistent with good faith and intent upon his part to perform his part of the contract within the time allowed by law. The contract provided no time within which he should cause the stock to be issued and delivery thereof made. The stage of the organization of the corporation then in progress does not appear. There is no allegation as to when or where it was to be organized. The law would allow at least a reasonable time to defendant to act, and, without any information as to the time required to bring about the conditions requisite to the issuance of the stock, it cannot be said that 20 days was such reasonable time. If the corporation was organized at the time of the demand, it should have been alleged. If it was not, and this was because of defendant's act, the facts should have been set forth. While it is true that the motion to dissolve an attachment cannot be made to serve the purposes of a demurrer to the complaint (Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741), and an amended complaint will be held to support an attachment issued on a complaint originally defective which has been cured by an amendment (Hale v. Milliken, 142 Cal. 138, 75 Pac. 653), yet, if the complaint fails to state a cause of action and is incurable, the attachment must be dissolved. If a motion to dissolve is made on this ground, the plaintiff must amend his complaint before the decision of the motion to dissolve (Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 169), or it will be presumed that he cannot do so.

The record discloses no amendment or attempt to amend. Therefore the attachment should have been dissolved.

The order denying the motion is reversed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 11, 1907.)

1. Appeal — Orders Appealable — Motion for New Trial — Amendment of Statement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 282.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by J. W. Freeman against Robert A. Brown. From an order denying defendant's application for leave to amend his proposed statement on motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

See 87 Pac. 204.

George L. Keefer and Walter L. Bowers, for appellant. Barstow & Variel and H. M. Barstow, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from an order denying the defendant's application for leave to amend proposed statement on motion for a new trial.

Upon the trial of the action in the court below judgment was entered against defendant, and in due time he served his notice of intention to move for a new trial and served and filed his proposed statement on such motion, which statement omitted to specify the particulars wherein the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings, and wherein the decision and judgment was against law, and the errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the defendant. When the settlement of the statement came on for hearing, defendant asked leave to amend the proposed statement by filing a supplemental statement setting forth the omissions hereinbefore referred to. This application was supported by an affidavit of one of the attorneys, "that by reason of an oversight and through press of business affiant omitted to specify in the proposed statement the particulars wherein the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings, wherein the decision and judgment was against law, and the errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by defendant; that said errors and omissions occurred entirely through an oversight and through press of business which caused affiant to overlook said errors and omissions." The court denied this leave to amend and file supplemental statement, from which order defendant appeals.

It is settled that the order of a court made in the exercise of its discretionary power denying relief of this character is reviewable upon appeal (Murphy v. Stelling, 138 Cal. 641, 72 Pac. 176), and in this case such appeal was taken in time (Pollitz v. Wickersham [Cal. Sup.] 88 Pac. 911). The relief sought by defendant was from the result of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court has the power so to relieve, but the granting of such relief rests in the sound discretion of the court. "Whether or not the circumstances of a particular case are such that the mistake or inadvertence should be excused is a question the determination of which must of necessity be left largely to the court to which application is made, and it is well settled that this court will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion of that tribunal, except in a case where a clear abuse of discretion is apparent." Vinson v. Los Angeles Pac. R. Co., 82 Pac. 54, 147 Cal. 479. In this last case, where the affidavit showed that the press of professional duties occasioned the neglect, it was held not an abuse of discretion to grant relief. In this case, however, press of professional duties is not assigned, but press of business, which may comprehend matter foreign to the duties of an attorney, is urged. The whole matter, however, was for the trial court, and we cannot say from the meager affidavit presented and relied upon that the court abused its discretion in denying the relief sought.

The order denying leave to file supplemental statement is affirmed.

SHIVELY et al. v. HARRIS et al. (Civ. 131.)

1. ADMINISTRATORS — JUDGMENTS — LIMITATIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1504, declares that a judgment against an administrator on a claim for money against the estate only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the administrator and the judge, that the judgment must be that the administrator pay in due course of administration, and that no execution shall issue, nor shall the judgment create any lien on the property of the estate nor give the judgment creditor priority of payment. Held that, where a judgment is recovered against administrators, limitations do not run against it pending administration of the estate.

2. ELECTION OF REMEDIES — COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

Where the holder of a judgment against administrators pending administration filed suit thereon before the period fixed by statute limiting actions on judgments had expired, but the action was abandoned before service of summons because wholly unsustainable, it did not constitute an election of remedies.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Election of Remedies, § 12.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Daniel Shively and another as administrators of W. B. Shively, deceased, against Robert Lee Harris. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry L. Ford and J. S. Burnell, for appellant. Gillett & Cutter, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. There are two counts to the complaint. In the first it is alleged that the respondent Harris on May 18, 1896, recovered a judgment against appellants as administrators of the estate of W. B. Shively, deceased, for the sum of $829.93, which judgment was not appealed from and became final May 18, 1897; that before the said judgment became barred by the statute of limitations, namely, on May 18, 1902, said Harris brought suit on said judgment and no summons was ever issued therein, although more than two years have elapsed since the filing of the complaint in that action; and the said Harris wrongfully maintains that by reason of said barred judgment he has a claim against the said estate and that said claim is a cloud upon said estate. In the second count it appears that respondent Clara Carter brought a similar action against appellants and recovered judgment and assigned the judgment to Harris, and in other respects the first and second counts are similar. The prayer of the complaint is: "Wherefore, said plaintiffs pray judgment of this honorable court that said barred judgment and barred cause of action is not a claim against said estate." A demurrer was interposed on the ground "that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," and was sustained by the court without leave to amend. From the judgment entered accordingly in favor of defendants, plaintiff appealed.

There is no merit whatever in the contention of appellants. It is based entirely upon the proposition that the judgment obtained by respondents against the Shively estate was barred in five years, and that an action was necessary in order to keep alive said judgment. The truth is that the judgment against the administrators was not affected by the statute of limitations, as, during the whole time, the estate was in process of administration, and it was an idle and nugatory act on the part of Harris to institute an action to renew said judgment, as his learned counsel no doubt speedily recognized, since he did nothing after filing the complaint to bring said cause to an issue. Section 1504 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "a judgment rendered against an executor or administrator, upon any claim for money against the estate of his testator or intestate, only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the executor or administrator and the judge; and the judgment must be that the executor or administrator pay, in due course of administration, the amount ascertained to be due. * * * No execution must issue upon such judgment, nor shall it create any lien upon the property of the estate, or give to the judgment creditor any priority of payment." It would hardly be contended that while the estate was being administered the statute would run against a claim that had been allowed by the executor and approved by the judge; but by the foregoing section of the Code of Civil Procedure a judgment rendered against an executor or administrator is placed upon the same footing as such a claim. Indeed, the question has been settled by the Supreme Court in opposition to the claim of appellants. In the Estate of Schroeder, 46 Cal. 307, it is said: "We think there are several reasons why the statute does not run pending the administration against a claim allowed. * * * Other reasons might be adduced, but these are sufficient to show that the statute of limitations ceases to run during a pending administration against claims duly allowed." The opinion shows that the court was considering judgments rendered against administrators, and not claims that were allowed by said administrators. However, as stated, the doctrine applicable to both is the same. See, also, In re Arguello, 85 Cal. 151, 24 Pac. 641; Wise v. Williams, 88 Cal. 30, 25 Pac. 1064; Estate of More, 121 Cal. 635, 54 Pac. 148.

The other point, that "the defendant Harris elected his remedy by the commencement of the action, and he is now barred by his election," is equally without merit. It is based upon the proposition that, "where there exists an election between inconsistent remedies, the party is confined to the remedy which he first prefers to adopt" (Rodermund v. Clark, 46 N. Y. 354), or, as stated in another case: "It is one of the very elements of the law that, when a suitor reaches the parting of the ways in the pursuit of inconsistent remedies, he must elect which road he must follow. The first step taken is an election, and the election, when made, is irrevocable." The principle is sound, but it is manifest that it has no application to the case at bar. There was no choice here between two inconsistent remedies. The course pursued by Harris in bringing the second suit was not in pursuit of any remedy at all. It had no effect whatever upon the judgment against the estate, and he very properly abandoned the action before bringing the appellants into court. The mere filing of a complaint, which could not be sustained and which was abandoned, cannot be urged as an estoppel against the assertion of a judgment against the estate which has not been satisfied and still remains in full force and effect.

The judgment is affirmed.

HIGGINS v. KEYES et al. (Civ. 380.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 1, 1907.)

1. Deposits in Court—Custody of Funds.

Where money deposited in court by a party to a suit pending therein is paid to the clerk thereof, the payment is made to him as an officer of the court, and not as an individual.

2. Same.

A deposit of money in court by a party to a suit pending therein "to abide the judgment of the court, * * * and to be applied in satisfaction of such judgment as the court may direct," is a deposit to abide the judgment of the Supreme Court, and a judgment rendered by the superior court from which an appeal is pending is not the judgment prescribing the condition of the deposit.

3. Mandamus—Deposit of Money in Court—Order of Payment—Refusal to Comply.

A county treasurer holding money deposited in court by a party to a suit has not refused to perform an act in connection with the deposit until he has refused to obey an order of the court, and, until that time, mandamus does not lie to compel him to act, Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, authorizing the issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel the performance of an act specially enjoined as a duty resulting from an office or trust.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 44.]

Petition for mandamus by Thomas Higgins against C. G. Keyes and others. Writ denied.

Gray, Barker & Bowen and R. L. Horton, for petitioner. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., Hartley Shaw, Deputy Dist. Atty., and Chas. L. Batcheller, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Petition for a writ of mandate. Petitioner is the defendant owner in a consolidated mechanic's lien foreclosure proceeding brought by the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company et al., against petitioner and Alpeter, Hall & Alpeter, contractors, in the superior court of Los Angeles county.

The findings in that case recite that at the commencement of the trial in said proceeding petitioner "deposited in court the sum of $18,617.99 to abide the judgment of the court in these causes and to be applied in satisfaction of such judgment as the court may direct." Judgment was rendered in favor of said contractors against petitioner for the sum of $15,993.24 with interest, for personal judgments in various sums in favor of several of the lien claimants against the contractors; for liens in favor of two of said claimants against the property of petitioner to secure the payment of their claims; and in favor of petitioner against both the lien and claim of one of the claimants. The judgment directs the clerk to pay from the $18,617.99 deposited by petitioner, the attorney's fees of the two claimants whose liens were declared valid, and to distribute and apply the $15,993.24 awarded to the contractors to the payment, first, of the two claims which were held to constitute liens against the premises; and, next, pro rata of the claims of the other claimants who recovered judgments against the contractors. Petitioner appealed from the judgment and two adverse orders of the trial court, and filed an undertaking on such appeals. The conditions of the undertaking and obligations of the sureties covered the costs on the three several appeals, a stay of execution from a money judgment in the sum awarded in favor of the contractors and against petitioner, and $1,000—fixed by the judge of the court as the value of the use and occupation of the premises involved pending the appeal. Demand was made upon the respondents and each of them by petitioner for a return of the money deposited by him, which demands were refused, whereupon he made application to the superior court for an order requiring the clerk to pay said fund to him, said petitioner. This application was denied without prejudice, and this court is asked to issue its writ of mandate commanding the respondents to pay over said fund to petitioner.

The fund so asked to be returned was "deposited in court," and therefore paid to the clerk as an officer of the court, and not as an individual. If it was paid to him as an individual, the proceeding here begun is not the proper one for its recovery. The money, however, as stated in the findings, was "deposited in court," and remains subject to the order of the court whether in the hands of the clerk or the treasurer. When the money was delivered to the clerk, it was his duty, unless otherwise directed by law (section 2104, Code Civ. Proc.), or by a conditional order of the court (section 573), to pay it over to the treasurer. Under the latter section it was probably competent for the court to have made a different order for its custody, but, in the absence of such order, the proper place for it was in the county treasurer's hands; and no such special or different order was made in the case. It is not to be distinguished from any other deposit in court "to abide the judgment of the court." The "judgment" under such circumstances has always been construed to mean the final judgment, and there is no final judgment in an action while an appeal is pending. The judgment rendered by the superior court is not to be considered in this connection and the condition of the deposit has not been complied with. The deposit "to abide the judgment of the court" must have read into it "the Supreme Court." If it be conceded that this is a special deposit under limited instructions and the judgment of the superior court is "the judgment," the rendition of which the deposit was to abide and to the satisfaction of which the fund was to be applied "as the court may direct," then this contract may be enforced whatever the character or injustice of that judgment. We cannot read into the contract the clause, "if rendered to the satisfaction of the depositor," and, if such a strict construction as petitioner contends for be given to the contract of deposit, we would be compelled to hold that the fund be applied as directed by the superior court, regardless of petitioner's appeal.

Neither do we think it proper or competent for this court to consider and determine the questions which are directly involved in petitioner's appeal to the superior court. There being other sufficient grounds upon which this court's action can be based, we do not think it necessary for us to express any opinion as to whether or not the judgment of the superior court is void as contended by petitioner. The fund is in the custody of the court for a specified purpose, and, while the county treasurer holds the corpus of the fund, he does so merely as custodian for the court, and cannot be compelled to pay the money to any one except on the order of the court holding the deposit. Until such an order has been made, there is no duty imposed upon either the clerk or treasurer to pay out the money. Until he has refused to obey such an order properly made the treasurer has not refused to perform any act in connection with the fund so deposited with him that is specifically enjoined upon him as a duty resulting from his office, trust, or station. REED et al. v. COLLINS et al. (Civ. 318.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 6, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—STATUTORY REGULATION—POLICE POWER.

The retail traffic in intoxicating liquors is a business in which a person has no inherent right to engage, but the state, in the exercise of its police power, may prohibit or regulate it by the imposition of such conditions and restrictions as it sees fit, provided the restrictions do not interfere with interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, § 4.]

2. SAME — MUNICIPAL REGULATION—GRANTING LICENSE—HEARING.

An ordinance provided that an application for permission to retail intoxicating liquors should be made by petition in writing to the board of supervisors, and that "if, after due consideration of the same by the board of supervisors, the petition be favorably acted upon," the petitioner should file a bond, etc. Held, that the phrase "due consideration" meant a consideration of the application upon its merits, and the return of a judgment based upon the evidence heard, and the board had no warrant to arbitrarily refuse an application without a sufficient hearing of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, § 68.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Mandamus by J. W. Reed and another against J. W. Collins and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Adair, for appellants. John A. Wall, for respondents.

HART, J. Plaintiffs obtained judgment in the court below, granting a peremptory writ of mandate to compel the defendants, as members of and constituting the board of supervisors of Mariposa county, to issue to said plaintiffs a license to traffic within the limits of said county in the retail liquor business. The defendants appeal from the judgment, upon the judgment roll alone.

The plaintiffs made application for said license in accordance with the provisions of an ordinance adopted by said board of supervisors on the 4th day of January, 1900, and designated and known as "Ordinance No. 73." This ordinance is set out in full in the complaint. The part of the ordinance which is important to the consideration of the question submitted here for adjudication provides that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to "open, establish or conduct, or caused to be opened, established or conducted, any barroom or public saloon * * * where wines, spirituous or malt liquors are sold by the glass, bottle or otherwise, in less quantities than one quart, within the limits of the county of Mariposa, without first obtaining permission from the board of supervisors, and filing a bond as hereinafter provided." Provision is then made that the application for such permission shall be made by petition in writing to the board of supervisors, and that "if, after due consideration of the same by the board of supervisors the petition be favorably acted upon, it shall be the duty of the person in whose favor the petition was presented and the prayer of which was granted, before opening the said place, to file with the board of supervisors a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the chairman of the board, with two sureties, in the sum of one thousand dollars, conditioned that the applicant shall maintain said place in a quiet, orderly, and decent manner." After declaring that on the 3d day of October, 1906, the said board of supervisors, at a regular meeting thereof, rejected said application and refused to grant the plaintiffs the license so applied for, the complaint proceeds to allege: "That in making such rejection and in refusing to grant the said license the said board of supervisors took no exception whatever to the said petition, either as regards its form, substance, or sufficiency in any respect, and said board of supervisors took no exception to the personal character or standing in the community of your petitioners or either of them, but on the contrary, the members of said board found no fault with petitioners or either of them regarding their respective characters or standing in the community." It is also charged that "the said action of the said board of supervisors in refusing to grant petitioners a license as asked for by them was purely arbitrary on the part of said board and entirely without cause, and the action of said board in so rejecting said application of your petitioners was not in the exercise of any right conferred on said board by any ordinance of the county of Mariposa, and was in violation of the provisions of the ordinance hereinbefore set forth and without right or authority."

A general demurrer was interposed to the complaint by the district attorney, acting for and in behalf of the defendants, and overruled by the court. Thereafter an answer was filed denying the necessary and material allegations of the complaint, and affirming the right of defendants to refuse the license, averring that in so doing they acted in accordance with their official duty and within their authority under the law. The court found the material facts as alleged in the complaint to be true, and, among others, "that in making such rejection and in refusing to grant the said license the said board of supervisors took no exception whatever to the petition of petitioners, either as regards its form, substance, or sufficiency in any respect and took no exception to the personal character or standing in the community of the petitioners or either of them, but, on the contrary, the said board of supervisors found no fault with petitioners or either of them regarding their respective characters or standing in the community; that at all the times mentioned in the petition the petitioners herein are and at the time of making the application for a license to the board of supervisors were fit and proper persons to be granted a license for the purpose for which they demanded the same; and that such fitness of said petitioners was at all times well known to the said board of supervisors." The court also found "that the action of said board of supervisors in refusing to grant petitioners herein a license as asked for by them, was purely arbitrary and entirely without cause," etc. The appeal being from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone, there is, of course, no attempt made to present the evidence taken at the trial, and it is further a matter of course that the evidence heard by the court must be assumed to fully support the findings.

The court below filed a written opinion, and the conclusion reached appears to be largely, if not altogether, based upon the ruling in the case of Henry v. Barton et al., 107 Cal. 535, 40 Pac. 798. That case seems to be on all fours in respect of the facts with the one before us, and it is there held that the judgment of mandate awarded to the plaintiff was proper, and it was therefore affirmed. The legislative or governing body of the city of San Bernardino had adopted an ordinance regulating the retail liquor traffic, whose provisions, so far as they concern the procedure to be followed in obtaining a license, are in effect the same as those in the ordinance before us. The plaintiff, having in pursuance of the provisions of said ordinance petitioned for a license to sell liquor at retail, and the board of trustees of said city having refused to grant the same, petitioned the superior court for, and secured, a peremptory writ of mandate compelling said board to issue to him such license. The court, in the case mentioned, says: "This action of the trustees cannot be successfully maintained. The ordinances of the city of San Bernardino as they now stand entitle any man who complies with their provisions to a retail liquor license, and this respondent complied with these provisions. Trustees of cities have no power except that given them by express provision of law, and we find no power in any of these ordinances vesting in them discretion as to the granting or denying an application for a liquor license. In the absence of some express legislative enactment granting such right, there is no principle of law that will allow the trustees of any city to say that a liquor license shall be granted to A. and the same right denied to B." According to this opinion, then, it will be noticed there must be expressly vested in the governing body "a discretion as to the granting or denying of an application for a liquor license"; otherwise, as we understand it, the license must, under any circumstances, issue. And this broad statement of the rule as declared in that opinion seems to be further justified by language previously expressed therein, that "no evidence was taken in the case, and consequently we know nothing of the specific facts or grounds upon which this action of the trustees was based; but, as we look at the case, the grounds, whatever they may have been, are wholly immaterial." (Italics are ours.) That case was decided in department. We deem it no impropriety, preliminarily to stating our conclusion here, to say that, so far at least as the writer of this opinion is concerned, we do not feel that we can concur in all that appears to be said in Henry v. Barton, supra. It has been repeatedly declared by the courts that the retail traffic in intoxicating liquors is a business in which a citizen or other person has no inherent right to engage; that the sale of such liquors in that form may be by the state, in the exercise of its power of police, entirely prohibited or suppressed, or the state may regulate its sale by the imposition of such conditions and restrictions as it may see fit to adopt, provided, of course, such conditions and restrictions in no way interfere with interstate commerce. Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 91, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620; Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 213, 24 Pac. 747; Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 20 et seq., 15 Pac. 318, 5 Am. St. Rep. 418; Ex parte McClain, 61 Cal. 437, 44 Am. Rep. 554.

The grounds upon which a governing board of a city or county bases its action in the refusal of a license to sell liquor by retail are, it seems to us, extremely material and important. If the language of the opinion in the Henry v. Barton Case is to be accepted as meaning that when a license is once applied for in compliance with the provisions of an ordinance regulating the retail sale of liquor, and which does not in terms reserve to the governing board discretion to arbitrarily refuse a license, there is no other alternative remaining to the board but to grant it, notwithstanding that evidence may be taken to satisfactorily show the petitioner to be a wholly unfit person to conduct a public barroom or saloon, then, it seems to us, that the necessary corollary of that proposition is that, while the board has the power to suppress the sale of liquor by retail altogether, if once it adopts such an ordinance licensing it, it thereby surrenders the power vested by direct grant from the Constitution in the municipality of which it is the legally constituted representative to afford full protection to the public by limiting "to the utmost the evils" which are often the offspring of such occupation. If we do not misapprehend the decision, its effect is as thus stated; and we feel no diffidence in declaring that we are not prepared to accept the proposition as sound law or as an accurate construction of the police power. We are of the opinion rather that whatever may be the provisions of an ordinance respecting the licensing of the retail liquor business—whether in express terms it clothes the governing board with a discretion to grant or to refuse a license in a given case or not—there is, nevertheless, reserved to said board sufficient of the power directly granted to it, or to the municipality for which it speaks, by the Constitution (article 2, § 11, Const.), over the subject to definitively and conclusively determine, upon due investigation, whether a license granted to a particular individual would be a public menace, and, if so, to refuse to so grant it, without occasion or ground to fear that such action could not resist the coercive power of the judicial arm of the government. There can be no doubt that the trend of judicial opinion is pointed in the direction of committing to the local authorities, as the people through their organic law seem to have endeavored to do, a very extensive discretion in the matter of dealing with and regulating this, as well as other occupations which may, and often do, without reasonable regulation, tend greatly to the debasement and demoralization of the morals, health, peace, and happiness of communities. Not only does this appear to be the judicial, but, as well, the legislative, policy of the state, for the Legislature has limited the matter of the licensing of all classes of business by the boards of supervisors of counties and the legislative bodie of incorporated cities and towns to the purposes of regulation only. Statutes and Amendments of the Codes 1901, p. 635, c. 209, adding section 3366 to the Political Code. There can be no question that if, after receiving a license to conduct a retail liquor business, the licensee should, contrary to the conditions of the bond required, suffer his establishment to become a disreputable or disorderly house, the board could recall or forfeit his license. Why, then, if before the granting of the license, evidence could be produced to show the applicant to be an unfit person to conduct such a place, or to be of a character or reputation to make the inference reasonably probable that, if given a license, he would maintain his establishment in a manner modeled along the lines of his character or reputation, should not the board, regardless of whether the provisions of the ordinance gave it such discretion, have the power to reject his application and refuse him a license, and thus prevent damage rather than postpone action until perhaps some irreparable injury resulting from the issuance of the license had been suffered by the community? If evidence taken by the board should satisfactorily show that the applicant had once been incarcerated in a state prison for the commission of one of the meanest felonies known to the law, or that the place where it was proposed to locate the saloon was not the proper one for such a business—as, for example, that it was too near a public or private school or a church, or in the residential part of the community, where it would be especially offensive—is it possible that the board would be powerless to prevent so grave a catastrophe as would follow the granting of a license under such circumstances simply because the ordinance has not expressly declared that there is vested in it discretion to say who shall or shall not have a license or where a saloon may or may not be located? The argument is often made that, where so much power upon this subject is conceded to a municipal board, the result may be, if such board should see fit to arbitrarily exercise it, the creation of a monopoly of the retail liquor trade in a community. The same argument may with equal force be addressed to the exercise of the same power of the board when it is expressed and specifically given in terms in an ordinance of regulation, as may regularly be done under the ruling in Henry v. Barton, supra. But the obvious reply to such arguments, it seems to us, lies in the fact, first, that public officers are presumed to perform their official duty faithfully, fairly, and honestly; and secondly, that if, according to the judgment of those agents of the state to whose sound discretion such matters are committed, it is concluded that the interests of the community they represent demand that the retail sale of liquor shall be so curtailed or restricted as that it may thereby result in placing it in the hands of a limited number of citizens, such consequence is only one of the many which may be expected to flow from necessary conditions which it is competent to impose upon the prosecution of an occupation in which the citizen has a right to engage, not because such right inheres in him, but only because he is permitted to exercise it by the mere sufferance or tolerance of the sovereign authority. These observations, though not necessary to a decision of the case before us, result, as we have indicated, from our interpretation of the language of the opinion in Henry v. Barton—that it is immaterial what the grounds of the rejection of an application for a retail liquor license may be, the board has no authority or right to reject, unless so empowered by some express legislative enactment, and that there is no principle of law, in the absence of such an enactment, "that will allow the trustees of any city to say that a liquor license shall be granted to A. and the same right denied to B." The effect of our views upon this subject, as we have endeavored to express them, is that the board has the right under any circumstances, whatever may be the provisions of the ordinance, to take evidence upon the question of the character or reputation of any applicant to determine whether he is a fit person to whom to grant such a privilege, or to determine as to the suitableness of the place at which it is proposed to maintain the saloon or barroom; that, when evidence is so taken, and the result is the rejection of the application, the action of the board in ordering such rejection is conclusive, and not a question for judicial interference and determination, unless it can be shown that the evidence in no manner or degree developed any good reason for the rejection based upon the character or reputation of the applicant, or in no manner or degree militated against the location of the saloon at the place proposed. These views, are, we think, in a general way in harmony with those often expressed by the Supreme Court prior to the decision of the case of Henry v. Barton, supra. Of course, we do not deny that where the board acted arbitrarily or refused to grant a license without reason, where such discretion was not expressly given it by the ordinance, such action may be reviewed and a mandate to require it to issue the license might lie. In other words, the board may not under such an ordinance have the power to refuse the license upon no reason, or what would be equivalent thereto, upon pretended grounds which do not comport with common sense—as, for instance, that the applicant, though a citizen, was not a native-born American, and like nonsensical grounds.

We have thus expressed our views upon the subject under consideration, because we felt that as we must found our conclusion here largely upon the opinion in the case to which we have referred, and uphold the judgment of the court below, it was only justice to ourselves to explain how far our judgment would permit us to commit ourselves to the principles as they appear to be declared in that opinion. We know it to be our duty to follow "the law of the case" as it has been declared by the highest court of the state. This, of course, we propose to do here. But we know of no reason why we should not state our own opinions, whatever they may be worth, upon important questions coming before us, even though they may to some extent conflict with those expressed by the court superior to this, where, as here, in reaching a final conclusion we adhere to the rule vital to the decision, as laid down by that court. As stated, there is no subject with which the courts are called upon to deal of greater concern to society than the police power, and, while upon the main point which must govern in the decision of this case we agree with the department opinion to which we have referred, we have not hesitated to present our own views, deferentially, of course, upon the important general questions to which we have given some attention. Indeed, the questions here discussed are of the greatest importance, for, within all the vast body of the law, with its endless ramifications and the infinite variety of its operations, there are not to be found doctrines which, when properly and intelligently applied, are more efficacious in the attainment of the best and highest ends and aims of organized society than those which are included in and belong to the great power of police inherent in every state of the Union. Over all the subjects coming legitimately within its range and scope, the state is sovereign and supreme. In its comprehensive sense, "it embraces," says Judge Cooley, "the whole system of internal regulation, by which the state seeks, not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizens with citizens those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others." Or, as it is so forcefully and clearly put by Judge Blackstone, this power of which we speak is "the due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom, whereby the inhabitants of a state, like members of a well governed family, are bound to conform their behaviour to the rules of propriety, good neighborhood, and good manners, and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective stations." These are, of course, elementary principles with which all students of the law are fully familiar, but their restatement, when appropriate occasion arises, can do no harm, for frequent repetitions of them might, to the infinite advantage of society in general, have the effect of impressing them upon the minds of those gentlemen to whom is committed the serious duty of making and amending our laws, or of those citizens in incorporated cities and towns clothed by their fellowmen with the authority of exercising cognate duties within a more limited territorial sphere.

In the case at bar, however, from the findings of fact filed by the trial judge, we are led to conclude that the board either heard no evidence whatever, other than that furnished by the general, meager statements of the petition by plaintiffs for the license, or if evidence was taken, it found nothing against them, either as to character or reputation, or nothing militating against the issuance of the license because of the proposed location. The board, therefore, seems to have acted arbitrarily or without particular reason on the application. The case, in view of the facts thus presented by the record, appears, as suggested, to be within the ruling in Henry v. Barton, supra, and should therefore be affirmed.

The district attorney, in his brief, directs special attention to the language of the ordinance, "If, after due consideration of the same by the board of supervisors, the petition be favorably acted upon," etc., and says from that language it is "apparent that defendants reserved to themselves the right to grant or refuse a license for the carrying on of a saloon business." We see nothing in the quoted language from which it may even be implied that the ordinance intended reserving to the supervisors arbitrary discretion to reject an application for a license. On the contrary, the phrase "due consideration" means a consideration of the application upon its merits, and the return of a judgment based upon some substantial reason arising upon the evidence heard. As stated, under the ruling in the case of Henry v. Barton, and by the provisions of the ordinance pursuant to which the application was made, there is no warrant for making an arbitrary distinction as against the plaintiffs here.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from will be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

5 Cal. App. 463

KITTS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF NEVADA COUNTY et al. (Cr. 324.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 29, 1907.)

1. Grand Jury—Competency of Jurors.

The fact that a member of a grand jury, which returned an indictment, had served and been discharged as a juror in a court of record within a year of the time he was summoned and impaneled as a grand juror and of the time the indictment was returned, will not invalidate the indictment.

2. Same.

Code Civ. Proc. § 198, provides that a person is competent to act as a juror if he is assessed on the last assessment roll of the county on property belonging to him. Pen. Code, § 995, provides that an indictment may be set aside where the defendant was not held to answer before the finding of the indictment on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge to any individual grand juror. Pen. Code, § 896, which sets forth the grounds of challenge to individual grand jurors, does not include the lack of qualifications referred to under Code Civ. Proc. § 198. Held, that the validity of an indictment is not affected by the fact that certain members of the grand jury which returned it were not assessed on the last assessment roll of the county on property belonging to them, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 198, since they were de facto grand jurors of a de jure grand jury.

3. Prohibition—Proceedings—Scope of Relief.

Where an indictment purports, or attempts, to state an offense of a kind of which the court has jurisdiction, it is sufficient as against an application for a writ to prohibit the court from taking further proceedings in the case, whether it would be sufficient as against a special or general demurrer or not.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; F. T. Nilon, Judge.

Application of Charles W. Kitts for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of Nevada county, Cal., and F. T. Nilon, judge of said court, to prohibit the trial of applicant on a certain indictment. Application denied.

Chas. W. Kitts and A. M. Seymour, for petitioner. Geo. L. Jones, Dist. Atty., for respondents.

HART, J. The grand jury of Nevada county, on the 24th day of November, 1906, returned and caused to be filed in the superior court of that county an indictment against the petitioner for the crime of assault by means and force likely to produce great bodily injury upon the person of one Martin Shoebridge. Thereafter petitioner moved the respondents to set aside said indictment upon the grounds that certain members of said grand jury were disqualified under the law from acting as such, and at the time of the presentation of said motion evidence was offered which it is claimed supported the charge of the disqualification of such jurors. The motion was denied by respondents, and thereupon the petitioner was required to answer the indictment.

It is claimed that by reason of the alleged disqualification of said jurors the indictment was not found, presented, and filed according to the requirements of law, and that the same does not therefore confer upon respondents jurisdiction to try petitioner for the offense charged against him in said alleged indictment. The petitioner asks that respondents be prohibited from trying him upon said alleged indictment, and commanded to desist and refrain from taking further proceedings in the case. The jurors who are alleged to have been disqualified from serving as members of said grand jury are J. H. Nile, W. H. Hughes, and E. G. Sukeforth. It is claimed that said Sukeforth was disqualified because he "had served in and been discharged as a juror by a court of record of this state, to wit, the superior court of the county of Nevada, state of California, within a year of the time that he was summoned and impaneled to act as such grand juror, and within a year of the finding and filing of the said alleged indictment"; and that said Nile and Hughes were not competent to act as grand jurors for the reason that they were not assessed on "the last assessment roll of said Nevada county for the year 1906, on property owned by them, standing in their names, or at all." It is alleged that the juror Hughes is not thus assessed, "except there is an assessment on said last assessment roll to 'Hughes Bros.,' which may or may not be property belonging to said William H. Hughes." It is also averred that "said alleged indictment fails to state any public offense against your petitioner."

As to the first proposition, that the juror Sukeforth was not competent to act as a grand juror because of having served as a juror and having been discharged as such within a year of the time that "he was summoned and impaneled to act as such grand juror, and within a year of the finding and filing of said alleged indictment," it is only necessary to say that the Supreme Court has recently, in the case of Ex parte Ruef, on Habeas Corpus (Cal.) 89 Pac. 605, ruled adversely to petitioner's contention. In that case the court says, speaking of the same objection as that made here: "We are of the opinion that this does not affect the validity of an indictment found by the grand jury. The Penal Code enumerates the grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside. Pen. Code, § 995. One of these grounds is 'any ground which would have been good ground for challenge to any individual juror.' Pen. Code, § 896, provides for a challenge to an individual grand juror for six specific grounds only. The particular incompetency here relied on is not included. We think that the Legislature, in declaring that persons who had been discharged as jurors within a year should not be competent, and at the same time denying to a defendant indicted by a grand jury including one or more such persons any remedy by way of motion or challenge, in effect provided that if the statutory rule prohibiting the service of such persons were not obeyed, the departure should not invalidate any indictment found."

The point that the grand jury was not a legally constituted body because jurors Nile and Hughes were not assessed upon the last assessment roll of the county on property belonging to them, and therefore could not return a valid indictment, cannot, we think, be maintained. The law provides that the grand jury shall be composed of 19 members (section 192, Code Civ. Proc.), 12 of whom may find an indictment (Pen. Code, § 940). One of the prescribed qualifications of a grand juror is that he shall be "assessed on the last assessment roll of the county * * * on property belonging to him." Section 198, Code Civ. Proc. Of course, it is true that a person not possessing the general qualifications for a juror required by section 198, Code Civ. Proc., is not competent to act either as a grand or petit juror in any case. Under the system in vogue in California prior to the adoption of our present Constitution, the only mode authorized for the inauguration of a prosecution of an ordinary felony charge was by indictment by a grand jury, a necessary prerequisite to which was a preliminary hearing of the charge by a magistrate and an order holding the accused to answer before said body. By that method of proceeding, the accused, having been held to answer, was expressly given by the law the right, and thus afforded an opportunity of interposing in open court a challenge to the panel of grand jurors or of examining them individually for the purpose of exercising any challenge of their right upon any ground prescribed by the statute to inquire into or act upon his case. Since the adoption of the present Constitution, however, the procedure with regard to the initiation of prosecutions for felony is essentially different from the former manner of proceeding. Under our present system, as established by the Constitution of 1879, and which it is safe to say is familiar to people generally, all offenses theretofore prosecuted by indictment may be prosecuted by information after an examination and commitment by a magistrate, or by indictment with or without such examination and commitment, as may be prescribed by law. Article 1, § 8, Const. The effect of this provision of the Constitution is, as may readily be seen, that an indictment by a grand jury may be found for a felony without a preliminary examination of the charge by a magistrate, and the accused therefore deprived of an opportunity, as formerly accorded to him, of examining the inquisitors as to their general and special qualifications to act as such before they proceed to the examination of his case. The result is, in such a case, that the accused has but one remedy which is exercisable only after the indictment is found and filed, and is in the nature of a motion to set it aside for certain specified reasons prescribed by section 995 of the Penal Code. Among the grounds enumerated by that section as requiring the setting aside of an indictment is "any ground which would have been good ground for challenge, either to the panel or to any individual grand juror." The grounds of challenge to the panel are set forth in section 995, and the cause of challenge to an individual grand juror prescribed in section 896, of the Penal Code. The incompetency of the grand juror for not possessing the qualification mentioned in subdivision 4 of section 198 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not embraced within the grounds prescribed in either section 995 or 896 of the Penal Code. There can be no doubt that, under the system which prevailed under the Constitution preceding the present one, if an examination of the grand jurors disclosed that any or all of them were wanting in any of the general qualifications required in them by law, or by section 198 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if at that time that section existed as now, such juror or jurors could have been successfully challenged upon such ground. It would seem, from adjudications of analogous questions by the courts, that where, as in this case, a section of the Code expressly mentions certain grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside, and said section does not include in such grounds certain grounds prescribed in another section or Code disqualifying a person from acting as a grand juror, the section involving the grounds upon which the indictment may be set aside is intended by the Legislature as a limitation of the grounds as to which an indictment may be set aside. Certainly the rule of construction expressed by the maxim, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius" would warrant this conclusion. But it is not necessary to base our conclusion that petitioner's position on this point is untenable upon this reason.

Counsel upon both sides of this case have in their briefs elaborately, interestingly, and instructively discussed all the points which could conceivably be brought to bear upon the main point in the case, to wit, whether, for any of the reasons suggested by petitioner, the superior court of Nevada county is without jurisdiction to try said petitioner under the indictment of which complaint is made. But we are of opinion that the point which is under discussion has been decided against the contention of petitioner in a number of opinions filed by the Supreme Court. The case of People v. Simmons, 119 Cal. 1, 50 Pac. 844, while not directly in point, is valuable, more particularly because the court adopts the reasoning and authorities cited in the case of People v. Hecht, 105 Cal. 621, 38 Pac. 941, 27 L. R. A. 203, 45 Am. St. Rep. 96. The last-mentioned case was where a question arose as to the qualifications of certain members of a board of freeholders, elected to frame a new charter for the city and county of San Francisco. By proceedings in quo warranto it was attempted not only to oust two of the elected members of the board because they had not been, as required by the Constitution in such case, electors of the city for which they were elected for a period of five years preceding their said election, but to have declared invalid the entire board because, by reason of the disqualification of two of the members so elected, the full number of fifteen qualified electors had not been elected as such freeholders. The Supreme Court, in a characteristically able opinion by Judge Niles Searls, then a commissioner, held that under the facts as alleged in the complaint, and admitted to be true by the demurrer, the two alleged disqualified freeholders were in fact disqualified, and could not therefore act as such, on the board, but that the fact of their disqualification did not invalidate the board; that it was a legally constituted body, with full power to perform the duties designed by the Constitution, and for which it had been elected and organized. Among other things this learned judge says: "An interpretation which holds that the ineligibility, or death, or unwillingness to act of a single member thus selected invalidates the entire election, would work great hardship, and tend to thwart the will of the electors in many instances, and should not be indulged unless rendered imperative by the mandate of the Constitution. The same Constitution (article 11, § 5) provides that the Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of 'boards of supervisors,' etc. Other portions of the Constitution provide for a Supreme Court 'which shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices.' Again, 'the Senate shall consist of forty members, and the Assembly of eighty members.' It would, we think, hardly be contended that, because the Constitution provides for a board of supervisors, an election for supervisors, in which a single member elected was disqualified, would either invalidate the election of other members, or prevent their organizing and acting as a board. Like considerations apply to the election of members of the Senate and Assembly, and to the election, organization, and action of the Supreme Court." Further on in the opinion it is said: "Again, the office of freeholder is created by the Constitution. It is a de jure office. When Hellman and Bourn were elected by a plurality of the qualified electors, received their certificates of election, and qualified and participated in the action of the board, they were there under color of office and presumptively entitled to the office. They were de facto officers in the discharge of the duties of a de jure office, and as such their acts while they remained such were as valid and binding as those of de jure officers. There must be a de jure office to be filled before there can be a de facto officer. If the former exists, and the latter holds it under and pursuant to a regular commission purporting to empower him to act, his acts in such office, until his right thereto is judicially determined, the law holds upon principles of policy and justice to be valid so far as they involve the public and third parties."

An "officer de facto" is defined to be one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised: "(1) * * * (2) * * * (3) Under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, * * * such ineligibility * * * being unknown to the public. State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409. We think the principles discussed in the Hecht Case apply here. In fact, it is, as we have seen, so expressly declared in People v. Simmons, supra. The grand jury is a de jure body created by the Constitution. Article 1, § 8, Const. One who, having been regularly summoned and impaneled as a grand juror, and exercises the duties thereof, although thereafter discovered to be disqualified by reason of some provision of the law, serves under color of right, and "upon principles of policy and justice," his acts in such capacity should not be held either to invalidate the whole jury or any proceedings had by it in which he participated. Any number of cases can be found to the point that, where a grand jury has been summoned and impaneled as required by law, the death of one of the members after such impanelment, thereby reducing the number below that required by the statute, does not render invalid the jury as it remains, nor vitiate any proceedings properly coming before it. People v. Hunter, 54 Cal. 65. If the requisite number, having been regularly summoned, is sworn or impaneled as grand jurors in the first instance, no objection as to number can be urged questioning the validity of an indictment, except where it may appear that 12 of such jurors have not concurred in finding it. Upon this point it is our conclusion that the fact that jurors Nile and Hughes may not have been assessed on the last assessment roll of the county on property belonging to them does not operate to invalidate the indictment. The case of People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 Pac. 617, is not an authority supporting petitioner's contention. There the question was whether or not, when impaneling a grand jury, and after excuses allowed there were remaining 20 jurors from whom to select the required number, 2 of whom, in reply to questions by the district attorney, declared they were not assessed on the last assessment roll of the county, upon the excuse of such jurors by the court after challenge by the district attorney, and the ordering of a special venire for two persons from whom to complete the panel, was the proper procedure under the provisions of the Code upon the subject. The court held that the course pursued was regular and proper.

The third and last point relied upon is that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. Without passing upon the question of whether or not the indictment might in some respects be amenable to criticism under either a general or special demurrer, it may be said that the offense charged therein is sufficiently set forth to withstand attack in this proceeding. The purpose of the remedy here sought is, like that afforded by the writ of habeas corpus, solely to determine the question of jurisdiction, and consequently the principle declared upon a similar point in the case of Ex parte Ruef, on Habeas Corpus, supra, is pertinent here. In that case the court says: "On habeas corpus the inquiry into the sufficiency of an indictment is limited. We think the true rule is that where an indictment purports or attempts to state an offense of a kind of which the court assuming to proceed has jurisdiction, the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on habeas corpus. The indictment here, it may be said, certainly makes "an attempt to state an offense," and with equal certainty fully meets the test, so far as a proceeding of this character is concerned, laid down in the Ruef Case. A large array of authorities is cited by the learned counsel for petitioner in the discussion of the numerous points growing out of the main contention. The briefs on both sides are voluminous and able, showing, as we have before suggested, commendable and assiduous industry; but it would only compel unnecessary prolixity to undertake to notice all the points discussed, many of which only collaterally affect the principal question in dispute, or to enter upon the laborious task of distinguishing, as can without difficulty be done, the many cases offered in support of the contention of petitioner, from the one at bar. We have given careful attention to the record, and to the arguments, oral and written, and find no reason for entertaining any doubt that the respondents have jurisdiction to try petitioner upon the charge alleged in the indictment.

For the foregoing reasons, the order to show cause will be discharged, and the application for a peremptory writ of prohibition denied.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF SANTA ANA v. WELLS et al. (Civ. 382.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 30, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—BOND ON APPEAL FROM TWO DECISIONS.

Where there was a notice of appeal from a judgment and from an order denying a new trial, and the only undertaking filed was conditioned to "pay all costs and damages which may be awarded on the appeal or on a dismissal thereof, not to exceed $300," though the time for one of the appeals had expired, the appeals will be dismissed, since it is not possible to determine which appeal is referred to in the undertaking.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 2097, 2098.]

2. SAME—NEW BOND.

An application for leave to file a new undertaking, after the time allowed for filing has expired, must be denied, since to allow a new bond would be equivalent to allowing a new appeal after the time fixed by law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 2065.]

Appeals from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana against T. A. Wells and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeals dismissed.

J. Marion Brooks, for appellants. E. E. Keech, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Motion to dismiss appeals. The notice of appeal was from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The only undertaking filed was conditioned to "pay all costs and damages which may be awarded on the appeal or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding three hundred dollars." It is not possible to determine which appeal is referred to in the undertaking. "It is so ambiguous that it must be regarded as if none had been filed." People v. Center, 61 Cal. 191; Home & Loan Associates v. Wilkins, 71 Cal. 626, 12 Pac. 799. The fact that the time had elapsed within which one of the appeals should be taken is of no consequence. The notice referred to the judgment and order, both of which were appealable. A different rule applies when the notice relates to a nonappealable order. Wadleigh v. Phelps, 147 Cal. 140, 81 Pac. 418.

The application to file a new undertaking must be denied. "To allow a new one to be filed would be, in effect, to permit a new appeal to be perfected after the time fixed by law." Home & Loan Associates v. Wilkins, supra.

Application to file undertaking is denied, and the appeals dismissed.

TALLY v. GANAHL. (L. A. 1,439.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Reversal—Law of the Case.

Where, on appeal, the Supreme Court states a principle or rule of law necessary to a decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case, and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress both in the trial court, on a subsequent appeal, and in a subsequent suit on the same cause of action, though on its subsequent consideration of the case the Supreme Court may be of the opinion that the former decision was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4358, 4360.]

2. Principal and Surety—Performance of Conditions by Creditor—Building Contract—Certificate of Architect.

A building contract provided that the architect should certify any expense or damage incurred by the owner because of the contractor's failure to perform. The contractor abandoned the work before completion, and immediately thereafter the architects were discharged. Another architect was immediately employed and superintended the completion of the building. Held, that a certificate of damages, signed by the new architect and by the only available member of the firm whose services had been dispensed with, the whereabouts of the other being unknown, was a sufficient compliance with the contract to entitle the owner to recover on the contractor's bond.

3. Indemnity—Builder's Bond—Scope of Liability.

Where the owner of a building was compelled to defend against certain mechanic's lien claimants because of the contractor's failure to perform, she was entitled to recover a reasonable attorney's fee, as an element of damage in an action on the contractor's bond, providing that the contractor should complete the building within the time specified, and deliver it to the owner free from any lien or claims that might be made against it for or in respect of any labor or materials performed or furnished, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indemnity, §§ 15, 17.]

4. Same.

Where a building contractor's bond provided that the contractor should complete the building on or before November 1, 1897, but the completion was delayed by the contractor's default for two months and nineteen days after that date, plaintiff was entitled to recover against the contractor's sureties for the rental value of the building during the delay.

5. Parties—Joint Contractors—Joinder.

Where, in an action on a contractor's bond signed by two sureties jointly, the complaint alleged that one of them was absent from the state and without the jurisdiction of the court, it was not necessary to make such absent surety a party to the suit in order to recover a personal judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 53.]

6. Damages—Breach of Contract—Interest.

Where an architect's certificate showed that the owner of the building suffered damages amounting to a specified sum by the contractor's default, the owner was entitled to recover interest at least from the date of the certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, §§ 135, 141.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Thomas L. Tally against J. G. Ganahl. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. L. Batcheller, for appellant. Clarence A. Miller (Benjamin E. Page, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In the case of Tally v. Parsons, 131 Cal. 516, 63 Pac. 833, the judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. The sole appellant in that case was J. G. Ganahl, the appellant here. When the case reached the superior court, after a reversal, the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the action without prejudice to a new action, and judgment for dismissal was entered accordingly. Thereupon he began the present action against Ganahl alone, upon the same bond as that sued on in the former action. Judgment in the present action was given in favor of the plaintiff. The present appeal is from that judgment. Certain alleged errors of law are presented upon the appeal by a bill of exceptions contained in the record. The bond sued on was given by Ganahl and others to secure the performance by the principal, H. Parsons, of a contract whereby he agreed to build for Mary A. Tally, assignor of plaintiff, a certain dwelling house, for the sum of $2,340. After partially completing the building, Parsons abandoned the work, and thereupon Mary A. Tally proceeded to complete the building herself, according to the plans and specifications mentioned in the contract, at her own expense. The judgment given in this case was for the sum of $827.05, consisting of $515.86, being the difference between the contract price and the cost of completion of the building, of $100 as attorney's fees in certain suits for the foreclosure of liens caused by the failure of Parsons to pay for labor and material, and $131.55 for rents lost to the owner during the delay caused by the contractor's failure; the balance, $79.64, being for interest due the plaintiff on account of the delay in payment.

1. The principal point decided by this court on the former appeal was that, under the terms of the contract, and upon this court's conception in that case of the theory upon which the plaintiff based his right to recover, it was an essential condition precedent to such recovery that the architects of the building should have audited and certified the expense incurred by the owner in completing the building and the damage caused by the failure of the contractor to perform. No such certificate having been made, so far as was shown by the record in the case, the judgment was reversed. This ruling, appellant claims, has become the law of the case, binding and conclusive in this action, not only upon the superior court, but upon this court and on this appeal as well. The respondent contends that the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply where the action in which the ruling was made is subsequently dismissed without prejudice, and a new action begun upon the same cause. The contrary has been held in a case where, after a decision on the defendant's appeal, reversing the judgment because a certain power of attorney was insufficient to authorize the particular conveyance on which plaintiff relied, the defendants began a new suit in equity to enjoin further claims under the void conveyance. Portland Tr. Co. v. Coulter, 23 Or. 131, 31 Pac. 280. It was also held in that case, however, that the former construction of the power was correct. But, for the purposes of this case, we think it better to assume, without deciding the point, that the doctrine laid down in Tally v. Parsons is binding in this case, so far as it presents precisely the same question. We think the ruling there made does not apply here. The doctrine of the law of the case is this: That where, upon an appeal, the Supreme Court, in deciding the appeal, states in its opinion a principle or rule of law, necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case, and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal, and, as here assumed, in any subsequent suit for the same cause of action, and this, although in its subsequent consideration, this court may be clearly of the opinion that the former decision is erroneous in that particular. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Wixon v. Divine, 80 Cal. 386, 22 Pac. 224; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 516, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; People v. Thomson, 115 Cal. 160, 46 Pac. 912. Indeed, it is only when the former rule is deemed erroneous that the doctrine of the law of the case becomes at all important. It is a necessary concomitant of this doctrine, that the former ruling is not binding upon the second hearing, except as to questions which involve and are controlled by the same principle. Mattingly v. Pennie, supra.

2. Treating the question, then, as one to be governed by the law of the former decision, appellant contends that there was a failure to show a compliance with the provision of the contract calling for the certificate of the architects to the amount of the expense and damage incurred by the owner, and that the certificate which was actually introduced in evidence was an insufficient compliance with this requirement of the contract. The facts in this regard, as pleaded and found by the court, are that Ehlers & Liddell were the architects employed to superintend the construction of the building, and were designated by name in the contract; that, immediately after the abandonment of the contract by Parsons, the contractor, these architects were discharged from employment by the owner upon the ground of their carelessness and incompetency, and the court finds that, in fact, they were careless and incompetent. The owner immediately employed another architect, who superintended the construction of the building until its completion. The certificate of this architect is given, together with the certificate of the discharged architect Liddell. The certificate of Ehlers is not produced; it appearing that the firm of Ehlers & Liddell had dissolved partnership a short time after the completion of the building, and that Ehlers, though he had been in Los Angeles at the time of the trial of the first case, was not to be found thereafter. The question thus presented is whether a justifiable excuse is shown for the failure to comply strictly with the terms of the contract. In full recognition of the right of sureties to stand upon the letter of their contract, we think a sufficient excuse is thus shown. Appellant argues, still urging the law of the case, that the proofs in this regard do not meet what he considers to be the requirements laid down in Tally v. Parsons, supra. It is there said: "The finding states that the owner discharged the architects on the ground that they were careless, incompetent, and dishonest, and there is no finding that such grounds were true. Even if they were true, there would have to be some allegation or finding showing a good and sufficient excuse for not having the amount audited and certified by the architect; if the architects had refused to act in the matter, or if they had acted, but acted fraudulently or corruptly or through mistake, the plaintiff could have alleged and proven such excuse, and thus relieved himself of the condition." Appellant would construe the language of the last sentence as expressing the only methods by which a plaintiff under such circumstances could obtain relief. Such however, is not its meaning. Aside from the circumstance that the language, being addressed to a state of facts not existing in the earlier case, is simply dictum, and therefore not binding, appellant's interpretation distorts its true intent. The language used is by way of illustration. It instances examples of what would be a sufficient excuse for a failure of strict compliance, but by no means undertakes or pretends to set forth all sufficient grounds for such excuse. Thus, for example, if the two architects had died before the possibility of compliance with the terms of the contract, it would not be said that some substituted method of certifying the expense and damage would not have been permissible. It is a reasonable construction of the contract that it contemplated the production of the certificate of the architect or architects actually superintending the work. Such a certificate was actually presented. Moreover, there was the separate certificate of one of the two architects named in the contract, besides evidence of the inability to secure the other because of his absence and unknown whereabouts. Moreover, again, it may be pointed out that, while the evidence of the certificate is declared to be conclusive proof upon the matter of expense and damage, evidence independent of the certificate was offered, showing not only what the expense and damage actually were, but that they were in fact reasonable. This evidence would have supported a judgment had the action been in form for the recovery of the value of the labor which plaintiff's assignor was obliged to employ and the value of the material which he was obliged to purchase. And, finally, the evidence upon all of these matters stands without conflict, defendant resting solely upon the technical proposition of a noncompliance with the terms of the contract. Indeed, had plaintiff pleaded his action in quantum meruit, and relied for his recovery upon the value as distinguished from his cost and outlay, his case would have been full and complete. It is concluded upon this proposition that sufficient excuse has been shown for plaintiff's failure to comply in absolute strictness with the requirements of the contract.

3. The bond sued on covenanted that the contractors should complete the building within the time specified and should deliver it to the owner "free from all liens and claims that may be made or filed against the same, for or in respect of any labor or materials performed or furnished on or for said building." After the completion of the building, certain persons who had performed labor for Parsons in the erection of the building, and others who had furnished him materials therefor, filed claims of liens against the premises and began suits to foreclose the same. It became necessary for Mary A. Tally to employ an attorney to advise her in regard to these suits and make proper defense thereto sufficient to protect her interests, and she did so at an expense of $100. As a result of the suits and of her employment of the attorney, the amount of the liens was ascertained, she paid the amount into court, and secured a discharge of the several liens. The amount paid to the attorney in these suits was claimed in the complaint as special damages and was allowed by the court, after due proof of the facts. We perceive no error in this. It was damages proximately caused by the breach of the agreement to deliver the building free from liens, a covenant for which the bond was security. The liens in question were fairly within the terms of that agreement, the owner was acting in good faith, and the fee was found to be reasonable.

4. One of the conditions of the bond was that the contractor should complete the building on or before November 1, 1897. The finding of the court is that by the default of the contractor the completion of the building was delayed two months and nineteen days after that date, and that for the rent during the period of this delay the owner could have obtained the sum of $131.55. This was alleged as special damage and was included in the judgment. It was directly caused by the breach of the bond and was properly allowed.

5. There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the complaint for nonjoinder of Randall, one of the two joint sureties on the bond sued on. The complaint alleges that at the time it was filed Randall was absent from the state of California and without the jurisdiction of the court. In such cases it is not necessary to make the absent joint contractor a party to a suit on the joint contract to recover a personal judgment. 15 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 550; Merriman v. Barker, 121 Ind. 80, 22 N. E. 994.

No further finding was necessary to justify the allowance of interest. It appeared from the findings that the certificate of the architects, Train and Liddell, showing that the above mentioned sums, amounting to $747.41, were due the owner, was made in writing on June 7, 1901. At that time, if not sooner, this demand became a liquidated and matured debt bearing legal interest. Interest was allowed from that date.

The judgment is affirmed.

KERN ISLAND IRRIGATING CO. v. CITY OF BAKERSFIELD. (L. A. 1,848.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1907. Rehearing Denied July 18, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — STREETS — GRANT OF RIGHT TO USE STREET FOR PURPOSES OTHER THAN HIGHWAY.

An oral agreement by the owners of lots abutting on a street to the construction and maintenance of a larger ditch in the street than had previously existed, and on a new line, not executed until long after the street became a public highway, did not bind the public authorities, and hence the right of way for a new and larger ditch, upon a different line from that of the old one, was not paramount to the right of the public to use the highway, but was an unlawful obstruction thereto.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—EASEMENTS—EXTENT OF RIGHT—LIMITATION BY USE.

Under Civ. Code, § 806, providing that the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant or the enjoyment by which it was acquired, where the owners of lots abutting on a street before its establishment as a public highway orally granted a right of way for a ditch at some place in the street, and a ditch already in the street was taken possession of and used, the grant as to the size and location of the ditch became fixed and certain, and does not carry any right to enlarge the old ditch, change its course, or make another ditch upon a new line.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 228.]

3. APPEAL — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF COURT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE IN SUPPORT.

Where evidence was ambiguous, but capable of the construction given it by the trial court, the findings of the trial court thereon will not be disturbed, though it is capable of a different construction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3979.]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—EASEMENTS—CREATION—PRESCRIPTION—ACQUISITION OF RIGHT OF WAY.

Where the construction of a ditch in a street was without right, and so as to create an unlawful obstruction thereto, the user of the ditch for a year, without objection from the public authorities, created no prescriptive rights to continue to maintain the ditch.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 224.]

5. PLEADING — AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT — NECESSITY FOR AMENDMENT.

Where the right to maintain a new ditch in a street could not be predicated upon a previously acquired right to use an old ditch there, in a suit to enjoin defendant from obstructing the new ditch, the court did not err in refusing leave to amend the complaint by averring the facts concerning the old ditch.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 734.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Suit by the Kern Island Irrigating Company against the city of Bakersfield to enjoin defendant from obstructing a certain water ditch. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Laird & Packard and H. L. Packard, for appellant. C. C. Cowgill and Geo. Flournoy, Jr., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The object of the action was to enjoin the defendant from obstructing a certain water ditch in the city of Bakersfield and extending along Chester avenue, from Fifth street south to Fourth street. The plaintiff claims to be the owner of the ditch and to be entitled to use it, and that its right is superior to that of the public to use the street as a public highway.

The facts shown by the evidence are as follows: In 1887 the owner of some 400 acres of farming land subdivided it into lots and streets for the purpose of selling the lots for residence purposes, and at the same time made a map of the subdivision, showing Chester avenue as a public street, including the part thereof between Fourth and Fifth streets. There was then, and had been for many years, a small irrigating ditch in and along that part of the avenue. In order to make the lots suitable for residence purposes, and salable, it was necessary that a supply of water for irrigating and domestic use thereon should be available. To secure this, the owners of the tract verbally agreed with the plaintiff to give it a right of way along Chester avenue for a ditch in which to conduct the water to the abutting lots. In consideration thereof, the plaintiff agreed to sell and supply water from the ditch to lot owners. In pursuance of this agreement, which was indefinite as to the exact location and size of the right of way, the plaintiff took possession of the small ditch aforesaid, and for five years thereafter—that is, until some time in the year 1892—used that ditch to supply the water to the persons who bought lots on the avenue. During that period a number of lots abutting on that part of the avenue above mentioned were sold, and the avenue became established as a public highway by the dedication of the original owners of the tract and by the acceptance and user thereof by the public. The court found that it became such highway about January 1, 1888. It is claimed that this finding is not justified by the evidence. The precise time at which it became a public highway is not important to the case, provided it appears that it was prior to the year 1892, when the new ditch, mentioned in the complaint, was made. There is evidence sufficient to justify a finding that it became such public highway in March, 1889. The verbal agreement for the right of way, and the taking of the small ditch, seem to have been prior to the dedication and acceptance of the avenue as a highway, and it does not appear that the plaintiff joined in the dedication. Consequently, the highway was subject to the right of the plaintiff to use this small ditch as a conduit for the water. In 1892 the demand for water had increased, and the small ditch was not large enough to carry the water necessary to supply that demand, which included water for irrigating farming lands below the tract subdivided.

Some time during this latter year the plaintiff made the ditch in controversy. It continued to use this new ditch thereafter until the obstruction complained of, which was in November, 1903. The new ditch had five or six times greater capacity than the old ditch. It was not built on the same ground as the old ditch, but was placed in the avenue on a different line. No consent, or right, for its construction and maintenance in the highway was ever given by the board of supervisors of the county, nor by the city of Bakersfield. The city was incorporated in February, 1898. No objection to this ditch is shown to have been made by the public authorities, until the action of the city in 1903, which is the subject of this complaint.

Upon these facts, the court, in effect, found that the plaintiff had no right to maintain the ditch in a public street and gave judgment for the defendant. We think the judgment is correct. It may be true, as claimed, that the owners of the abutting lots orally agreed to the construction and maintenance of the large ditch in the street. Such an agreement, however, could not bind the public authorities. The agreement was not executed until long after the avenue became a public highway. Therefore the right of way for the new ditch upon a different line from that of the old one was not paramount to the right of the public to use the highway, but was an unlawful obstruction thereto. The right given in 1887 was a general right to make or use a ditch at some place in the street, and was indefinite both as to the size and precise location of such ditch. The size and location of the ditch became fixed and certain when the small ditch was taken and used for the purposes agreed upon. Winslow v. Vallejo, 148 Cal. 725, 84 Pac. 191, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851. The oral grant of a right of way then became fixed and complete. It did not include or carry with it any right to enlarge the old ditch, change its course, or make another ditch upon a new line after it thus became fixed and definite. Civ. Code, § 806; Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 Pac. 381; Allen v. San Jose L. & W. Co., 92 Cal. 138, 28 Pac. 215, 15 L. R. A. 93; Winslow v. Vallejo, 148 Cal. 725, 84 Pac. 191, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851.

There was some evidence tending to show that the general right of way given to plaintiff in 1887 by the owners of the subdivision was the right under which they claimed authority to make the new ditch in 1892. The court below, however, did not give the testimony this construction, and, even if we concede that it is susceptible thereof, it must also be conceded that it is ambiguous in this respect, and is capable of the construction that it carried only the right to appropriate the small ditch, and that it did not confer any right to make the ditch in controversy. In this condition of the evidence we cannot disturb the findings of the court below.

The user of the new ditch from 1892 until 1903, without objection from the public authorities, created no prescriptive right in favor of the plaintiff to continue to maintain the same as a ditch along the highway. Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 275; People v. Gold Run, 66 Cal. 147, 4 Pac. 1152, 56 Am. Rep. 80; Yolo Co. v. Barney, 79 Cal. 378, 21 Pac. 833, 12 Am. St. Rep. 152; Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 95, 25 Pac. 258; Board v. Martin, 92 Cal. 218, 28 Pac. 799; Ames v. San Diego, 101 Cal. 394, 35 Pac. 1005; Bowen v. Wendt, 103 Cal. 236, 37 Pac. 149; Cloverdale v. Smith, 128 Cal. 235, 60 Pac. 851.

The court did not err in refusing leave to amend the complaint by averring the facts concerning the old ditch as above set forth. As above stated, the right to maintain the new ditch could not be predicated upon the previously acquired right to use the old ditch. The proposed amendment, therefore, showed no additional right in plaintiff.

COLEGROVE WATER CO. v. CITY OF HOLLYWOOD et al. (L. A. 1,799.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1907.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—EASEMENTS—EXTENT OF RIGHT—LIMITATIONS BY USE.

Under Civ. Code, § 806, providing that the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired, where plaintiff acquired the right by user to conduct water across a highway, his right was limited to a continuance of the use in the manner and to the extent which it had been enjoyed.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREETS—PRIVILEGES OF ABUTTING OWNERS—EXCAVATION AND OTHER STRUCTURES BELOW STREETS.

Where plaintiff was the owner of the fee, or was the licensee of the owners of the fee, of portions of certain public streets, he had the right thereby to lay pipes in those portions of the bed of the street for conducting water across the street, so long as they did not interfere with its use by the public, and to make the necessary excavations in the street to enable him to effect his purpose, where he gave notice of his intention to the city and offered to secure it against any damage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1444.]

3. SAME—USE OF HIGHWAY—ORDINANCES.

A city ordinance, forbidding the laying of any pipe in a public street without first obtaining from the city board of trustees the privilege of using such public street for this purpose, has no application to the rights of the owner of the soil covered by a public street to use it in a manner not in conflict with the public use, since he is merely exercising one of the incidents of the ownership which, in dedicating the highway, he has retained in himself.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1444.]

4. APPEAL—FINDINGS RESPONSIVE TO THE ISSUES.

Where plaintiff failed to allege that he was the owner of the fee to the east half of a street, but defendants in their answer made averments from which it may be inferred that the land of plaintiff's predecessor in title was bounded on the west by the street, the presumption arises, under the express provisions of Civ.

Code, § 831, that the adjoining proprietor owned to the center of the street, and, the evidence in support of plaintiff's title to this half of the street having been introduced without objection, the defendants cannot on appeal object that the finding that plaintiff owned the fee to the east half of the street was not responsive to any issue made by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1053, 1054–1057.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Suit by the Colegrove Water Company against the city of Hollywood, William C. Fry, as superintendent of streets, and Cornelius Cole, to enjoin defendants city of Hollywood and William C. Fry from interfering with plaintiff's laying pipes across certain streets of the city. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants the city of Hollywood and William C. Fry appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Young, for appellants. Wellington Clark and W. Cole, for respondent. Cornelius Cole, in pro. per.

SLOSS, J. This action brought to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants, the city of Hollywood and its superintendent of streets, from interfering with plaintiff in its efforts to lay pipes across two streets of said city, resulted in a judgment granting to plaintiff the relief sought. A motion for a new trial, made by the defendants enjoined, was denied. Said defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The general nature of the case is shown by the following facts found by the court: The plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of California for the purpose of supplying water for domestic and other purposes. The defendant the city of Hollywood is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, having been organized as such in November, 1903. Prior to 1898, and up to the 5th day of December, 1904, Cornelia Cole McLaughlin was the owner of certain land. On said 5th day of December she sold it to plaintiff, which has since said date been the owner thereof. Said land is bounded on the west by a street known as "Gower Street," covering a strip 50 feet wide, which had been, in 1877, conveyed to the county of Los Angeles, by the then owners of the land, for a road. To the west of Gower street is a piece of land owned by the defendant Cornelius Cole. South of the last-mentioned tract is other land owned by said Cornelius Cole; the two pieces last named being separated by a strip of land dedicated by said Cole, the owner thereof, as a highway, and known as "Wilson Avenue." All of said lands and streets are now within the limits of the city of Hollywood. The fee of said Gower street belongs, as to the east half thereof, to plaintiff, and as to the west half to the defendant Cole. All of the land above described, except that embraced in the streets, is planted to lemon trees and requires irrigation. In the year 1898 said Cornelia Cole McLaughlin sunk a well upon the premises owned by her and established a pumping plant capable of pumping 5,000 gallons of water an hour. The water from said well has been conducted by means of conduits, pipes, and ditches to the orchards above described, and to an additional lemon orchard situated south of the land of Cornelius Cole, and outside of the limits of the city of Hollywood. In order to conduct the water to the lands requiring irrigation, a wooden box or culvert was, in the year 1898, placed beneath the surface of Gower street so as not to obstruct travel thereon, and said box or culvert was maintained therein, and used until about two years before the trial, when it was replaced by an iron pipe, which has since said time been retained therein. In the year 1898, a wooden structure, having a top and sides, was placed across Wilson avenue in order to conduct the water across said avenue to the lands of Cornelius Cole south of said Wilson avenue, and to the other lands irrigated from the well. Where said ditches and conduits were located upon the lands of Cornelius Cole, they were so located and maintained thereon with his knowledge and consent. The plaintiff is the successor to all the interest of Cornelia Cole McLaughlin in said ditches, boxes, pipes, etc., and to the consent of Cole to their location and use upon his land. Paragraph 21 of the findings declares that prior to the commencement of this action the plaintiff, "for the improvement and betterment of its water plant," undertook to lay "iron pipe to take the place of all said ditches, box or culvert, wooden structure, and iron pipe," and while engaged in excavating Gower street and Wilson avenue, for the purposes of laying said iron pipes in said streets, was stopped and prevented from so doing by the city of Hollywood, and the defendant Fry, its superintendent of streets. The plaintiff had, prior to such interference, given the defendants notice of its intention to do the work, and had given the city a bond conditioned for the payment of all damages occasioned by doing such work. From these facts the court drew the conclusion of law that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree enjoining the defendant city, and its superintendent of streets, from in any manner interfering with the plaintiff in excavating Gower street and Wilson avenue for the purpose of laying pipe to conduct water from said well, subject to a provision against unnecessary injury to the street and avenue, and obstruction of travel thereon. A decree in accordance with such conclusion of law followed.

The plaintiff does not claim any right to lay pipes in the streets under the provisions of article 11, § 19, of the Constitution of this state. That section grants the right to lay pipes in the streets of any city for the purpose of supplying such city and its inhabitants with fresh water. By its terms, it applies only to cities in which there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water. It is not alleged in the complaint, nor is it found, that there are no such public works in the city of Hollywood; nor is there any allegation, or finding, that the plaintiff desired to lay the pipes in question for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the city of Hollywood with water.

Nor can the plaintiff base a right to lay the pipe upon its prior use of the streets for the purpose of conducting water across them. The defendant is not seeking to interfere with any use which the plaintiff had enjoyed prior to the incorporation of the city, or prior to the interference complained of. Finding 21, from which we have quoted, indicates that what the plaintiff was proposing to do was to install a means of conveying water across the streets beyond and in addition to that which had theretofore existed. If the finding is to be construed to mean merely that the plaintiff was replacing the conduits already existing with others of substantially the same kind and in the same locations, the finding is not sustained by the evidence, which establishes without contradiction that in Gower street the plaintiff was seeking to substitute for a five-inch pipe a six-inch pipe running over a different course, and that in Wilson avenue it was seeking to substitute for ditches, or wooden conduits, running across the street, iron pipe crossing the street at a considerable distance from the earlier crossing. We need not here consider whether a right to use a public highway for private purposes can be acquired as against a municipality by adverse possession or by estoppel. Such right, if it can so originate, must be limited to a continuance of the use in the manner in which it had been enjoyed, and to no greater extent. "The extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired." Civ. Code, § 806. Where the right, not definitely limited by grant, has become fixed by the manner of its use, it cannot be enlarged without the consent of the parties who may be affected. Winslow v. Vallejo, 148 Cal. 725, 84 Pac. 191, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851; Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 Pac. 381; Kern Island Irr. Co. v. City of Bakersfield (decided June 19, 1907), 90 Pac. 1052. The laying of pipe on a new line, or the substitution of pipe for a ditch or wooden conduit, or for pipe of a smaller size, was therefore not authorized by the mere fact that water had already been conducted across the highway in another manner.

But, apart from any prior use, certain rights were vested in plaintiff by reason of the fact that it owned the fee, or was the licensee of those who owned the fee, of the portions of Gower street and Wilson avenue through which it was proposed to lay the pipe. One who grants to the public the right to use a strip of land as a highway, retaining in himself the ownership of the soil, parts with an easement merely. The owner of property subject to an easement may use his property in any manner and for any purpose not inconsistent with the full and free enjoyment of the easement. Hoyt v. Hart (Cal. Sup.) 87 Pac. 569. This rule applies to land devoted to use as a public road or street, as well as to land subject to a private use only. The right of the abutting owner is, of course, always subordinate to the rights of the public. In city streets the easement of the public is, as a result of the conditions of urban life, more extensive than in roads through sparsely inhabited regions. In cities, it is customary to devote not only the surface of the street, and the space above the street, to public use, but the municipality may, and frequently does, occupy the soil beneath the surface for the accommodation of sewers, gas and water pipes, electric wires, and conduits for railroads. Where the city undertakes to occupy the space above or below the surface of the street for any purpose within the scope of the public uses to which highways may be put, the use by the owner of the fee must yield to the public use. Furthermore, the use by the owner of the fee is subject to reasonable regulation in the interest of the comfort and convenience of the community as a whole. "But the owner of the land over which a highway is laid retains his right in the soil for all purposes which are consistent with the full enjoyment of the easement acquired by the public. This right of the owner may grow less and less as the public needs increase; but at all times he retains all that is not needed for public uses, subject, however, to municipal or police regulations. Allen v. City of Boston, 34 N. E. 519, 159 Mass. 324, 38 Am. St. Rep. 423. See, also, 3 Kent Com. 433; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 656, 699, 700; Tucker v. Tower, 9 Pick. 109, 19 Am. Dec. 350; McCarthy v. City of Syracuse, 46 N. Y. 194; Hanbury v. Woodward Lumber Co., 26 S. E. 477, 98 Ga. 54; Farnsworth v. City of Rockland, 22 Atl. 394, 83 Me. 508; Weller v. McCormick, 52 N. J. Law, 470, 19 Atl. 1101, 8 L. R. A. 798; Borough of Brigantine v. Holland Trust Co. (N. J. Ch.) 37 Atl. 438; Ivins v. Inhabitants of Trenton, 53 Atl. 202, 68 N. J. Law, 501; Dell Rapids M. Co. v. City of Dell Rapids, 75 N. W. 898, 11 S. D. 116, 74 Am. St. Rep. 783. And inasmuch as the right to use the soil below the surface is one that can rarely be practically enjoyed without first disturbing the surface temporarily in making the necessary excavations, it must be held that the owner of the soil has the right to make such excavations as will enable him to install the materials or do the work requisite for an enjoyment of his rights in his land. The occupation of the soil by a water pipe, so long as no public use is impeded, is a legitimate use by the owner, and carries with it the right to excavate the soil, subject to such restrictions by the municipality as will insure the least interruption to the public easement. Nothing contrary to these views is to be found in the statutes or decisions cited by appellants. The municipal corporation act gives to boards of trustees of cities of the sixth class "the management and control of * * * highways." St. 1903, p. 93, c. 86. Undoubtedly the municipality may determine the extent and manner of the public use to be made of the streets, and may regulate the use by owners of the soil. But it cannot arbitrarily take away the property rights of such owners. In Montgomery v. Railway Co., 104 Cal. 186, 37 Pac. 786, 25 L. R. A. 654, 43 Am. St. Rep. 89, and San Francisco v. Grote, 120 Cal. 61, 52 Pac. 127, 41 L. R. A. 335, 65 Am. St. Rep. 155, relied on by appellants, the court declared principles which have no application whatever to the facts here presented.

It follows that the plaintiff was acting within his rights in attempting to lay its pipes across the streets after giving notice of its intention so to do and offering to secure the city against any damage. It is claimed that there was a failure to comply with the provisions of an ordinance, pleaded in the answer, which forbade the laying of any pipe in a public street "without having first obtained from the board of trustees of said city the franchise or privilege of using such public street * * * for that purpose." The failure to find on the issue so raised is assigned as error. This ordinance does not purport to be a regulation of the manner of doing work. It assumes to require a franchise or privilege as a condition precedent to the occupation of the soil at all. The power to grant a "franchise or privilege" implies the power to withhold it (State v. City of Spokane, 63 Pac. 1116, 24 Wash. 53), and an ordinance which empowers city trustees to refuse to grant, on any terms, the right to occupy the soil covered by a street in a manner not in conflict with the public use, can have no application to the owner of the soil. Such owner is not seeking a privilege, to be granted or withheld by the city. He is merely exercising one of the incidents of the ownership which, in dedicating the highway, he has retained in himself.

It is urged that the complaint fails to allege that the plaintiff owns the fee of the east half of Gower street, and that, consequently, the finding of such ownership must be disregarded. But the appellants, in their answer, allege that the predecessor of plaintiff was the owner of the land in which the well was sunk, and make further averments from which it may be inferred that this land was bounded by Gower street. This raises a presumption that the adjoining proprietor owned to the center of the way. Civ. Code, § 831. The evidence in support of plaintiff's title to the east half of Gower street was introduced without objection. Under these circumstances, we think the appellants cannot now make the point that the finding is not responsive to any issue made by the pleadings. Barbour v. Flick, 126 Cal. 632, 59 Pac. 122; Flinn v. Ferry, 127 Cal. 648, 60 Pac. 434; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 64 Pac. 278; Carroll v. Briggs, 138 Cal. 452, 71 Pac. 501.

The findings which are necessary to the support of the judgment are fully sustained by the evidence. The judgment itself is sufficiently clear and definite.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HOWE v. SCHMIDT et al.

MONTGOMERY & MULLIN LUMBER CO. et al. v. SAME. (L. A. 1,846.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1907.)

1. CONTRACTS—BUILDING CONTRACTS—FORM—EXECUTION.

A building contract, requiring the contractor to construct the building "conformable to the drawings and specifications" by a specified architect, "signed by the parties and hereunto annexed," was fully satisfied by pages of specifications and sheets of drawings fastened together and annexed to the contract, and signed on the last page thereof by the parties; the drawing and specifications so fastened together being in effect one document, fully identified as to signatures by the signatures on the last page.

2. APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—REVIEW OF FINDINGS.

On appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment cannot be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3480.]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS—MATERIALMEN—RIGHT TO LIEN—NONCOMPLIANCE WITH SPECIFICATIONS—KNOWLEDGE.

Where a materialman furnished lumber to a contractor for the construction of a building of the kind and quality ordered by the contractor, it was no defense to the materialman's right to a lien that he knew that the material furnished did not conform to the specifications in the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 52, 54.]

4. SAME—TRIAL—FINDINGS.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a subcontractor's lien, a finding not sufficiently assailed determined that the claimant's work was improperly done in certain specified particulars, his right to a lien was not affected by a further finding that he knew at the time he constructed the work that he was not complying with the contract between the parties.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Actions by George F. Howe and by Montgomery & Mullin Lumber Co. and others against Hulda Schmidt and others to foreclose certain mechanics' liens. The court held all the liens invalid, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, certain parties appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. L. Batcheller, Foster C. Wright, A. P. Thompson, and Davis, Kemp & Post, for appellants. J. L. Murphy and Murphy & Schmidt, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. These are actions for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens, which were consolidated for the purposes of trial. George F. Howe was the original contractor, and brought his action against defendant Hulda Schmidt, the owner of the property, to foreclose his lien for an alleged balance due upon a contract entered into by him and said Schmidt for the erection of a building upon her land. In this action defendant Wright, a subcontractor, and defendants Dodd, H. Raphael Company, California Hardware Company, and the Montgomery & Mullin Lumber Co., materialmen, set up their claims and sought foreclosure of their liens, while in the second action the three last-named defendants sought the same relief as plaintiffs. The trial court adjudged all of the liens to be void, and gave judgment for the owner and against all the claimants, including the original contractor. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial made by the defendants Wright, Dodd, H. Raphael Company, California Hardware Company, and the Montgomery & Mullin Lumber Co.

The principal question presented by appellants is as to the validity of the contract between Howe and Mrs. Schmidt, which the trial court admitted in evidence over the objection of appellants. By the terms of the contract, Howe was to construct the building "conformable to the drawings and specifications made by Edward Kendall and signed by the parties and hereunto annexed." The contract produced from the recorder's office, and offered and received in evidence, consisted of three items or parts fastened together in the following order: (1) The formal contract signed on the last page thereof by both contractor and owner; (2) the specifications, signed only by the owner; and (3) the drawings or plans, the last or bottom sheet of which was signed by the contractor and owner. There was nothing to indicate that the contract, when offered in evidence, was not in the same condition as at the time of its execution. The contention is that the reference in the contract being to drawings and specifications "signed by the parties," as well as annexed, the failure of one of the parties to place his signature somewhere upon the specifications made it impossible to identify the specifications intended, except by the aid of oral evidence, and rendered the contract void. We see no good reason, however, for holding that this reference to the "drawings and specifications, * * * signed by the parties and hereunto annexed," is not fully satisfied by pages of specifications and sheets of drawings fastened together and annexed to the contract, and signed on the last page thereof by the parties. So fastened together and annexed to the contract, the drawings and specifications in fact constituted one document, fully identified as to the signatures of the parties in the manner required by the contract by the signatures on the last page. This being the situation, it is unnecessary to determine what would have been the effect had the drawings and specifications been simply "annexed," without any compliance with the requirement as to signing, and the cases cited by appellants in support of their claim are inapplicable. Worden v. Hammond, 37 Cal. 61, was a case where the agreement was to build according "to the draft, plan, and explanation hereto annexed, marked 'A,'" and no draft, plan, or explanation was attached, and it was sought to show by parol that an original paper produced by plaintiff was the one referred to. It was held that, where the reference is false, it cannot be helped out by oral evidence; the court saying that, if the written contract had contained a reference to the specifications in such a manner that their connection would be apparent upon their production, it would be regarded as a sufficient compliance with the statute. S. F. Lumber Co. v. O'Neill, 120 Cal. 455, 52 Pac. 728, was a case where the contract was held void simply because the entire contract was not filed as required by law; a sun print copy of the plans and drawings having been filed instead of the original. West Coast Lumber Co. v. Knapp, 122 Cal. 79, 54 Pac. 533, was a case where the drawings and specifications were referred to simply as "identified by the signatures of the parties," and no plans and specifications corresponding to this reference were produced. In Donnelly v. Adams, 115 Cal. 129, 46 Pac. 916, the only reference was to "plans, drawings, and specifications, * * * made by C. E. Henriksen * * * and which are signed by the parties hereto, and are to be kept and remain in the office of said architect," and there were no signed plans and specifications. In Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629, the contract provided that the work should be done "conformable to the drawings and specifications made by R. B. Young, architect, and signed by the parties, and hereto annexed," and no plans and specifications were, in fact, annexed. None of these cases lends support to the contention that the plans and specifications annexed to the contract in this case did not fully correspond with the reference.

There was an attempt made on the trial to show that the drawings and specifications had not been annexed to the contract at the time of the execution thereof; but the evidence upon this point was conflicting, and the trial court found, in effect, as we read the findings, that at the time the signatures were affixed to the agreement and the last page of the plans or drawings the various papers had been attached together, and were then in the same condition as when produced at the trial.

This portion of the finding is not attacked. The trial court, in the same connection, found that the specifications proper "were not signed by the said Howe by an oversight on his part." Complaint is made that the evidence is insufficient to justify this particular finding. If we concede this finding to be at all material, we are satisfied that it finds sufficient support in the evidence.

No good reason is urged by counsel for holding the contract void. It must be held that the trial court did not err in admitting it in evidence, or in finding it to be a valid contract between the owner and the contractor, fully measuring up to the requirements of the mechanics' lien law. So far as appellants H. R. Dodd and the California Hardware Company are concerned, no other point is made in the brief that is avaliable on motion for new trial. No finding of fact affecting the claim of either is attacked, and no error in law occurring at the trial which could have operated to their prejudice, other than the ruling admitting the contract in evidence, is suggested. Nor is there any intimation of any respect in which the decision is "against law." There being no appeal from the judgment, we cannot here consider any question as to the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment against these defendants.

The case of the appellants Montgomery & Mullin Lumber Co. and the H. Raphael Company is in the same condition as that of appellants Dodd and the California Hardware Company except in one respect. As to the Montgomery & Mullin Lumber Co., there is a finding to the effect that the claimant, in furnishing some of the lumber to the contractor for the construction of the building, furnished No. 2 lumber instead of No. 1 lumber, knowing that No. 1 lumber was required by the terms of the building contract between Howe and Schmidt; and as to the H. Raphael Company, there was a finding that the claimant knew that certain doors furnished by it to the contractor were not in compliance with the terms of the said building contract as to size. These findings are attacked as being unsupported by the evidence. There was no evidence that either of these claimants had any actual knowledge in this behalf, their only knowledge as to the requirements of the contract being such constructive knowledge as the contract filed for record imputed to them, and we take the findings as meaning no more than that the claimant knew that the materials did not comply with the requirements of the filed contract in the respects stated. There is no intimation in these findings that either of the claimants did not fully comply with the direction of the contractor as to size and quality of the materials furnished. These findings are clearly as to matters that were not embraced within the issues made by the pleadings, and, so far as the record shows, there was no evidence introduced by any party on the trial in regard thereto. On an appeal from the judgment, they, therefore, could not be considered in support of the judgment. Rudel v. County of Los Angeles, 118 Cal. 281, 286, 50 Pac. 400. See, also, Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 240, 41 Pac. 299. Whether or not they were supported by sufficient evidence would therefore appear to be immaterial on motion for a new trial.

Regardless of this, however, the findings appear to us to be as to matters entirely immaterial to the controversy between the parties to this action. The fact found is simply that these claimants knew that certain materials furnished by them to the contractor in full accord with his directions, to be used in the building, did not in all respects comply with the requirements of the original agreement between the contractor and Mrs. Schmidt, filed in the recorder's office. A materialman is not required to concern himself with the question as to whether or not material ordered by a building contractor for use in a building measures up to the requirement of the agreement between the contractor and the owner. His contractual relations are solely with the contractor dealing with him, and he simply furnishes material as directed by the party with whom he contracts. He is under no legal obligation to the owner to see that the contractor complies with his contract, and, so far as his right to a lien is concerned, is warranted in assuming that the contractor is fulfilling his contract with the owner. This is true, notwithstanding he may know that material ordered may not be in all respects as provided by the written contract on file. That contract is subject to change and modification in such matters by the parties thereto, the owner and the contractor, without notice to other parties, and the materialman has the right to assume that no fraud is being perpetrated by the contractor upon the owner in the use of the materials ordered. We do not mean to intimate that the materialman could enforce a claim of lien where the circumstances showed him to be a participant in a conspiracy to defraud the owner, but mere knowledge that materials ordered are not in full accord with the requirements of the contract on file does not create the slightest presumption of fraud. This being so, the findings in question are absolutely immaterial, and their presence could not affect the judgment to be given. Whether or not a judgment given against such claimants was correct would be determined without regard to the presence of such finding. It is clear, then, that it is immaterial whether these findings are sustained by the evidence. If such findings had been that the claimants possessed no such knowledge, their right to a judgment would have been no greater than under the present findings. The case of these appellants, then, is precisely the same as that of the appellants

Dodd and the California Hardware Company. The real question as to them appears to be one as to the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment; a question not determinable on motion for a new trial.

As to the appellant Wright, who was the subcontractor for the plumbing, gas fitting, and sewering, and who, according to the allegations of his own pleading, had agreed to do the same according to the plans and specifications contained in the contract between Mrs. Schmidt and Howe, the findings of fact attacked by the brief are findings 12, 17, and a portion of 8. Finding 12, which does not appear to be within the issues made by the pleadings, was that said Wright, as subcontractor for the plumbing work, "knew at the time he constructed the same that he was not complying with the contract between said parties, or supplying said vents and brackets. Finding 17 was not assailed in the statement on motion for new trial by specification of insufficiency. The same is true as to the portion of finding 8 complained of, which is that "the plumbing provided in said contract was improperly done, as follows—no vents were placed either in the closets or the kitchen, and the N. P. brackets for the wash basins were omitted altogether." It is manifest that finding 12, the only one of these findings assailed by specification of insufficiency, was entirely immaterial, and could not affect the rights of the claimant. That the plumbing contract was not complied with by him must be taken as conclusively established here by the unassailed portion of finding 8, already set forth. Whatever effect this failure to comply should legally have had on his claim of lien, a matter we are precluded from considering on this appeal, that effect could not be changed in the slightest degree by the further finding that he knew he was not complying with his contract. As in the case of the other claimants, if the judgment given upon these findings was erroneous, the error is one that cannot be reviewed on motion for new trial.

The order denying a new trial must be affirmed, and is so ordered.

ARELLANES v. ARELLANES. (L. A. 1,929.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1907.)

1. Deeds — Voluntary Conveyance—Validity—Burden of Proof.

Where plaintiff was 64 years of age and unable to read, write, or understand the English language at the time she conveyed her property to defendant, her son, for a nominal consideration, the burden was on defendant to show that the gift was made freely and voluntarily, and that plaintiff had full knowledge of all the facts and a perfect understanding of the effect of the transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, §§ 587, 588.]

2. Appeal—Review—Weight of Evidence.

The credit to be given to the positive testimony of a witness cannot be determined on appeal, except where the testimony, in the light of the undisputed facts, is inherently so improbable and impossible of belief as to in effect constitute no evidence at all.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3901, 3938.]

3. Parent and Child—Voluntary Conveyance—Gifts—Validity—Evidence.

In a suit to cancel a voluntary deed executed by a mother to her son, evidence held to sustain a finding that the deed was made with the intent on plaintiff's behalf to transfer her title to defendant, and constituted a valid gift.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, §§ 637, 645.]

4. Equity — Equitable Issues —Submission to Jury.

In a suit to set aside a deed, the parties not being entitled to a jury as a matter of right, the court, having called in a jury to try certain questions of fact, was entitled to reject the jury's findings and make such findings of its own as it deemed required by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 19, Equity, § 816.]

5. Cancellation of Instruments—Evidence —Materiality.

Where, in a suit by a mother to cancel a deed to her son, it was undisputed that the father had previously conveyed practically all his property to the son and had not died until some years after the execution of the deed in controversy by the mother, questions asked of two of the other children as to whether their father had left any estate to them were inadmissible.

6. Appeal — Review—Harmless Error—Exclusion of Evidence.

Where, in a suit to set aside a deed by a mother to her son, it was undisputed that by the deed she gave practically all her property to the son, the exclusion of a question asked a daughter as to whether the mother gave her any portion of her land at any time was not prejudicial error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4164.]

7. Evidence—Materiality.

In a suit by a mother to set aside a deed to her son, questions asked of a daughter as to her financial condition since the execution of the deed were immaterial.

8. Appeal—Exclusion of Evidence—Prejudice.

In a suit by a mother to set aside a deed to her son, the exclusion of a question asked of another son concerning what property he owned at the time the deed was executed was not prejudicial to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4153.]

9. Evidence—Opinions—Mental Capacity.

A witness who drew and witnessed the execution of a deed by plaintiff was competent to testify that plaintiff then appeared in a perfectly rational condition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2242.]

10. Depositions — Interrogatories—Objections—Waiver.

Where plaintiff interposed no objection to a responsive answer to one of the settled interrogatories in a deposition before the answer was read, plaintiff waived a right to have the answer stricken after the reading.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Suit by Josefa Ruiz De Arellanes against Juan B. Arellanes. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. Murphy and S. E. Crow, for appellant. H. C. Booth and W. H. Chapman, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was commenced on March 23, 1903, to obtain a decree setting aside a deed made by plaintiff to defendant on March 21, 1881, adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of the land described in such deed, and requiring defendant to account for the rents, issues, and profits thereof which had come into his hands. Judgment went for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals therefrom and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The land involved in this action is a tract known as subdivision 12 of the Rancho Punta De La Laguna, in Santa Barbara county, containing 2,042.45 acres or thereabouts. On March 21, 1881, plaintiff owned this land as her separate property, and had been such owner for several years. Its value was then about $20,500. Her husband, Luis Arellanes, owned subdivision No. 11 of the same rancho, which contained 2,554.59 acres and was of about the same value. The only other property owned by plaintiff was some live stock, consisting of about 25 head of cattle, and the undivided one-half of a lot in Santa Barbara worth from $800 to $1,000. At that time there were six living children of plaintiff and said Luis, four married daughters and two grown sons, one being the defendant. Plaintiff was then about 64 years of age, and was unable to read, write, or understand the English language. Defendant was the only child remaining with his parents, who lived on one of the two tracts above named. Plaintiff reposed implicit trust and confidence in defendant, and had several years before given him a general power of attorney, which was not revoked until shortly before the commencement of this action. On March 21, 1881, Luis Arellanes, in consideration of $3,000 to be paid, conveyed subdivision 11 of said rancho to the defendant, and at the same time plaintiff executed a grant, bargain, and sale deed purporting to convey to defendant, for the express consideration of $1, subdivision 12 of said rancho. This deed was recorded in the county recorder's office of Santa Barbara county on March 23, 1881. In the year 1884, Luis Arellanes died, having first conveyed to plaintiff the remaining one-half of the Santa Barbara lot. Since that time plaintiff has resided in the city of Santa Barbara on said lot, and defendant has been in possession of the land here involved, residing thereon with his family. The defendant kept his mother's stock on the ranch for her, and managed such stock for her as he had been doing for years before the execution of the deed. The theory of plaintiff's case, as disclosed by the amended complaint upon which the action was tried, was that defendant procured the execution of the deed by her by falsely and fraudulently representing to her that the same was the conveyance from Luis Arellanes of his portion of the rancho, which it was necessary for her to sign as the wife of said Luis, and that she did not discover the contrary until about February 20, 1903, when she was informed thereof by one Quintero in the city of Santa Barbara.

Defendant by his answer denied the allegation of said complaint in this behalf, alleging that by such deed plaintiff intended to give, grant, and convey her said property to him. Various questions relating to the issue thus made were submitted to an advisory jury. Although the jury found that the plaintiff understood what land she owned in the rancho, and that the attorney who drew the deed and witnessed its execution translated and explained the contents thereof to plaintiff before it was signed, it answered the other questions favorably to plaintiff's contention. The trial court refused to adopt these findings of the jury, and found explicitly that defendant had never taken advantage of the trust and confidence reposed in him by plaintiff, had never made any such representation as was alleged, or any false or fraudulent representation, or any request, that plaintiff sign any paper as the wife of Luis Arellanes; that plaintiff, after consultation with her husband regarding his proposed conveyance, voluntarily offered to give her portion of the rancho to defendant, and requested him to consult with an attorney regarding the making of the transfer; that it was upon the advice of said attorney that the nominal consideration of $1 was stated in plaintiff's deed; that said attorney, having prepared the respective deeds for the plaintiff and her husband to execute, plaintiff, her husband, and defendant went to the office of the attorney, whereupon the two deeds were fully translated and explained to both plaintiff and her husband; that the husband alone executed the deed to his portion, and that thereupon the plaintiff, with full knowledge of its contents, signed, executed, and delivered to defendant the deed of her portion, having, prior to delivery, duly acknowledged such execution before a notary public. It was further found that the plaintiff well knew and understood that she was executing to defendant a deed conveying her portion of the ranch, and intended thereby to give, grant, and convey to him all her interest therein, and that defendant thereupon entered into possession of the same under said deed, and has ever since continued in such possession, claiming to own the same under the deed, paying all taxes thereon, and exercising all the ordinary acts of ownership. There was no intimation in the complaint of any undue influence exerted by defendant in the matter of the execution of the deed, plaintiff's case being based upon the alleged false representations and lack of knowledge as to the nature of the instrument executed by her.

We take the findings as establishing an absolute gift of this land by plaintiff to her son, made freely and voluntarily in the execution of a purpose conceived by her to so dispose of the property, without the exercise of any fraud on the part of the son, and with full understanding on her part of all the facts and the effect of such a transfer. It is unnecessary to cite authorities to the proposition that such a gift so made cannot be set aside at the instance of the donor, and we do not understand counsel for plaintiff to claim otherwise. Their claim necessarily is that the findings in this respect are not sustained by the evidence.

As appears from the opinion of the trial court filed in rendering the decision in this case, the learned judge in his consideration of the evidence was guided by the views declared in Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 910, in the following language: "Transactions like the one under consideration are watched by courts of equity with the most scrutinizing jealousy, and are generally held to be presumptively void. They will be set aside upon the discovery of the least fraud, and every presumption ought to be indulged against them. The person who makes the donation and bestows the confidence is not bound to show that any imposition has been practiced upon him. It is sufficient for him to establish intimate and confidential relations with the donee. * * * Where the parent is of great age, or is enfeebled by disease, and conveys his entire estate to one child, to the exclusion of other children dependent upon his bounty, the burden is unquestionably upon the donee to show that the gift was made freely and voluntarily, and with full knowledge of all the facts, and with perfect understanding of the effect of the transfer." This states the law as favorably for plaintiff as is possible under the authorities. After quoting this language from the opinion in Soberanes v. Soberanes, supra, the learned judge said: "In this case, the relation of mother and son under the circumstances of that case created such a confidential relation, independent of the power of attorney; and the latter, in itself, created such a relation between plaintiff and defendant. My decision in this case is based upon the opinion that the defendant has met the foregoing burden on the question of the execution and delivery of the deed here in question." We have carefully examined the record, and are unable to see any ground for here holding that the trial court was not warranted by the evidence in so concluding, and in making the findings assailed.

As is frequently done by the party assailing the findings of a trial court, the attempt is made to dispose of certain evidence supporting the findings by stating reasons why it should not have been accepted by the court as true. The reasons so stated as to the positive evidence given by the defendant relating to the transaction assailed in this case may have been worthy of, and doubtless received, serious consideration at the hands of the trial court. It should not, however, be necessary to here state that the amount of credit to be given to the positive testimony of any witness is solely a question for the trial tribunal, except perhaps, where the testimony, in the light of the undisputed facts, is inherently so improbable and impossible of belief as to, in effect, constitute no evidence at all. See Fowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 178, 182. It certainly cannot be said that defendant's testimony was of such a nature as to be placed in the category last mentioned. Much reliance is placed, in this connection, upon letters written by plaintiff to defendant, and by defendant to plaintiff, which, it is asserted, show claims by plaintiff, and admissions by defendant, to the effect that he was simply holding this land for her, and was accountable to her for the profits. We do not so read this correspondence. There is nothing therein which to our minds is inconsistent with the claim made by defendant. It is true that she frequently asked him for small amounts of money to meet her needs as they arose, but there was nothing in her letters to indicate that she did this other than as a mother who had the right to expect that a dutiful and affectionate son, to whom she had given so much, would desire to make her comfortable in her old age. He frequently complied with her requests, always apparently to the best of his ability, and his letters indicated a commendable desire on his part to keep her from want, but we cannot construe them as showing any admission on his part to the effect that plaintiff had any interest in the land.

There is much in the record, including the evidence of disinterested witnesses as to statements made by plaintiff shortly after the execution of the deed, to corroborate the defendant's testimony. It would, however, unnecessarily extend this opinion to set forth the various facts and circumstances shown by the record tending to that end, and it must suffice to state, as has already been said, that the case made was such as to fully support the conclusions of the trial court evidenced by the findings under consideration.

Certain evidence of defendant, relied on by plaintiff as showing that defendant held the land upon some understanding that he would give to plaintiff the profits thereof, referred to a time anterior to the execution of the deed, and other evidence given by him as to what plaintiff said in proposing to give him the land fails to show any understanding on the part of either that plaintiff was to be supported therefrom. The trial court, in deciding the case, undoubtedly had the right to find contrary to answers given by the jury to certain questions submitted to it. In actions of this character, a party is not entitled to a jury as a matter of right, and, if a jury be called in, it simply acts in an advisory capacity, the court being compelled to make findings of its own, and, in so doing, it is free to adopt or reject the findings of the jury as it deems proper. In determining whether the findings of the trial court are sustained by the evidence, it is immaterial that such findings are contrary to the findings of the jury.

Of the many alleged errors in the matters of the reception and rejection of evidence, but few require mention. The objections to questions asked two of the other children of plaintiff as to whether their father had left any estate to them when he died were properly sustained. The father did not die until some years after the execution of the deed by plaintiff. It was undisputed that the father conveyed practically all his property to defendant in 1881 in consideration of $3,000. There was no prejudicial error in sustaining the objection to the question asked a daughter as to whether her mother gave her any portion of her land at any time, for there was no dispute whatever as to the fact that, by the deed here assailed, she gave practically all her property to the defendant. The objection on the ground of immateriality to the questions asked the same daughter as to her financial condition since the year 1881 was properly sustained.

The other son, Guillermo, was asked as to what property he owned at the time of the execution of the deed by plaintiff to defendant, and an objection thereto was sustained. Assuming this to have been a proper question, we cannot conceive that defendant's right was prejudicially affected by the ruling under the circumstances of this case. The matter was one of very little importance, and we think the record otherwise shows that this brother had little, if any property.

A witness who drew and witnessed the execution of a deed by plaintiff in 1895, which contained a recital to the effect that the only property she then owned was the property thereby granted, being the Santa Barbara lot, over objection that he had not shown himself competent to testify on this point, stated that he then found her to be in a perfectly rational condition, and that her mind was clear. This answer was substantially simply that she then appeared to be rational, a matter as to which any witness to a transaction is competent to testify. People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 595, 75 Pac. 177. The question asked the witness Eduardo Arellanes upon the same subject was substantially only a question as to her appearance at this time.

We cannot hold that the court erred in refusing to strike out the answer to one of the settled interrogatories in the deposition of the witness Kaiser. The answer was strictly responsive to the question, and no objection had been interposed before the reading of the answer. Plaintiff, by allowing the answer to be read without objection, waived the right to object after the reading of the answer.

We have examined each of the other alleged errors in rulings on evidence, but find nothing of sufficient importance to warrant discussion. There was no failure to find upon any material issue. The case appears to us to have been fairly tried, and the record shows no prejudicial error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WELDON v. ROGERS. (L. A. 1,800.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1907. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1907.)

1. Judgment — Enforcement — Statutes — Amendment.

Code Civ. Proc. § 685, prior to April 9, 1895, provided that in all cases other than for the recovery of money the judgment may be enforced after five years from its entry by leave of the court on motion or by judgment for that purpose, founded on supplemental pleadings. On that date the section was amended by omitting the words "other than for the recovery of money," and by adding a provision that the section should not revive a judgment for the recovery of money which should have been barred by the statute of limitations at the time of the passage of the act. Held, that the amendment was applicable by its terms to a money judgment recovered April 2, 1891, which was not barred on the date the amendment took effect.

2. Limitation of Actions — Extension — Statutes.

Act April 9, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 38, c. 33), amending Code Civ. Proc. § 685, so as to authorize the enforcement of all judgments after five years by leave of court on motion or by judgment for that purpose, founded on supplemental pleadings, was in the nature of an extension of the period of limitation and a proper exercise of legislative power, so far as it applied to all judgments as to which limitations had not already run.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 10, 11.]

3. Judgment—Enforcement—Statutes.

Code Civ. Proc. § 686, declares that, notwithstanding the death of a party after judgment, execution may issue, in case of the death of the judgment creditor, on the application of his executor, administrator, or successor in interest, and section 685, as amended by Act April 9, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 38, c. 33) declares that judgment may be enforced after five years from the date of its entry by leave of the court "on motion." Held, that the words "motion" and "application" had the same signification, and that on the death of a judgment creditor his administratrix was not required to institute an action at law to enforce the judgment, but was entitled to an execution on motion.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by T. J. Weldon against Ralph Rogers. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See 82 Pac. 352.

McNutt & Hannon, Will D. Gould, and Jas. H. Blanchard, for appellant. Louis Luckel, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. On April 2, 1891, plaintiff recovered a money judgment against defendant for $3,960, with interest and costs. Nothing was done with respect to said judgment for several years after its entry. In August, 1894, the plaintiff died, and afterwards Sophie B. Weldon was duly appointed his administratrix. On April 10, 1905, which, of course, was more than five years after the entry of the judgment, the administratrix moved the court that an order of execution issue on said judgment under sections 685 and 686 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on the same day such order was made by the court. The order was made without notice to defendant, who thereafter moved to set the order aside. The motion was denied by the court, and from the order denying it the defendant appeals.

Down to April 9, 1895, section 685 was as follows: "In all cases, other than for the recovery of money, the judgment may be enforced or carried into execution after five years from the date of its entry, by leave of the court, upon motion, or by judgment for that purpose, founded upon supplemental pleadings." On April 9, 1895, the section was amended by omitting the words "other than for the recovery of money," and leaving the section to apply to all cases; and it was also further amended by adding the following: "But nothing in this section shall be construed to revive a judgment for the recovery of money which shall have been barred by the statute of limitations at the time of the passage of this act." Now, appellant contends that this amendment is not applicable to the judgment involved in the case at bar, because to so apply it would be to hold it to be retroactive, and a statute is not to be construed as retroactive unless that meaning clearly appears upon its face. But, really, we do not see how any question arises here as to the retroactive operation of said amendment of April 9, 1895, to section 685. At the time of that amendment the said judgment in Weldon v. Rogers was an existing judgment not barred by the statute of limitations, and in full force and effect. The amendment was not in the nature of a revival of that judgment; it did not need revival. The applicability of the amendment to that judgment, as well as to all other live judgments existing at that time, is not, therefore, of retroactive applicability. However, the provision in the amended act that "nothing in this section shall be construed to revive a judgment for the recovery of money which shall have been barred by the statute of limitations at the time of the passage of this act" clearly shows that the intent of the Legislature was that it should apply to all judgments which had not been barred by the statute of limitations at the time of said amendment. And there is no doubt of the constitutional power of the Legislature to make the amendment. It was, in principle and effect, in the nature of an extension of the period of limitation of an action, and such extension is always valid when made before the former period of limitation had expired. A judgment debtor, or one against whom any cause of action exists, is subject to any change of the statute of limitations touching such judgment or other cause of action, if made before the action shall have been barred under the former law. In Swamp Land District v. Glide, 112 Cal. 90, 44 Pac. 452, this court said: "But a man has no vested right in the running of the statute of limitations until it has completely run and barred the action. And when a change in the statute is made during the time of its running, that time is not a credit to the defendant under the new law. The whole period contemplated by the new law must lapse to bar the action. Such are the general rules applicable alike to criminal and civil actions, unless the new act itself expresses a contrary intent." (Citing cases.)

2. Appellant also makes the point that the administratrix could procure the allowance of the issuance of the execution only by means of a regular action at law. This contention is mainly founded on the early case of Humiston v. Smith, 21 Cal. 130, where it was held that the old writ of scire facias was not recognized in this country, and that, as there was then no other procedure for the enforcement of a judgment after five years, it could be done only by a civil action. But afterwards section 686 of the Code of Civil Procedure was enacted, which provides that: "Notwithstanding the death of a party after judgment, execution thereon may be issued, or it may be enforced as follows: (1) In case of the death of the judgment creditor, upon the application of his executor, or administrator, or successor in interest." This provision was intended to afford, and does afford, a simple and summary mode of enforcing a judgment, and avoids the unnecessary delay and expense consequent upon using the machinery and formalities of a regular civil action. In section 685, which apparently applies to the original judgment debtors, it is provided that execution may issue after five years by leave of court "on motion"; while in section 686, which applies to administrators or successors in interest, the word used is "application" of plaintiff's successor. The words "motion" and "application" are really the same thing; "an application for an order is a motion." Code Civ. Proc. § 1003. In our opinion, the administratrix in the case at bar properly followed the procedure prescribed in section 686.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Ex parte MOGENSEN. (Cr. 77.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 27, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — PROHIBITION ORDINANCE—AUTHORITY.

An ordinance prohibiting saloons, etc., is authorized by Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing towns to enforce within their limits police regulations not conflicting with general laws.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, § 21.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER TO PROHIBIT BUSINESS—STATUTES.

So far as concerns towns of the sixth class, Pol. Code, § 3366, restricting the power of municipalities over lines of business not forbidden by law, it was repealed by implication by the amendment of the municipal incorporation act of March 9, 1903, re-enacting the municipal corporation act of 1883 (Laws 1883, p. 270, c. 49, § 862, subd. 10, authorizing the passage of ordinances not in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the state, etc.

3. HABEAS CORPUS—GROUNDS FOR RELIEF—IRREGULARITIES.

A complaint charging conjunctively, in the language of an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of saloons, etc., that defendant unlawfully and willfully did all the things prohibited by the ordinance, was sufficient on habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, § 25.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW—JUDGMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

A judgment, reciting that one was duly convicted of the crime of violating Ordinance No. 130 of the town of L., entitled "an ordinance relative to the alcoholic liquor traffic in the said town of L.," and adjudging "as punishment for the offense of violating Ordinance No. 130 of said town of L., committed as charged in the complaint as aforesaid, that defendant pay a fine of $300," sufficiently designated the offense charged.

Petition of J. P. Mogensen for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded.

A. H. Jarman and R. F. Robertson, for petitioner. James H. Campbell, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The petitioner was convicted upon a charge of violating an ordinance of the town of Los Gatos, prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic. He seeks, by writ of habeas corpus, discharge from the custody of the sheriff of the county of Santa Clara.

This proceeding, among other things, involves an inquiry into the validity of that ordinance. It was passed June 28, 1906, and is called "Ordinance No. 130." The part germane to this examination is as follows: "Section 1. It shall be and is hereby made unlawful for any person or persons either as owner, principal, agent, servant, employé or otherwise, to establish, open, keep, maintain, or carry on, or assist in establishing, opening, keeping, maintaining, or carrying on, within the corporate limits of the town of Los Gatos, any tippling house, dram-shop, cellar, saloon, bar, sample room, hotel or other place where spiritous, vinous, malt or mixed liquors are sold, given away, handed out, purveyed or furnished." Section 2 provides that such liquors may be sold for medicinal, chemical, and mechanical purposes as provided therein. Section 3 declares violations of the ordinance to be misdemeanors, and fixes a punishment therefor. The power to pass such an ordinance is granted in section 11 of article 11 of the state Constitution. Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 20, 15 Pac. 318, 5 Am. St. Rep. 418; Ex parte Noble, 96 Cal. 362, 31 Pac. 224; Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747. It can only be invalidated by some general law of the state with which it is in conflict.

Petitioner contends that since the cases just cited were decided the general law has been changed by section 3366 of the Political Code, which, he argues, empowers legislative bodies of incorporated cities and towns to regulate by licensing, but not to prohibit, a business not forbidden by law. So far as towns of the sixth class are concerned, of which Los Gatos is one, this section of the Political Code was repealed by implication by the amendment of the municipal incorporation act of March 9, 1903. Ex parte Jackson, 143 Cal. 566, 77 Pac. 457. This amendment re-enacted subdivision 10 of section 862 of the municipal incorporation act of 1883 (Laws 1883, p. 270, c. 49), under which the Campbell and Noble Cases, supra, were decided. Those cases, then, are decisive of the validity of the ordinance questioned in this proceeding.

The sufficiency of the complaint is challenged on the ground that it does not state a public offense. The complaint charges conjunctively, in the language of the ordinance, that petitioner unlawfully and willfully, on or about the 18th day of September, 1906, did all the things prohibited by the ordinance. This would seem to be good even on demurrer. People v. Leyshon, 108 Cal. 442, 41 Pac. 480; People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 373, 42 Pac. 894. However, on habeas corpus this is certainly a sufficient statement of the offense intended to be charged. Ex parte Ruef (Cal.) 89 Pac. 605. In that case it is said: "On habeas corpus the inquiry into the sufficiency of an indictment is limited. We think the true rule is that, where an indictment purports or attempts to state an offense of a kind of which the court assuming to proceed has jurisdiction, the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on habeas corpus."

The validity of the judgment is also challenged. It is asserted that it fails to state the offense of which the petitioner was convicted. The judgment recites that the petitioner was duly convicted of the crime of violating Ordinance No. 130 of the town of Los Gatos, entitled, "An ordinance relative to the alcoholic liquor traffic in the said town of Los Gatos," and adjudges "as punishment for the offense of violating Ordinance No. 130 of said town of Los Gatos, committed as charged in the complaint as aforesaid, that defendant Mogensen pay a fine of $300. * * *" This judgment contains a sufficient designation of the offense charged. Ex parte Patrick Murray, 43 Cal. 455.

The petitioner is therefore remanded.

VISHER v. WILBUR. (Civ. 317.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 21, 1907. Rehearing Denied June 20, 1907; Denied by Supreme Court July 18, 1907.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ACCOUNT STATED.

When an account ceases to be open, and the balance is ascertained and assented to, it becomes a stated account, and the balance is at once subject to the operation of the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 285-298; vol. 1, Account Stated, §§ 2-8.]

2. ACCOUNT STATED—MODE OF STATING.

An account becomes stated when furnished to another, and he retains it for a long time without objection, as well as where the parties mutually agree upon the balance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Account Stated, §§ 30-40.]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—NEW PROMISE—PERSON TO WHOM MADE.

A letter by a decedent's debtor to plaintiff, before plaintiff became decedent's administrator, could not revive a right of action barred by limitations; plaintiff at that time, though an heir, being no representative of the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 575.]

4. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 360, to revive a barred cause of action, the party to be charged must sign a writing, and, where there is no express promise to pay, the writing must contain an acknowledgment from which a promise may be implied, and such acknowledgment must be a direct and unqualified admission of an existing debt the party is willing to pay; and hence a letter, stating, "if the V. estate has any valid claim against me, I will pay it if I ever get enough money to do so," was insufficient to revive a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 593-609.]

5. SAME.

A claim filed against decedent's estate, consisting of a statement of expenditures made by defendant for decedent and a balance due after deducting a sum in favor of decedent, was not an acknowledgment of indebtedness to decedent reviving a barred cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 593-609.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by Putnam Visher, administrator of Sebastian Visher's estate, against I. R. Wilbur. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. S. D. Woods, for respondent.

HART, J. The complaint in this action alleges: "* * * That on or about the 1st day of January, 1894, one Sebastian Visher deposited and left with the defendant, I. R. Wilbur, the sum of $1,722.77, lawful money of the United States, upon the express agreement and condition that the same should be held by the said I. R. Wilbur in trust for the said Sebastian Visher and should draw interest from the time of such deposit to the time of payment at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and that the same should be paid to the said Sebastian Visher upon his demand therefor." Following this allegation is an averment that on the 1st day of April 1896, the defendant rendered to the deceased an itemized statement, showing the original balance due from said defendant to said Sebastian to be the sum of $1,993.95, and also showing various items of expenditure made by defendant for and on account of said intestate of plaintiff, aggregating the sum of $1,309.60, leaving, at the time of the rendering of said statement, the sum of $684.35 still due and unpaid. It is this last-mentioned sum which the plaintiff in his complaint alleges to be the money held by defendant in trust for the benefit and use of his intestate during the lifetime of the latter. By the complaint we are informed that Sebastian Visher died intestate on the 15th day of November, 1898, in San Joaquin county, and that on the 28th day of December, 1903, the plaintiff, having previously made due application therefor, was granted, by the superior court of San Joaquin county, letters of administration upon the estate of said deceased. It is alleged that, after his appointment as such administrator, the plaintiff made demand upon the defendant for payment to and settlement with him as such representative of the estate of the deceased, of the amount shown to be the balance due said estate by the statement rendered to deceased in his lifetime by said defendant. The answer denies that the defendant is or was indebted to the deceased at the time of his death, or at any other time, or to the estate of said deceased, in the sum mentioned in the complaint, or in any other amount. It is alleged that the defendant, prior to the death of said Sebastian Visher, paid to the latter all moneys due said Visher from defendant. There are other allegations in the answer directly declaring that certain specified sums of money were expended by the defendant for and on behalf of the deceased previous to his death, at the latter's request, and that, in addition to such expenditures, the defendant permitted the deceased, during his life, and for a long time prior to his death, to collect and appropriate to his own use the rents of a certain house in the city of Stockton, of which defendant was the owner; the total sum of said rents so collected by deceased being $465. That it was at all times understood between them that the rents so collected "should be applied in payment on account, or in full as the case might be, of any moneys on any account whatever due from the said defendant to the said Sebastian Visher." The answer also pleads the statute of limitations, in "that said action is barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant had judgment, from which, upon a bill of exceptions, plaintiff presents this appeal.

The evidence taken consisted mainly of the testimony given by the defendant. The court found: "That it is not true that on or about the 1st day of January, 1894, Sebastian Visher deposited and left with the defendant the sum of $1,722.77, * * * or any other sum upon any agreement or condition that the same should be held by the defendant in trust for said Sebastian Visher. That it is not true that on or about the 1st day of April, 1896, or at any other time, the said defendant made or gave to said Sebastian Visher a statement in writing of the amount of moneys held by him in trust for said Sebastian Visher as set forth and alleged in said complaint or otherwise." The third finding of the court is as follows: "It is true that on or about the 1st day of April, 1896, the said defendant made and gave to Sebastian Visher the written statement of account in the words and figures as set forth in said complaint, and that said written statement of account was made and given by the said defendant to said Sebastian Visher as the written statement of account of the amount then due from the said defendant to said Sebastian Visher on account of moneys theretofore due to said Sebastian Visher from said defendant as the interest remaining unpaid upon a certain promissory note theretofore existing between the said defendant and said Sebastian Visher for the sum of $12,000. That the said written statement of account was made and given by said defendant to said Sebastian Visher notwithstanding the fact that on the 9th day of August, 1890, the said defendant paid said Sebastian Visher the sum of $7,475 as the balance on said promissory note, less the said sum of $1,722.77, and received from the said Sebastian Visher a receipt in the words and figures as follows: 'Stockton, August 9th, 1890. Rec'd of I. R. Wilbur the sum of seven thousand and four hundred and seventy-five dollars in full of all demands to date. S. Visher.'—and received from said Sebastian Visher the said promissory note." Findings 4 and 5 are to the effect that, subsequent to the making and giving of said written statement of account, the defendant paid to said Sebastian or for and on his account various sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $329.84, and that said Visher collected and kept for his own use rents for the house of defendant in the total sum of $465, and that, in addition thereto, the defendant gave to and paid out on account of said Visher other sums of money, aggregating in amount between $2,000 and $3,000. It is found by the court that the expenditures by defendant to and for the deceased involved in the last-mentioned sum "were not given or paid out on account of the said written statement of account, but were gifts made by the said defendant to the said Sebastian Visher and not otherwise." The court also finds "that the said cause of action set forth in said complaint is barred by the provision of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state."

It would serve no useful purpose to present or attempt an elaborate review of the facts established by the evidence contained in the record. It may, however, be well to remark, as affording some explanation of the reason for the gifts found by the court to have been made by the defendant to the deceased, in the latter's lifetime, that the defendant was the son-in-law of the deceased; that the most amiable and cordial personal relations appeared to have always existed between them —in fact, their personal relations seem to have been marked by unusual filial affection for and toward each other. There had been carried on by and between them business dealings for many years, and the evidence indicates that it was the desire of the defendant at all times to aid and assist his father-in-law to prosper in business. We have closely examined the record and think the findings of the trial court are abundantly supported by the evidence. That the cause of action set forth in the complaint is barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure we think the evidence clearly establishes. The language of that section is to the effect that the time within which an action may be commenced "upon any contract, obligation, or liability founded upon an instrument in writing executed in this state," shall be four years after such cause of action shall have accrued.

Counsel for appellant alleges in his complaint, and he argues in his briefs, the case principally from that standpoint, that the relations existing between the defendant and the deceased in the latter's lifetime were, as to the money to recover which this action is brought, those of trustee and cestui que trust; or, in other words, that said money was deposited by the deceased with the defendant upon the express understanding and condition that the same should be held in trust by defendant for the benefit and use of said Sebastian Visher. There is much force in the suggestion of counsel for the respondent that, upon the theory that the object of the action is the enforcement of a trust, there results such a wide variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proofs that a judgment responding to that issue would find exceedingly frail, if any, support from findings founded upon the evidence presented by the record. The evidence indisputably shows the relations of the parties to have been at all times nothing more than the ordinary relations of debtor and creditor, and that the particular transaction from which the alleged indebtedness arose was in no manner impressed with the qualities of a trust. There is nothing in the written statement of account, as pleaded in the complaint, from which it may be inferred that the moneys to which it relates were deposited with the defendant to be by him held in trust for the deceased. On the contrary, the statement, upon its face, is of a character to indicate that it was only intended as an adjustment of certain accounts between the parties. The prayer of the complaint, while, of course, not the test for the determination of the appropriate relief demanded by the allegations of the complaint, in effect asks for a judgment for money had and received on an account stated. The evidence, the court finds, shows that the transaction involving the execution of the promissory note by the defendant to the deceased was closed on the 9th of August, 1890, on which day the defendant paid to Visher the sum of $7,475, and received from the latter the note and a receipt acknowledging payment "in full of all demands to date." The defendant testified that, about two years after the circumstance of the payment by him to Visher of the sum of $7,475, the latter visited him at his office in San Francisco, and declared that he had spent all his money and was therefore without means; that he was apprehensive that he would not leave, upon his death, sufficient means with which to defray his funeral expenses, etc. The defendant thereupon assured Visher that he (defendant) would attend to the matter of funeral expenses, and that he (Visher) would never want for the necessities of life while he lived so long as defendant had means. The latter then said to Visher that there was still due him (Visher) from defendant on the note surrendered on the 9th of August, 1890, by Visher to defendant, interest amounting approximately to the sum of $1,700, and that he (defendant) would pay such interest, and render to him (Visher) a written statement to that effect. Visher insisted that defendant owed him nothing, and declared that defendant had already done too much for him. The deceased said, however, that if the defendant would send him a statement, pretending to show sufficient money due him from defendant to meet his funeral expenses, he might, by being able to exhibit such statement, receive better treatment at home. Thereafter, and in pursuance of that understanding, the defendant prepared and sent the deceased the written statement set out in the complaint. It is thus apparent that, whatever might have been the reason or motive of defendant in sending to deceased the statement in question, the document constituted, if anything, an adjustment of the accounts between the parties. And "as soon as an account ceases to be open, and the balance is ascertained and assented to, it becomes a stated account, and the balance is at once subject to the operation of the statute; and an account becomes a stated account when it is furnished to another and he retains it for a long time without objection, as well as where the parties mutually agree upon a balance. Wood on Limitations (3d Ed.) § 280; Angell on Limitations, § 150; Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 68, 15 Pac. 371.

But counsel for appellant, evidently persuaded that the trust theory of his complaint is utterly untenable under the evidence adduced, contends that several letters written by the defendant and a claim filed by him against the estate of the deceased, which were received in evidence, amount to such an acknowledgment in writing of the proscribed liability as to warrant the implication of a new promise, and thus the right of action thereon has been revived. These letters were, with one exception, written prior to the appointment of plaintiff as administrator of the estate of the deceased, and all of them, with the exception of one, which was written to plaintiff's wife, were addressed to the plaintiff. Assuming that those written prior to appellant's appointment as administrator contain language which would constitute, if written to the creditor or his agent duly authorized to act for him with reference to the particular matter, a sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the operation of the statute, we cannot see how such letters, having been addressed to persons between whom and the defendant there was no privity of contract, could in any view have the effect of reviving the right of action upon the indebtedness pleaded and to which it is claimed they refer. The plaintiff, at the time of the receipt of the letters, while interested as an heir in whatever estate the deceased might have left, was not an agent or representative of or otherwise duly authorized to act for and in behalf of the estate. The test would be, it seems to us: Was the party to whom the acknowledgment, if any, was made, legally competent to make a contract with respect to the subject as to which the statute had run? Could the plaintiff, before appointment as administrator, have legally negotiated and consummated a binding contract in behalf of the estate? "Under the modern rule," says Wood on Limitations (3d Ed.) § 79, "that an acknowledgment or promise must be such as fairly raises an implied promise to pay the debt, it follows as a matter of course that the acknowledgment or promise must not only be made by a person legally competent to contract, but must also be made to the creditor himself, or some person duly authorized to act for him in that regard, so that a new contract, resting upon the old one for its consideration, may be set up in reply to the statute, if it is pleaded by the defendant; and if it is made to an agent of the creditor, in order to make it operative it must appear that the debtor at the time knew that the person to whom the acknowledgment or promise was made was acting as the agent of the creditor." See, also, Farrell v. Palmer, 36 Cal. 189, and Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354, 30 Pac. 609.

But, even if these letters, so addressed to plaintiff before he became vested with any legal power over the estate and its affairs, could properly be construed to have been addressed to one having the authority to contract for the estate (and it seems that upon principle they cannot be so construed), it is clear that their language cannot be construed either into an express promise to pay, or an acknowledgment from which a promise to pay the old debt can be implied by the law. There is nothing in the language of the letters which indicates that they refer to the particular claim upon which plaintiff declares with that clearness, directness, and distinctness made requisite in such a case by the law; nor, in fact, is it even of that direct, distinct, and unequivocal nature as to any pre-existing liability which is essential to an acknowledgment from which the law may imply a promise. It is, of course, well understood that, in order to resuscitate a cause of action which has once been relegated to a state of repose by the operation of the statute of limitations, it is necessary under the law (section 360, Code Civ. Proc.) that there must have been executed, as to the debt, obligation, or liability originally giving rise to such cause of action, an instrument in writing, signed by the party to be charged. This is not only true, but where there is no express promise such instrument must contain an acknowledgment from which the law may imply a promise to pay. Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 382. And such acknowledgment must be a direct and unqualified admission of an existing debt which the party is willing to pay. Biddel v. Brizzolara, supra; McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 95 Am. Dec. 170; Farrell v. Palmer, 36 Cal. 187. "If there be no express promise, but a promise is to be raised by implication of law from the acknowledgment of the party, such an acknowledgment ought to contain an unqualified and direct admission of a previous subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay. If there be accompanying circumstances which repel the promise or intention to pay, if the expressions be equivocal, vague and indeterminate, leading to no certain conclusion, but at best to probable inferences, which may affect different minds in different ways, we think they ought not to go to a jury as evidence of a new promise to revive the cause of action." Mr. Justice Story, in Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 362, 7 L. Ed. 174.

The first letter addressed to the plaintiff by the defendant upon the subject of the alleged debt due the estate from defendant was written under date of May 18, 1903, over seven months prior to plaintiff's appointment as administrator, etc., and was evidently occasioned by a demand made upon defendant for a settlement of the balance which appeared to be due the deceased from the statement referred to. This letter, which is of considerable length (and which was admitted in evidence upon the offer of the defendant), from its beginning to its conclusion, repeatedly declares that at the time of the death of plaintiff's intestate the latter was indebted to the defendant in a large sum of money, and that the defendant owed the deceased nothing at the time of his death. This statement, he asserts, he could establish to the satisfaction of plaintiff if the latter would call at his office and inspect his books and papers showing the accounts between the deceased and the defendant. A garbled quotation from this letter by appellant in his brief, embracing only a part of the only sentence in the letter upon which he could place any construction favorable to his contention, can afford him no comfort, because there is nothing in the quoted language from which any sort of an acknowledgment of the old debt may be drawn. The second letter, under date of June 12, 1903, written, it will be noticed, over six months before plaintiff was appointed administrator of the estate, reiterates the denial that defendant was in any way or to any extent indebted to Visher at his death. The letter dated March 15, 1904, addressed to plaintiff, is brief, and reads as follows: "Dear Sir and Brother: Your favor of the 14th is just received and noted. In answer will say that if the Visher estate has any valid claim against me I will pay it, if I ever get money enough to do so. Please send me the claim." There was also received in evidence a letter dated October 14, 1900, signed by the defendant, and addressed to the wife of plaintiff, which letter, even if it were material to the issue here, does not refer, either directly or indirectly so far as it may be determined from the language of the letter itself, to the claim relied upon in the complaint. It is thus to be observed that the only one of the mentioned letters, upon which appellant can by any possibility rest the contention that the defendant has acknowledged the claim relied upon in this action, is the one dated March 15, 1904, written after letters of administration had been issued to plaintiff. This letter, it must be apparent, from an inspection thereof, is not an unqualified and unconditional acknowledgment by defendant of any claim or debt which might have existed against him in favor of the deceased or his estate. Construed, as it should be, in connection with the defendant's letters of May 18, 1903, and June 12, 1903, in which, as seen, he made an unqualified denial of any indebtedness of whatsoever nature, and particularly of the debt in dispute, this letter plainly means that, while denying, because not aware of, the existence of any claim upon him by the Visher estate, the defendant would be willing to pay any valid claim which he might be convinced said estate held against him. There is nothing in the letter from which it can, with any show of reason, be implied that the defendant admitted the validity of or promised to pay the claim sued upon, or any part thereof. As we have seen, and as is obvious, the letter neither in terms nor by reasonable implication refers to the specific claim upon which the action is brought. The language of the letter constitutes neither an express promise nor an acknowledgment from which the law could imply a promise. It is a vague, indeterminate, and conditional declaration that if the estate has any valid claim against the defendant he "will pay it if I ever get money enough to do so." The letter in question does not, in fact, contain an acknowledgment from which even a conditional promise to pay the specific debt declared upon could be implied; but, if the letter could be so construed, such conditional promise is not the promise pleaded. "In an action brought upon one promise a plaintiff cannot recover upon proof of another." Curtis v. City of Sacramento, 70 Cal. 416, 11 Pac. 748; Rodgers v. Byers, 127 Cal. 531, 60 Pac. 42, and cases therein cited.

There is no merit in the point that the claim filed by the defendant against the estate of the deceased after the appointment and qualification of the administrator carries with it an acknowledgment of the old debt. The claim consists of an itemized statement of expenditures made by the defendant for and on account of the deceased in his lifetime and a balance due defendant of $209.84 after deducting the sum of $684.35 in favor of the deceased from the total amount of $894.19, claimed to have been so expended for deceased by the defendant. The claim does not, it is readily seen, acknowledge any indebtedness to the deceased or the estate; but, on the contrary, negatives such inference, and would not, of course, have been filed but for the claim of the defendant that the estate was indebted to him and not he to the estate.

Complaint is made that the court erred in a number of rulings upon the admissibility of evidence to the prejudice of appellant's rights. We have examined the record with care, and have found no errors prejudicial to appellant, either in the rulings or the findings of the court. The evidence, as previously stated, fully supports the findings, and from every standpoint from which the record may be viewed, we think the judgment is in perfect harmony with the facts and the law.

The judgment appealed from will therefore be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

5 Cal. App. 577

Ex parte SWEETMAN. (Cr. 84.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 24, 1907.)

1. Licenses—Failure to Obtain—Criminal Responsibility — Ordinances — Laws of the State.

Municipal ordinances are laws of the state within the provisions of Pen. Code, § 435, making it a misdemeanor for a person to carry on any calling, for the transaction of which a license is required by any law of the state, without taking out or procuring the prescribed license.

2. Intoxicating Liquors—Licenses—Municipal Corporations — Ordinances — Conflict with Statutes.

An ordinance of a city, whose freeholders' charter was adopted prior to the constitutional amendment of 1896, relieving the provisions of such charters in municipal affairs from the control of general laws, which provides a penalty for selling intoxicating liquors without a license, in conflict with the penalty prescribed by Pen. Code, §§ 435, 19, making the offense a misdemeanor, and providing for its punishment, is to that extent void.

3. Municipal Corporations—Charter—Conflict with General Law.

A city charter adopted prior to the constitutional amendment of 1896, relieving the provisions of such charters in municipal affairs from the control of general laws, which authorizes the municipality to fix the penalty for carrying on without a license a business for which a license is required, conflicts with Pen. Code, §§ 435, 19, defining the offense, and prescribing its punishment, and was, to that extent, void at the time of its adoption.

4. Same.

So far as a city charter was void when adopted because fixing a penalty for carrying on a business for which a license is required, without a license, in conflict with the general law of the state, it was not validated by the subsequent amendment of the Constitution relieving the provisions of such charters from the control of general laws.

5. Criminal Law—Judgment—Validity.

Where a person was convicted under an ordinance which was void as providing a penalty for selling intoxicating liquors without a license, in conflict with the general law of the state, but the judgment was in terms authorized by the general law, it is valid.

Application by Walter Sweetman for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded to custody.

Brewton A. Hayne and Roland O. Becsey, for petitioner. Redmond C. Staats, for respondent.

HALL, J. Petitioner asks to be discharged from custody under a judgment rendered by the justice court of the town of Berkeley, upon his conviction of a misdemeanor for maintaining a place where alcoholic liquors were sold, without having a license therefor as required by the ordinance of the town of Berkeley. The judgment imposes a fine of $500 upon petitioner, with the usual alternative of imprisonment not exceeding six months in default of payment.

It is insisted by petitioner that both the charter of the town of Berkeley and the ordinance under which petitioner was prosecuted limit the fine that may be imposed to the sum of $300, and that therefore the judgment being for a greater sum, is void. On the other hand, respondent insists that the offense committed by petitioner is made punishable by the general law of the state, to wit, sections 435 and 19 of the Penal Code, and that said sections are controlling, and as the judgment is in terms authorized by said sections it is valid. No point is made by petitioner that the complaint does not charge petitioner with carrying on a business without having a license therefor, or that the ordinance does not require a person conducting such business to have a license therefor. We have therefore not critically examined the ordinance or the complaint in this respect. But see Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 400, 39 Pac. 775.

The charter of the town of Berkeley is a "freeholders' charter adopted in 1895, and therefore antedates the amendment to the Constitution of 1896, relieving provisions of such charters in municipal affairs" from the control of general laws. The charter of the town of Berkeley provides as follows: "Sec. 50. The board of trustees shall have power: (1) * * * (5) To license for purposes of regulation and revenue all and every kind of business not prohibited by law to be transacted or carried on in said town, and all shows, exhibitions and lawful games carried on therein; to fix the rates of license upon the same, and to provide for the collection of the same by suit or otherwise. * * * (21) To impose fines, penalties and forfeitures for any and all violations of ordinances, and for breach or violation of any ordinance, to fix the penalty by fine or imprisonment, or both, but no such fine shall exceed three hundred dollars, or such imprisonment exceed three months. * * * (24) To do and perform any and all other acts and things necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this charter, and to enact and enforce within the limits of the town all other local, police and other regulations as do not conflict with the general laws." The penal clause of the ordinance violated by petitioner conforms to subdivision 21 of section 50, and provides for a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $300, or imprisonment of not less than 30 days nor more than 90 days, or both such fine and imprisonment. At the time of the adoption of the charter of the town of Berkeley, and ever since such time, the general law of the state made it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, for any person to commence or carry on any business, trade, profession, or calling, for the transaction or carrying on of which a license is required by any law of this state, without taking out or procuring the license prescribed by such law. Sections 435, 19, Pen. Code. And municipal ordinances are laws of this state within the meaning of section 435, Pen. Code. In re Lawrence, 69 Cal. 611, 11 Pac. 217; Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747.

The language of subdivision 21 of section 50 of the Berkeley charter is broad enough, standing alone, to authorize the town trustees to prescribe that for carrying on a business for which a license is required, without first obtaining such license, a fine not exceeding $300, or imprisonment not exceeding three months, shall be imposed. That a municipal ordinance that should prescribe that for a given offense a fine not exceeding $300 may be imposed is contrary to a general law providing that for the same offense a fine not exceeding $500 may be imposed, seems to us too clear for serious argument. Indeed, it has been held in this state that a conflict exists where an ordinance provides a penalty for the same acts that are punishable under the general law, and that the penal clause of such an ordinance is void. In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405; Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 400, 39 Pac. 775; Ex parte Stephen, 114 Cal. 278, 46 Pac. 86. In Ex parte Mansfield, supra, the penal clause of a license ordinance prescribed a fine of not less than $150, and not more than $500, for carrying on the business of selling liquor without procuring a license therefor; and it was held that such penal clause conflicted with section 435 of the Penal Code, and was for that reason void, but that the judgment in the case was valid under the provisions of the Penal Code. In Ex parte Stephen, supra, the ordinance provided that any one carrying on the liquor business without first procuring a license shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment for not less than 100 days. The petitioner was fined $250 with the usual alternative of imprisonment. It was held that the judgment was good under sections 435 and 19 of the Penal Code, and that the penal clause of the ordinance was void. The court said: "For that portion of section 1 prescribing the punishment must be held void as in contravention of the general law of the state. It undertakes to punish the same act—carrying on a business without having a license therefor—which is punishable under section 435 of the Penal Code."

If an ordinance that attempts to fix the penalty for carrying on a business, for which a license is required, is to that extent in conflict with sections 435 and 19 of the Penal Code, and therefore to that extent void, it seems to us clear that any provision of a municipal charter, which authorizes the municipality to fix the penalty for carrying on such business without a license therefor, conflicts with the same sections, and for that reason, if adopted prior to the amendment to the Constitution of 1896, void at the time of its adoption. The language of subdivision 21 of section 50 of the Berkeley charter must be limited in its effect to giving to the board of trustees power to fix penalties for such violation of ordinances as are not covered by the general law of the state. So far as the said section attempts to authorize the board of trustees to fix any penalty for carrying on a business without procuring a license therefor, it was at the time of its adoption in conflict with sections 435 and 19 of the Penal Code, and therefore to that extent void. Ex parte Sic, supra; Ex parte Mansfield, supra; Ex parte Stephen, 114 Cal. 278, 46 Pac. 86. So far as a charter was void at the time of its adoption it is still void, notwithstanding the amendment to the Constitution of 1896. This principle is established by Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 65 Pac. 309.

It thus follows, from what we have said, that there is not now, and never has been, any authority in the board of trustees of the town of Berkeley to fix a penalty for carrying on a business without procuring a license therefor. Under subdivision 5 of section 50 of the charter of Berkeley, the trustees may require a license to be paid for the carrying on of any lawful business, but when it has done that the general law of the state (sections 435 and 19, Pen. Code) makes the carrying on such business without procuring such license a misdemeanor, and fixes the penalty therefor. The fact that the ordinance in this case was passed subsequent to the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution of 1896 makes no difference. The validity of the ordinance depends upon the power of the board of trustees, which, as we have seen, does not exist to fix any penalty for the offense provided for by sections 435 and 19 of the Penal Code.

The judgment against the petitioner is valid under sections 435 and 19 of the Penal Code, and he must be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Alameda county, and it is so ordered.

5 Cal. App. 581

TOWNSEND v. DRIVER et al. (Civ. 325.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 24, 1907.)

1. Quieting Title—Nature of Action.
An action to quiet title is one for the recovery of real property, which is the subject-matter thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Quieting Title, §§ 1–4.]

2. Parties—Interveners—Order of Intervention—Effect.
An order granting leave to intervene in a suit to quiet title is a determination that intervener has an interest in the matter in litigation, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 387, he is entitled as a party to avail himself of the procedure and remedy to which defendant is entitled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 74.]

3. Parties—Interveners—Rights.
Where the only relief sought by interveners in a suit to quiet title was that plaintiff should take nothing and that the interveners should recover costs, the position of the interveners was that of plaintiff in intervention uniting with defendant in resisting the demands of plaintiff in the cause.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 74.]

4. Same.
The inaction of a defendant in a suit to quiet title, resulting in a default judgment against him, does not preclude an intervener from obtaining relief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 74.]

5. Same—Dismissal as to Interveners.
A plaintiff in a suit to quiet title may dismiss the same as to interveners, where the relief sought by them is that plaintiff take nothing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 75.]

6. Same.
Where the court, in a suit to quiet title, has determined by its order that a party has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit and should be permitted to litigate such interest therein, plaintiff cannot, either under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, relating to dismissals of actions, etc., or independent thereof, annul the order by dismissing the action as to the intervener; and, unless the court vacates the order of intervention, plaintiff, seeking relief under the action, must meet the issues raised by the complaint in intervention.

7. Dismissal—Right to Dismiss.
The court, in a suit to quiet title, after granting leave for one to intervene therein, cannot dismiss the action, either as an entirety or as against parties, except as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 581; and any judgment not authorized by that section must, under section 582, be on the merits.

8. Parties—Intervention—Proceedings in Cause After Intervention.
Where, in a suit to quiet title, the court granted leave for one to intervene, and the issues of fact tendered by the complaint in intervention were undetermined, the determination of such issues could not be had, in the absence of the parties in intervention, without previous service of the notice prescribed in Code Civ. Proc. § 594, unless notice was waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Charles Z. S. Townsend against Philip S. Driver and others, in which the San Diego Realty Company and others intervened. From a judgment quieting title, and from an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment, the interveners appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Smith & Holcomb, for appellants. Mills & Hizar, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from a judgment quieting title and from an order denying motion to vacate such judgment. Plaintiff filed his complaint under section 738, Code Civ. Proc., for the purpose of determining adverse claims to certain described real estate. To this complaint appellants were not made parties; but the court by its order, good cause appearing, granted appellants leave to intervene, which they did by filing their several complaints in intervention, denying plaintiff's ownership of the premises, or that he was in possession or entitled to possession thereof, and each complaint in intervention alleging further that interveners were the owners and entitled to possession of specified portions of the lands described in the complaint. Thereupon the attorneys for plaintiff filed in the clerk's office a written direction to the clerk to enter a dismissal of the action as to certain named defendants, in which appear the names of interveners. Afterwards, and without notice of any character to interveners, the court ordered the default of certain defendants not included in the order of dismissal to be entered, and gave judgment against such defendants, wherein the court decreed that plaintiff was the owner and in possession, and entitled to the possession, of all the premises in the complaint described, and quieted plaintiff's title therein, in which judgment it is recited that plaintiff, appearing by his attorneys, dismissed as to defendants (naming those mentioned in the direction to the clerk). But in neither the order to the clerk nor the judgment are interveners designated as such; nor does it appear that any order was made by the court vacating its order granting leave to intervene, unless the recital in the judgment of the action of the attorneys be construed as such order. Interveners, within due time, moved the court to vacate and set aside its judgment, because no notice of the trial of the action was given interveners or their attorneys, which motion was denied, and said judgment duly entered in the judgment book, from which judgment, and from the order refusing to vacate the same, appellants duly appeal upon a bill of exceptions.

The action to quiet title is one for the recovery of real property. South Tule, etc., Ditch Co. v. King, 144 Cal. 455, 77 Pac. 1032. The real property so sought to be recovered is, therefore, the subject-matter of such action. The order of the superior court granting leave to intervene determined that interveners had an interest in the matter in litigation, and under section 387, Code of Civil Procedure, were entitled as parties to avail themselves of all of the procedure and remedies to which the defendants were entitled for the purpose of defeating the action or resisting plaintiff's claim. People v. Perris Irr. Dist., 132 Cal. 290, 64 Pac. 399, 773. It appears from the bill of exceptions that interveners served and filed their complaints, setting forth the grounds upon which their intervention rested, due service of which is certified in the bill, which must be accepted as service upon all parties to the action, as required by section 387, Code of Civil Procedure, and the claim to the subject-matter is an interest adverse to both plaintiff and defendants. The only relief sought, however, by these complaints in intervention, was that plaintiff take nothing and that interveners recover costs. Under the law, their position was thereafter that of "plaintiff in intervention, uniting with the defendant in the cause in resisting the demands of plaintiff in the cause." St. Charles R. R. Co. v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 33 South. 574, 109 La. 491. The inaction of the defendants in permitting their default does not preclude intervener from his relief. People v. Perris Irr. Dist., supra. That plaintiff in such action may dismiss the same, where the relief sought by interveners is only "that plaintiff take nothing," is determined in Henry v. Vineland Irr. Dist., 140 Cal. 377, 73 Pac. 1061. The reason assigned is that "by a complete dismissal of the action plaintiff has consented to take nothing, and thereby the ends of the intervention are accomplished."

But in this case plaintiff does not so elect, but seeks to maintain his action against certain defendants, and proceeds to judgment against them, and by such judgment takes the relief sought. After the court has determined by its order that a party has an interest in the subject-matter of a suit and should be permitted to litigate such interest therein, it is not within the power of the plaintiff, either under the provisions of section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, or otherwise, to annul such order of the court by dismissing the action as to such parties; and, unless the court vacates the order permitting intervention, the plaintiff, so long as he seeks relief under the action, must meet such issues raised by the complaints in intervention. There is nothing in the record to justify the conclusion that the court vacated its original order permitting intervention. The dismissal was directed by the plaintiff, and the judgment only purports to recite such action on the plaintiff's part, and does not purport to make any order or direction upon the part of the court. The doctrine of intendment in favor of a judgment cannot be carried to the extent of presuming that done by the court which it directly declares to have been done by a party to the action. Nor could the court under our practice, dismiss an action, either as an entirety or as against parties, except as authorized by section 581, Code of Civil Procedure. Any judgment of the court not authorized by that section must be upon merits. Section 582, Code Civ. Proc. Hence, were we to construe the language of the recital in the judgment as an attempt upon the part of the court to order a dismissal as to the interveners, it would be unauthorized. There is nothing in Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 571, 79 Pac. 171, establishing a different proposition.

Interveners, then, being parties by authority, and the action still pending, and no order of the court being entered vacating the former ex parte order permitting intervention, and the issues of fact tendered by the complaints in intervention being still undetermined, the court could not hear and determine such issues in the absence of the adverse parties without the five days' notice prescribed by section 594, Code of Civil Procedure, unless such notice was waived by the interveners directly, or some act amounting to a waiver is made to appear. There is nothing in the record indicating notice or waiver thereof upon the part of the interveners. The court erred in refusing to vacate said judgment so rendered, and in entering a judgment granting the relief to plaintiff, before the issues of fact were heard and determined.

It is ordered that the order refusing to vacate the judgment, and the judgment so entered, be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

DONEGAN v. HOUSTON et al. (Civ. 342.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 28, 1907.)

1. WORK AND LABOR — DECLARATION—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for an agreed price for doing certain grading, etc., where the complaint was in effect an indebitatus assumpsit count at common law and declared upon an executed contract, but it lacked the ordinary allegations of indebtedness and that the services were rendered at defendant's request, those averments were not necessary, since the consideration, as well as the promise, were implied from the nature of the transaction declared on.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Work and Labor, § 41.]

2. SAME.

Though the complaint did not contain a count on a quantum meruit, but there was testimony to show that the work agreed upon was done, as well as the extra work, and there was no attack made upon the pleading, nor objection to the testimony, the action in one count for the total sum due was sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.

3. CONTRACTS — CERTIFICATE OF ENGINEER — FAILURE TO OBTAIN—EXCUSE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where the defense was that the work was done under a written contract by the terms of which the work was to be done to the satisfaction of a certain engineer and testified to by his certificate, and that the certificate was not furnished, evidence as to the work being done and the reason for the engineer withholding his certificate considered, and held sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

4. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

The evidence showed that the work was done and that the engineer's certificate was withheld without proper grounds. Held, that the complaint was sufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff, without specifically pleading the fraud or excuse for withholding the certificate, especially in view of the issues tendered by the answer.

5. PLEADING — COMPLAINT — LACK OF NECESSARY AVERMENTS CURED BY ANSWER.

A complaint which lacks the averment of a fact essential to a cause of action may be so aided by the averment or express denial of that fact in the answer as to uphold a judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 1343.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by D. F. Donegan against H. R. Houston and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Russ Avery, for appellants. H. L. Dunnigan, Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, and Charles H. McFarland, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to recover for grading and excavating done by plaintiff for defendants on 15 acres of land in the city of Los Angeles. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

The complaint alleges the cause of action in the following language: "Now comes the plaintiff, and says that within the last two years past he did grading and excavating for the defendants, for which they agreed to pay him the sum of $6,173." By answer, counterclaim, and cross-complaint defendants set out a special contract in writing between plaintiff and defendants, under which, it is alleged, all the grading and excavating involved in this action was done by plaintiff. By the terms of this contract the grading was to be done to the satisfaction of one S. O. Wood, civil engineer, and be testified to by his certificate in writing. It is alleged that plaintiff failed to perform his part of the contract in time, or at all, was unable to procure the certificate of the engineer, and abandoned the work and failed to complete it; that defendants were compelled to expend certain sums in finishing portions of the work and suffered certain alleged damages by reason of the delay and failure of plaintiff to complete the grading according to contract. The plaintiff's answer to the latter pleadings denies each and all the allegations mentioned, and the findings of the court expressly, or in effect, negative them all. The court also finds that plaintiff performed work in grading and excavating for the defendants and that they agreed to pay him therefor as alleged in the complaint; that all the work done by plaintiff was done on the property described in defendants' pleadings, but that it was not all done under the contract pleaded therein. The court does not segregate the amount due for work under the contract from that due for other work, but finds there is now due to plaintiff from defendants $2,019, with interest, and the judgment is for that amount.

Appellants present their case on appeal as if the plaintiff had brought his action on the contract and attempted to introduce evidence to excuse his failure to secure the certificate from the engineer without an allegation in his pleading to support it. They also contend that for this same reason the pleading does not support the finding of the court that "it is not true that the grading was not done in a workmanlike manner and to the satisfaction of the engineer or defendants or either of them" (following the language of the allegation in defendants' pleadings). It is further contended that the extra work testified to by plaintiff should have been excluded from the judgment, because it could only be supported by a pleading counting on a quantum meruit, and there was, and is, no such count in the complaint. No attack is made upon the sufficiency of the complaint, by demurrer or otherwise, and no objections were taken to the testimony introduced, and no exceptions preserved to the improper admission or exclusion of evidence. There are 17 specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, 9 of errors of law occurring during the trial assigned (all of which relate to the findings of the court), and 8 particulars in which the decision is said to be against law. Most, if not all, these specifications, errors, and particulars pass out of consideration upon ascertaining and determining the character of plaintiff's action and applying the rule that this court will not look into the weight of the evidence supporting a finding, if there be a substantial conflict in the evidence.

The complaint here is, in effect, an indebitatus assumpsit count at common law, and declares upon an executed contract. While it lacks the ordinary allegations of indebtedness and that the services were rendered at defendants' request (Estee's Pleadings [Boone's 4th Ed.] §§ 905, 912), these averments are unnecessary, when the consideration as well as the promise are implied from the nature of the transaction declared on (McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 86, 55 Pac. 761). Such pleading is allowable under our Code (Farwell v. Murray, 104 Cal. 464, 38 Pac. 199; Pleasant v. Samuels, 114 Cal. 37, 45 Pac. 998), and its use carries with it the general rule applicable to such counts (Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 258, 23 Pac. 127). It is said in Chitty on Pleading, *p. 343 et seq.: "Several distinct debts due in respect of different contracts not under seal, of the same or a different nature, as demands for work, and debts for goods, moneys lent, etc., might always be included in one count of this description; and the plaintiff would succeed pro tanto, though he only prove one of such contracts. * * * Under an indebitatus count the plaintiff may recover what may be due to him, although no specific price or sum was agreed upon (the promise being implied); and therefore it has been observed that the quantum meruit and quantum valebant counts are in no case necessary, and should in many cases be omitted to prevent unnecessary prolixity and expense. * * * However special the agreement was, * * * and the terms of it have been performed on the plaintiff's part, and the remuneration was to be in money, it is not necessary to declare specially. The common indebitatus count is sufficient." Id. *p. 348. The plaintiff testified, and he is corroborated by his foreman, that he fully completed the grading and excavating according to his contract, the court so finds, and a case was made that justified such a pleading. Had he failed to sustain the burden of proving a completed contract, his case must have failed as to any work done under the contract; and, without a quantum meruit or other count to support a judgment upon a part performance, he could have recovered nothing. The express promise as to the work done under the executed special contract and the implied promise as to the extra work could be declared on in the one count, since they together constituted the indebtedness due from defendants to plaintiff upon contracts that were fully executed. The indebtedness had become a single claim for money due for grading and excavating. The rule here is similar to the one applied to the more familiar form of common count, an account stated. All the items and transactions preceding the stating of the account become merged in the one account stated. The law implies a promise to pay this, and permits an action to be brought upon the single sum ascertained to be due, without pleading any of the items or transactions from which the result was obtained. If defendants had desired to ascertain the items of the claim, they could have obtained them under the provisions of section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Farwell v. Murray, 104 Cal. 464, 38 Pac. 199.

The issue as to whether or not there was a waiver of the engineer's certificate was properly tried by the court under the implied allegation of the complaint that the contract had been fully executed and performed by the plaintiff, and that nothing remained to be done but to pay the money agreed to be paid. Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 190, 55 Pac. 783. The special contract was admissible in evidence to establish the measure of compensation for the labor performed under it. Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443. Whether a demurrer for uncertainty would lie to such a complaint appears to be in doubt. Pleasant v. Samuels, 114 Cal. 37, 45 Pac. 998; Shade v. Sisson, 115 Cal. 357, 47 Pac. 135; McFarland v. Holcomb, supra; Minor v. Baldridge, supra. In the last cited case, while the mode of pleading here followed is criticised as inconsistent with the code provisions requiring the party to state the facts constituting his cause of action, it is expressly held that it is too well established to be declared improper.

The action, then, is neither on the special contract nor on a quantum meruit. The findings are within the pleadings, and there is evidence to sustain them all. Plaintiff testified that he completed the work under his contract according to the specifications thereof. In this he was corroborated by his foreman. As to the certificate from the engineer, he testified that it was unjustly and fraudulently detained from him by the engineer because of a personal quarrel. The testimony of the defendant Houston and his witness Gibson corroborate this in part, to the extent of establishing that they quarreled over the setting of stakes on the job. Plaintiff testified that the engineer withheld the certificate to compel the payment of a personal debt for these stakes, claimed to be due from plaintiff to the engineer. While the letter was not in evidence and cannot be considered here, this statement is corroborated by the letter of Mr. Wood which is made a part of the showing on the motion for a new trial. If the trial court accepted the explanation of plaintiff, which it had a right to do, and found the withholding of the certificate was a fraud upon plaintiff and without warrant, there was evidence to sustain it and the complaint was sufficient to support the finding, without the fraud or excuse being specifically pleaded or set out. Minor v. Baldridge, supra.

Conceding the complaint to be insufficient for the reasons claimed by appellant, there is another rule of pleading applicable here which would still require that the findings and decision of the trial court be sustained. All the issues which it is contended the complaint should have tendered were set forth by the answer, counterclaim, and cross-complaint of defendants, and issue thereon joined by plaintiff's answer to the two latter pleadings. The rule is well settled that a complaint which lacks the averment of a fact essential to a cause of action may be so aided by the averment, or express denial, of that fact in the answer, as to uphold a judgment thereon. Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 537, 45 Pac. 816. The omission will also be cured by its averment in a cross-complaint of the defendant; and this, although a demurrer to the complaint for the want of the fact has been erroneously overruled. Cohen v. Knox, 90 Cal. 266, 275, 276, 27 Pac. 215, 13 L. R. A. 711; Daggett v. Gray, 110 Cal. 172, 42 Pac. 568. The case was tried and findings made upon the issues tendered by defendants' pleadings, and it would be a vain thing to reverse the judgment, to direct the plaintiff to amend his complaint by averring facts already averred in the cross-complaint, and to again, in that form, present issues which have already been raised and determined. Cohen v. Knox, supra; Antonelle v. Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 320, 73 Pac. 966.

We have accepted the statement in appellant's reply brief in regard to the extension of time given on the service of statement on motion for a new trial and considered the appeal on its merits. We find no error in denying the motion for a new trial. The affidavit filed with the motion presenting the subsequently discovered letter of the engineer does not present any new evidence that would, if admitted, be sufficient to justify a change in the decision to the advantage of the defendants.

No error appearing from the record, judgment and order of the trial court are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

SAN DIEGO REALTY CO. v. CORNELL et al. (L. A. 1,805.) (Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907.) Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge. Action by the San Diego Realty Company against F. Cornell and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed. Cassius Carter, Dist. Atty., and Albert Schoonover, for appellants. Collier, Smith & Holcomb, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This case is in all respects identical with that of San Diego Realty Co. v. Cornell (L. A. No. 1,709, decided March 8, 1907) 89 Pac. 603. There was the same tender of the amount due, the same refusal to accept, and an offer by plaintiff to pay the amount found justly due. The court's findings were in accordance with the complaint, but in its decree (seemingly doubting its power to accept the tender, as was done in L. A. No. 1,709) it decreed an injunction and a reassessment of the property. It should have granted the relief plaintiff prayed for upon payment of the amount which it found to be justly due. As this may be done upon the findings actually made, there is no occasion for a reversal of the judgment; and it is ordered that the judgment be modified in this respect.

SAN DIEGO REALTY CO. v. CORNELL et al. (L. A. 1,822.) (Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1907.) Department 2. Action by the San Diego Realty Company against A. F. Cornell and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions to allow amendment to complaint.

PER CURIAM. This case is in all respects like Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168. There was no offer or tender of the amount of taxes justly due. It differs in this respect from the cases numbered L. A. 1,805 (supra) and L. A. 1,709 (89 Pac. 603), and the other cases decided upon their authority. The judgment in this case must be reversed, with directions to the trial court to permit a proper amendment to plaintiff's complaint, if plaintiff should be so advised.

SMITH v. PELTON WATER WHEEL CO. (L. A. 1,609.) (Supreme Court of California. July 23, 1907.) For majority opinion, see 90 Pac. 932.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing and from the judgment. I entertain no doubt that the superior court had power to allow the motion to be renewed, and the fact that it did allow it to be renewed excludes the presumption that it was denied upon the ground of laches. It seems much more probable, in view of all the circumstances, that it was allowed for the purpose of enabling the defendant to make a full presentation of the merits of its demand in case of an appeal. The motion was denied in the first instance without prejudice, and was promptly renewed. It was again denied, as the record shows, for reasons stated in a written opinion. That opinion is not set out in the bill of exceptions, but is quoted in appellant's brief. It shows that the motion was denied for the sole reason that defendant's affidavits did not contain a specific denial of the allegation in the complaint that the contract price was made payable "whenever and wherever demanded." The application for leave to renew the motion was based upon the ground that it had not been heard upon its merits, and was supported by affidavits denying in terms the allegation as to the time and place of payment. No counter affidavits were filed in support of the complaint (which in this particular could be held to state merely a legal conclusion). If the allegation of the complaint was true in fact, as contradistinguished from a legal conclusion, the plaintiff was called upon to show by affidavit that the contract contained those express terms—a conclusion that did not necessarily follow from the allegation in the complaint. If this view is correct, the only ground upon which the motion could be denied was disproved, and the order of the court can be sustained only upon the supposition that the defendant was held guilty of laches. But there was no laches unless injury had resulted to the plaintiff, or would result from the delay, and there was neither showing nor suggestion of any possible injury. A serious consequence of the ruling denying defendant's motion is that, owing to the mistake of counsel in supposing that their appeal would stay proceedings in the action, a default judgment was taken, and all opportunity of presenting the meritorious defense alleged has been cut off. (See opinion affirming default judgment.) I cannot regard with favor technical rulings upon questions of procedure, which result in condemning a party without a hearing, even when they are imperatively required by the terms of some law. In this case I think the ruling—so far from being necessary—was erroneous.

Code, § 1192, as amended in 1901, provides that certificates of party nominations may be filed not less than 20 days before the day of election. Held, that a certificate of party nominations offered for filing on October 17th, containing the names of persons to be voted for at an election on November 6th, was in time.

2. Elections—Acceptance of Certificate for Filing.

Where a certificate of party nominations was presented to the registrar of voters after the hour prescribed by law for closing his office, but before it was closed, it was his duty to receive and file it.

In Bank. Application for a writ of mandamus by E. H. Cosgriff, to compel the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco and G. P. Adams, registrar of said city and county, to receive and file in the registrar's office a certificate of nominations. Granted.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, and G. P. Adams, as registrar of voters of said city and county, to receive and file in the registrar's office a certificate of nominations of certain persons as candidates of a political party, styling itself in said certificate the "Nonpartisan Judicial Party," to be voted for at the election in November, 1906, for the offices of justices of the superior court and justices of the peace of said city and county, and to compel said board and registrar to place the names of said candidates upon the official ballots to be used at said election, as party candidates, in a party column under said party name. The cause was decided for the petitioner by this court in October, 1906, and a peremptory writ was issued at that time, as prayed for.

The certificate of nomination, duly verified, with the requisite number of signatures of electors thereto, was duly presented to the registrar for filing on October 16, 1906, after 5 o'clock in the evening. It was again duly presented on October 17, 1906, during the usual and lawful business hours. The offer of October 16th was refused, because it was made after 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and that of October 17th, because, as it is claimed, it was not made within the time limited by law. It is provided in section 1192 of the Political Code, as amended in 1901, that being the law in force in 1906, that certificates of party nominations not made by a party convention, but by electors signing the same and designating themselves as a political party with a specified party name, may be filed "not more than 50 days nor less than 20 days before the day of election."

The word "days," as here used, refers to a day as a unit of time, and not as an aggregation of a certain number of hours, minutes, or seconds. In this sense, and for the purpose thus used, a day is not capable of subdivision into hours, minutes, or seconds, but is to be taken as a whole. In such computations the hours are not counted to ascertain whether a period of 24 hours, or a given number of such periods, have elapsed between the act to be done and the day from which the time is to begin running. The fractions of the days are no more taken into consideration than are the fractions of the seconds. The consequence is that every day, and every part of that day, is, by this rule, one day before every part of the succeeding day. The last moment of any day is, in contemplation of law in such cases, one day before the first moment of the next day, although the elapsed time is infinitesimal. The rule is strictly one of convenience. Any other method of computation would require an accurate account to be kept of the exact hour, minute, and second of the occurrence of the act to be timed, would produce endless confusion and strife, and would prove impolitic, if not wholly impracticable. By the method stated, it is clear that the offer of October 17th was in time. Manifestly, on that theory, the 5th day of November would be one day before the 6th day of that month, and not less than one day before, since the number 5 is one less than 6. So, by counting the consecutive days backward from November 6th, it will be found that October 17th was 20 days, and if 20 days, then not less than 20 days before November 6th. This is what is contemplated by section 12 of the Political Code, declaring that in computing time by days the first day is to be excluded and the last day included. Excluding November 6th, the first day, we find October 17th, to be the twentieth day, or the last day of the period, and as it is to be included in the count, it must be counted as part of the period. Thus, it makes the full number of 20 days before the day of the election, and it cannot be "less than 20 days before" that day. This application of the rule is well established. Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 514; Hagenmeyer v. Mendocino Co., 82 Cal. 217, 23 Pac. 14; Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 522, 38 Pac. 900; Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 182, 38 Pac. 715; Bellmer v. Blessington, 136 Cal. 4, 68 Pac. 111; Hannah v. Green, 143 Cal. 21, 76 Pac. 708.

The petition is in two counts. The first count presents the single question whether or not the offer of the certificate after 5 o'clock in the afternoon of October 16th was a lawful offer with respect to the time of the day at which it was made. A separate general demurrer to this count was filed, and the disposal of this demurrer renders it necessary to decide the question. While we do not hold that the registrar would be required to keep his office open for such business after the hours prescribed by law, yet we have no doubt that, in cases like this, where the political rights of citizens are involved, if he does keep his office open after those hours, it is his duty to receive and file such a document, though presented after the lawful hours. The certificate should have been received and filed when offered, and the names of the candidates should have been placed on the ballots as party nominations, in a party column, under the designated party name.

1. CONTEMPT—MISCONDUCT IN PRESENCE OF COURT.

An attorney, presenting to the judge in open court a scandalous affidavit in support of an application for a change of judges, commits contempt in the presence of the court, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, providing that, where a contempt is committed in the presence of the court, it may be punished summarily, etc., notwithstanding section 1209, subd. 12, defining contempt, so that the court may proceed summarily or by citation to show cause, and may allow a showing in defense, extenuation, or mitigation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, § 142.]

2. JUDGES — DISQUALIFICATION — BIAS — AFFIDAVIT FOR CHANGE—CONTEMPT—PROCEEDINGS TO PUNISH.

A judge is not disqualified from sitting in proceedings to punish an attorney for contempt, based on his presenting to the judge in open court an affidavit attacking the judge's integrity and containing imputations on his motives.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Judges, § 187.]

3. SAME—MISCONDUCT CONSTITUTING CONTEMPT.

A party after obtaining a new trial on appeal for error in rulings at the trial presented an affidavit in support of an application to change judges. The affidavit declared that the party believed that the judge's rulings were made willfully and corruptly, and that the party believed that the judge knew that such rulings were erroneous, etc. Held, that the affidavit constituted contempt of court on the part of affiant, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 4, authorizing the filing of affidavits in support of a motion for a change of judges on the ground that the party cannot have a fair and impartial trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Contempt, § 9.]

4. SAME—MISCONDUCT AS OFFICER OF COURT.

An attorney, who knowingly presents on behalf of his client an affidavit containing averments attacking the integrity of the judge and containing defamatory matter, is guilty of contempt.

In Bank. Application for a writ of prohibition by Charles G. Lamberson against the superior court of the county of Tulare and another. On disagreement of the judges of the District Court of Appeal, the proceedings were certified to the Supreme Court. Writ discharged.

Alfred Daggett, for petitioner. W. B. Wallace, in pro. per.

HENSHAW, J. Petitioner was and is the attorney at law of John Bashore, who is plaintiff in two actions pending before the superior court of Tulare county. John Bashore made application for a change of judges in these actions, supporting his application by his own affidavits, verified before petitioner as notary public, and by petitioner filed with and presented to the court. Two of these affidavits were filed in connection with separate applications for change of judges in one of the cases, while the third was presented in support of the application for a change of judges in the other case. Both actions are still pending. The first two applications were met with counter affidavits and denied. The third affidavit contained substantially all of the alleged defamatory and contemptuous matter embodied in the preceding affidavits, and went even further in attacking the integrity of the judge. Upon presentation of this last affidavit, the judge, believing that he could not with self-respect longer sit at the hearing of these causes, announced that John Bashore could have a change of judges in any case pending in his court, whether theretofore denied or not, upon application, and without the filing of any affidavit. He then issued a citation to petitioner to show cause why he should not, as the attorney for John Bashore, and as an officer of the court who had presented these scandalous affidavits, be punished for contempt in so doing. This citation to show cause set forth at length the proceedings had in the matter and the language of the affidavits which the court regarded as unwarranted, contemptuous, and deliberately designed to bring into disrepute himself, as judge, and the court over which he presided. Petitioner then applied for and obtained from the district court of appeal an alternative writ of prohibition. The questions involved were considered by that tribunal, and, upon disagreement of the judges, the proceedings were certified to this court.

Dealing first with the questions of procedure which petitioner presents, this contempt (assuming for the moment that a contempt was actually committed) was one which took place in the immediate view and presence of the court, and the citation to show cause, which was timely made, did not require an affidavit to support it. The second and third affidavits were filed and presented to the judge in open court. In McCormick v. Sheridan (Cal.) 20 Pac. 24, an attorney had presented to this court a petition for a rehearing, whose language reflected upon an opinion written by one of the commissioners. Some days thereafter, when the matter of the petition had come under review, an order was issued from this court, which order was in fact a citation directed to the offending attorney, and commanding his presence to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. A hearing was had, and this court declared: "Upon the facts contained in the petition for rehearing, and quoted above, we adjudge the respondent Waterman guilty of contempt, committed in the face of the court." In re Foote, 76 Cal. 543, 18 Pac. 678, declares merely that in contempt proceedings, which contempt consisted of contumelious language addressed to the judge in the trial of a cause, an order adjudging an attorney in contempt made 50 days thereafter and in his absence, and without citation or notice to him of any kind, was improper, upon the ground that by its laches the court had lost jurisdiction. It is not in conflict with the rule and procedure applied in McCormick v. Sheridan, and, if it were, McCormick v. Sheridan is the latest expression of this court upon the matter. McCormick v. Sheridan, moreover, is in full accord with the views of the Supreme Court of the United States expressed in Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 Sup. Ct. 77, 32 L. Ed. 405, where it is said: "Jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner attached instantly upon the contempt being committed in the presence of the court, and was neither surrendered nor lost by delay on the part of the circuit court in exercising its power to proceed. It was within the discretion of the court whose dignity he had insulted, and whose authority he had openly defied, to determine whether it should, upon its own view of what occurred, proceed at once to punish him, or postpone action until he was arrested upon process, brought back into its presence, and permitted to make defense." In People v. Barrett, 121 N. Y. 678, 24 N. E. 1095, the respondent had secreted himself in the jury room while the jury were deliberating, and had taken notes of their proceedings. He was discovered and afterwards charged with having committed a contempt of court. By the Supreme Court (People v. Barrett, 56 Hun, 351, 9 N. Y. Supp. 321) it was held that it was a contempt committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, and the Court of Appeals affirmed this determination. In Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436, an affidavit for a change of judges was presented to the court while in session by respondent's attorney, respondent, himself an attorney, being absent. The affiant was brought before the court by attachment, and the Supreme Court declared: "It was in the face of the court, and warranted the judge in taking cognizance of it summarily as though the words, instead of being written or read in court, had been spoken in facie curiæ." The contempt being one committed in the presence of the court required no supporting affidavit. Code Civ. Proc. § 1211. The could could have proceeded upon it summarily, or by citation to show cause—the course here adopted—and could have allowed a showing in defense, extenuation, or mitigation. Nor is this matter in any wise controlled by subdivision 12 of section 1209, Code of Civil Procedure. While conceding to the Legislature the fullest power in the matter of contempts to lay down rules of procedure, we repeat what was said in Re Shortridge, 99 Cal. 526, 34 Pac. 227, 21 L. R. A. 755, 37 Am. St. Rep. 78: "No authority has been found which denies the inherent right of a court, in the absence of a limitation placed upon it by the power which created it, to punish as a contempt an act, whether committed in or out of its presence, which tends to impede, embarrass, or obstruct the court in the discharge of its duties. It is a doctrine which is admitted in all its rigor by American courts everywhere, and does not need the support of foreign authorities, based upon the fiction that the majesty of the King, represented in the persons of the judges, is always present in the court. It is founded upon the principle, which is coeval with the existence of the courts, and as necessary as the right of self-protection, that it is a necessary incident to the execution of the powers conferred upon the court, and is necessary to maintain its dignity, if not its very existence. It exists independent of statute. The legislative department may regulate the procedure and enlarge the power, but it cannot, without trenching upon the constitutional powers of the court, * * * fetter the power itself."

Nor is the judge disqualified from sitting in the contempt proceedings. Petitioner's theory in this regard, if we understand it, is that the judge is disqualified from hearing the proceedings in contempt, because the contempt itself consists in imputations upon his motives, and attacks upon his integrity. Such is not and never has been the law. The position of a judge in such a case is undoubtedly a most delicate one, but his duty is none the less plain, and that duty commands that he shall proceed. However willing he may be to forego the private injury, the obligation is upon him by his oath to maintain the respect due to the court over which he presides. As was said by the Chief Justice of this court in Re Philbrook, 105 Cal. 471, 38 Pac. 511, 884, 45 Am. St. Rep. 59: "The law which in such cases makes us the judges of offenses against the court places us in an extremely delicate and invidious position, but it leaves us no alternative except to allow the court and the people of the state, in whose name and by whose authority it acts, to be insulted with impunity, or to exercise the authority conferred by law for the purpose of compelling attorneys to maintain the respect due to courts of justice and judicial officers." Were the rule otherwise so that it was required that another judge should be called in to sit in the proceeding, the recalcitrant and offending party would need only to insult each judicial officer in turn until the list was exhausted, and thus, by making a farce of legal procedure, go scathless and unpunished.

Coming, now, to the facts constituting the alleged contempt, it appears that John Bashore is a man about 70 years of age, who has been an invalid for more than 20 years, has been partially deaf for several years, and whose wife attended to and conducted all of his business transactions, while he remained upon the ranch where they lived, some miles from Visalia; that he prosecuted an action to recover certain properties which had been sold under execution. The cause was tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment adverse to him, and upon his appeal to this court a new trial was ordered for certain errors in the admission of evidence and in the giving of instructions. Bashore v. Parker, 146 Cal. 525, 80 Pac. 707. The affidavit in support of the application for a change of judges, with other impertinent and defamatory matter, declares as follows: "Which said rulings upon the admission of such evidence this affiant believes and alleges was done willfully and corruptly and for the purpose of preventing this affiant from having a fair and impartial trial of said action; and affiant believes that said Hon. W. B. Wallace is a sufficiently good judge of law to know that the said rulings so made by him, and such instructions given to said jury in said action, were erroneous, and such rulings and instructions were not the law of said case; and this affiant believes that said instructions were so given and such rulings made with a full knowledge on the part of said judge that they were erroneous at the time they were given and made. And this affiant believes that the dislike and hatred of said W. B. Wallace, judge, as aforesaid, is so great that he would willfully make unlawful rulings in the trial of this action against this affiant, and that he would find all matters of fact against this affiant, whether there was any evidence to sustain such findings or not, and that he would not give the testimony of this affiant, or the witnesses produced by him upon the trial of said action, any credit whatever as against any witness of any kind or character that might be produced upon the side of the defendant in said action." This application for change of judges is founded upon subdivision 4 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the provision of which is simply that, "when it appears from the affidavits on file that either party cannot have a fair and impartial trial before any judge or court of record about to try the case by reason of the prejudice or bias of such judge, said judge shall forthwith secure the services of some other judge of the same or some other county." It must need little consideration to show that the language above quoted, as addressed to the law, is flagrantly and willfully contemptuous. It states the mere belief of Bashore, without any supporting fact, as in Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 Pac. 976, unless it can be said that the fact that the judge fell into error upon the first trial of the case is sufficient to justify the imputation of a corrupt intent—an argument too preposterous to merit even enunciation. But, outside of this circumstance, the whole declaration is but the purported belief of this aged invalid, with no attempt to state even the source of his information or origin of that belief. It cannot impress the unprejudiced mind as being other than a deliberate intent to insult and defame the judge. Let it be understood that we are not here declaring that if a judge has in fact indulged in corrupt practices, or has in fact given a ruling or decision through a corrupt motive, that those facts may not be stated. They may be. And they would be prepotent evidence of bias and prejudice. But it may not for one moment be countenanced that, without supporting facts, lawyer or litigant may wantonly charged a judge with corrupt and improper motives, and seek protection from the just consequences of such outrage under the shield of the Code provision. McCormick v. Sheridan (Cal.) 20 Pac. 24; In re Philbrook, 105 Cal. 471, 38 Pac. 511, 884, 45 Am. St. Rep. 59; People v. Brown, 30 Pac. 338, 17 Colo. 431; In re Mains, 80 N. W. 714, 121 Mich. 603; Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436; In re Snow, 75 Pac. 741, 27 Utah, 265; Harrison v. State, 35 Ark. 458; In re Pryor, 18 Kan. 72, 26 Am. Rep. 747. So, while it is true that matters which are pertinent to the consideration and which are charged as facts are admissible, without reference to their effect upon the reputation of the judge, or of any one else, it is equally true that neither attorney nor litigant has any right to present such degrading accusations under the guise of mere belief, without the aid of a single supporting fact. May v. Ball (Ky.) 67 S. W. 257.

Indisputably, therefore, John Bashore, upon the face of this record, was guilty of contempt committed in the immediate presence of the court. Is his attorney, who presumptively prepared, and who certainly presented to the court, this affidavit, any less guilty? As the case now stands, we think not. Under his oath to maintain the respect due to courts, every attorney stands responsible, not only for his own individual conduct in court, but for every paper which, knowingly, he presents on behalf of his client. As the matter is here before us, the petitioner knowingly presented this affidavit on behalf of his client, and for this he is equally culpable with his client. Defenses are open to him, and he may exonerate himself upon the hearing from intentional wrongdoing, if the facts warrant, but no doubt can be entertained of the jurisdiction of the court, under the circumstances shown, to proceed with that hearing.

The writ is discharged.

LAMB v. WEBB, Atty. Gen., et al. (L. A. 1,864.) *

(Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1907. Rehearing Denied July 24, 1907.)

1. MANDAMUS—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—ACTS OF PUBLIC OFFICERS—MATTERS OF DISCRETION.

The power of a court to compel the Attorney General to grant leave to commence a suit against his conscientious belief that such leave should not be given, should be exercised only where the abuse of discretion in refusing leave, is extreme and clearly indefensible.

2. SAME—LEAVE TO BRING QUO WARRANTO PROCEEDINGS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1111, provides that any elector may contest the right of any person to an office to which he has been declared elected, and the procedure described includes a recount, but there is no provision for a recount where no one is declared elected. Pol. Code, § 1067, provides that a special election must be ordered in case of a tie between those receiving the highest number of votes. Code Civ. Proc. § 803, provides that an action may be brought by the Attorney General in the name of the people upon the complaint of a private party against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office or franchise in the state, and that he must bring the action whenever he has reason to believe that any such office has been usurped, etc. At a general election plaintiff and defendant, G., were the only candidates for a certain office. The election returns showed a tie as to them, and the canvassing board declared the vote a tie, and ordered a special election at which G. was elected and was so declared. A certificate of election was issued to G., who assumed and has since held the office. The regularity of the special election was not objected to, nor its legality assailed, but plaintiff applied to the Attorney General for leave to bring quo warranto proceedings against G. under Code Civ. Proc. § 803, proposing to show that by a recounting of the ballots plaintiff was elected at the first election. The only showing made to the Attorney General was a verified complaint which plaintiff proposed to file, which on information and belief alleged generally that four nonresidents had been allowed to vote, and their ballots had been counted for G.; that ballots bearing marks of identification were counted for G. and unobjectionable ballots for plaintiff had been rejected. Held, that the showing was not sufficient to justify compelling the Attorney General by mandamus to grant leave to sue.

*For dissenting opinion on rehearing, see 91 Pac. 646.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by Cyril G. Lamb against Ulysses S. Webb, Attorney General, and another, for a writ of mandamus. From orders overruling a demurrer to the complaint and granting the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions to sustain the demurrer.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Geo. A. Sturtevant, B. F. Thomas, and Henley C. Booth, for appellants. Canfield & Starbuck, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. At the general election held throughout the state on November 8, 1904, the plaintiff, Lamb, and the defendant Glass were the only candidates for the office of supervisor of the third supervisorial district of the county of Santa Barbara. The board of supervisors, sitting as a canvassing board, declared the vote for this office to be a tie between said two persons, and thereupon the board ordered a special election to be held in said district to elect a supervisor therefor as provided in section 1067 of the Political Code. It is admitted that the election returns showed a tie. Lamb and Glass were both candidates at the special election which resulted in Glass receiving a majority of 11 of the votes cast thereat. The board declared the result accordingly, and a certificate of election was issued to Glass, who entered upon the duties of the office on the first Monday of July, 1905, and has ever since been and now is the acting supervisor of said district. On June 9, 1905, plaintiff, Lamb, made application to defendant Webb, as Attorney General, for leave to sue defendant Glass under section 803, Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that Glass was "usurping," etc., the franchises of said office of supervisor. The purpose of the proposed action was to show that by a recounting of the ballots cast at the said general election on November 8, 1904, there was not actually a tie, but that by a legal count of said ballots plaintiff had a majority of the votes. The Attorney General, after a hearing, refused to grant the leave, whereupon the plaintiff applied to the Governor of the state for an order directing the Attorney General to grant said leave for suit, but the Governor refused to make such order. Thereupon plaintiff brought this present proceeding to have the Attorney General compelled by mandamus to grant the leave to sue. The defendant demurred to the complaint. The court overruled the demurrer, and gave judgment ordering a peremptory writ to issue as prayed for, and from this judgment the defendant appeals.

The application to the Attorney General for leave to sue was accompanied by a document in the form of a complaint, which plaintiff intended to file in the action which he proposed to bring against Glass if permitted to do so. This "complaint" was verified in the usual form adopted in this state for the verification of a pleading, and it constituted the only showing under oath made to the Attorney General. Section 803, Code Civ. Proc., under which the application was made, is as follows: "An action may be brought by the Attorney General, in the name of the people of this state, upon his own information, or upon the complaint of a private party, against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise within this state. And the Attorney General must bring the action, whenever he has reason to believe that any such office or franchise has been usurped, intruded into, or unlawfully held or exercised by any person, or when he is directed to do so by the Governor." Section 1111, Code Civ. Proc., declares that any elector may contest the right of any person to an office to which he has been "declared elected." And the procedure is prescribed for such contest including a recounting of the ballots. There is no provision for a contest for a recounting of the ballots where no one has been "declared elected," but section 1067 of the Political Code provides that, "if at any election two or more persons * * * receive an equal and the highest number of votes, there is no choice, and a special election to fill such office must be ordered by the proper board or officer." As the board of supervisors has no power to open and count the ballots, the above provision evidently means that the board must act upon the only evidence before it, to wit, the returns of the election officers.

Under our views of the case, we do not deem it necessary to decide a number of questions discussed in the briefs, as, for instance, whether or not the discretion of the Attorney General under section 803 to grant or refuse leave to commence a quo warranto proceeding is limited only by the control of the Governor as expressly prescribed in said section; whether the provision that in case of a tie (which necessarily means a tie appearing upon the returns) there shall be a special election is not exclusive of any other proceeding in the premises; whether the submission by respondent of his claims to the voters at the special election did not estop him from objecting to such special election as a final conclusion of the whole matter. These and certain other questions we shall not discuss because, assuming for the purposes of this appeal that the Attorney General's discretion under the said section is not entirely beyond the control of the court, and that the other points discussed should be determined in favor of respondent, still it is clear that the power of a court to compel him to violate his own judgment by ordering him to grant leave to commence a suit against his own conviction and conscientious belief that such leave should not be given should be exercised only where the abuse of discretion by the Attorney General in refusing the leave is extreme and clearly indefensible. When such an extreme case does not appear, a decree of a court compelling him to act against his judgment is erroneous, and is itself an abuse of discretion.

Now, if we apply the above principles to the case at bar, we find that in refusing leave to plaintiff to commence his proceeding in quo warranto the Attorney General was not only not guilty of a violation of his discretion in any extreme sense, but was not guilty of any want of discretion. What was the case presented to him upon the application of plaintiff for leave to sue? In the first place, it appeared that there had beeen a tie between the parties at the general election; that in pursuance of the provisions prescribed for such an emergency a special election was ordered; that at such election the defendant Glass received a majority of the votes cast at said election and received his certificate of election; that by virtue of such election and certificate he entered upon the possession of the office and was discharging its duties; and that no objection to the regularity and legality of the said special election had ever been made, and no proceeding had ever been instituted to assail it. Here, then, was a perfect prima facie case showing that Glass had not usurped the said office, but was rightfully in its possession. And it must be remembered that the question with an Attorney General always is: Has any person usurped the franchises of the office? Did plaintiff overthrow or undermine this prima facie case by any showing which he made to the Attorney General? The only showing which he made was this: He presented to the Attorney General a document in the form of a verified complaint which he intended to file in his proposed suit. In the complaint there were only two statements made, which, if supported by evidence of their truth, should have had any effect on the Attorney General. The first was that at the said general election four named persons were allowed to vote who were not residents of the precincts in which they were so allowed to vote, and that these votes were counted for Glass. But this statement was made wholly and expressly "upon information and belief," and therefore was of no value to the Attorney General as the presentation of any fact. The other statement was that the election officers had counted for Glass votes which were cast upon ballots that had distinguishing marks placed there for the purpose of identifying them, and rejecting the ballots for plaintiff which were unobjectionable. The character of the distinguishing marks is not given. The plaintiff says in the said complaint that he does not know the number of ballots with such distinguishing marks which were allowed by the election board, or the number with plaintiff's name on which were rejected. He does not positively identify even one. But these statements are also made upon "information and belief." Outside of this "complaint" there was no attempt at any showing whatever. No affidavit or oral testimony of any person as to any fact within his knowledge touching such election was offered. The only showing made by plaintiff before the Attorney General was therefore that he had been informed that certain things had occurred before the election board at the general election; and upon no further evidence he asked the Attorney General to allow him to introduce litigation and confusion into the county affairs by permitting him to use the former's name to commence a suit for the purpose of discovering by a recounting of the votes whether there might not have been some error committed by said board of election. Clearly, to our minds, this was not a sufficient showing to warrant a court in holding that the Attorney General ought to have been convinced that he had "reason to believe" that Glass had unlawfully intruded into and usurped said office of supervisor. The true rule on the subject is, in our opinion, expressed by the court in Lamoreaux v. Ellis, 50 N. W. 814, 89 Mich. 146, as follows: "It has been held by the King's Bench that a chief object in requiring leave is to prevent vexatious prosecutions, and the rule is inflexible that there must be affidavits so full and positive from persons knowing the facts as to make out a clear case of right in such a way that perjury may be brought if any material allegation is false"—citing many authorities.

For the reasons above given, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

PEOPLE v. FONG CHUNG, alias FAT JIM. (Cr. 74.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 27, 1907.)

1. Criminal Law—Continuance—Absent Testimony.

A continuance was improperly refused defendant, where he offered an affidavit that a material witness, without whose testimony he could not safely proceed to trial, had been subpœnaed several days before the trial, but was seriously ill; that defendant could prove by the witness an alibi, a good reputation for truth, etc., and could not prove those facts by any other witness; the attending physician corroborating the defendant as to the witness' inability to attend court, and defendant's counsel having apprised the district attorney before the trial and upon hearing of the witness' illness that defendant could not go to trial on the day set, and the necessity for granting a continuance was not obviated by the district attorney stating, "We will concede that this Chinaman [the absent witness] will testify to anything in that affidavit."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1321, 1342–1347.]

2. Rape—Evidence—Admissibility.

In a rape trial, it was error to exclude testimony that the prosecutrix had a venereal disease when the rape is alleged to have occurred; it appearing she had such disease shortly thereafter, and that defendant had never had it, though it is contagious.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Rape, § 62.]

3. Same.

In a trial for raping a girl under age, it was error to exclude testimony that she had had intercourse with Chinamen other than defendant prior to the alleged offense; the evidence being admissible to repel an inference that he had conveyed a loathsome disease to her, to show that perhaps she was mistaken in defendant's identity, and as tending to affect her credibility.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Rape, § 59.]

4. Same—Evidence Affecting Credibility.

In a trial for raping a child under age, it was error to exclude testimony that she made no outcry, and that no one was permitted to see her except the authorities after she was placed in jail, since it affected her credibility.

5. Criminal Law—Appeal—Prejudicial Error.

In a rape trial, error in allowing a witness to be asked if he had not heard in Chinatown that defendant was taking little white girls there and was warned he would get into trouble if he continued it, and if witness had not heard that members of the Hop Sing Tong accused defendant of producing white girls there, was not cured by negative answers.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3130, 3131.]

6. Same—Appeal—Prejudicial Error.

In a rape trial, error in allowing a witness to be asked if he had not conducted a lottery and a poker game until a grand jury investigation was not cured by negative answers.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3130, 3131.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Fong Chung, alias Fat Jim, was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

John W. Sullivan, for appellant. U. S Webb and James H. Campbell, for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant is charged in the indictment with the crime of rape, in having had sexual intercourse on the 26th day of September, 1905, with Lillie Ida Davis, an unmarried female under the age of 16 years. After trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and judgment was thereupon entered, sentencing defendant to a term of 10 years in the state prison.

The facts disclosed by this record are revolting. The party upon whom the rape is alleged to have been committed was just 13 years of age, and had an elder sister Eliza who was 15. It seems, with the apparent knowledge and consent of the father and mother, that these two young girls were and had been in the habit of having sexual intercourse with Chinamen and other parties at their home, in which the father and mother and the smaller children of the family resided. For this they received small sums of money and presents. There were six other cases of alleged rape upon these sisters, charged to have been committed by different individuals, pending, and set for hearing at the time this case was called. Three of these were apparently against Chinamen, and three of them against white men or boys. The sisters were each suffering from venereal disease. While it is not clear that such disease existed at the time of the alleged crime by this defendant, it is clear that it existed, and both sisters were afflicted with it, when examined a short time afterwards. The offense is statutory, and no matter how depraved was the girl upon whom the act is alleged to have been committed, nor how many others were equally guilty, the defendant would be held none the less amenable to the law for his acts, if the evidence supported the verdict, and no error appeared of record; but, as the offense charged is one that of itself creates a feeling of prejudice and hostility in the minds of the jury, particularly in the case of a Chinaman, the court will look carefully into the record to see that all the substantial rights of the defendant were given him by the trial court. In this class of cases, as well as in all others, a defendant should be fully protected during the trial in all his rights, and, if he cannot thus be convicted, he should not be convicted at all.

The first contention made by defendant is that the court erred in refusing to postpone the trial for a reasonable time on account of the absence of a material witness, and the contention must be sustained. When the case was called for trial the defendant's counsel answered that he was not ready, and moved for a continuance on account of the absence of Charlie Yan Tie, a material witness for defendant. In support of the motion counsel for defendant offered and read the affidavit of defendant, which stated in substance that Charlie Yan Tie was a material witness, without whose testimony he could not safely proceed to trial; that a subpœna had been duly issued and served upon the said witness several days before the day set for trial; that the witness was seriously ill, under the care of a physician, and unable to appear in court; that the defendant could prove by said witness, if present, and expected to prove by him, that defendant was not in the presence of said Lillie Ida Davis at the time of the commission of the alleged crime; that the defendant bought from said witness two dress skirts and sold the same at a profit to the two Davis sisters, and that the defendant's reputation for truth, veracity, peace, and quietude is good; that defendant could not prove the said facts by any other witness. In support of said motion defendant's counsel testified that before the trial, and immediately upon learning of the illness of the said witness, he notified the district attorney that the witness was ill, and that defendant could not safely go to trial on the day set. Dr. Trueman testified that he was attending the witness Charlie Yan Tie, and that the witness was in bed very ill with a high fever, suffering from blood poisoning, and would not be out of bed for at least three weeks, and that it would be dangerous for said witness to attend court. Upon the above showing the judge remarked to the district attorney that in his opinion the continuance would have to be granted. The district attorney thereupon remarked, "We will concede that this Chinaman will testify to anything in that affidavit —everything that is material." Thereupon the court denied the continuance, and to this ruling the defendant duly excepted.

It must be borne in mind that no question was raised as to the sufficiency of the facts as stated in the affidavit. The ruling of the court was based squarely upon the theory that the admission of the district attorney to the effect that the absent witness, if present, would testify to anything in the affidavit, answered the purpose and obviated the necessity of a continuance; that the statements in the affidavit could be taken in lieu of the evidence of the witness. Such is not the law. The Constitution of the state (article 1, § 13) gives a defendant the right to have the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf. It is the duty of the court, when due diligence has been used, and it appears that the application is made in good faith, and the evidence is material, to continue the case for a reasonable time so that the case may be fairly tried on its merits. In the early case of People v. Diaz, 6 Cal. 248, it was held that the admission of the district attorney that the witness, if present, would have testified as set forth in defendant's affidavit, was not sufficient, but that, in order to obviate the necessity of a continuance, the district attorney should have admitted the truth of the facts set forth in the affidavit. The court said: "The materiality of the evidence having been shown, it was the duty of the court, in the absence of evidence tending to discredit or throw suspicion on the application to postpone the cause, to afford the prisoner reasonable time to secure the attendance of his witness. It was not sufficient that the district attorney agreed that the witness would have deposed to certain facts, if present. He should have admitted the truth of the facts absolutely. it was the right of the accused to have his witnesses orally examined in court, and this right could not be frittered away by compelling him to go to trial in their absence without the benefit of their testimony upon a statement of what the evidence would be, subject to impeachment. The value of oral testimony over all other is too well understood to suppose for a moment that such declarations will have the same weight on the minds of the jury as the testimony of the witness if he had been examined before them in open court." The above case has never been overruled or modified by any case to which our attention has been called. It has been followed in Graham v. State, 50 Ark. 167, 6 S. W. 721, and in Newton v. State, 21 Fla. 70. Its reasoning is logical. The district attorney could not by a concession as to "this Chinaman" deprive the defendant of the benefit of a substantial right. It was the time and the occasion when his each and every right should have been guarded both by the district attorney and the court. It was the first continuance asked. There was no question raised as to the good faith of the defendant in making the application. If the question as to the good faith of the application, or the sufficiency of the matters and things stated in the affidavit, had been raised, and sufficient showing made so as to appeal to the discretion of the court, the question would be different; but here we have squarely presented the ruling of the court based upon the statement of the district attorney quoted above. The court not only proceeded upon such theory, but instructed the jury to regard the statement in the affidavit as part of the evidence in the case, "as though Charlie Yan Tie had in open court as a witness so testified."

The evidence on the part of the prosecution tended to show that the alleged act of sexual intercourse took place about 7 o'clock of the evening of September 26, 1905. Lillie Ida Davis so testified. In cross-examination the defendant's counsel asked her the following question: "Q. Now, is it not a fact that on the 26th day of September last at 7 o'clock in the evening you had venereal and running sores on your private parts, in your vagina, and on the lips thereof?" The district attorney objected to the question as irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent, and not proper cross-examination. The court sustained the objection, to which ruling defendant duly excepted. The ruling of the court was erroneous. Dr. McMahon, a witness for the prosecution, testified that he examined the girl in October, 1905, and that she was then suffering from venereal disease. In fact, the evidence shows without contradiction that she had such disease early in October, 1905. Defendant testified that he never at any time had sexual intercourse with Lillie Ida Davis, and that he had never had any kind of venereal disease in his life. Dr. Cothran, a graduate of the medical department of the University of California, testified that he examined defendant about two weeks before the trial for any evidence of any variety of venereal disease; that he examined physically all the parts affected in such cases; and that defendant had never had chancroids (the disease from which the girl was suffering). The evidence shows that in most cases a male having sexual intercourse with a female suffering from venereal chancroids would contract the disease. Now, if defendant had no venereal disease, and never had chancroids, it seems to us that it was very material as to whether or not the girl, with whom he is alleged to have had sexual intercourse, was suffering from venereal disease on the day of such alleged intercourse. What reason was there for excluding the evidence? The prosecution apparently desired to prove that in October, 1905, the girl was suffering from chancroids. This might, and was probably intended to, carry with it the inference that she contracted the disease from the defendant on the 26th day of September. Defendant had the right to meet this inference by showing that she had such disease on the 26th day of September. He further had the right to prove, and did prove, that he had never had such disease. Upon all the facts thus proven the jury had the right to determine the guilt or innocence of defendant. The court refused to allow any evidence as to whether or not the girl was suffering from the disease on the 26th day of September. The objection of the district attorney was sustained to a similar question asked of Eliza, the sister of the girl. Eliza was asked the direct question as to whether or not Lillie had chancroids, or running sores, on her private parts on the 26th day of September, 1905, but under the objection of the district attorney she was not permitted to answer it. The mother of the girl testified that she had chancroids on the 26th day of September, 1905; but, it appearing on cross-examination that the mother only knew it by Eliza telling her, the court, on the motion of the district attorney, struck out the testimony. The rulings of the court in this regard were highly prejudicial to defendant.

Other rulings are complained of which appear to be erroneous, but which it is not necessary to discuss in detail. The defendant's attorney asked Lillie Ida Davis in cross-examination if she had had intercourse with any one else in the past year. Upon objection of the district attorney the court refused to allow the question to be answered. She was further asked by defendant's attorney if she had not had sexual intercourse with a great number of Chinamen in her bedroom at her home during the past year. The court sustained the objections of the district attorney to this line of questions. The defendant's attorney then asked questions as to particular named Chinamen, and as to dates prior to September 26, 1905; but the court made the same ruling excluding the evidence. While the facts sought to be elicited by these questions would not justify the defendant in having sexual intercourse with a girl under 16 years of age as a matter of law, yet they were competent for the purpose of aiding the jury in arriving at the main facts. If the fact that the girl was suffering from a venereal disease a short time after the alleged act of intercourse was a circumstance tending to corroborate the girl's testimony as to the act with defendant, by raising an inference that the venereal disease was communicated by defendant, the defendant, in that spirit of fairness which should prevail in all trials, should have been permitted to show that the girl might have been diseased by sexual intercourse with others. Or it might be that defendant could have shown that the girl was mistaken in his identity, and that it might have been some other Chinaman. The evidence sought to be elicited by the questions would have tended to show the credibility of the girl. If she had been having promiscuous sexual intercourse with Chinamen, or if she had been diseased by sexual intercourse with others prior to the date when it was shown that she had such disease, the jury had the right to consider these matters. We do not think the conviction of the defendant, under the circumstances of this case, was so important that everything else except the single fact should have been excluded from the jury. The district attorney in his zeal desired the case to be presented to the jury upon evidence as to the one act with defendant, and the corroborating fact of the girl having a venereal disease. Such facts alone would give him a beautiful theory as to the defendant's outrage upon an innocent girl of tender years, and his giving her a venereal disease; but the defendant had some rights. If she was suffering from a venereal disease on September 26th, and defendant never had such disease, it is a strong circumstance in favor of the testimony of defendant. If the girl was entertaining a great number of Chinamen in the same manner, it was very important for defendant to show that she may have been mistaken as to his identity.

It was said, in People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 Pac. 1116 (a similar charge to this): "The light of investigation should have been permitted to fall upon the witness, her statement and her conduct. If she was testifying to the truth, such investigation would not have injured the cause of the prosecution. If she was testifying to a falsehood, the defendant should have been allowed in every reasonable way to show it." In a concurring opinion by the Chief Justice it was said that, if the prosecuting witness made no outcry, or complaint to others, or if she was induced by threats of imprisonment to make the accusation, the jury had the right to take these facts into consideration in determining her credibility. The court in the case at bar refused to hear evidence that the witness made no outcry. The defendant's counsel endeavored to prove by cross-examination of the prosecuting witness that ever since she was placed in jail, October 16, 1905, no one was permitted to see her except the sheriff and his deputies, the district attorney and his deputies and detectives. The court, under the objection of the district attorney, would not allow the testimony. It seems to us that such testimony should have been allowed, and would affect the credibility of the witness. That a prosecuting witness of tender years was in a case like this kept in the sole custody and control of the officers of the law, and permitted to see no one else, is a circumstance that the jury should have known. Every lawyer and every judge under such circumstances would at once infer that the witness was testifying under the influences that had been surrounding her.

Sam Chew was called, and testified for the defendant. Under defendant's express objection and protest the district attorney was allowed to ask the witness many insulting and immaterial questions on cross-examination. Among these the district attorney asked the witness if he had not heard in Chinatown that the defendant was taking little white girls down there, and was warned that he would get into trouble if he continued it; if he had not heard that the members of the Hop Sing Tong accused defendant of producing white girls there; if it was not a fact that witness was conducting a lottery on First street back of Bachigalupi's cigar store; if witness was not selling lottery tickets at such place; if he was not running a poker game at the same place; if witness was not selling lottery tickets and running a poker game up to the time the grand jury before last began to investigate those things. We can conceive of no reason why such questions should have been allowed. It is true that the witness denied that any of the matters were true that were implied by the questions, but that does not cure the error. The district attorney did not attempt to prove the truth of any of the many things implied by the questions. They may have entirely destroyed the effect of the testimony of the witness, and, more than that, they may have created the belief that defendant was in the habit of seducing young girls. A witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except it may be shown that he has been convicted of a felony. Code Civ. Proc. § 2051. A witness need not give an answer which will have a tendency to degrade his character, unless it be to the very fact in issue, or to a fact from which the fact in issue would be presumed. Id. § 2065. Not only this, but a witness has the right to be protected from irrelevant, improper, or insulting questions. Id. § 2066. The above provisions of the Code apply alike to all witnesses, whether the witness be a Chinaman, a negro, one in the most humble walks of life, or one in high position, the rule is the same.

It is not necessary to consider other questions raised in the briefs.

The judgment and order are reversed.

HURWITZ v. GROSS. (Civ. 309.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 29, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 27, 1907.)

1. ACTION—JOINDER OF CAUSES—COMPLAINT.
A complaint for breach of agreement to pay mortgages, alleging that by reason thereof the mortgagee applied to the indebtedness the proceeds of plaintiff's property held as security, and plaintiff was obliged to pay the balance, while alleging two elements of damages, states but one cause of action.

2. CONTRACTS—ACTION FOR BREACH—PARTIES.
To an action for breach of contract to pay mortgages, by reason of which the mortgagee applied to the indebtedness the proceeds of plaintiff's property held as security, and plaintiff was obliged to pay the balance of the indebtedness, the mortgagee is neither a necessary nor proper party.

3. SAME—ACTION FOR BREACH—DEFENSES.
Defendant having as part consideration of a conveyance from plaintiff agreed to pay a mortgage on plaintiff's property, and having failed to pay, but directed the mortgagee to apply to its payment the proceeds of plaintiff's property held as security thereof, and plaintiff having paid the balance, defendant may not question the validity and enforceability of plaintiff's obligation to pay.

4. EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT—PRELIMINARY PROOF.
The regularly kept and original books of a corporation identified as such by the proper custodians, and constituting the records of the business transactions of the corporation, required by Civ. Code, § 377, to be kept by all corporations for profit, are admissible in an action between other parties without further preliminary proof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1628–1646.]

5. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.
Any error in allowing witnesses to testify to what books in evidence contain and do not contain is harmless, the statements being correct.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4161–4170.]

6. SAME.
Where plaintiff's measure of damages is the amount of the mortgage obligation which defendant agreed to, but did not, pay, any error in showing the amount of it which plaintiff paid in one way, the balance being paid in cash, is harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Morris Hurwitz against S. L. Gross. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert Cutler Brown and George H. Moore, for appellant. Charles L. Batcheller and Thomas C. Ridgway, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to recover damages for failure to perform an agreement to assume payment of two certain chattel mortgages. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff on the 19th day of January, 1905, was the owner of four parcels of land (designated in his complaint as 1, 2, 3, and 4, respectively), located in Los Angeles county, upon which, or portions of which, there were growing crops. Against these lands and the crops thereon there subsisted four mortgages; two against the lands for $13,000 and $5,000, respectively, and two against the growing crops, dated April 29, 1904, and August 15, 1904, given to secure the payment of promissory notes for the sum of $2,000 and $700, respectively, and each due one day after date. These crop mortgages were held by the California Citrus Union, which, at the request of plaintiff, picked and removed of said mortgaged crops, before January 19, 1905, oranges belonging to plaintiff of the net value of $1,004.47, as determined by the subsequent sales thereof made by said Citrus Union. On January 19, 1905, plaintiff sold to defendant parcels designated as 1 and 2, for a consideration expressed in the "escrow instructions" as follows: "We are to pay Mr. Hurwitz $2300 twenty-three hundred for above property and assume $13000.00 Mtg. or Tr. deed & all Int. due, & assume $5000 Mtg. or Tr. deed & Int. from Jan. 20, '05 & assume $2700 Chat. Mtg. & all Int. from Jan. 20, '05. Hurwitz to show statements from last 2 mtgee's that said int. is paid to said date." On the same day plaintiff, in execution of said agreement, made a conveyance to defendant of parcels 1 and 2, wherein was contained the following clause: "Subject to all incumbrances now of record against said property, all of which incumbrances the parties of the second part assume and agree to pay." Defendant complied with the other terms of the "escrow," but failed to pay the chattel mortgages and free parcels 3 and 4 from the lien thereof, and notified the Citrus Union to apply the proceeds of sales of said oranges, picked prior to January 19th, to the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgages, which was done. The complaint counts on a cause of action for damages for breach of contract, and fixes the amount of such damages at $2,700—the aggregate of the principal sums of said two chattel mortgages, which damages are divided into two elements: The first ($1,213) for partial failure of consideration for the conveyance made by plaintiff to defendant being measured by the proceeds of sales of oranges belonging to plaintiff, applied to the payment of the chattel mortgages by the Citrus Union after defendant had assumed the same; and, second ($1,487) the unpaid balance necessary to clear said third and fourth parcels of land, retained by plaintiff, from the lien of said chattel mortgages. By answer and cross-complaint defendant claimed that plaintiff agreed that the entire orange crop for the year 1904 should pass by the conveyance mentioned in the complaint, and that plaintiff removed the portion of said orange crop so taken by the Citrus Union without defendant's knowledge or consent. No evidence was introduced on this issue, and the court properly found against the contention of defendant in this regard. The burden was upon defendant to establish his allegations.

While there are two elements of damage specially alleged in the complaint, it states but one breach of contract, and but one cause of action. This is sufficiently stated. It appears from the allegations of the complaint that defendant agreed to clear parcels 3 and 4 from the liens of the chattel mortgages and to assume the payment thereof, that there was a sufficient consideration for such promise or agreement, that he failed to perform his agreement, and that plaintiff was injured by reason of such failure. The cause of action must not be confused with the remedy or relief sought. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 426, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53. This view of the complaint disposes of the errors complained of in the rulings of the trial court upon defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground of misjoinder and the motions to strike out and to sever and separately state the two alleged causes of action which it was contended were misjoined in the complaint. The special demurrers based upon alleged uncertainty of statement of ownership and other allegations as to the oranges taken by the Citrus Union and applied to the payment of the indebtedness secured by the chattel mortgages were properly overruled. There was unnecessary detail, perhaps, in the allegations relating to this element of damage, but no uncertainty or ambiguity that could mislead the defendant in pleading to the complaint. The Citrus Union was neither a necessary nor proper party to the action. It had a right under its contract to apply the proceeds of the orange sales to the indebtedness due it, and plaintiff could not recover the money back merely because he had contracted with defendant to pay the whole of the mortgages and the latter had failed to do so. Plaintiff's only right of action was against defendant for the breach of his contract. The crop mortgage for $2,000 given by Gore constituted a lien upon all of plaintiff's crops, and its assumption by defendant was made a part of the consideration for the conveyance to him. He cannot now question whether plaintiff's obligation to pay it was a legal or moral one. Hartwig v. Clark, 138 Cal. 668, 72 Pac. 149. Plaintiff treated it as a binding obligation and so did defendant when he directed the Citrus Union to apply the proceeds of sales of plaintiff's oranges to its payment, and also later when he paid the balance due thereon to the Citrus Union. Having directed the application of plaintiff's money to its payment, he is estopped to deny the validity and enforceability of the obligation against plaintiff's demand for a repayment of the money so applied.

The construction of the contract by the trial court was correct. In ascertaining what is meant by the language used in a written instrument, the object in view and the circumstances surrounding its execution must be taken into consideration. Neale v. Morrow (Cal. App.) 88 Pac. 815. Taking the contract here under consideration by the four corners, and reading it with the eyes of those who made it, by the light and under the circumstances which surrounded its execution (Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 487), we see that plaintiff had four parcels of land incumbered with mortgages; that defendant agreed in consideration of the conveyance to him of two of the parcels to assume the payment of all the liens on the four parcels and pay the plaintiff $2,300. The consideration to plaintiff then was the clearing of parcels 3 and 4 from the mortgage liens and the $2,300 cash in hand. The oranges severed from the land prior to the sale were the property of plaintiff. The amount of the crop mortgages, ascertained on the face of the agreement, was $2,700. This amount was fixed as the liability of defendant by the contract, and the plaintiff was required to pay the interest thereon to the date of sale. This construction of the "escrow" and the clause in the conveyance justifies the conclusions reached by the trial court. The evidence introduced warrants the findings of the court, and justified it in denying the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

A careful consideration of the errors assigned in connection with the admission of evidence discloses no prejudicial error. A number of exhibits, copies of account sales, check sheets of the California Citrus Union showing particulars of oranges received from, and sold for and on account of, M. Hurwitz, were admitted in evidence over the objections of defendant. These were identified by the employés of the company in whose custody they were, who testified that they were the original sheets received from the district agent at the Covina office, the place at which the oranges were received and from which the shipments purported to have been made; that the witness did not make the entries; they were not made in his presence; and that he had no information as to the knowledge of the district agent who made them. The district agent at Covina testified that the transactions took place during his predecessor's incumbency; that he knew nothing of the transactions to which they referred except as to the custom of making such records; that he received them from his predecessor as records of the office; that he was acquainted with the agent in whose handwriting they were and with his handwriting; and that they were in his handwriting. A "ledger sheet" and "weigher's receiving account slip" were also admitted in evidence over the objections of defendant. These were identified by the chief clerk in the office of the Citrus Union as original records from that office. He also stated that the bookkeeper who kept the book showing the account of Mr. Hurwitz was no longer in the employ of the company, and when last heard from was in Arizona. The witness testified that the "ledger sheet" introduced was the original card showing the only account kept with the chattel mortgages in question, and showed all the entries in relation thereto and all the credits given thereon. A number of questions were asked of these witnesses as to the matters displayed upon the records so introduced, all of which were objected to by defendant, and his objections were overruled; the trial judge stating in explanation of his rulings in this regard at one time that it might be understood that the witness made none of the entries, had no knowledge of the facts about which he was testifying, but that he had received the instruments, whose contents he was repeating, as records of the office which it was the custom of the company to keep, in the custody of the employé filling the position which the testifying witness did. The court by its remarks in some instances expressly distinguished between the statement of a fact known to the witness and the statement of matters appearing on the records introduced, and permitted the witness to state the latter. In one instance, at least, where the question called for that which it was apparent from the question the witness could only answer from the record, the court directed the witness: "He can state whether there is any record of any such payment, regardless of whether they existed in fact."

Questions relating to the correctness and accuracy of books sought to be introduced in evidence have generally arisen in cases where the books are introduced on behalf of the party keeping them, and are in the nature of self-prepared and self-serving declarations. They were permitted to be introduced at common law only because the party could not testify in his own behalf, and, when parties to an action were first permitted to testify, it was held by some of the courts that the books of a party could no longer be admitted in evidence. Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 377, 12 Pac. 284, 60 Am. Rep. 539. Books of account so belonging to the parties to the litigation are said to be in the nature of secondary or supplementary evidence of the facts therein stated (Bushnell v. Simpson, 119 Cal. 661, 51 Pac. 1080), but have been held admissible, when preliminary proof has been made, to support a claim against the estate of a deceased person, where the claimant cannot be a witness to testify to his own claim. Cowdery v. McChesney, 124 Cal. 363, 57 Pac. 221; City Sav. Bank v. Enos, 135 Cal. 172, 67 Pac. 52. The question of who may make the preliminary proof and the limitations upon the parties' testimony in such cases appears to be still open to discussion in this state. Stuart v. Lord, 138 Cal. 677, 72 Pac. 142. In White v. Whitney, 82 Cal. 166, 22 Pac. 1138, the rule is adopted from Wharton on Evidence that "a tradesman's book of original entries is, in most jurisdictions, received in evidence as prima facie proof, when supported by the tradesman's oath," and cases in this state are cited which, it is said, sanction, although they do not expressly declare, this rule.

We think, however, that a different rule should be applied to the books here under consideration from that which is applied to the books of a party to the litigation producing them to serve his own purposes and aid his own claim. The exhibits here admitted are the records of the business transactions of a corporation required by law to be kept by all corporations for profit. Civ. Code, § 377. They constitute the "memory" of the transactions of the corporation. Having been produced as the regularly kept and original books of the corporation, identified as such by their proper custodians, they are admissible in evidence. City Sav. Bank v. Enos, 135 Cal. 172, 67 Pac. 52. The exhibits were therefore entitled to be admitted upon the preliminary proof given. The practice followed by the trial judge in permitting the witnesses who were merely custodians of the record, without pretense of knowledge as to the transactions recorded, to read from the record in response to direct questions as to the fact, is one much pursued by some trial judges where the case is tried without a jury. Such a practice is open to abuse, and should be pursued with great caution. Deductions made by bookkeepers greatly aid the court and materially reduce its labors, but in the statement of the record as a fact, if not confined to a literal reading of the record, the witness' own inferences are liable to creep in and a wrong interpretation of the writing be thus had.

A careful examination of the record discloses no statements of witnesses so testifying to what the record contained which do not appear in the exhibits, except, perhaps, one or two answers to questions as to what the books did not show which were competent and relevant questions in themselves. The exhibits being prima facie evidence, and no attack being made upon their correctness, we cannot see that appellant was prejudiced by the rulings of the court in permitting these questions to be asked and answers to be given. All the evidence relating to the Citrus Union's books merely tended to increase or diminish one branch of the damage alleged by a corresponding decrease or increase of the other branch. Twenty-seven hundred dollars were necessary to release tracts 3 and 4 from the lien of the chattel mortgages. To the extent that plaintiff's oranges were used to pay this sum he was entitled to recover from defendant, and to the extent that the defendant failed to pay the mortgages plaintiff was entitled to compel him to do so or pay the amount necessary for this purpose. It was immaterial to defendant upon which branch he was required to pay, and the books of the Citrus Union only determined into which pocket of plaintiff the money should go, to reimburse him for his oranges taken or to clear his land from the lien against it. Conceding that some, or all, of the evidence relating to the books of the Citrus Union was improperly admitted, the defendant was not prejudiced thereby.

No error appearing in the record, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BIANCHINO. (Cr. 35.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 28, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, July 27, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—ORDER OF COMMITMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Pen. Code, § 872, providing that the magistrate must in a criminal case indorse on the complaint an order signed by him that it appearing that the offense in the complaint mentioned had been committed, and that there was sufficient cause to believe the within-named A. was guilty thereof, etc., an order in the statutory form designating the offense as "felony, rape, in the within complaint mentioned" was sufficient.

2. INFORMATION — VARIANCE FROM COMMITMENT.

A variance between the commitment and the information, relating to the particular date of the commission of the crime, is unimportant, when it appears that only one offense was committed.

3. RAPE—EVIDENCE—COMPLAINT OF FEMALE.

In a prosecution for rape of a five year old child, committed towards the latter part of January, it appeared that prosecutrix was examined on the 5th of February by a physician, who a few days later discovered that prosecutrix was infected with a venereal disease. Held, that evidence of complaints of the injury made by prosecutrix shortly before and after February 5th was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Rape, § 67.]

4. SAME—FAILURE OF PROSECUTRIX TO TESTIFY.

In a prosecution for rape, the failure of prosecutrix to testify is not ground for excluding evidence of complaints made by her, where she is too young to testify.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Rape, § 69.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in a prosecution for rape of a child, the family physician testified as to an examination made by him of prosecutrix, the denial of defendant's motion for the appointment of a physician to examine prosecutrix was not prejudicial, since the result of another examination might have been unfavorable to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3085, 3088, 3089.]

6. SAME—TRIAL—ORDER OF PROOF.

While the corpus delicti should ordinarily first be shown, a ruling permitting evidence before the corpus delicti is established is not ground for reversal, unless it clearly appears that defendant was prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3136.]

7. SAME—FAILURE TO TAKE EXCEPTIONS.

Rulings complained of will not be considered on appeal, where no exceptions thereto were taken at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2665.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Amadeo Bianchino was convicted of rape, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Judgment and order affirmed.

J. C. Webster, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape alleged to have been committed on the person of Annie Lertora, a child of the age of five years, and was sentenced to a term in the state prison at Folsom. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is contended that the court erred in denying the motion of defendant to set aside the information. The motion was as follows: "Now comes the defendant in the above-entitled action, and moves the court to set aside the information on file herein, on the ground that before the filing thereof he, the said defendant, had not been legally committed by a magistrate." The evidence, however, introduced in support of the motion proves to the contrary that the defendant was legally committed by the magistrate. The order indorsed on the complaint or deposition and signed by the committing magistrate is as follows: "It appearing to me that the offense, to wit, felony, rape, in the within complaint mentioned, has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe the within Amadeo Bianchino guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer the same," etc. The foregoing order seems to be in strict accord with the requirement of section 872 of the Penal Code, which provides that: "The magistrate must make or indorse on the complaint an order signed by him to the following effect: It appearing to me that the offense in the within complaint mentioned (or any offense, according to the fact, stating generally the nature thereof) has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe the within-named A. B. guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to the same."

It will be observed that the magistrate designated the offense as "felony, rape," thereby describing it generally as he is permitted to do, under the statute. He made it more definite, however, by stating that it was the "rape mentioned in the within complaint." It was such an order as the statute contemplates, and it afforded authority for the district attorney to file an information in the superior court. But it is contended that the district attorney filed an information charging a different offense from that for which defendant was held to answer, and therefore the motion should have been granted. The motion, as we have seen, did not raise the point, as it was based upon the ground that the defendant had not been legally committed at all and not that he had not been committed for the offense charged in the information. A defendant should be required, in a technical matter of this character, to stand or fall upon the ground that he has deliberately chosen, and the law should impose upon him also the duty of pointing out in his motion the particular defect upon which he relies in order that the district attorney, if he deems it advisable, may amend the information and thereby avoid the danger and expense of a mistrial. If he fails to do so in a case like the one at bar, where the only point involved in the motion is an apparent variance between the date of the offense as it appears in the order and as shown by the information, he should be precluded from raising the question in any subsequent proceeding. However, assuming that the issue is properly before us, it must be held that the information does not charge a different offense from that recited in the order of commitment. There can be no pretense that the investigation before the committing magistrate and in the superior court concerned more than one offense. The evidence disclosed only one act of criminal intercourse, and the only variance between the commitment and the information relates to the particular date of the commission of the crime. This variance, however, is unimportant when it is apparent that only one offense was committed. The same rule should apply here as in the case of a variance between the evidence at the trial and the allegations of the information, as indicated by section 955 of the Penal Code, which provides that: "The precise time at which the offense was committed need not be stated in the indictment or information, but it may be alleged to have been committed at any time before the finding or filing thereof, except where the time is a material ingredient in the offense."

If the contention of appellant should prevail, we would have this singular situation: The district attorney will be required to file another information alleging that the offense was committed on or about the 9th day of March, when he knows that the evidence will disclose that it was committed on or about the 1st day of February. In other words, because the magistrate has committed a mistake in the date of the offense, the district attorney must allege an error before he can be permitted to establish the true date. This, of course, is unreasonable. There is nothing in any of the cases cited opposed to our view. In People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76 Pac. 1028, it is held, as stated in the syllabus: "An information is based on the commitment and not on the complaint for arrest, and it is the duty of the committing magistrate to hold the defendant for the offense proved whatever might have been the offense charged." People v. Warner, 147 Cal. 546, 82 Pac. 196, is to the same effect, and cites with approval the Lee Look Case. In People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 596, 76 Pac. 490, it was held that the motion to set aside the information should have been granted; but the magistrate held the defendant for assault with a deadly weapon, and the district attorney charged the defendant with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder—a totally distinct offense.

2. It is complained that the testimony of witnesses for the prosecution was allowed, over defendant's objection, to the effect that the child, Annie Lertora, made complaint some time after the injury to her. Two grounds for this objection were urged—first, that the complaint was too remote from the time of the occurrence; and, second, that as the child did not testify it was error to allow any testimony as to a complaint made by her. The date of the alleged injury is not definitely fixed, but was, according to the evidence and defendant's admission, some time in January, 1906, towards the latter part of the month. Witness Stratton, the family physician, was called to treat the child on February 5, 1906, and found the involved parts much inflamed and somewhat lacerated, and a few days later discovered that the child was infected with a venereal disease. It was shortly before and after February 5th that the complaints referred to were made, some of which were voluntary and others after the child was questioned by the witnesses. The court seems to have been careful to keep within the rule in this class of cases, and, so far as we can discover, the complaints were not too remote under the circumstances. The child was too young to be fully conscious of anything wrong in the act, or to experience any sense of shame, and, considering the relations of defendant to the family and his familiarity with the child, she may not have comprehended the nature of the act, or thought of complaining earlier than she did. When the disease developed, and she found herself suffering additional pain, the complaint was naturally renewed. The more serious question is as to the admissibility of the complaint, inasmuch as the child did not testify at all in the case. The evidence is admissible as corroborative of the testimony of the prosecuting witness, and the authorities generally hold that, unless the prosecuting witness testifies, her complaint is mere hearsay and inadmissible. Our Supreme Court seems to have considered that the rule does not apply where the child is of too tender an age to testify People v. Figueroa, 134 Cal. 159, 66 Pac 202. We feel bound by this decision to sustain the ruling of the lower court.

3. Defendant moved the court for the appointment of a physician to examine the child. The motion was denied, and defendant excepted. If the court had made the order, it is difficult to see how it could have compelled an examination if the mother or child had objected. But, assuming that authority existed to make the order and that it could have been rendered effective, we cannot say that the denial of the application resulted in prejudice, as the result of another examination might have been unfavorable to defendant. Besides, there is nothing to show that the defendant could not have had the child examined by any physician that he might select.

4. The testimony of the witness Stratton as to the physical condition of the child was objected to on the ground that the corpus delicti had not been shown. The order of proof is largely within the discretion of the court. The corpus delicti should first be shown ordinarily, but, unless it clearly appears that the defendant was prejudiced thereby, a ruling permitting evidence before the corpus delicti is established will not justify a reversal of the judgment. People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 Pac. 698.

Some other alleged errors are assigned, but we find nothing in any of them to demand a reversal of the judgment. No exception was taken to certain rulings of which complaint is made, and they therefore cannot be considered.

We cannot say as a matter of law that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BRYAN v. GRAHAM. (Civ. 310.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 27, 1907.)

1. APPEAL — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF FACT — CONCLUSIVENESS.

In a proceeding to determine the rights of parties to purchase certain land, where there was a conflict of testimony upon the issue as to whether or not defendant at the time he made the application to purchase did so for his own use and benefit, the finding of the court therein cannot be disturbed.

2. PUBLIC LANDS—CONVEYANCES—STATUTES.

Under the lake land act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 341, c. 229), as amended by St. 1899, p. 182, c. 149, regulating the sale of lands uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes, one who agreed to sell after filing his application and before the issuance of his certificate to purchase did not thereby lose his right to purchase; there being nothing in the law prohibiting such an agreement to sell.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Proceedings by B. L. Bryan against J. A. Graham to determine the rights of the parties to purchase certain land. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Letus N. Crowell, for appellant. J. L. C. Irwin, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from judgment and order denying motion for new trial.

This proceeding arises out of conflicting claims of the parties due to the fact that both were applicants to purchase a quarter section of land under "An act regulating the sale of the lands uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes," etc., as enacted in 1893 (St. 1893, p. 341, c. 229), and amended in 1899 (St. 1899, p. 182, c. 149). The land in question is a part of the territory uncovered by the receding waters of Tulare Lake in Kings county. The application of the respondent was made December 14, 1904, and that of appellant made January 31, 1905. Both applications were in due form and accompanied by the required affidavits. Upon the filing of appellant's application the state surveyor general declared a contest to exist between said parties concerning the right to purchase the land, and made his order referring such contest to the superior court of Kings county for adjudication as to the respective rights of said parties in the premises. Plaintiff alleged that the affidavit of defendant was false, in that said defendant did not at the time of making said application and affidavit desire to purchase said land for his own use and benefit, but for the use and benefit of another; and that at the time of making the application and affidavit defendant had made a contract to sell the same. These allegations are denied by the answer, and upon the trial the court found said allegations of the complaint to be untrue and rendered judgment for defendant. Section 1 of said act, under which these applications were made, requires that the applicant shall, among other facts, state in his affidavit "that he desires to purchase the same [the land] for his own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever, and that he has made no contract or agreement to sell the same." It is admitted that the provisions of section 3500, Pol. Code, which provides that "any false statement contained in the affidavit provided for in section 3495, defeats the right of the applicant to purchase the land, or to receive any evidence of title thereto," likewise defeats the right of any applicant to purchase the land under section 1 of said act of 1893. On his own behalf defendant testified to the truth of the statements contained in his affidavit, and the only evidence offered in support of plaintiff's allegation that defendant's application was made for the use and benefit of another than himself was an agreement, the nature of which does not clearly appear, made with one Fowler about January 1, 1905, and a contract made January 23, 1905, some 40 days after the filing of his application, whereby defendant agreed to sell the land in question to one Rubenstein. Assuming these contracts subsequently made to constitute any evidence of the falsity of the affidavit, there was, nevertheless, a conflict of testimony upon the issue as to whether or not defendant at the time he made the application to purchase did so for his own use and benefit, and the finding of the court therein cannot be disturbed.

The contract to sell the land to Rubenstein was made before the certificate of purchase was issued, and it is contended that, by reason of entering into this contract prior to the issuance of this certificate, defendant lost his right to complete the purchase. In support of his contention appellant cites numerous cases, in all of which the decisions were based upon an express statutory provision either prohibiting or limiting the right of alienation or transfer; for instance, the statutes of the United States relating to homesteads require, upon the making of final proof, an affidavit that no part of such land has been alienated. Rev. St. U. S. § 2291 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1390]. So, too, there is an express prohibition of transfer or alienation prior to the issuance of the patents as to lands held under claim of preemption. Rev. St. U. S. § 2263. Our attention has not been called to any such limitation or requirement contained in the law relative to public lands of the state. The contract is with the state, and in the absence of any legislative expression other than that contained in section 3500, Pol. Code, which clearly was not intended to apply to an agreement to sell, made subsequent to the filing of an application and prior to the issuance of the certificate of purchase, it cannot be held that appellant's rights are in any wise abridged by the agreement under discussion. Section 3515, Pol. Code, expressly provides that "certificates of purchase, and all rights acquired thereunder, are subject to sale," etc. This express statutory grant of the right to sell the certificate cannot be construed as an expression of legislative intent that one who agreed to sell after filing his application and before the issuance of his certificate to purchase should lose his right to purchase. The policy of the law is to discourage restraints upon alienation. Rose v. Wood & Lumber Co., 73 Cal. 385, 15 Pac. 19; Phillips v. Carter et al., 67 Pac. 1031, 135 Cal. 604, 87 Am. St. Rep. 152; Lamb v. Davenport, 85 U. S. 307, 21 L. Ed. 759; Adams v. Church, 193 U. S. 510, 24 Sup. Ct. 512, 48 L. Ed. 769; Arnold v. Christy, 33 Pac. 619, 4 Ariz. 19.

Prior to the amendment of 1885, section 3495, Pol. Code, providing for the purchase of school lands, contained a provision requiring the affidavit of the applicant to state therein that the purchase "was for his own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person," etc. In construing this statute—the facts being that H. had applied to purchase a section of school land under an agreement made with N. at the time of filing his application that one-half thereof was for the use and benefit of N., and which one-half thereof H. was to convey to N. as soon as purchased—the court held in Thompson v. Hancock, 51 Cal. 110: "There is nothing in section 3495 of the Political Code which prohibits the sale of any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, belonging to the state, to one who has contracted to convey to another a part of the land so acquired," reversing the lower court upon this point.

We find nothing in the lake land act of 1893, under which this application was made, which prohibits the applicant from making an agreement to sell the land before the issuance to him of the certificate of purchase therein provided for.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BOHN v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.

(Civ. 362.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 28, 1907.)

JURY—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—TAKING CASE FROM JURY—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The right of the trial court to grant a nonsuit at the close of the evidence, where it would be obliged to set aside a verdict for plaintiff, exists, and the exercise thereof is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 7, declaring that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, or of Code Civ. Proc. § 2101, requiring all questions of fact, where the trial is by jury, to be decided by the jury, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, § 235.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by John L. Bohn, administrator of Peter Bohn, deceased, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Kendrick, Knott & Ardis, for appellant. Bicknell, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher (Norman S. Sterry, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant owned and operated an electric railway line running from the city of Los Angeles through the town of Compton to Long Beach. It appears without conflict in the evidence that on September 12, 1904, the defendant was running a car at the usual rate of speed north on Wilmington street in said town of Compton, and when approaching Main street, which crosses said Wilmington street, one Peter Bohn appeared in a vehicle, to which was hitched a team of horses which he was driving south along said Wilmington street parallel with and on the west side of defendant's tracks. The car, running at a speed of 15 to 20 miles per hour, which was not in excess of the usual speed, was approaching the crossing at which there was a sign, "Railroad. Look out for the Cars," and its approach was in plain view of said Peter Bohn. The usual signal whistle was given, and the gong was kept going. There was nothing in Bohn's manner which indicated that he contemplated trying to cross the track until the car had reached a point about 60 to 90 feet from the crossing, when he suddenly turned his horses upon the track, with the result that a collision occurred in which said Peter Bohn was killed. His administrator sues for damages. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. Defendant then introduced its evidence and renewed its motion for a nonsuit, which motion the court granted, and judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and he appeals from that order.

The error assigned is the order granting the motion for nonsuit. It is not claimed that the deceased was not guilty of gross negligence, as he clearly was, but it is contended that the motorneer in charge of said car saw the deceased upon the track in time to have stopped the car, and by the exercise of ordinary care he could have stopped the car after he saw the danger to which said deceased was exposed by reason of his position. Appellant contends that the action of the court in granting the motion was in violation of section 2101, Code Civ. Proc., and section 7, art. 1, of the Constitution of this state, which provides: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate." Like constitutional provisions are contained in the organic law of every state in the Union; yet, notwithstanding this fact, the courts of last resort recognize the right of the trial judge in proper cases to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, or to grant a nonsuit. The practice has from the earliest date in the history of this state received judicial sanction. In Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 115, the court says: "If, therefore, upon a given state of facts, a court would be obliged to set aside a verdict of the jury as against the evidence, we see no reason or propriety in submitting such facts to them for their consideration. When their determination will be a nullity, why compel them to deliberate? Such a course is neither creditable to the law, nor complimentary to the jury." This language was cited with approval in Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221, 52 Am. Dec. 303; and again in Geary v. Simmons, 39 Cal. 224, the court says: "A court is justified in granting defendant's motion for nonsuit, after the evidence on both sides has been heard, in a case where, if the motion had been denied and a verdict found for plaintiff, it would have been set aside as not supported by, but contrary to, the evidence." In Fox v. Southern Pacific Co., 95 Cal. 234, 30 Pac. 384, a second motion for nonsuit was made and granted after all the evidence was in. In reviewing this ruling the court says: "Practically, therefore, the real question in the case at bar is whether or not the court abused its discretion in holding that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict; and it is clear to us, from an examination of the evidence, that this question must be answered in the negative." To the same effect is Vanderford v. Foster, 65 Cal. 49, 2 Pac. 736, and Fagundes v. R. R. Co., 79 Cal. 97, 21 Pac. 437, 3 L. R. A. 824. In Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57, the court in discussing a similar question says: "With regard to the granting of a motion for nonsuit made at the close of the evidence for plaintiff and defendant, the rule seems to be well established that the trial court has discretion, and that it is not error to grant the motion where, upon all the evidence, it is clear that if a jury should bring in a verdict against the defendant it would be the duty of the court to set it aside and order a new trial." To the same effect is Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 81 Pac. 534.

Nor is the practice confined to this state. Quoting from Cooper v. Waldron, 50 Me. 81: "When in any case it is clear that upon the evidence verdict for the plaintiff cannot stand, that in the end judgment must be rendered for the defendant, what good reason can be assigned for submitting the case to the jury? If their verdict is right, nothing is gained; and, if it should happen to be wrong, it must be set aside. To withhold a case from the jury is no greater interference than to set aside their verdict. To set aside their verdict impliedly impeaches either their intelligence or their integrity, and tends to lessen public confidence in the usefulness of the institution. * * * If the presiding judge is of the opinion that the facts admitted or clearly established are not sufficient to prove a want of probable cause, he must either nonsuit the plaintiff or direct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant. The better course is for the judge to nonsuit the plaintiff, for it is idle to submit to the jury a question that can be answered in only one way." And in Reed v. Inhabitants, 8 Allen, 522, the court held: "Where the whole evidence introduced by the plaintiff, if believed by the jury, is so insufficient to support a verdict that the court would not permit one to stand, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury, as a matter of law, that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant a verdict for plaintiff." "Judges are no longer required to submit a case to the jury merely because some evidence has been introduced by the party having the burden of proof, unless the evidence be of such a character as that it would warrant the jury to proceed in finding a verdict in favor of the party introducing such evidence." Byrd v. So. Express Co., 51 S. E. 851, 139 N. C. 273. "There is in every case a preliminary question, which is one of law, namely, whether there is any evidence upon which the jury could properly find the verdict for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. If there is not, the judge ought to withdraw the question from the jury and direct a nonsuit, if the onus is on the plaintiff, or direct a verdict for the plaintiff, if the onus is on the defendant." The above is the English rule as expressed by Mr. Justice Willes in Rider v. Wombell, L. R., 4 Ex. 38, and the same rule obtains in practically all of the states of the Union.

Measured by this rule, the question before us is one solely of an abuse of discretion by the trial court; and upon the evidence as disclosed by the record we are firmly convinced there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in making the order of which appellant complains. The evidence in support of the allegation that the motorman operating the car could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have stopped the car after he had become aware of the dangerous position occupied by deceased, is not only meager but of a character entitling it to little, if any, weight. Had the case been submitted to the jury and a verdict for plaintiff followed, it is clear that it would have been the duty of the court to have set the same aside and ordered a new trial. Under such conditions, no good purpose could be subserved by submitting the case to the jury. The same object is accomplished by a shorter legal route in ordering a nonsuit. As said in Estate of Morey, supra, the practice is only justified in very clear cases, and where there is even an approach to a substantial conflict in the evidence the issue should be left with the jury. The right of the court to set aside a verdict which is unwarranted by the evidence is beyond question. We are unable to perceive any constitutional distinction between the exercise of such right and the right to order a nonsuit in a proper case at the close of the evidence.

There was no abuse of discretion in granting the motion for nonsuit, and the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

5 Cal. App. 603

CARSTENBROOK et al. v. WEDDERIEN et al. (Civ. 293.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 27, 1907.)

1. Landlord and Tenant—Rent—Actions—Time to Sue.

Under the terms of a farm lease, the lessors were to receive one-third of all crops grown and harvested by the lessees. The lessees, in addition to a sum paid upon the execution of the lease, were to advance on demand $54 per month during the period of the lease, which was to be repaid by the lessors at the time of harvest; the lessees having a lien upon the lessors' share of the crops for the amount. Before the last monthly advancement was due, a flood rendered the raising of a crop impossible. Held, that the lessees were not required to wait until demand and payment of the last monthly amount before bringing an action against the lessors for the advancements.

2. Trial—Findings—Responsiveness to Issue.

In an action by lessees to recover from their lessors advancements of rent, an issue tendered by the lessors' counterclaim was that the lessees used the premises for pasturage purposes solely, and that the reasonable value of the pasturage was $1,000. Held, that a finding that the lessees were entitled to all the pasturage during the term of the lease, and that the lessors take nothing by reason of their counterclaim, was sufficient to cover the issue.

3. Landlord and Tenant—Enjoyment of Premises—Pasturage Rights.

Where there was no provision in a lease for years reserving to the lessors the right to the pasturage, the lessees were entitled to it, under Civ. Code, § 819, providing that a tenant for years, unless he is a wrongdoer or holding over, may take the annual products of the soil.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by H. J. Carstenbrook and another against W. A. Wedderien and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin and Waldo A. Johnson, for appellants. M. F. Brittan and J. E. Evert, for respondents.

HART, J. This action is brought by plaintiffs to recover the sum of $591, together with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, alleged to have been loaned and advanced to defendants under and by virtue of the terms of a certain written agreement of lease entered into between the parties, involving the leasing of certain lands to plaintiffs by defendants. A jury was waived by the parties, and the case tried by the court. Plaintiffs were awarded judgment for the sum of $659.86, which includes the principal sum sued for and interest in the sum of $68.86. Defendants take this appeal from said judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial.

By the terms of the said written agreement or lease, which was executed by the parties on the 21st day of January, 1904, the defendants leased to the plaintiffs certain real property, situated in Yuba county; said lease to take effect on and from the said date of its execution and to continue in force until and including the 28th day of September, 1904. It was provided in the lease that the plaintiffs should have the option, upon the expiration of the term thus expressly agreed upon, of extending the term of their lease of said lands for a further period of four years. The lease is made a part of the complaint and is set out in hæc verba in the findings, and so much thereof as may be necessary to an understanding of the issues presented by the pleadings reads as follows:

"Upon the following terms and conditions, to wit: Said second parties will at all proper times and seasons during the term of this lease, and according to the terms of good husbandry practiced in the neighborhood, crop said lands and premises to grain and hay and such other crops as they shall in their sound discretion deem advisable; that they will carefully plant, care for, protect and harvest all of said crops without any expense to said first parties except for sacks as hereinafter mentioned, and will deliver to said first parties, or their order, within a reasonable time after said crops shall have been gathered and harvested, subject to the lien for advancements made hereunder and to be made hereunder by said second parties to said first parties as hereinafter mentioned, at such place as said first parties shall designate in the city of Marysville, one-third of all of said crops of grain, said first parties to furnish at their own expense sufficient sacks to contain their rental or share of one-third of all crops of grain grown and harvested upon said lands under the terms of this lease; and said second parties will further deliver to said first parties properly stacked on said premises one-third of all hay grown and cut upon said premises under the terms of this lease.

"Said second parties hereby covenant and agree to pay to said first parties, at the date of the execution of this lease, the sum of two hundred and thirteen dollars ($213.00), and upon the request and demand of said first parties the further sum of fifty-four dollars ($54.00) on the first day of each and every month commencing with the first day of February, 1904, during the period of this lease, that is, up to and including the 28th day of September, 1904, and the further sum of fifty-four dollars ($54.00), on the like request and demand of said first parties, on the first day of each and first day of September, 1908, if said period or every month thereafter up to and including the term of said lease be continued and extended to September, 1908, as hereinabove provided. Said sum of $213.00 and said sum of $54.00 to be paid monthly as herein specified, shall be deducted with interest as herein specified, by said second parties, when paid, from the one-third share of said first parties in the crops raised under the terms of this lease and shall bear interest from the date of their several payments at the rate of eight (8) per cent. per annum, and said sum with interest as aforesaid shall be and constitute a lien on said one-third portion of said crops reserved herein as and for rental for said first parties, in favor of said second parties, until the same together with interest as aforesaid be repaid by said first parties to said second parties, and should the total of said advancements, together with interest as aforesaid, in any season, exceed said lessors' (said first parties) share in the entire crops for said season, then in such event said first parties shall pay to said second parties the excess thereof received by them from said second parties.

"It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto that said advancements made and to be made hereunder by said second parties to said first parties, together with interest as aforesaid, shall be repaid by said first parties to said second parties at the harvest of said crops, in gold coin of the United States of America."

The complaint is verified. The answer admits that the plaintiffs paid to the defendants the sum of $591, but specifically denies all the other material averments of the complaint, and sets up a counterclaim upon a quantum valebat, for the sum of $1,000, alleged as the reasonable value of the use of the leased lands for the purposes of pasturage, to which use, it is alleged, it was converted by plaintiffs; said pasturage being, it is claimed, the sole and exclusive property of defendants. It is insisted that the judgment should be reversed for two reasons: "(1) Because the demands sued upon were not due when the action was commenced; (2) because the findings do not cover all the material issues raised by the pleadings."

The action was commenced on the 8th day of August, 1904. A demurrer was sustained to the original complaint, and thereafter and on the 6th day of February, 1905, plaintiff filed an amended complaint, which (a demurrer thereto having been overruled) tendered the issues of fact upon which the cause was tried. The court found from the evidence "that pursuant to the terms of said agreement said plaintiffs did, at the proper time in the year 1904, and in accordance with the terms of good husbandry as practiced in the neighborhood in which said lands are situated, carefully crop and plant said lands and premises to grain and hay, and did carefully care for and protect said crops during the said year 1904, and that thereafter and during the said year of 1904, and before the time for harvesting the said crops, the whole of said crops were totally destroyed by an act of God and without any fault or neglect of said plaintiffs, or either of them, and as a result thereof there were no crops or any crop to harvest upon said lands and premises described in said agreement during said year of 1904." The court was fully warranted in making this finding from the evidence received. The plaintiffs testified that, having entered into the possession of the lands referred to in the lease between the 10th and 15th of February, 1904, at once proceeded to plow the arable or tillable portions thereof, preparatory to seeding and cultivating the same in obedience to the covenants and conditions of the lease. The property, or the "ranch," as in common vernacular it is designated, embraces some 393 acres of land, of which 205 acres are "farming" lands, or lands adapted to and suitable for the cultivation of cereals. Approximately 140 acres of the land were plowed; the balance being too wet to undergo that process to any practical purpose. A short time thereafter heavy rains came, the water in the Feather river, on which the lands are situated, rose to such an extent as to overflow its banks, and the flood waters inundated a large part of the land; the same remaining thereon so that the land could not be utilized for farming purposes for a long period of time. The plaintiff H. J. Carstenbrook testified: "Some time in May I sent my teams there again and summer-fallowed 85 acres, on the north side of the road, and also a piece on the south side that had been winter plowed. All told, I replowed about 115 acres during that year after I had entered into the lease. I made two plowings that year on the place. After the first plowing, I did not sow the piece on the south side of the house, next to the levee, because I could not get on it, because of the water on it. The other part I had just seeded to barley, when the water came up on it. This was about 70 acres. There were about 85 acres in the whole piece, but I did not seed 10 or 15 acres of it, because it was too wet. About 85 acres I plowed the second time. The portion of the land north of the house, about 85 acres, I seeded to barley twice, and the water came up and drowned out both times. The water came up the second time about the 28th of March and remained over it fully three weeks, and probably longer, and the ranch was not at any time afterward in such condition that it could have been cropped." This witness also testified to having had 22 years' experience in the business of farming in Sutter and Yuba counties. He stated that after the water had finally subsided and receded from the land there was nothing left "but a water hole," and that it was not possible under the conditions then existing to cultivate a crop of any character; that there was no volunteer crop in that year upon the 115 acres which were replowed and summer-fallowed; that the vegetation on the land after the floods was not such as could be made into good hay; and that therefore he turned about 288 head of sheep and 8 or 9 head of other live stock upon the land, and thus, from the latter part of June or the first of July to a short time before the 28th of September, used said land "off and on" for pasturage purposes. He testified that he and his coplaintiff had under lease at the time an adjoining farm, on which they also pastured their sheep and other cattle, alternately running them on the land leased from defendants and then on the adjoining land mentioned. The other plaintiff, J. D. Carstenbrook, corroborated the testimony thus given by his partner and coplaintiff as to the unfavorable conditions with which they were confronted in an effort to cultivate the land in accordance with the terms of the lease and their failure to do so for the reasons stated by the first-named witness, and also upon the point that the grass or vegetation on the land after the flood waters had receded, and it was too late to do anything in the way of seeding the land in wheat and barley or either, was unfit to be profitably mown for hay. Some five or six other witnesses—farmers residing and who had for many years lived and farmed in the neighborhood of the land in question—gave testimony corroborative of that given by plaintiffs. All of them testified that plaintiffs, by the exercise of the most prudent husbandry, did their utmost to cultivate and grow suitable crops upon the land, but failed because of the intervention of unfavorable climatic conditions; that, under the circumstances, it was impossible to crop the land; that there grew upon the land after the water from the overflow of the river had disappeared "dog-fennel" and other weeds unfit even for the purposes of pasturage; that, while there was a small quantity of grass growing on the land upon which sheep and other cattle could thrive for a very limited time, it was measurably insignificant, and in consequence, for purposes of hay, not worth its cutting. In fact, the testimony of these witnesses was uniform upon the point that a crop of hay could not have been cut from the land after the recession of the waters of the overflow. From the conditions existing and as thus briefly described, it was manifestly impossible to have cultivated and advanced to a state of fruition any kind of a crop upon the land, and therefore it irresistibly followed that the terms upon which the plaintiffs took possession thereof under the lease could not be by them met and carried out. These conditions, as the court found, and as the evidence conclusively demonstrates, were not brought about through the fault or the negligence or default of the plaintiffs, but were the consequences of the course of nature and resulting circumstances, to repel, overcome, or control which is, of course, beyond the power of any known human agencies, except, perhaps, through efficient levee fortifications, constructed to guard against overflows of the flood waters. Under the stipulations of the lease, as will be observed, the defendants, in consideration of transferring the possession and use of their land to plaintiffs, were to receive one-third of any and all crops grown and harvested by said plaintiffs, "subject to the lien for advancements made hereunder and to be made hereunder" by said plaintiffs. The latter, under the terms of the lease, advanced to defendants, upon the execution of the instrument, the sum of $213, and were to thereafter further advance to them on the first day of each month the sum of $54 "commencing with the first day of February, 1904, during the period of this lease, that is, up to and including the 28th day of September, 1904"; said advances to be made "upon the request and demand" of said defendants.

The contention is that the action was prematurely brought because the plaintiffs defaulted in making the last advance of $54; that is, the advance which they would have been required to make upon demand of defendants if the land had been successfully farmed. In other words, the sum of $54 not having been advanced or loaned to appellants for the month of September, no right of action accrued to respondents for the total amount already so received by defendants. The contention is, in our opinion, wholly without any reason for its support. Upon the question of the time of repayment, the agreement is in no sense obscure. It provides that said "advancements made and to be made hereunder by said second parties, together with interest as aforesaid, shall be repaid by said first parties to said second parties at the harvest of said crops, in gold coin," etc. It certainly would not be attempted to be maintained that this clause of the lease means that the money should not be returned until crops had been actually harvested, and it is not so contended. The proper and the only true construction of it is that the money should be repaid at that time of the season when crops, if there were any, should be harvested, or at any other time, we think, when it could become a certainty or settled fact that it was impossible, from the inordinate quantity of water from the river overflows covering the land, to grow crops thereon. The evidence shows that it was plainly apparent to the parties to the lease, at and before the time at which crops should have been harvested upon the land had they been seeded and grown, that there was no possibility of securing crops from the land, and, in consequence, no possibility of the receipt by the defendants of the compensation to which they would have been entitled had the season been more propitious. The conditions upon which the land was leased necessarily involved returns to both parties from their investment, as it may properly be styled, as indeterminate, uncertain, and problematical as must be usual to enterprises which, like this, are required to depend, as among the prime factors essential to their prosperousness and final success, upon favorable meteorological and other conditions. Each of the parties, in other words—the defendants as well as the plaintiffs—by their written covenants manifested, mutually, a willingness to take a chance of reaping the benefits which ordinarily attend such a venture, and of suffering together the disadvantages and losses which the interference of adventitious circumstances too often bring to it. The termination of the lease was fixed for the latter part of September in order, without doubt, that the entire harvesting season would thus be included in and covered by the lease, thereby giving plaintiffs full opportunity to properly gather whatever crops they might deem it the part of wisdom to grow. There is nothing in the language of the lease, reasonably construed, which bound plaintiffs to advance the $54 a month after it became certain that there could be no possible hope or expectation of harvesting a crop of any character from the land. The moneys received by defendants from plaintiffs were, it is admitted, mere loans, to secure repayment of which it was agreed that plaintiffs should retain, until their accounts were adjusted, the share to which the defendants, by the terms of the lease, would be entitled, of any crops which might be harvested upon the land. That point or stage of the season having been reached where it must have been absolutely clear to both parties that no crop of any kind whatsoever could be gathered from the land, owing to the unfavorable conditions which existed, by what process of reasoning can it be maintained that, under the terms of the lease, interpreted agreeably to reason, the plaintiffs were in no position to sue for advances already made, because they had not made the further loan of $54, which they would probably have been required to make in the event that the land had been successfully cropped? The lease may well be construed as obligating plaintiffs to make the loans to defendants as stipulated therein so long as there existed a prospect or hope of realizing some returns from the cultivation of the land in the manner agreed upon, and that, when the time arrived that any reason for such prospect or hope ceased to exist, then the obligation to make such advances ceased to be binding or of any force. We can conceive of no reason, under a fair interpretation of the language of the lease, why the plaintiffs should have been forced, before acquiring a right to sue for moneys already loaned to defendants, to go through the form of advancing a further sum of $54. The logic of the argument may be stated thus: "We owe you, it is true, the sum of $590," say the defendants, "but you have no right now to sue us, nor can you ever acquire any such right until you have made the advance to us of the further sum of $54. The reason for such further loan has, of course, ceased to exist, but we are, nevertheless, under the strict letter of the lease, entitled to a further advance of $54. When you have thus carried out your part of the agreement, you are then authorized to and have the legal right, immediately thereafter to sue us, not only for the last advance made, but for the whole amount loaned to us." This, it seems to us, is the necessary effect of the argument, and the proposition is obviously a reductio ad absurdum.

We think the findings sufficiently respond to and include all the material issues tendered by the pleadings. The specific complaint upon this point is that the court omitted to make any finding upon the issue involved in the alleged counterclaim set up by the defendants to the effect that "during the period of the lease plaintiffs used the leased premises for pasturage purposes solely," etc., and that "the reasonable value of this pasturage was the sum of $1,000." The finding of the court upon this question is as follows: "That said plaintiffs, under the terms of this agreement, are entitled to all of the pasturage on said land during the terms of said lease, and that said defendants take nothing by reason of their counterclaim." This finding is sufficient to cover the issue to which it relates. It appears to be clear enough to require no amplification or explanation to comprehend its meaning. The plain meaning of it is (and it can be construed as meaning nothing else) that the pasturage on the land was the property of plaintiffs, and that therefore the claim of defendants that it belonged exclusively to them, and that they were entitled to damages in any sum from plaintiffs for taking and using it, is without any foundation in fact. The authorities cited by counsel are where no finding whatever was made upon a certain material issue raised by the pleadings, or even an attempt to make one.

The grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based and urged here upon appeal from the order practically call only for a discussion of the questions presented on the appeal from the judgment, and which we have considered. Counsel insist that the court erred in refusing to grant the motions of defendants to dismiss the action and for judgment on the pleadings, and also in denying their motion for a nonsuit; but the questions arising thereon, as suggested, have been disposed of in the discussion of the points urged on the appeal from the judgment.

The plaintiffs were, we think, entitled to the use of the pasturage and feed growing upon the land. There is no provision in the lease reserving to the lessors the right to the pasturage, and unless such right was withheld from plaintiffs, who were tenants for years, by the terms or some covenant of the lease, the plaintiffs were acting within their rights when they grazed their stock upon the land. Section 819, Civ. Code; Marshall v. Luiz, 115 Cal. 625, 47 Pac. 597. Of course, it should be unnecessary to say that, if the lessees had succeeded in growing upon the land a crop of hay, or of barley or of wheat, worth harvesting, in point of quantity and quality, they would not have been justified in entirely appropriating the same for the pasturing of their stock or otherwise, without accounting to the defendants for their share thereof. But we feel convinced from the testimony adduced at the trial that, after the disappearance of the flood waters from the land, the vegetation growing thereon which was at all capable of utilization was, even for the purposes of pasturage, of comparatively little value, and that the consequence of gathering it, if, indeed it was in such condition as to have rendered it practicable to reap it, considering the cost and labor required to do so, would have been loss rather than profit. The evidence indisputably establishes the fact that the plaintiffs, who are experienced farmers, and who, from having been engaged in the business of farming for many years in the section of the state where the leased lands are situated, must be thoroughly familiar with the methods and requirements of successful farming in that locality, unremittingly strove to cultivate and grow crops upon the property, as they agreed to do, by the covenants of the lease. There was no sane reason why they should not have done so. They had equal concern with the defendants in the success of the venture, for their failure because of negligence or for any other reason within their control to make the business prosperous and profitable could not result otherwise, quite naturally, than to militate against their own welfare as well as against that of the defendants.

We have carefully consulted all the authorities cited by counsel for appellants as sustaining their several contentions, and readily concede that they contain declarations of sound law, but are unable to perceive their apposition to the facts presented in the case at bar. We can find no reason for disturbing the judgment or the order.

For the reasons stated in the foregoing discussion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

NEVADA NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF KERN COUNTY et al. (Civ. 312.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 28, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 27, 1907.)

1. Mandamus — Petition — Sufficiency — Waters and Water Courses—Irrigation Districts—Bonds—Assessments.

Laws 1897, p. 267, c. 189, § 39, provides that, in case the board of directors of an irrigation district refuse to make an assessment to pay interest on bonds or bonds maturing, the board of supervisors of the county in which the office of the board of directors is situated shall cause an assessment to be made, etc. Held that where, in mandamus to compel supervisors to make an assessment, it appeared that all the land of the district was situated in one county, the petition was not insufficient because it failed to state that the office of the board of directors was situated in the county where the proceedings were brought.

2. Waters and Water Courses—Irrigation Districts—Bonds—Assessments—Levy.

Laws 1897, p. 267, c. 189, provides that the board of directors of an irrigation district shall levy an assessment sufficient to raise annual interest on bonds, and in any year in which the bonds shall fall due must increase the assessment to an amount sufficient to pay the principal, and, in case of the neglect or refusal of the board of directors to cause such assessment and levies to be made, the assessment shall be made by the county supervisors of the county in which the office of the board of directors is situated "in like manner and with like effect as if the same had been made by the board of directors, and all expenses incident thereto shall be borne by the district." Held, that expenses of a levy were properly included in the levy made by the supervisors.

3. Mandamus — Waters — Irrigation Districts — Bonds — Assessment — Compelling Levy.

Mandamus was properly awarded to compel supervisors to make an assessment and levy under the statute, though petitioner's demand was represented by a judgment against the district rendered in an action on the district's bonds.

4. Waters and Water Courses—Irrigation Districts — Bonds — Assessments — Levy —Statutes—Validity.

Section 39, providing for an assessment and levy by the board of supervisors, is not violative of Const. art. 11, § 12, declaring that the Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties or public or municipal corporations, but may by general laws vest in the "corporate authorities" thereof the power to assess and collect taxes.

5. Same.

Laws 1897, p. 267, c. 189, § 39, provides that the board of directors of an irrigation district shall levy an assessment sufficient to raise the annual interest on outstanding bonds, and in any year in which any bonds shall fall due must increase the assessment to an amount sufficient to raise a sum sufficient to pay the principal of the bonds as they mature; and provides that, in case of the neglect of the directors so to do, an assessment and levy shall be made by the board of supervisors of the county in which the office of the directors of the district is situated. Held, that it is not necessary that the directors or supervisors make several assessments for each year, but the board of supervisors may make one levy and assessment for the payment of the aggregate amount of the installments of interest and principal due in successive years.

6. Mandamus—Irrigation Districts—Bonds—Assessments—Levy—Judgment.

In mandamus by a judgment creditor of an irrigation district to compel the supervisors to make an assessment and levy under Laws 1897, p. 267, c. 189, § 39. a judgment awarding the writ was not erroneous because it made no provision for other creditors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Mandamus by the Nevada National Bank of San Francisco to compel the board of supervisors of Kern county to levy and collect a tax for the payment of a judgment in favor of petitioner against the Poso irrigation district. From a decree awarding the writ, respondents therein appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. P. Laird, C. L. Claflin, H. L. Packard, and G. W. Zartman, for appellants. H. V. Kimberlin and G. H. Smith, amicus curiæ. Heller & Powers, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The judgment or decree from which the appeal has been taken is as follows: "The alternative writ of mandate issued in this action having been served on defendants, and the said defendants having appeared and answered the verified petition of plaintiff, and the issues thereby joined having been brought for trial before this court sitting without a jury this 13th day of February, 1905, Messrs. Heller & Powers appearing as attorneys for plaintiff and J. W. P. Laird, Esq., appearing as attorney for defendants, and documentary and oral evidence having been introduced, and the matter having been argued and submitted, this court finds that all of the allegations set forth in plaintiff's petition or complaint are true; and that the Poso irrigation district is a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the state of California, and is wholly situated in the county of Kern, state of California; and that the superior court of the county of Kern, state of California, in the action therein pending, wherein the above-named plaintiff was plaintiff, and the said Poso irrigation district was defendant, duly gave, made, and entered a judgment, requiring said Poso irrigation district to pay the said plaintiff the sum of $12,262.96, together with interest thereon, at the rate of seven (7) per cent. per annum, from the 26th day of August, 1902, and for other purposes; and that said Poso irrigation district has no funds to be applied to the payment of said judgment; and that there is no property belonging to said Poso irrigation district upon which execution could be levied; and that the officers of said irrigation district have refused and neglected to levy an assessment or do or perform any of the acts provided by law, to assess the real property in said district, for the purpose of paying the money due on said judgment; and that the defendant, board of supervisors, after petition to do so to it, has also refused to take the necessary steps to levy an assessment on the property of said district, or to cause any levy of any assessment to be made on the property in said district, or to take any steps for the purpose of assessing said district, and collecting the taxes on the property in said district, in order to pay said judgment; and that plaintiff is a party beneficially interested and has no means of collecting its judgment without the action of said defendant; and that said plaintiff has no plain, speedy, adequate, or other remedy in the ordinary course of law. Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said defendants immediately proceed to levy an assessment in accordance with law upon the real property within the boundaries of said Poso irrigation district which is subject to an assessment of said district sufficient to pay said judgment of plaintiff, to wit, the sum of $12,262.96, together with the interest thereon at the rate of seven (7) per cent. per annum from the 26th day of August, 1902, and also all expenses incident to the making of said levy and assessment and incident to the collection of said assessment, which expenses shall be estimated by the said defendant, board of supervisors, and shall be included within said levy and shall also include plaintiff's costs in this action, which are hereby taxed at $——— against said defendant, and which shall be included within said levy, and when sufficient money is collected the defendant shall pay to plaintiff from the sum collected whatever amounts are collected on said assessments until said plaintiff shall be paid the said amounts hereinbefore referred to, to wit, the sum of $12,262.96, together with interest thereon at the rate of seven (7) per cent. per annum from the 26th day of August, 1902, and the costs of suit herein. And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that a peremptory writ of mandate shall be issued to said defendants commanding them to forthwith do the acts herein ordered that they shall do, and that a return day be inserted in said writ as on or before the 15th day of September, 1905. Paul W. Bennett, Judge of the Superior Court."

The action is based upon the provisions of section 39 of "An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts, approved March 31, 1897" (Laws 1897, p. 267, c. 189), which is in the following language: "Sec. 39. The board of directors shall then levy an assessment sufficient to raise the annual interest on the outstanding bonds, and in any year in which any bonds shall fall due must increase said assessment to an amount sufficient to raise a sum sufficient to pay the principal of the outstanding bonds as they mature. The secretary of the board must compute and enter in a separate column of the assessment book the respective sums, in dollars and cents, to be paid as an assessment on the property therein enumerated. When collected, the assessment shall be paid into the district treasury and be apportioned to the several proper funds. In case of the neglect or refusal of the board of directors to cause such assessments and levies to be made as in this act provided, then the assessment of property made by the county assessor and the state board of equalization shall be adopted, and shall be the basis of assessment for the district, and the board of supervisors of the county in which the office of the board of directors is situated shall cause an assessment roll for said district to be prepared, and shall make the levy required by this act, in the same manner and with like effect as if the same had been made by said board of directors, and all expenses incident thereto shall be borne by such district. In case of the neglect or refusal of the collector or treasurer of the district to perform the duties imposed by law, then the tax collector and treasurer of the county in which the office of the board of directors is situated must, respectively, perform such duties, and shall be accountable therefor upon their official bonds as in other cases."

The bonded indebtedness herein involved was incurred prior to the enactment of said statute, but this circumstance is unimportant in view of the fact that the act of 1889, passed prior to the issuance of the said bonds and amending the act of 1887, known as the "Wright Irrigation Act," contains a provision identical, as far as the question before us is concerned, with said section 39 of the act of 1897. The judgment herein is vigorously assailed by numerous counsel, including a learned "friend of the court," and we have examined with care the points and cases to which our attention has been directed, and we shall proceed to state our views thereon in the order in which the various propositions are advanced in the briefs.

The position of appellants, as stated by counsel, is that the judgment must be set aside, and the writ vacated, because: "(1) The petition upon which the writ is based is wholly insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to issue the peremptory or any writ herein. (2) The court exceeded its authority and jurisdiction in its direction to the board of supervisors by said writ: (a) In directing a levy and collection for plaintiff's costs expended in the present action. (b) In directing a levy for expenses to be incurred in such levy and collection. (c) In directing said board to estimate such expense for the purpose of levy and collection. (d) In directing said board to pay over to said plaintiff, when collected, the amounts due it on its said judgment. (3) The court exceeded its jurisdiction in directing said board of supervisors to make levy to pay said judgment. (4) That section 39, upon which this proceeding is based, is unconstitutional and void."

In addition to the foregoing, the brief filed by "amicus curiæ" presents specifically these considerations: "(1) Upon the failure of the board of directors or of the board of supervisors, in any year, to levy an assessment for the interest, or the interest and installments of principal, falling due in that year, its power ceases. In other words, the act does not confer upon the directors or the board the power to make a general assessment for the aggregate of indebtedness accruing for the previous years, or, as in this case, for a period of 16 years. The power, if it exists, can only be to make separate annual assessments for each year based on the values of that year; for otherwise the obligations of the parties would be varied, and the act would be unconstitutional. But this, from the nature of things, is impracticable, at least after the lapse of a year or two, and it is therefore submitted that the provision of the amendment of 1889, conferring the power of assessment upon the board of supervisors, is, on this account, a mere brutum fulmen, and practically void. (2) By the provisions of the statute the taxes collected constitute a common bond fund for the benefit of all the creditors, and all have a common interest in it. * * * A suit, therefore, to dispose of this fund, cannot be maintained without making the others parties, or suing for their common benefit. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 378, 379, 382, 389, and Meyer v. City of San Francisco (Cal. Sup.) 88 Pac. 722. (3) If in this state the equitable doctrine as to laches be held to apply to proceedings of the court generally (Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514, 99 Am. Dec. 423), a very extreme case of laches is here presented."

In support of their first proposition, it is urged by appellants that the petition for the writ of mandate is fatally defective, in that it does not appear therein that the office of the board of directors of the irrigation district is situated in Kern county, where the suit was brought. The contention is based upon the language of said section 39 that "the board of supervisors of the county in which the office of the board of directors is situated shall cause an assessment," etc. There was no corresponding allegation nor finding in the case at bar, and it is claimed that this is jurisdictional. As far as the absence of any finding is concerned, no such issue was presented, and it is hardly necessary to cite authorities to the point that the findings must be confined to the issues made by the pleadings. But appellants are wholly at fault in their claim that the want of jurisdiction is disclosed by the allegations of the petition. They have entirely mistaken the rule as applied to the jurisdiction of courts of record. The presumptions here are in favor of jurisdiction, and not against it. There can be no question that, under the authority with which superior courts are clothed by the Constitution, the superior court in and for Kern county, in the exercise of its general powers, had jurisdiction to entertain an application for a writ of mandate against the supervisors of that county. If there were any exceptional circumstances which, if disclosed, would divest the court of jurisdiction, in the absence of any allegation concerning them in the complaint, the burden is upon the defendants to present them. Since it does not affirmatively appear that by reason of the peculiar condition suggested the court did not have jurisdiction, by virtue of its general authority, the presumption must be indulged against appellants' contention. But, again, it is manifest that the provision was intended for a case where the irrigation district comprised land in more than one county. Here it appears that it is confined entirely to Kern county. There seems to be no merit in this contention, and we have probably devoted to it more attention than it deserves.

In the specification of particulars wherein it is alleged the court exceeded its authority in its direction to the board of supervisors, exception is taken to that portion of the decree providing for the costs of the present action and expenses to be incurred in the levy and collection of the judgment. It is insisted that said section 39 limits the power of the board of directors of the district to the levy of an assessment sufficient to raise the annual interest on the outstanding bonds and in any year in which any bonds shall fall due to increase such assessment to an amount sufficient to pay the same as they mature, and that the delegation of authority to the board of supervisors cannot be more comprehensive than the authority conferred upon the board of directors in the first instance. The consideration of the costs of the present action may be eliminated, as the record shows that no amount was awarded for costs. The expenses of the levy and assessment would seem to be a legitimate portion of the burden to be borne by the property owners in whose behalf the bonded indebtedness was incurred. In fact, said section 39 makes provision for it in this language: "And all expenses incident thereto shall be borne by such district." If we understand the position of appellants, it is that other provision is made for said expenses in case of the levy by the board of directors, and, since there is a delegation of power to the supervisors, their authority is limited to the method pointed out for the directors to pursue. Of course, the act contemplates that the board of directors will do its duty, and ample provision is made in detail for incurring and liquidating a bonded indebtedness. But we do not understand that in the technical sense the authority conferred upon said directors is sought to be delegated to the board of supervisors. Rather is it true that the board of directors is empowered to bind the district by taking certain steps, and the authority of the said board to liquidate an indebtedness must be exercised in the manner pointed out. But in case of its refusal or neglect to act, then the board of supervisors is granted directly by the Legislature the power to levy an assessment to provide not only for the payment of the amount due, but also for the expense of said levy. The statute does not expressly provide that the expense shall be included in said levy, but it is fairly implied, and any other construction seems unreasonable. The context clearly shows, we think, that in this way the expenses "shall be borne by the district."

The case of Boskowitz v. Thompson, 144 Cal. 724, 78 Pac. 290, cited by appellants, is not in point. That was not a case where the directors refused to act. It was a suit to enjoin the collection of an assessment, and no such question was considered as is involved here in reference to the authority of the board of supervisors in the premises. The important point decided therein is shown by the following quotation: "A court of equity, as such, in the absence of statutory authority, has no jurisdiction to enforce a lien that is created by statute, for the enforcement of which the statute has provided a mode. The enforcement of the lien in such case can be only in the mode provided by the statute." It was also held that the court should have determined the validity of the assessment which it was sought to collect. There is nothing in that case inconsistent with our position here, as we hold that the court below directed the board of supervisors to follow the mode that is at least implied by the statute. The objection that the board of supervisors is without authority to estimate the expenses of levying and collecting the assessment is also without persuasive force. As suggested by respondent, no one is presumably better fitted to make the estimate than the supervisors, and we think it is implied that they should do so when an emergency arises such as in the case at bar.

The position taken by appellants that the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction in directing the board of supervisors to pay over to the plaintiff from the sum collected a sufficient amount to satisfy plaintiff's demand seems to be in accord with the statute. Respondent rather concedes that the judgment is erroneous in this respect, but claims that it "does not affect the validity of other portions of the decree," and that the decree can be modified by striking out that provision, leaving other portions of the decree in full force and effect. Since the act provides in the first instance that the tax collector and treasurer of the district shall collect and receive the money, and, "in case of neglect or refusal of either of them to perform the duties imposed by law, then the tax collector and treasurer of the county in which the office of the board of directors is situated must respectively perform such duties and shall be accountable therefor upon their official bonds as in other cases," and as there is no authority to depart from the provisions of the act, the portion of the decree complained of should be stricken out. There is no good reason, though, why this should necessitate a new trial.

We cannot see any merit in appellants' contention stated by them as follows: "The petition to the board of supervisors as well as the writ prays that a levy to pay the judgment therein set out be made by said board of supervisors in conformity with the act in question and more particularly in conformity with subdivision 39 thereof. As we have already pointed out, section 39 relates specially to interest on outstanding bonds. The decree and the writ directs the levy to pay a judgment. The original contract between plaintiff and the district is so completely merged in the judgment, in a new form of contract, that the court cannot see that it is for interest on outstanding bonds and therefore payable by the provisions of section 39." A large number of cases is cited in support thereof, but their effect seems to have been misapprehended. The quotation made by appellant from Taylor v. Root, *43 N. Y. 344, may be accepted as a fair expression of what is held in all of them: "The cause of consideration of the judgment is of no possible importance; that is merged in the judgment. When recovered the judgment stands as a conclusive declaration that the plaintiff therein is entitled to the sum of money recovered. No matter what may have been the original cause of action, the judgment forever settles the plaintiff's original claim. * * * This assent may have been reluctant, but in law it is an assent, and defendant is estopped by the judgment to dissent. Forever thereafter, any claim on the judgment is setting up a cause of action on the contract." It is hard to perceive how appellant can obtain any comfort from the quotation. It is too well settled to be controverted that a judgment does not create a new obligation. It simply presents in a different form the obligation already incurred, and, besides, it affords the highest sanction of the law to the validity of the obligation. It seems to be established by the authorities that the proper course to pursue when municipalities refuse to pay their bonds is by an action at law to establish the validity of the bonds and the amount due thereon, and then to apply for a writ of mandate to compel the proper authorities to raise what is required to satisfy the debt by the assessment and levy provided by statute. The following cases cited by respondent so hold: Heine v. Commissioners, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 223; Herring v. Modesto Irrigation District (C. C.) 95 Fed. 705, 710; Marra v. San Jacinto & Pleasant Valley Irrigation District (C. C.) 131 Fed. 780, 789; Board of Supervisors of Riverside County v. Thompson, 122 Fed. 860, 59 C. C. A. 70. The latter case was similar to the one at bar, involving the same statute, and from it the following quotation seems germane: "The present proceeding is not a new action to establish the rights of the defendant in error as against other parties. It is a proceeding in the nature of an execution to enforce the judgment already rendered. The right of the defendant in error to call upon the board of directors to enforce the judgment was established in that judgment as well as his right to have recourse to the board of supervisors in case of the refusal or neglect of the board of directors to make the levy and assessment. Neither the board of directors nor the board of supervisors nor the taxpayers of the Perris irrigation district can be heard to defend the present proceeding on any of the grounds litigated, or which might have been litigated, in the former action."

The principal attack directed against the judgment is based upon the ground that said section 39 is unconstitutional for these reasons: (1) Because it delegates the power to assess and collect taxes in the district to other than corporate authorities thereof; (2) because it directs the assessment of property within the district to be made by persons not representatives of the district; (3) because it delegates to a legislative officer the power to perform the purely executive functions of the assessor. In this connection attention is directed to section 12, article 11, and section 10, article 13, of the Constitution of this state and numerous decisions of our Supreme Court. Said section 12, supra, provides that "the Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns or other public or municipal corporations or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town or other municipal purposes, but may by general laws vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes," and said section 10 provides for the assessment of property where it is situated "in the manner prescribed by law."

As pointed out by respondent many of the decisions cited by appellant were rendered under the Constitution of 1849, which contained the following provision: "Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state. All property in this state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; but assessors and collectors of town, county and state taxes shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county or town in which the property taxed for state, county or own purposes is situated." If that provision were a part of the organic law now, it is probable that said section 39 would be unconstitutional, in so far as it provides for the steps to be taken by the board of supervisors; but under the present Constitution the power to assess and collect taxes is conferred upon "the corporate authorities," with the restriction that the assessment shall be made where the property is situated and in the manner prescribed by law. We cannot see that said section 39 is in conflict with this requirement. The board of supervisors is a "corporate authority" of the district, and the assessment and levy according to the terms of the decree are to be made as "prescribed by law."

In the case of McCabe v. Carpenter, 102 Cal. 470, 36 Pac. 837, it is said: "It is contended that the law [referring to a statute establishing high schools] is unconstitutional, in that it authorizes the county superintendent of schools to furnish to the board of supervisors an estimate for the tax and makes it the duty of the board to proceed to fix a rate which will realize the amount, thus leaving the amount of the tax wholly to the discretion of an executive officer, and leaving no discretion in the board." The conclusion of the court, announced by Commissioner Temple, was: "But since the power to levy a tax is purely legislative, it would seem to follow that the power cannot be vested in any other authority of the local corporation than the body in which is vested the legislative power of such municipal corporation. At all events it could not vest such power in an executive officer of such corporation." Here the board of supervisors is authorized to make the levy in case of the refusal of the directors to act, the statute in question makes the board a part of the "corporate authority" of the district, the board is undoubtedly a legislative body, it does not make the assessment, but bases the levy upon the assessment made by the county assessor, and we fail to see how there is any violation of the provisions of the Constitution, especially when, as here, the district is confined to one county.

In Board of Education v. Board of Trustees, 129 Cal. 604, 62 Pac. 173, there is an interesting discussion of article 1, § 12, of the Constitution, and it is said by the court through the commissioner who is the amicus curiæ herein: "These provisions apply to all kinds of public or municipal corporations, or we may say to all municipalities and quasi municipalities. These differ greatly in their organization. In some, as in cities generally, the powers of the government are distributed into separate departments; in others all the powers of the municipality are invested in one body—as, e. g., in the board of supervisors of a county, the board of trustees of a school district, etc. In the latter case the board of supervisors or board of trustees, or other governing body, constitutes the corporate authority of the municipality, in which might be vested the power to impose taxes." So it may be admitted that in the first instance the duty here is cast upon the board of directors of the district to make the levy; but in case of its refusal to act the board of supervisors constitutes the legislative corporate authority to supply the omission. The power of the Legislature is not exhausted when it confers the authority upon the directors; but it may also authorize the supervisors to perform a similar function in certain contingencies. This it has done. It would seem just and reasonable that this power should be lodged in some body outside of the board of directors of the district to meet such an emergency as is here presented, where, according to the findings of the court, said directors have repudiated a legal obligation and have endeavored to prevent its enforcement.

There seems to be no decision of the Supreme Court passing directly upon the constitutionality of the proceeding herein involved, but an application of the principles so clearly enunciated in the able opinion of Mr. Justice Harrison in the leading case of In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106, wherein the Wright irrigation law is upheld, in our opinion leads to the conclusion that said section 39 is not obnoxious to the Constitution. In that case it is said: "Whenever a special district of the state requires special legislation therefor, it is competent for the Legislature by general law to authorize the organization of such district into a public corporation, with such powers of government as it may choose to confer upon it. It is not necessary that such public corporation should be vested with all governmental powers, but the Legislature may clothe it with such as in its judgment are proper to be exercised within and for the benefit of such district." And it was held that these corporations are mere agencies of the state in local government, that they possess only the powers conferred by the Legislature, and that it was the purpose of the Constitution to leave in the hands of the Legislature full discretion in reference to the government of said corporations. In the exercise of this discretion the Legislature has conferred upon the legislative body of the county a certain supervisory authority over the district. This seems to be a reasonable provision in furtherance of the design of the framers of the Constitution. As the section, when fairly construed, requires the board of supervisors to base the levy upon the assessment of the county assessor, there would seem to be no force in the contention of the appellant that the property owners have no opportunity to be heard to correct any defects in the assessment.

The most serious objection, probably, is the one made by the amicus curiæ: "That an annual assessment upon the real property in the district is the exclusive mode provided by the statute for the payment of the principal of the bonds authorized by the statute to be issued." In this connection he cites the case of Merchants' Bank v. Escondido District, 144 Cal. 329, 77 Pac. 937. It is therein stated: "The act providing for the organization of the district, and the organization of the district under the provisions of the act by the votes of the electors, cannot be otherwise regarded than as a contract between the state and the individuals whose property was thereby affected." The soundness of that proposition would scarcely be questioned by any one. It is further stated that: "The burden thus imposed was that the bonds issued under the act should be paid by revenue derived from an annual assessment upon the real property of the district, and that their lands 'should be and remain liable' for such assessment, and this implied that this should be the extent of the burden. But by the amendatory act the board of directors is authorized, without the consent or even the knowledge of the landowners, to pledge or hypothecate the property acquired with their money." Hence it was held that the amendment would deprive the landowners of their property without due process of law and was also a violation of the inhibition against impairing the obligation of contracts, since the property owners were only liable "for continued assessments until the balance of the bonds shall be paid." No fault can be found with that decision as applied to the facts of the case. The amendment held unconstitutional was enacted after the issuance of the bonds, and it is too clear for argument that it gave the bondholders security that was not provided by the law at the time the obligation was incurred by the district, and was therefore in violation of the terms of the contract between the debtors and creditors. The case is in point here if it can be shown that the method provided for the collection of the debt adds to the property owners an additional burden to what was imposed by the statute at the time the bonds were issued. But, as we have seen, the statute has not been substantially changed, and so the question resolves itself into one as to the proper construction of said section 39. The statute no doubt contemplates annual assessments, as it is constructed upon the theory that the board of directors will do its duty, but it does not prescribe that this shall be the exclusive method of raising the money to pay the bonds.

The argument made by respondent is substantially this: The board of directors of the district is not required to levy the assessment at any particular date, but must make it after the equalization of the assessment made by the assessor of the district. This levy by said board may be as late, then, as the end of the fiscal year, and hence it could not be said to be in default till the end of the year, and hence the powers of the supervisors could not be invoked till after that time. The power of the board of supervisors must therefore be exercised in making the levy for the payment of interest coupons or installment coupons which matured in a previous year. Furthermore, the statute does not provide the time when the levy shall be made by the supervisors, and there is nothing therein inconsistent with the position that one levy may be made for the payment of the aggregate amount of installments of interest and principal due in successive years. The contention of the amicus curiæ is: "If the power still exists in the directors or supervisors to make any assessment and levy, it can only be to make several assessments for each year, and each assessment must be of the values of the lands of the district in that year." This, he contends, is impracticable, and hence he would have the court reach the conclusion that there is no method provided for the payment of the debt and the bondholders are without redress.

We are not inclined to consider the law so impotent as is implied by appellants' argument. We hold that the burdens of the property owners have not been increased since they incurred the obligation to pay these bonds. The statute, in our opinion, does not expressly nor by implication prohibit the method adopted herein for the collection of the money due. In fact, the forbearance to sue for several years and the use of one levy, instead of many, constituted a favor to the debtors and tended, not to increase, but to reduce, the burden of the property owner.

We fail to see any force in the contention that the judgment is erroneous because it makes no provision for other creditors. The debtor should hardly be allowed to raise this question when it appears that the amount claimed is due the creditor who has brought the suit. Again, there is nothing to show that the other bonds issued have not been paid, or that there is any other creditor who desires to participate in the fund. If there are other creditors whose claim the appellants are solicitous to have paid, it is fair to presume that respondent will not object to an increase in the amount of the levy so as to meet the other obligations of the district.

The question of laches suggested by appellants is disposed of by the case of Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 78 Pac. 467. We think the circumstances detailed in the petition for the writ excuse the delay, and show that no prejudice has been caused thereby to appellants.

The court below is directed to modify the judgment by striking therefrom the following: "And when sufficient money is collected the defendant shall pay to plaintiff from the sum collected whatever amounts are collected in said assessments until said plaintiff shall be paid the said amounts hereinbefore referred to, to wit, the sum of $12,262.96, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 26th day of August, 1902, and the costs of suit herein"—and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

GRAHAM v. MAYOR AND BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF FRESNO.

(S. F. 4,762.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1907.)

1. Justices of the Peace — Authority — Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.

The amendment to Const. art. 11, § 6, adopted November 3, 1896, inserting "except in municipal affairs," in the provisions that cities and towns and all charters thereof adopted by authority of the Constitution shall be subject to and controlled by the general laws and Constitution, and Const. art. 11, § 8½, being an amendment adopted November 3, 1896, providing that it shall be competent for all charters formed under the authority given by Const. art. 11, § 8, to provide for the constitution, jurisdiction, etc., of police courts, the manner, time, and terms for which the judges thereof shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of the judges, etc., do not affect the power of the Legislature to provide for justices' courts in cities and towns as part of the state system of justices' courts.

2. Municipal Corporations — Legislative Control—Constitutional Provision.

Under Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended, the provisions of freeholders' charters are supreme as to all matters which the Constitution authorizes to be provided for therein, and are exempt from any control by any subsequent act of the Legislature.

3. Same—Cities of Fourth Class.

Under Const. art. 11, § 8½, being an amendment adopted November 3, 1896, providing that it shall be competent in all charters formed under the authority of Const. art. 11, § 8, to provide for constitutional regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the compensation, etc., of judges thereof, the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 103, requiring a city of the fourth class to furnish the city justice of the peace a suitable office in which to hold his court, does not apply to a city of the fourth class whose charter provides for a police court.

Sloss, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Mandamus by George B. Graham against the mayor and board of trustees of the city of Fresno. Application denied.

Geo. B. Graham, in pro. per. D. S. Ewing (Frank Karke, of counsel), for defendants.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The city of Fresno is a city organized under a freeholders' charter framed and adopted under the provisions of section 8, art. 11, of the Constitution of this state, and approved by the Legislature on January 28, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 832, c. 9). According to the federal census of 1900 it has a population of more than 10,000 and less than 15,000, and therefore, if we assume that the provisions of the general classification act, as amended March 5, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 94), apply, it is a city of the fourth class within the meaning of section 103, Code Civ. Proc. Its charter provides for a court to be known as the "police court of the city of Fresno"; the same to consist of one judge to be elected at the general municipal election, who shall receive a salary from and be furnished with a courtroom by the city, which court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all prosecutions for violations of city ordinances and actions for the recovery of fines, etc., and the enforcement of obligations or liabilities created by the city ordinances, and, within the city limits, concurrent jurisdiction with township justices' courts in all matters wherein said justices' courts may have jurisdiction. Sections 61, 61, 62, 68, 200, 221, Charter. Under these provisions, a police court has been established and is now being maintained in the city; one H. F. Briggs being the judge thereof. The city of Fresno constitutes a portion of the third judicial township of the county of Fresno. At the general state election held November 6, 1906, the plaintiff, George B. Graham, was elected "city justice of the city of Fresno," and qualified in the manner required of justices of the peace. He claims that it is the duty of the defendants to furnish him, as such city justice, with a suitable office wherein to hold his court. Defendants have refused to comply with his demand in this regard, and plaintiff has instituted this proceeding to obtain a peremptory writ of mandate compelling such compliance.

Plaintiff's claim is based on section 103, Code Civ. Proc.; the general section providing for justices' courts, their number in townships and cities, their election, etc. That section, after providing for the justices of townships, to be elected at a general state election, provides that: "In every city or town of the third and the fourth class there must be one justice of the peace, * * * to be elected in like manner by the electors of such cities or towns respectively." It further provides that such justice of the peace of cities or towns shall have the same jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as justices of the peace of townships, and also jurisdiction of all proceedings for the violation of any ordinance of a city, and all actions for the recovery of any licenses required by any ordinance of the city, and shall exercise all powers, duties, and jurisdiction, civil and criminal, of "police judges, judges of the police court, recorder's court, or mayor's court within such city." It further provides that every city justice of the peace in any city or town of the fourth class shall receive as his sole compensation a salary of $1,500 per annum from the salary fund of such city or town, and shall be provided by the city authorities with a suitable office in which to hold his court, and requires him to pay into the city or town treasury all fees chargeable by law for services rendered by him.

Prior to the adoption of certain constitutional amendments in 1896, it was established that, by reason of section 1, art. 6, providing that the judicial power of the state shall be vested in certain courts therein named, "justices of the peace, and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county," section 11 of the same article providing that the Legislature shall determine the number of justices of the peace to be elected in townships, incorporated cities or towns, or cities and counties, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of such officers, and section 13 of article 6 providing that the Legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior courts which may be established in pursuance of section 1 of the article, and fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the judges thereof, the whole matter of the establishment and regulation of justices and other inferior courts in cities and towns, and the compensation of the judges thereof, was in the hands of the Legislature, and that such laws as section 103, Code Civ. Proc., constituted a valid exercise of the legislative power. People v. Cobb, 133 Cal. 74, 65 Pac. 325; People v. Sands, 102 Cal. 12, 36 Pac. 404; Coggins v. City of Sacramento, 59 Cal. 599; Jenks . Council, etc., 58 Cal. 576; Bishop v. Council, etc., 58 Cal. 572. In Bishop v. Council, supra, a writ of mandate was granted to compel the city authorities to furnish such a city justice, elected at a general state election, with a suitable office. In Jenks v. Council, supra, a similar writ was granted requiring the payment of the salary of such a justice from the city treasury. In Coggins v. City of Sacramento, supra, an action by a city justice against the city for salary and office rent, was sustained, and by People v. Sands, supra, and People v. Cobb, supra, it was thoroughly established that such justices are to be elected in the same manner as other justices of the peace, at a general state election, and that vacancies in the office are to be filled in the manner prescribed by the state law. It was further established that a police court created by the provisions of a freeholders' charter was not a court created by the Legislature, and therefore that it was not competent to provide therefor in such a charter. People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333, 24 Pac. 603; Ex parte Ah You, 82 Cal. 339, 22 Pac. 929; People v. Sands, supra. Defendants' claim is that by reason of certain constitutional amendments made in the year 1896, not only is the charter provision for a police court of the city valid and effectual, which is admitted, but that the provision of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure for a city justice of the peace cannot be held applicable, and especially that the provisions of said section for the payment of a salary to such justices from the city treasury and the furnishing of an office at the cost of the city are without force as to said city. The constitutional amendments relied on are: First, the municipal affairs amendment of section 6, art. 11; and, second, section 8½ of article 11. The latter section adopted November 3, 1896, so far as applicable, is as follows: "It shall be competent in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of article eleven of this Constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution, and by the laws of the state, as follows: (1) For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches."

We cannot find in subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 any intention to interfere with the power of the Legislature in the matter of provision for justices of the peace for cities and towns. That subdivision is limited in terms to "police courts," and there is no mention whatever therein of justices of the peace or justices' courts. The term "police court" ordinarily refers to an inferior municipal court with a limited jurisdiction in criminal cases only, a court with the power to try certain misdemeanor cases arising from the violation of state law or municipal ordinance, and with the power to conduct preliminary examinations in cases of felony and certain misdemeanors, and to hold defendants to answer for trial for the same, and does not include the justices' courts established by our law. The term should probably be here construed to also include such inferior courts as may properly be held to be purely municipal, though given by the state certain jurisdiction in state as distinguished from municipal matters, courts coming within the class specified in the Constitution as "such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town or city and county," such as a city recorder's court or a mayor's court. See Ex parte Soto, 88 Cal. 624, 626, 26 Pac. 530. But the city justice of the peace provided for by section 103, Code Civ. Proc., does not come within this category. People v. Sands, supra; People v. Cobb, supra. Justices of the peace are part of the constitutional judicial system of the state, having concurrent jurisdiction with superior courts in certain matters expressly given by the Constitution (section 11, art. 6, Const.), and also having such jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases as is given by the general laws of the state to all justices of the peace. In this regard there is no distinction whatever between township and city justices. See cases last cited. A city justice is simply a part of this general state system, elected for a certain subdivision thereof. It is immaterial in this connection that the Legislature has attempted to confer upon city justices an additional jurisdiction in matters peculiar to the city, such as cases arising from violations of municipal ordinances, etc. The Constitution in terms provides that the Legislature shall determine the number of such justices of the peace to be elected in townships, incorporated cities and towns, or cities and counties, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of such office. Section 11, art. 6. In view of the explicit provisions of the Constitution as to justices of the peace for cities and towns, as well as townships and cities and counties, and the decisions of this court in regard thereto, it is inconceivable that this amendment, limited in terms to police courts, was intended to trench in the slightest degree upon the power of the Legislature to provide for justices' courts in cities and towns as part of the general state system of justices' courts, and we cannot give it any such effect.

It does not follow, however, that the provisions of section 103, Code Civ. Proc., as to the payment of the salary of such a city justice from the municipal treasury, and the furnishing to him of an office by the municipality, will be held valid as to a city having a police court established under a valid charter provision. The decisions heretofore cited sustaining the statutory provisions in that behalf were all cases decided prior to the adoption of the constitutional amendments, and at a time when, as we have already seen, no effectual provision for any court could be made in such a charter. The city justice of the peace established by the Legislature has always been given, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of a justice's court, the power and jurisdiction of an ordinary police court of a city, the expense of maintenance of which has always been considered a proper charge on the city, and his office thus partook of the character of both a county and township office and a city office. People v. Sands, supra; People v. Cobb, supra. The Legislature having had, prior to the amendments, the sole power to provide such a police court in a city or town, also had the power to provide for the maintenance of the same by the city or town, and the city justice's court being the court invested by the Legislature with that jurisdiction, and thus, in effect, made also a city police court, the Legislature was authorized to require the expense thereof to be borne by the municipality.

The effect of subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 was to make the matter of such police courts purely a municipal affair as to any freeholders' charter city which subsequently made appropriate provision in its charter for such court. It confided the subject-matter of such courts, and the election and compensation of the judges thereof, to any such city desiring to assume, and assuming, control thereof, just as, by the same section, the matter of fixing the compensation of county officers in consolidated cities and counties was confided to the city and county to be provided for in its freeholders' charter. Such jurisdiction could not coexist in both the Legislature and the city, and the provision for the assumption of such jurisdiction by the city necessarily contemplated the removal of the same from the Legislature, whenever the jurisdiction was assumed by the city. Any act of the Legislature relative to such subject-matter would necessarily be inconsistent with a charter provision in regard to the same subject-matter. As to such matters as the Constitution authorizes to be provided for in freeholders' charters, the provisions of the charter are supreme, superseding all laws inconsistent therewith (section 6, art. 11, Const.), and being exempt from any control by any subsequent act of the Legislature.

For a city maintaining a police court under valid provisions in that behalf in its freeholders' charter, the Legislature, therefore, no longer has the power to provide such a court. While it still has the power to provide a justice's court for any such city as part of the general state system of justices' courts, it no longer has the power to make such court also a city police court, maintainable at the expense of the city. This would be, in effect, the same thing as providing a separate police court for the city, to be maintained at the expense of the city. Any provision of that character would be an invasion of the jurisdiction of the municipality, and inconsistent with the charter provision regarding the subject-matter of city police courts, as to which the plain object of the constitutional provision was to vest entire control in any freeholders' charter city electing to assume such control, and to free any city so doing from legislative control in that regard. As to such cities, the city justice of the peace provided by section 103, Code Civ. Proc., must be held to be the same in all respects as a township justice, simply a county or township officer performing no municipal functions whatever.

The Legislature is not empowered to direct the appropriation of municipal funds for the payment of the salary or office expenses of one who is simply a county or township officer. Municipal funds can be appropriated, under our system, only for municipal purposes. Conlin v. Board of Supervisors, etc., 114 Cal. 404, 46 Pac. 279, 33 L. R. A. 752. The only ground upon which the decisions heretofore cited upholding the provision for the payment of salaries and office expenses of city justices by municipalities can be sustained is that such justices, under the law then in force, in addition to being justices of the peace with the same jurisdiction as township justices, were also city police judges, performing municipal functions. See People v. Sands, supra; People v. Cobb, supra. As we have seen, such is no longer the situation in a city having a police court established under valid provision therefor in its freeholders' charter.

We are therefore of the opinion that the provision of section 103, Code Civ. Proc., requiring a city of the fourth class to furnish the city justice of the peace with a suitable office in which to hold his court, cannot now be held applicable to the city of Fresno.

The application for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SHAW, J. I concur in the opinion of Justice ANGELLOTTI. I wish to say, however, that I do not understand that opinion to hold that when a freeholders' charter has created a police court, and vested in it jurisdiction over offenses against city ordinances and suits to collect city license taxes, or any other jurisdiction that could be vested in such police court, such provisions of the charter would have the effect of preventing the Legislature from vesting the same jurisdiction in a justice's court created by general laws under the provisions of article 6 of the Constitution, or that such charter provisions would at all affect the jurisdiction of any such justice's court, whether theretofore or thereafter established. The proposition, as I understand it, is that, when the special charter has provided a police court, it is not competent for the Legislature to charge upon the city the expenses of any justice's court created by general laws. Whether, in any case, the expenses of such justice's court created under article 6 of the Constitution, could be imposed upon a city operating under a special charter, is a question not decided, and one which does not necessarily arise in this case.

I concur: BEATTY, C. J.

SLOSS, J. I dissent, and think the writ should issue. In my opinion, neither of the amendments of 1896 to article 11 of the Constitution affects the rule declared in Bishop v. Council, 58 Cal. 572, and Jenks v. Council, 58 Cal. 576.

CITY OF REDLANDS et al. v. BROOK, City Treasurer. (S. F. 4,775.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER TO ISSUE BONDS—LIGHTING STREETS.

Municipal Incorporation Act 1883 (St. 1883, p. 269, c. 49), § 862, empowers municipal corporations to lay out, alter, improve, etc., streets and other public highways and to drain and light them, etc. Section 866 (page 271) provides that municipal corporations of the sixth class may incur a bonded indebtedness whenever the board of trustees shall deem it necessary to supply a deficiency in the funds applicable to the payment of any expense which they are empowered to incur. Held to give a city power to issue bonds to meet the expense of purchasing electric lighting for streets from a private company and of maintaining the streets and public places.

2. SAME—EFFECT OF CURATIVE STATUTES.

Act March 4, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 104, c. 80), to legalize bonds to be issued and sold by municipalities where authority for such issuance had already been given by a vote of more than two-thirds of the electors, operates to legalize such an issue of bonds by a city, although the act under which they were issued had been repealed by implication.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1951.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CURATIVE STATUTES—POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the power of the Legislature to validate past transactions which it could have authorized in advance is restrained only by the necessity of protecting vested rights.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 536.]

4. STATUTES — SPECIAL LAWS — CURATIVE STATUTES.

An act to legalize bonds to be issued and sold by municipalities, which embraces all municipal corporations and every case in which not less than two-thirds of the electors voting at a special election called for the purpose have approved the proposed issue of bonds, is not a special law within Const. art. 4, § 25, subds. 14, 18, forbidding special laws giving effect to invalid instruments, or legalizing except as against the state the unauthorized or invalid act of an officer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 81.]

5. SAME.

The fact that the law is limited in its application to bonds sold after its passage, and, for not less than par, does not render it a special law in a constitutional sense.

In Bank. Mandamus by the city of Redlands and others against A. E. Brook. Writ granted.

F. A. Leonard, for plaintiffs. Henry M. Willis, for defendant.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an original proceeding in which the plaintiffs pray for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant to sign certain municipal bonds which the plaintiffs propose to issue. The cause has been submitted upon a general demurrer to the complaint for want of facts. The material facts alleged, and by the demurrer admitted, are that Redlands is a city of the sixth class. That its board of trustees at a regular meeting duly adopted, by a vote of more than two-thirds of all its members, a resolution declaring it necessary to incur an indebtedness of $50,000 for the following purposes: "For electric lighting of said city to be furnished by private company for the fiscal year 1907; and for the care and maintenance of streets and public parks of said city for said fiscal year (not including, however, any municipal improvements of any kind or nature whatever)." That said resolution was approved by the executive of said city. That an ordinance was duly passed calling for a special election at which the electors of said city should vote on the question of the issuance of the bonds. That the election was duly held and out of a total of 852 votes 753 were in favor of issuing the bonds. That thereupon an ordinance was duly passed providing for the issuance and sale of the bonds by which it was made the official duty of the defendant to sign the bonds and coupons. That demand was made upon him to sign said bonds and coupons, but he refuses to do so, alleging as his reason for such refusal "that said bonds are invalid and void and would not create a legal obligation against said city if signed or executed by him." It is further alleged that said proposed indebtedness of $50,000 will not exceed, together with all the indebtedness of said city, in the aggregate, 15 per cent. of the assessed value of all the real and personal property in said city. These, with other allegations of the complaint, it is conceded, show that all the constitutional and statutory requirements as to procedure in the matter of the issuance of municipal bonds have been fully complied with; but it is objected that the purposes for which the proceeds of the bonds are to be used are not among those for which municipal corporations are authorized to borrow money.

The declared purposes to which the proceeds of the bonds were to be applied, no less than the concluding portion of the resolution to incur the indebtedness—the part in parenthesis—which was carried into the ordinance subsequently passed, show that the proceedings were not intended to be based on the act of February 25, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32), which confers authority to create a bonded indebtedness for the sole purpose of acquiring, constructing, or completing permanent improvements, the cost of which will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of the municipality. The limited authority granted by this act would seem to indicate an intention on the part of the Legislature to withhold the power to borrow money to pay for current expenses, and if it was the only law relating to the subject it would seem very plain that the bond issue in question here is illegal. But section 866 of the municipal incorporation act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 271, c. 49) is far more liberal in terms and effect. It is therein provided that municipal corporations of the sixth class may incur a bonded indebtedness in the method here followed whenever the board of trustees shall deem it necessary for the purpose of supplying a deficiency of the funds in the treasury applicable to the payment of any expense which they are empowered to incur in behalf of the municipality. And by section 862 (page 269) of the same act they are empowered to "lay out, alter, keep open, improve and repair streets, sidewalks, alleys, squares and other public highways, and places within the city or town, and to drain, sprinkle, oil and light the same." In view of this provision there can be no question as to the power of the board of trustees to incur the expense of purchasing electric lighting from a private company or the expense of the care and maintenance of the streets and public places in the city. And if they can lawfully incur such expenses it is very clear that section 866, by its terms, confers the power to supply any deficiency in the funds applicable to these purposes by the issuance of bonds.

The only question that suggests itself is whether section 866 is still in force; whether, in other words, it may not have been repealed by the passage of the later act of 1901, in which, as above shown, the power of municipal corporations to incur a bonded indebtedness is limited to the acquisition, construction, or completion of permanent improvements the benefit of which will inure to the future inhabitants of the city or town, in contradistinction to those things which are properly deemed a current expense payable out of the revenue of the year in which they are consumed. This is a question of very serious import, which does not seem to have engaged the attention of counsel, and in the absence of argument we are not willing to decide it. We merely direct attention to the fact that here is a general law applicable to all municipal corporations organized under the law of 1883, later in date than that act.

and covering the subject of municipal bonds. Such laws, notwithstanding repeals by implication are not favored, have sometimes been held to operate such repeal of older statutes to which they make no express reference.

We are, however, relieved of the necessity of deciding this question in the present case by reason of the enactment of a curative statute approved March 4, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 104, c. 80), by which the proceedings in this and all similar cases have been validated.

In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the power of the Legislature to validate past transactions which it could have authorized in advance is restrained only by the necessity of protecting vested rights. Here are no vested rights to be guarded, and the only constitutional restrictions to which our attention has been called are contained in subdivisions 14 and 18 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution, which forbid the enactment of special laws giving effect to invalid deeds, wills, or other instruments, or legalizing, except as against the state, the unauthorized or invalid act of any officer. The answer to the objection based on these provisions is that the act of March 4, 1907, is not a special law. It is a curative act, and, of course, is retroactive in its operation, applying exclusively to past transactions; but it embraces all municipal corporations, and every case in which not less than two-thirds of the qualified electors voting at a special election called for the purpose have approved the proposed issue of municipal bonds. The fact that the law is limited in its application to bonds sold after its passage, and for not less than par, does not render the law special in a constitutional sense. There was an excellent reason for discriminating between such bonds, and others that might have been marketed prior to the statute for less than their value, for the very reason that there was a doubt as to their validity.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss this matter more in detail, or to cite the cases referred to in the briefs. It is enough to say that there is no constitutional objection to the validating act, and that the proceedings of the plaintiffs in ordering the issue of these bonds, if not originally valid, certainly became valid immediately upon the passage of the act of March 4, 1907. A very instructive opinion of the Supreme Court of Minnesota in a case closely resembling this, and in which the authorities are extensively reviewed, is City of Minneapolis v. Brown, 106 N. W. 477, 97 Minn. 402.

It is ordered that peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

NEW LIVERPOOL SALT CO. v. WESTERN SALT CO. (L. A. 1,820.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1907. Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1907.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION — EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH.

Defendant contracted for the sale of all the salt in its possession to a salt company, the title to vest at once in the purchaser. It then sold a part of the salt to other parties. The salt company thereafter sold the entire salt covered by the contract to plaintiff. All of the payments were made to defendant as provided by the contract. Held, that defendant was liable to plaintiff for the conversion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trover and Conversion, §§ 119, 120.]

2. SALE—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—PAYMENT OF PRICE—EFFECT OF DEFAULT.

A contract for the sale of a certain salt provided that it be paid for in certain payments made at stated times, and also that the seller be allowed 25 cents per ton for expenses of delivery, payable each month, the amount thus paid being deductible from the last payment to be made on the salt, and that on default in payments the title should revert to the seller. Held, that the provision for forfeiture referred only to those sums which constituted a part of the purchase price, and not to the charge allowed for expenses of delivery.

3. SAME — ACTION BETWEEN SELLER AND THIRD PERSON.

Where defendant sold salt to a company which before delivery the company sold to plaintiff, in a suit against the defendant for converting a part of the salt to its own use after the sale to the company, the defendant cannot complain that the plaintiff has failed to pay the company for the salt, and that according to his contract of sale the title to the salt has reverted to the salt company, since the enforcement of the forfeiture of plaintiff's title to the salt could be waived, and the salt company had taken no action to enforce the same.

4. TROVER AND CONVERSION—DAMAGES—VALUE OF PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover a large quantity of salt or its value converted by the seller, a wholesale merchant, after the sale, the defendant is liable for the wholesale price or value only, and evidence of the market value at retail, unsupplemented by proof of the difference between the wholesale and retail prices, was insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trover and Conversion, § 242.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by the New Liverpool Salt Company against the Western Salt Company to recover possession of a quantity of salt or its value. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Purcell Rowe, C. H. Rippey, and A. Haines (J. S. Chapman, of counsel), for appellant. Victor E. Shaw and Titus, Wright & Creed, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was for the possession of 4,600 tons of salt, or its value, if possession could not be recovered.

The salt in controversy consisted of salt sold by the Western Salt Company to another corporation, known as the "Amalgamated Salt Company," by a written contract executed December 20, 1902. At the time of the sale the salt was left in the possession of the Western Salt Company in accordance with the terms of the contract. Afterwards, on January 2, 1904, the Amalgamated Salt Company sold the salt embraced in that contract to plaintiff. The following is a statement of the material parts of the agreement of sale of December 20, 1902, between the Western Salt Company and the Amalgamated Salt Company: The Western Salt Company, which was the party of the first part, thereby sold to the Amalgamated Salt Company "all salt now owned by the party of the first part which is now lifted from the vats, sacked and stored in piles, bins and warehouses on the premises of the party of the first part," at the head of the bay of San Diego. The buyer agreed to pay for this salt $8,000 of its capital stock, to be transferred to the Western Salt Company, and, in addition thereto, as follows: "Twenty-three hundred dollars ($2,300.00) on or before January 13, 1903, and the further sum of thirty-four hundred and fifty dollars ($3,450.00) on or before the 13th day of April, 1903. And the party of the second part further agrees to pay to the party of the first part twenty-five cents (25) per ton, on the 13th of each month for the salt delivered by the party of the first part and taken by the party of the second part in the preceding month, said 25 cents per ton to represent the sewing, sacking and delivery of said salt on board cars at the works of the party of the first part on said premises; * * * providing however, that the party of the second part agrees to further pay to the party of the first part on or before January 1, 1904, the further sum of eleven hundred and fifty dollars ($1,150.00), after deducting from said sum the amount which the party of the second part may have paid under the provision in this contract for the payment of 25 cents per ton upon the 13th of each month for sewing, sacking and delivery of said salt. It is further understood and agreed, that said party of the second part has the right to the immediate possession of said salt and that it shall be lawful for said party of the second part, its agents and employés, to enter any premises on which said salt may be stored, or such other places as said salt is, or may be stored, and take and carry away said salt, and to occupy and use so much of any place where said salt may be stored so far as is necessary for use for such purpose while preparing said salt for transportation, without any charge therefor by way of rental or otherwise, but nothing in this clause shall be a waiver on the part of the party of the first part to the compensation as hereinbefore agreed upon. The title to said salt is hereby vested in the party of the second part, and it is further agreed between the parties hereto that in case any of the payments aforesaid shall not be made as above specified, then the title to said salt shall revert to the party of the first part, and it shall have the right to sell the same for the amount due it under this agreement, and no salt shall be removed from said premises by the party of the second part until said sums, amounting to $5,750.00, shall be paid."

1. The findings are that the salt on the premises on December 20, 1902, at the time of the sale to the Amalgamated Salt Company, amounted to only 1,788 tons; that after that date, and prior to the sale to the plaintiff in January, 1904, the defendant had sold, shipped, and converted to its own use 963 tons of the said salt, leaving only 825 tons remaining on the premises at the time of the latter sale. The court concluded that the effect of the agreement by which the salt was sold to plaintiff in 1904 was that the plaintiff thereby acquired title only to the salt then remaining upon the premises; that is, to the 825 tons aforesaid. In this, we think, the court was in error. The contract of sale in 1904, by its terms, purports to sell to the plaintiff "all that certain salt, 4,600 tons or more, which said salt was purchased by the party of the first part (Amalgamated Salt Company) of the Western Salt Company, and is particularly described in that certain agreement made and entered into by and between the said Western Salt Company (and) the party of the first part, on the 20th day of December, 1902." This clearly describes and purports to sell and transfer title to all the salt included in the act mentioned, wherever it might then be situated. The defendant contends that the previous sale and conversion of the 963 tons, involving, as it is claimed, the removal of that salt from the defendant's premises, or its destruction, excludes that part of the salt from the operation of the contract of sale to the plaintiff. There is no evidence that any part of the salt was destroyed. The evidence merely shows, as the court found, that it had been sold, shipped, and converted by the defendant. It is therefore unnecessary to determine what would be the effect upon the validity of the sale if it had been actually destroyed at the time. Under the contract with the Amalgamated Salt Company, the defendant was the bailee of all the salt, and that company was the bailor. Civ. Code, §§ 1748, 1822. It was the defendant's duty, as bailee, to safely keep the salt bailed and deliver it to the bailor, or its successor in interest, on demand. Lawson on Bailments, § 22; Story on Bailments, § 122. Neither the wrongful conversion of property to his own use by a bailee, nor his wrongful transfer of the possession thereof to another, can divest the title of the true owner. This is settled in this state by the decision in Howe v. Johnson, 117 Cal. 41, 48 Pac. 978, and Faulkner v. Bank, 130 Cal. 258, 62 Pac. 463. The title

thus remaining in the Amalgamated Salt Company, after the conversion, was a species of property, and as such it was subject to sale and transfer by the owner. Civ. Code, §§ 1044, 1047; Rice v. Whitmore, 74 Cal. 623, 16 Pac. 501, 5 Am. St. Rep. 479; Curtin v. Kowalsky, 145 Cal. 434, 78 Pac. 962. The contract of sale by that company to the plaintiff described the salt converted, as well as that remaining in the defendant's possession, and therefore its effect was to transfer to the plaintiff the title to all the salt in controversy wherever situated, and notwithstanding its previous removal by the defendant. The plaintiff, by virtue of its purchase of all the salt embraced in the contract of December 20, 1902, above quoted, and the extension of the time of making the $1,150 payment from January 1, 1904, to February 1, 1904, was entitled to the immediate possession of all the salt at the time of its purchase thereof. The payment of $1,150 was not a condition precedent to the existence of the right of immediate possession, at least not until February 1, 1904, when it became due. To avoid all question upon this point, however, the plaintiff paid it before that day, and thus complied with every condition that could at any time become necessary to entitle it to demand delivery of the salt from the defendant, including that removed and converted as well as that remaining on hand. It made the demand, and possession was refused. A right of action for possession, or for the value of the salt, if possession could not be recovered, immediately accrued to the plaintiff.

The fact that the defendant had, before the demand, or before the action was begun, parted with the possession of the salt, was no defense. Nor would the fact that plaintiff was vendee of the original bailor affect the case in this particular. This question was fully considered in Faulkner v. Bank, supra. It was there held that an assignment of a note by the owner, after the bailee had parted with its possession to a stranger, transferred the title and right of possession to the owner's assignee, and that the bailee could not defend an action by the assignee for its possession or value, on the ground that, before the demand by the assignee, he had delivered it to a third person who claimed to be the owner, and that he was therefore unable to deliver possession in compliance with the demand. The opinion declares that the action is of the character formerly known as an action in detinue, and that the rights of the parties are to be determined by the principles of the common law applicable to that form of action. It then quotes passages from 1 Chitty's Pleadings, 138; Haley v. Rowan, 5 Yerg. 301, 26 Am. Dec. 268, and Reeve v. Palmer, 5 Com. B., N. S. 84, to the effect that, if a bailee wrongfully deliver the goods to another, he will continue liable in detinue for the goods or their value, that it does not lie in his mouth to set up his wrongful act in answer to such action, or to say that he is unable to comply with the demand for possession because of his own breach of duty, and that the burden is on him to show any excuse, such as that his possession ceased before suit brought, by accident, or some means beyond his control and without his fault. The opinion proceeds to say that these principles "are eminently just, and are founded on the maxim that no man can take advantage of his own wrong, and they are as applicable now to an action based on a contract of bailment as they were to such action when it had to be brought under the special form of detinue." The following authorities are of similar effect: 14 Cyc. 259, 260; 5 Cyc. 188, 189; 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 763; Lawson, Bailments, § 23; Schouler, Bailments (2d Ed.) p. 30, note; Cobbey on Replevin, § 212; Howe v. Johnson, supra; Serat v. Utica, 102 N. Y. 681, 6 N. E. 795; Rogers v. Windoes, 48 Mich. 630, 12 N. W. 882; Brady v. Whitney, 24 Mich. 156; Tome v. Dubois, 73 U. S. 548, 18 L. Ed. 943.

2. The two payments amounting to $5,750, called for by the contract of December 20, 1902, were duly made as agreed, but no salt was delivered under the contract, prior to February 1, 1904. The plaintiff made the final payment of $1,150 to the defendant in January, 1904, and thereupon demanded delivery of the salt. During the months of February, March, and April, after the suit was begun, the defendant delivered the remaining 825 tons. The plaintiff has not paid any additional sum for the expenses of delivering this salt. The court below held that the 25 cents per ton, for delivery expenses of the salt thus subsequently delivered, was not included in the final payment of $1,150, but was additional thereto, basing this conclusion upon the fact that the delivery was made after the making of said final payment. The court was of the opinion that the provision that the delivery expenses were to be deducted from the final payment applied only in case the salt was delivered before that payment was made, and that, if it was delivered after that payment, the charge was to be an addition to the price. From this it concluded that the failure to pay $206.25 for expenses of delivering the salt delivered after the suit was begun caused the forfeiture of the plaintiff's title to that part of the salt and defeated its right of action, and that the defendant was therefore entitled to judgment. The contract should not be thus construed. A contract is not to be construed to provide a forfeiture, unless no other interpretation is reasonably possible. The 25 cents per ton for expenses of delivery was not to be due until after delivery, and then only to the extent of the salt delivered. Delivery could not be enforced until after the first two money payments, amounting to $5,750, were made. The defendant was given power to sell the salt that might be forfeited, a power which ordinarily requires delivery of possession to make the sale complete, thus implying that the forfeiture was to be of salt in its possession, and not salt delivered to the purchaser. It was evidently expected that all the salt would be delivered long before the $1,150 became due. If so, the amount to be deducted for delivery expenses would be ascertained before that installment was paid. Considering all the provisions of the contract, together with the surrounding circumstances, we think its true construction is that the provision for a forfeiture upon failure to make any payment specified in the contract, referred only to those sums which constituted the part of the purchase price of the salt payable in money, and which might become due before delivery, and not to the charge of 25 cents per ton for sewing, sacking, and delivery of the salt on board cars, which was not to be paid until the 13th of the month succeeding such delivery. It is unnecessary, in this action, to determine whether or not the defendant is entitled to further charges for these delivery expenses, after having received full payment of the final installment of $1,150. Our conclusion is that, after having paid the final installment, the failure of the plaintiff to pay delivery charges for subsequent deliveries did not cause the title to such salt to revert to the defendant.

3. The contract of sale from the Amalgamated Salt Company to the plaintiff also contained a provision that, if payment of the price was not made as specified, the title should revert to the Amalgamated Salt Company. The court found that at the time of the trial the plaintiff had not yet paid that company for the 825 tons of salt received by it under the contract. It would seem that from this fact the court believed that the plaintiff's original title to the property had been defeated, and that it could not recover possession. We think this was a matter of no concern to the defendant. If a forfeiture took place, as was claimed, it was after the suit was begun. The enforcement of such forfeiture could be waived. Some affirmative action by the Amalgamated Salt Company would be necessary as evidence of an intention to enforce it. It does not appear that any such action was taken, and its enforcement will not be presumed in favor of the defendant for the purpose of defeating this action.

4. There is a claim by the plaintiff that the finding that the salt which was the subject of the sale of December 20, 1902, was only 1788 tons, is not sustained by the evidence, and that the court should have found that it consisted of 4,600 tons. It was not seriously contended that the evidence was such as to require a finding that there was at that time 4,600 tons of salt on the premises "lifted, sacked and stored in piles, bins and warehouses," as stated in the contract, nor that any specific quantity was described in the contract. The contention is, in this behalf, that one Wadsworth and one Babcock, as agents of the defendant, negotiated the sale of the salt to the Amalgamated Salt Company; that they then represented to that company that there was at least 4,600 tons of salt situated as described; that, because of these representations, the defendant is, as a matter of law, estopped to deny that any less quantity was so situated and sold; and that this estoppel operates not only in favor of that company, but also in favor of plaintiff, as defendant's vendee. We need not determine the soundness of the propositions that the representations created an estoppel, and that the estoppel operates in favor of the vendee. There was evidence from which the court may have concluded that Wadsworth was not the agent of the Western Salt Company, but was the agent and promoter of the Amalgamated Salt Company; that in that capacity, and before the latter company was incorporated, he visited the salt works of defendant and saw the salt there on hand; that whatever statements were made to the Amalgamated Salt Company were made by him in his report to that company after its incorporation, as its own agent; and that the principal object of the Amalgamated Salt Company in making the contract was not to purchase any particular quantity of salt, but to buy the stock of salt which the Western Salt Company then had ready for market so as to prevent the continued competition of the latter in the salt business. Upon such facts the court might justly hold that the contract should be taken literally, as its words imply; that is, as a sale of the salt on hand at that place ready for market, without especial regard to its quantity. We express no opinion upon the question whether it could, under different circumstances, be construed otherwise. If the court believed the facts were as above indicated, there could be no estoppel.

5. The plaintiff further contended that the pleadings admitted that the amount of salt on hand at the time of the sale on December 20, 1902, was 4,600 tons. We need not decide this proposition. It may be conceded that the pleadings are somewhat ambiguous upon that point; but, as the judgment must be reversed and a new trial had, the defendant may be allowed to amend its pleadings, if it so desires, so as to remove all doubt upon that subject.

We may add, with respect to the value of the salt, that evidence of the market value of salt at retail, in lots of less than a ton, in the city of San Diego, would be a very unsatisfactory measure of value of salt in lots of 1,000 tons or more at wholesale, and that, unless such evidence was supplemented by proof of the difference between the wholesale and retail prices, it would not, of itself, enable the court to find the value. The defendant is liable only for the wholesale price or value; that is, of the going price when sold in similar lots by manufacturers to the trade.

The judgment and order are reversed.

SUMMERFIELD v. DOW. (Civ. 397.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 4, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 3, 1907.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE — COMPENSATION — STATUTES—VALIDITY.

Pol. Code, § 4014, as amended in 1907, provides for two justices of the peace in each township, except in townships containing cities in which city justices are elected, and in townships having a population of less than 5,000, there shall be but one, and except in townships containing a population of more than 100,000 and less than 300,000, there shall be four. Section 4231, subd. 15, as amended by St. 1907, p. 424, c. 10, fixes the salary of justices of the peace by allowing them the fees allowed by law, except that no justice shall receive more than $1,500 per annum for services rendered by him in criminal cases, and except that in townships having a population of more than 100,000 and less than 300,000, each justice shall receive a salary of $3,000 per year, which shall be in lieu of all fees for the performance of any official act. Held, that section 4231, subd. 15, as amended, is not in conflict with Const. art. 11, § 5, providing that the Legislature shall regulate the compensation of all officers in proportion to duties, since the adjustment of compensation between the different classes of justices is based on proper distinctions.

Petition for a writ of mandate by Joseph W. Summerfield against Herbert G. Dow, as auditor of Los Angeles county, to compel respondent to draw a warrant on the county treasurer to pay petitioner his salary. Writ granted.

C. L. Shinn, for petitioner. Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Petition for writ of mandate. Petitioner is a justice of the peace for Los Angeles township, Los Angeles county. Respondent is the auditor of Los Angeles county. On May 11, 1907, petitioner demanded of respondent that he draw a warrant upon the treasurer of Los Angeles county for $250, payable to petitioner as his salary for the month of April, 1907, under the provisions of subdivision 15 of section 4231 of the Political Code, as amended March 18, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 424, c. 10). Respondent refused to issue said warrant, and, as cause why the mandate of this court should not issue commanding him to do so, says the statute providing for such salary is unconstitutional. The provision of the Constitution said to have been violated by the Legislature in enacting the section mentioned is the requirement of section 5 of article 11 that "It [the Legislature] shall regulate the compensation of all such officers [county, township and municipal officers] in proportion to duties," etc. Section 4014 of the Political Code, as amended in 1907, provides for two justices of the peace in each township of the state; provided that in townships containing cities in which city justices or recorders are elected and in townships having a population of less than 5,000 there shall be but one, and provided further that in townships containing a population of more than 100,000 and less than 300,000 there shall be four justices of the peace. Subdivision 15 of section 4231, which relates to the compensation of justices of the peace in counties of the second class (Los Angeles), provides that justices of the peace shall receive as compensation "such fees as are now or may be hereafter allowed by law; provided that no justice of the peace shall receive more than $1,500 per annum, which may be paid in monthly installments of not exceeding $125 per month for all services rendered by him in criminal cases * * * or proceedings to which the people of the state of California are parties. * * * And provided further, that in townships having a population of more than one hundred thousand and less than three hundred thousand each justice of the peace shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per year, payable in like manner and out of the same fund, and at like times as county officers are paid and such salary shall be in lieu of all fees due or to become due such justice for performance of any official act. And all fees * * * shall be and become the property of the county in which such justice exercises his jurisdiction." Another proviso requires the board of supervisors of the county to provide an office and necessary furniture therefor and appoint a clerk for each of said four justices' courts, and a salary of $100 per month is provided to be paid to each of said clerks.

Los Angeles township is the only one in Los Angeles county to which the provisions as to clerks, salary, offices, etc., can apply, and it is contended: First, that the compensation provided is not in proportion to the duties that the respective justices of that township may be required to perform; and, second, that, when compared with the compensation fixed for justices of the peace in other townships of Los Angeles county, the salary allowed is not in proportion to the duties of the office.

While it is possible, we might even say probable, judging from human nature in the average, that some of the justices of the township in question will perform more of the duties of the office than others, we do not think this is a failure of uniformity of operation which can be reached in this manner. This presents one of those evils of our governmental system which must find relief at the ballot box. A statute which provides four officers to attend to all the business of a specified kind within a certain district at equal salaries impliedly imposes a duty upon these officers to equitably apportion the business among them, whether there be any express statutory regulations in this regard or not. Any inconvenience to the public from the overzeal of one or more of the incumbents of the office of justice of the peace to do too much (or too little) will have to be borne until the opportunity arises to change the personnel of the offices. That a more excellent system was provided for San Francisco by the Code of Civil Procedure (section 85 et seq.) does not imply that the latter is the only constitutional plan. The validity of a law is not to be tested by its application to extreme cases, or by assuming that public officers will grossly and arbitrarily violate their duties. If every law were declared unconstitutional which by the application of such tests could be shown capable of working injustice, we would have very few laws left. Rode v. Siebe, 119 Cal. 520, 51 Pac. 869, 39 L. R. A. 342.

The greater stress, however, is laid upon the objection that there is not a due apportionment of duties and compensation between the justices outside of Los Angeles city and those inside. The path of judicial interpretation through the field of county and township legislation discloses many byways. Conflicting views are not wanting in the various declarations of the law on the subject by the courts. But we are not called upon to distinguish these cases, nor to attempt to reconcile them in reaching a conclusion on this point. The two cases relied upon by respondent to sustain his position that the law is unconstitutional (Tucker v. Barnum, 144 Cal. 266, 77 Pac. 919, and Millard v. Kern County, 147 Cal. 682, 82 Pac. 329) hold that a classification of townships by population for the purpose of fixing the compensation of the officers thereof, according to the method prescribed by the Constitution for classifying counties, is valid and proper. In Tulare County v. May, 118 Cal. 308, 50 Pac. 427, it is held that different methods of fixing compensation of county officers may be provided in different counties. In Vail v. San Diego Co., 126 Cal. 35, 58 Pac. 392, the same doctrine is declared and rule applied where a county officer in one class of counties was compensated by salary and the same officer in all the other classes of counties in the state received fees and a per diem for services rendered. This rule is recognized and applied to township officers in two different classes of counties in the later case of Johnson v. Gunn, 148 Cal. 745, 84 Pac. 665. In Tucker v. Barnum, the unequal limitations upon the fees that might be collected for the same services was declared to violate the rule that compensation must be in proportion to duties, and also to violate the rule as to local and special laws affecting the fees and salaries of officers. The act before the court in Millard v. Kern Co. was declared invalid on the authority of the former case, and was subject to the same objection when considered independent of the provision relating to the justices of the peace to whom were given a fixed salary for all services in civil and criminal cases. The section classifying townships and fixing the compensation of the justices of the peace was considered as an indivisible act, and on the theory that one part could not be permitted to stand without the other, the decision in that case may be sustained. This view of the opinion in that case is supported by the fact that no attempt is made to point out the differences between the two cases, and the decision in the Millard Case is rested solely upon the rule of stare decisis. This is also further strengthened by the special concurring opinion of Justice Angellotti in the latter case. These cases are easily distinguishable from the case at bar. Subdivision 15 of section 4231 does not in express words classify the townships of Los Angeles county. It fixes a uniform rule of compensation by fees for all the justices of the peace in the county, with a limitation of $1,500 per annum in criminal cases, and, by a proviso, establishes salaries for the four justices of the peace provided for one of the classes of townships created by the general law. Section 4014, Pol. Code. Both the other classes created by section 4014 receive the fees allowed by law, with the same limitations in criminal cases. The Legislature in its discretion has fixed a different mode of compensation in the two classes created by the legislation for the purpose of fixing compensation, and there is nothing before this court from which it can ascertain whether the compensation of one class will be less or more than the other.

Conceding full force and effect to all that has been said since Longan v. Solano Co., 65 Cal. 122, 3 Pac. 463, in regard to compensation being fixed in proportion to duties, rather than according to population, the same rules of interpretation of statutes are applicable. The mode and measure of compensation of public officers are both peculiarly matters of legislative discretion, and an act of the Legislature in relation thereto ought to be clearly shown to be unconstitutional before being so declared by the courts. The validity of statutes should not be determined upon mere possible contingencies. So long as the classification seems based upon conditions which suggest the propriety of the different adjustments made between the classes, and the adjustments proceed upon intrinsic differences, and are not based upon mere arbitrary distinctions, it should be upheld. Vail v. San Diego, supra.

While the population of a township may not alone be sufficient to determine the duties required of an officer, density of population has always been regarded as one of the prime considerations in ascertaining the amount of compensation to be paid a public officer for discharging the duties of his office, and also in determining the system to be adopted in measuring such compensation. Salary is the method most generally adopted to compensate officers of large cities, and fees those of smaller cities and towns and nonurban communities. The adjustment between the classes in the act under consideration appears to proceed not only upon intrinsic differences existing between the townships of the respective classes, but is based upon well-recognized distinctions, which go directly to the duties required of such officers, and to the methods of compensation ordinarily and generally used. To sustain respondent's position here would be to hold any act unconstitutional which provided fees as the measure of compensation in one class of townships and salaries in another. We find no authority to sustain such a position.

We are of the opinion that the Legislature did not violate its legislative discretion in enacting the portion of subdivision 15 of section 4231 of the Political Code, as amended in 1907, which fixes the salary of the justices of the peace of Los Angeles township at $3,000 per annum for the personal discharge of their official duties. In arriving at this conclusion, however, we have not considered those provisions relating to salaries of clerks, office rent, supplies, etc., as affecting the compensation of the justices of the peace. These are matters which naturally suggest questions which have not been presented on this application. For instance, the question of whether or not it is competent to create special township officers for one class of townships in one county (that is, clerk of the justice's court), under a classification of such townships by population for the purpose of fixing compensation. Neither have we considered the proviso as to rent, furniture, supplies, etc., because we deem it unnecessary to the decision of the question raised on this application. The Legislature has made express provision for a salary of $3,000 for the justices of the peace in Los Angeles township, and petitioner is entitled to receive the salary of $250 per month as demanded.

The writ of mandate of this court is directed to issue commanding respondent to draw his warrant upon the county treasurer of Los Angeles county for the amount as prayed for.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 1, 1907.)

1. RAPE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT RAPE—INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Pen. Code, § 220, providing that every person who assaults another with intent to commit rape, etc., is punishable, etc., an information charging that defendant unlawfully made an assault on, etc., a female under the age of 16 years, etc., with the intent to ravish, etc., was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Rape, §§ 37-41.]

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, evidence examined, and held sufficient to support a conviction.

3. SAME—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, the intention with which defendant made the assault was a question for the jury.

4. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

Where no objection is made to testimony given without the witness being sworn, the objection cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

5. SAME — APPEAL — REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—WITNESSES—COMPETENCY.

The question as to the competency of a witness of tender years is one peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court.

6. SAME—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JUDGE.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, the attitude of defendant's counsel disconcerted prosecutrix, a timid child, the court properly admonished counsel to keep without the railing where prosecutrix was being examined as a witness; it not appearing that counsel could not hear the answers of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1522.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

William H. Collins was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Krouse, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The information charges the defendant with assault with intent to commit rape; the charging part being as follows: "Said William H. Collins * * * unlawfully, violently and feloniously did make an assault upon one Katie Simonetti, a female under the age of sixteen years, to wit, of the age of six years, who was not then or there the wife of said William H. Collins, with the intent then and there feloniously and by force and violence to carnally know and ravish the said Katie Simonetti and accomplish with her an act of sexual intercourse against her will, without her consent and by force, contrary to the form," etc. Defendant's counsel insists that the information is not sufficient because it does not allege that the assault was an attempt to commit a violent injury upon the person of the child so as to show an assault, as defined in section 240 of the Penal Code. There was no demurrer to the information, and the point is for the first time raised in this court. However, we are of the opinion that the information is sufficient. It substantially follows the language of the statute, which is: "Every person who assaults another with intent to commit rape," etc. Pen. Code, § 220. It states the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. In such case the information is sufficient. The word "assault" as used in the statute implies force by the assailant, and resistence by the one assaulted. It has always been held in this state that, where a crime like this is charged to have been committed upon a child under 16 years of age, there can be no consent, as the law resists for her. People v. Verdegreen, 106 Cal. 215, 39 Pac. 607, 46 Am. St. Rep. 234; People v. Vann, 129 Cal. 118, 61 Pac. 776. It is not necessary for courts to draw fine analytical distinctions between an attempt to commit an offense, and an assault with intent to commit such offense. People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 666, 30 Pac. 800, 17 L. R. A. 626, 29 Am. St. Rep. 165; People v. Christian, 101 Cal. 471, 35 Pac. 1043.

We have carefully examined the evidence, and find it sufficient to support the verdict. Without going into minute detail, there is evidence tending to show the following facts: Defendant roomed on the third floor of a lodging house at 694 Fourth street in the city of San Francisco. About 9 o'clock, or a little before, in the evening, he was seen going upstairs to his room carrying two little girls in his arms, of which the child upon whom the assault is alleged to have been made was one. He remained in the room for some 20 minutes, and came downstairs with both children in his arms. The child upon whom the assault is alleged to have been made went home, and immediately complained to her mother that the defendant had hurt her, showing the mother her private parts. The mother examined her person, and found the parts red, but did not notice any blood or bruises of any kind. The child testified that defendant got down on his knees, and took up her clothes, and put something in her private parts which hurt her; that he took down her "panties" and took his thing out of his pants; that she was scared, but did not cry, because defendant held her mouth. The police officer to whom complaint was made on the same evening visited the room of defendant at 9:30, and again at 12:30, but did not find defendant there. On the following evening, about half-past 7, he met the defendant and asked him about the matter, and defendant denied that he had the two little girls in his room on the evening of the 8th, or that he was there himself. Defendant in his testimony admits that he had the two little girls up in his room at the time alleged, and attempted to explain it by saying that he took them up to see his own little girl; but, as his own wife and little girl were not there at the time, the explanation may very well have been such as not to be believed by the jury. Defendant further testified as to leaving his room on the evening of the 8th a little before 9 o'clock, and that he went with a Mr. Kaiser to Fifth and Townsend streets, and stayed there until half-past twelve that night, and that at 2 o'clock a. m. he went with Kaiser to Fourth and Bluxome streets. He does not appear to have gone to his room any more that night.

It is argued that, as the child had not been torn or penetrated, defendant could not have actually tried to have sexual intercourse with her. What his intentions were was a question particularly for the jury. The jury heard the evidence, and saw the witnesses and the defendant when he was testifying in his own behalf. The facts in this case are very similar to the facts in People v. Johnson, 131 Cal. 511, 63 Pac. 842, and that case is direct authority for the view we have taken in this case. It was there said: "The defendant assaulted the child. Being under 16 years of age, she was incapable of consenting, and therefore the assault in law was without her consent. If he had in fact had sexual intercourse with her, he would have been guilty of rape. As he did not have sexual intercourse with her, but did assault her, the question as to his intent was to be determined by all the circumstances and by the acts of defendant. The fact that defendant unbuttoned his trousers, that he took out his private parts, and that he wanted to have sexual intercourse with the child, were sufficient to justify the jury in drawing the logical rational conclusion that defendant's object was to have sexual intercourse with the child. Whether he desisted because he had satisfied his morbid depraved passions in the manner described in the evidence, or because he was afraid of an outcry from the child, or because of his impotence, are all matters of conjecture. We do not think the crime charged against this defendant, and of which he was convicted, is of such a nature that we should attempt to shield him upon imaginary reasons, or upon a theory that might possibly account for his acts as being done with the intent only to gratify an unnatural desire. We must suppose that his acts were done with the purpose and desire that would ordinarily characterize the acts of an individual of the male sex when such acts were done with one of the female sex. That a man should entice a little girl into his room, undress her, and fondle her for the purpose of gratifying an unnatural desire, and not for the purpose of having sexual intercourse, is possible, but not at all probable. The intent of a person cannot be proven by direct and positive evidence. It is a question of fact to be proven like any other fact, by acts, conduct, and circumstances."

It is contended that the record does not show that Katie Simonetti was sworn, and further that her examination showed that she was of tender age, and incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which she was examined, or of relating them truly. The minutes of the trial do not show that she was sworn, but the bill of exceptions shows that she was examined as to her competency before being sworn, and that after such examination she "was duly sworn." Counsel, in the discharge of their duty, owe it to the court not to raise and discuss a point entirely devoid of merit, especially where the record does not sustain the statement. It is an elementary principle, supposed to be understood by every member of the bar, that if no objection were made to the testimony of a witness, and the testimony was given without the witness being sworn, the objection could not be made for the first time in this court. Here the record does not show that the witness was not sworn, nor that any objection was made to her evidence upon this ground, and the bill of exceptions shows that she was sworn.

Equally without merit is the contention that the court erred in allowing the child to testify. She was carefully examined by the judge, and her examination shows that she was capable of receiving just impressions of the facts, and knew and understood them sufficiently to give her version of them. The question as to the competency of a witness of tender years is one peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court. People v. Wilmot, 139 Cal. 103, 72 Pac. 838; People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186; People v. Bradford, 1 Cal. App. 41, 81 Pac. 712.

It is claimed that "the most glaring and prejudicial error and deprivation of the right to a fair and impartial trial" occurred when the court requested the defendant's attorney not to step within the railing where the little girl was being examined as a witness, and to take his seat. From our information as contained in the record we are of opinion that the court properly admonished counsel. The child was timid, and both the counsel for the prosecution and the judge were endeavoring to get her to narrate in her own way what occurred. Defendant's counsel had interrupted time and time again with needless objections devoid of merit. Finally, when counsel arose and walked up inside the railing and near the child, the judge informed him that he had "the right to make any objection, but your activity inside the railing disconcerts the witness." It does not appear that counsel could not hear the answers of the witness. The court seems to have been very liberal with him, as he was allowed to ask questions in cross-examination which take up page upon page of the transcript with no apparent merit.

Many other questions are raised in the brief, but are as devoid of merit as those we have discussed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HOLMES et al. v. SALAMANCA GOLD MIN. & MILL. CO. et al. (Civ. 344.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 1, 1907.)

1. Mines and Minerals—Recovery of Unpatented Mining Claims—Pleadings—Issues—Evidence.

Where the complaint, in an action for the possession of unpatented mining claims, alleged plaintiff's ownership, possession, and right of possession at a specified date and his ouster by defendant, defendant, under a general denial, might show that the deeds under which plaintiff claimed title were bad.

2. Deeds — Execution — Evidence — Sufficiency.

On the issue of the execution of a deed, evidence examined, and held to warrant a finding that the possession of the deed was wrongfully obtained by the grantee without the knowledge or acquiescence of the grantor, and title did not pass.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 645.]

3. Corporations — Deeds — Requisites — Delivery.

The board of directors of a corporation authorized the execution of a conveyance by its secretary and president. The secretary retained possession of the deed, signed by the president and himself, until after the grantee therein brought suit for the possession of the premises described therein, when the officers acknowledged the same, and it was placed on record. It did not appear that an immediate delivery was intended, or that the grantee paid anything of value for the property. Held to justify a finding that the deed was not delivered to the grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 1784.]

4. Mines and Minerals—Recovery of Unpatented Mining Claims—Pleadings—Issues—Evidence—Admissibility.

Where, in an action for the possession of unpatented mining claims, plaintiff claimed ownership through conveyances executed by the original locator, and defendant pleaded the general denial, evidence of a forfeiture of the rights of the original locator or his successors, under Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1427], because of the nonperformance of the annual assessment work and of defendant's entry on the premises and his relocation of the same, was admissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by W. H. Holmes and others against the Salamanca Gold Mining & Milling Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Powers & Holland, for appellants. Collier & Smith, Works, Lee & Works, Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, and C. F. Smith, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Action to recover possession of certain unpatented mining claims. Defendants had judgment. Plaintiffs in due time appealed, upon a statement, from the order denying a new trial.

The only questions presented upon this appeal relate to the action of the trial court in admitting certain testimony and as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support certain material findings. The complaint is in the usual form, alleging plaintiffs' ownership, possession, and right of possession on December 30, 1903, of three unpatented lode mining claims, designated as the "Bonanza," "Blossom," and "Lucinda," and of plaintiffs' ouster therefrom by defendants. The answer is a denial of the ownership and right of possession in plaintiffs, and of the ouster. Under these issues the court found that on the date named plaintiffs were not the owners or entitled to the possession of said mining claims, although they were in actual possession; that plaintiffs had not performed the annual assessment work thereon for three years; and that defendants had made valid locations of such claims after forfeiture by plaintiffs and had taken peaceable possession and continued work thereon up to the commencement of the trial.

Plaintiffs deraigned title through mineral locations, the validity of which is not questioned, and through deeds from such locators and intermediate owners. The court, under objections, permitted the defendants to introduce testimony tending to vitiate two deeds affecting plaintiffs' title to the "Bonanza" claim. This action of the court is assigned as error, because no question of fraud was raised by the answer. The recent decision of Chrast v. O'Connor, 83 Pac. 238, 41 Wash. 360, would seem to settle this question adversely to appellants. That decision is based upon Mather v. Hutchinson, 25 Wis. 27, where it is held that, under a complaint averring ownership in general terms, the defendant must be allowed to prove anything which would defeat the title offered by the plaintiff. The reason assigned is most convincing, for plaintiff not being required to set up his deraignment of title he might upon the trial prove under such general averment any source of title available. Any other rule applying to defendants would require them to foreknow and avoid, by specific allegations, a title which plaintiff was not bound to disclose at all. This rule has support, also, in Cooper v. Miller, 113 Cal. 246, 45 Pac. 325; Goldberg v. Bruschi, 146 Cal. 710, 81 Pac. 23; and Sparrow v. Rhoades, 76 Cal. 211, 18 Pac. 245, 9 Am. St. Rep. 197.

The court found that the plaintiffs were not the owners or entitled to possession of the mining property on December 30, 1903, nor were they on said date ousted therefrom by defendants. These findings are attacked by appellants upon the ground that there is no evidence in the record sufficient for their support. The findings of the court as to ownership and right of possession may be sustained upon either of two theories: First, that plaintiffs failed in their deraignment of title from the original locators; or, second, that all rights under the original location had lapsed by reason of the failure to do the annual assessment work required by the federal statutes in order to perpetuate the possessory right, and that defendants exercising a right of citizenship had entered thereon and made a subsequent location before resumption of work by appellants. The first theory, in so far as the "Bonanza" claim is concerned, derives its support alone from the testimony of one Acosta, which is to the effect that he never knowingly or voluntarily made any conveyance of this mine to plaintiffs, and never knew that he had any title to the mine and never made any claim of ownership thereto; that his only contract with the plaintiffs was that if they would pay him $400 in settlement of a claim of $650, which he held against certain trustees, he would give them a receipt in full; that pursuant to this agreement he went with plaintiffs to the town of Hedges, where several papers were spread upon a counter; that when he signed one plaintiffs took it away and presented him with another; that in that way he signed two, three, or four papers; that no notary or other officer ever made known to him the contents of the papers so signed, or asked him any questions in relation thereto; that personally he did not know or care what he was signing, but simply wanted to get his money and get away from the mine; that he never had knowledge of any deed having been made to him by such trustees until he received that information in court upon the trial. If the court accepted Acosta's statements as true, which fact is suggested by the findings, it would follow that the possession of the deed from Acosta was obtained by the plaintiffs surreptitiously. A deed, the possession of which is fraudulently or wrongfully obtained from the grantor, without his knowledge, consent, or acquiescence, is no more effectual to pass title to a supposed grantee than if it were a total forgery. Devlin on Deeds, § 267, and cases cited. The validity of the deed from Acosta to plaintiffs depends upon his due execution thereof and voluntary delivery. That such deed be voluntary, it is essential that the character of the instrument be known, as well as that the act of delivery should be intended by the party. If the delivery be not voluntary, the instrument is a nullity, unless some act is shown in respect thereto which would estop the grantor from denying its validity, or by some subsequent act a ratification is established. There is nothing in the record from which it may be claimed that plaintiffs were, by the conduct of Acosta, led to do what they otherwise would not have done to their pecuniary prejudice—this being said to be the vital principle of equitable estoppel. Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695. If Acosta's statements be true, under the contract with plaintiffs the payment of the $400 made by plaintiffs was not upon the faith of any conveyance, nor was it intended that a conveyance should enter into the transaction connected with the payment of money to him. Neither can it be said that, with knowledge of the transaction brought home to him, Acosta ever acquiesced in said deed or ratified the same.

As to the "Blossom" mine, the record discloses that the title thereto was never in Acosta; that as early as 1891 the owners of said mine joined in a conveyance of the "Blossom" mine to a corporation known as the "Blossom Mining & Milling Company." If the plaintiffs ever acquired any title to this particular mine, it was through a conveyance directly to them by the Blossom Mining & Milling Company, authorized by the board of directors in 1902. It appears from the testimony of the secretary that, notwithstanding the authorization at the date last named and the physical signing of the deed pursuant thereto by the president and secretary of the corporation, the secretary retained possession of the deed and put the same in the minute book of the corporation, where it remained until long after the commencement of this action, when the officers acknowledged the same, and it was placed upon record. From this evidence the court was justified in an implied finding that the conduct and acts of the parties in 1902 did not amount to a delivery; nor does it appear from the record that an immediate delivery was intended, notwithstanding the secretary was also one of the grantors; nor is there anything shown indicating that plaintiffs ever paid to the corporation anything of value for this property, or ever acquired any equitable interest therein.

As to the "Lucinda" claim, nothing appears in the record supporting plaintiffs' claim of ownership and right of possession. If, therefore, these plaintiffs, without color of title, entered into the possession of any of these mineral claims without relocation or initiating any right thereto, the same was open to relocation at any time after the legal owners were in default in the annual assessment work. It is contended, however, by appellants, that evidence of the nonperformance of the annual assessment work was inadmissible because no claim of forfeiture was alleged in the answer. Under a general denial or its equivalent, each party to a contested action claims the title out of which the right of possession springs, and the court determines which of the two holds it. Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 197. It must be conceded that, if the defendants' title is in issue, they are entitled to prove those facts which tend to support it, and it is essential in determining defendants' ownership in the case at bar for the court to know whether or not the mineral ground which they claim to have relocated and own was at the date of relocation open thereto. Section 2324, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1427], provides that, upon a failure to comply with the conditions relative to the annual assessment work, the claim or mine "shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made; provided, that the original locators, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, have not resumed work upon the claim after failure and before such location." There is little room for controversy as to the default upon the part of the owners under the original location in the performance of the annual assessment work for the three years preceding the relocation. Whoever were the successors to the ownership of the original locators, if they failed for three years to perform the annual assessment work, the mines and claims became open to relocation. It is determined in Contreras v. Merck, 131 Cal. 214, 63 Pac. 336, that the principal fact at issue was the ownership of the mine; that it was not necessary for plaintiff to allege forfeiture or abandonment by defendant. If this be the rule, as applying where the issue of ownership is raised by the answer with the presumptive denial upon the part of plaintiff, no reason is apparent why the same should not apply to the issues raised by a complaint and answer. If the original locator, or his successors in interest, be in default in such annual assessment work, they are no longer the owners of the exclusive possessory right; and the defendant should be permitted to show that such exclusive possessory right has terminated, and that after such termination he peaceably entered upon the premises and relocated the same. The mere naked possession of mineral land does not guaranty any rights as against a subsequent locator entering in good faith and making a valid location of the property. Horswell v. Ruiz, 67 Cal. 112, 7 Pac. 197.

It is further claimed by appellants that there is no evidence connecting any of the defendants, other than Clark, with the relocation, or title to these claims. We think this point need not be considered further than to suggest that the plaintiffs have made all of these defendants parties and have alleged that they had ousted plaintiffs from the possession and were the present occupants of the premises. They allege that the Salamanca Gold Mining & Milling Company is a corporation, and no finding in that regard was necessary.

A careful examination of the record convinces us that there is no prejudicial error apparent therein, and the order is affirmed.

KEIFER v. MYERS. (Civ. 343.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 3, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1907.)

SALES—SALE DISTINGUISHED FROM PLEDGE.

Plaintiff's transfer of 198 shares of corporate stock to defendant was a pledge and not a sale, where, when the transfer was made, they executed an agreement reciting the transfer, that defendant was the owner of the stock, that it was pledged to a bank as additional security for plaintiff's debt, that the company was indebted to M., that plaintiff had loaned and would lend money to the company, that plaintiff desired an option to purchase 198 shares of the stock, and binding defendant to sell within one year, upon plaintiff reimbursing defendant for money paid the bank for plaintiff, for one-half the money advanced the corporation by M. and defendant; there being no other consideration for the transfer, and none of plaintiff's liabilities being canceled.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by J. H. Keifer against R. H. Myers. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit. Reversed.

Lynn Helm and E. S. Williams, for appellant. W. R. Hervey and R. H. Myers, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. At the time in question, the Sanitary Laundry Company was a corporation with a capital stock of $40,000, divided into 400 shares of the par value of $100 each. Of this stock the appellant, J. H. Keifer, owned 198 shares, one George R. Myers owned 198 shares, and the remaining four shares were owned by three other persons, who, with said Keifer and said George R. Myers, constituted the board of directors of said corporation. The corporation was in financial distress, and it appears that neither appellant nor said George R. Myers was in a position to extend it the aid needed. The appellant had borrowed from the Broadway Bank & Trust Company $4,500, evidenced by two promissory notes, and as security for their payment had, in addition to giving a mortgage upon certain real estate owned by him, deposited his 198 shares of stock in pledge with said bank as collateral security. The laundry company was largely indebted to said George R. Myers for moneys which he had loaned it. Under these conditions, the respondent, R. H. Myers, and J. H. Keifer entered into negotiations, which, on December 30, 1903, culminated in a transfer of respondent's 198 shares of stock to said R. H. Myers, and contemporaneously therewith the execution of an agreement in writing, wherein it was recited that said Keifer had sold, assigned, and transferred to R. H. Myers 198 shares of stock, and that R. H. Myers was the owner and holder thereof. That said stock was pledged to said bank as additional security for the payment of a certain promissory note of $4,500, executed by said J. H. Keifer and his wife, which said note was also secured by a mortgage of real estate. That said laundry company during the time said Keifer was a stockholder had become largely indebted to George R. Myers for moneys by him loaned to said company. That said R. H. Myers had loaned and advanced, and would thereafter loan and advance, divers sums of money to discharge a part of the indebtedness of the said company in order to save it from bankruptcy, and to pay such of the operating expenses as might be necessary for the best interests of the company. That said Keifer desired an option to purchase 198 shares of said stock, and wherein said R. H. Myers covenanted and agreed to sell to said Keifer, within one year, time being made the essence of the contract, 198 shares of said stock, upon Keifer making payment to R. H. Myers of: First, all moneys paid to said bank by R. H. Myers on account of the notes of said Keifer, for the payment of which said stock was held as collateral security; second, one-half of all moneys theretofore or thereafter, up to the exercise of the option, advanced to said company by R. H. Myers, less any payments made thereon by said company; third, one-half of all moneys theretofore loaned to said laundry company by said George R. Myers, less any payments made thereon by said company; and, fourth, interest on said sums at 7 per cent. per annum. It was further provided that an accounting for any dividends paid upon said stock should be made and credited to said Keifer at the time of his exercising said option to purchase. R. H. Myers covenanted to advance to the company from time to time such sums of money, not exceeding $4,000, as might be necessary to save the company from bankruptcy. At the same time, and with the consent of appellant, an agreement in writing was made between said bank and said R. H. Myers, whereby the bank agreed to deliver the 198 shares of stock so pledged to it by Keifer to the said R. H. Myers at any time upon his paying the sum of $1,000, to be applied on Keifer's indebtedness to said bank, and the delivery to the said bank of an agreement on the part of R. H. Myers to pay any deficiency, not exceeding $750, which might remain upon Keifer's notes after exhausting the real estate so held by it as security for the payment thereof.

It will be noted, by this agreement with the bank, R. H. Myers assumes no obligation whatever. There was no other consideration for said transfer than that mentioned in the agreement. It appears that R. H. Myers did pay upon said indebtedness of Keifer the sum of $714.92, and no more, and that from the proceeds of the real estate so held by the bank the sum of $2,540 was paid on the principal, together with $260 interest thereon. From time to time after December 29, 1903, which was the date of both the agreement made between Keifer and Myers and that between Myers and the bank, though neither was delivered until the 30th of December, 1903, R. H. Myers advanced to said laundry company divers sums of money, part of which was paid by said company. Keifer did not exercise his option to repurchase the stock within the year, but on January 24 and January 27, 1905, he offered to repurchase and redeem said stock under the terms of said agreement, and asked respondent to render him a statement and account of the amount due thereon, which he, in writing, tendered and offered to pay. No objection was made to this tender. Respondent claimed that the transaction constituted an absolute sale, and that appellant, having failed to exercise his option within the year, had lost the right to purchase the stock. On the other hand, appellant contends that the transfer was a pledge of stock.

"The motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against defendant." Hanley v. California, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 232, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597; Goldstone v. Merchants', etc., Storage Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776. The record shows that the agreements dated December 29, 1903, were delivered on the following day, on which date the certificate of stock representing the 198 shares of stock which Keifer had pledged to the bank was withdrawn and a new certificate for said stock issued to R. H. Myers and by him redeposited with said bank. The agreement whereby Keifer was given the right to repurchase the stock and the transfer of the stock to R. H. Myers constituted one and the same transaction. "Several contracts relating to the same matters, between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially the one transaction, are to be taken together. Civ. Code, § 1642." Curtin v. Ingle, 137 Cal. 95, 69 Pac. 836, 1013. It appears that R. H. Myers paid no consideration whatever for the transfer of the stock; that he assumed no obligation whatever to pay anything upon Keifer's indebtedness to the bank, nor did he secure the release of Keifer's obligations as a stockholder of the company, or assume or agree to pay them. If the company failed to pay George R. Myers, Keifer was still liable for his proportion of its indebtedness, notwithstanding the loss of his stock. There was no cancellation or surrender of the evidence of any of Keifer's indebtedness. The only obligation assumed by R. H. Myers was to advance money to the company only in case it became necessary to save the company from bankruptcy. Such contingency might never arise; but, if any advances were made, it was provided that Keifer should pay one-half thereof upon a repurchase of the stock. If Myers was the owner of the stock, instead of the pledgee, as he claims, the covenant was an obligation to protect his own property, and not Keifer's—a proposition which borders upon absurdity.

The fact that the agreement giving Keifer the right to repurchase and the transfer of the stock were contemporaneous (Weiseham v. Hocker, 54 Pac. 464, 7 Okl. 250; Clark v. Woodruff [Mich.] 51 N. W. 357;[1] Watkins v. Williams, 31 S. E. 388, 123 N. C. 170); that the stock had a substantial value, and Myers neither paid nor agreed to pay anything in consideration of its transfer to him (Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 407, 12 Pac. 410; Rubo v. Bennett, 85 Ill. App. 473); that none of Keifer's existing liabilities were canceled, and Myers assumed no part thereof under the terms of the agreement; that as a condition of retransfer Keifer was to pay one-half of the company's unpaid indebtedness to George R. Myers and one-half of the money which respondent had loaned the company, which shows that to this extent at least the stock was transferred as security (sections 2986, 2987, Civ. Code) for existing debts of the company for a part of which Keifer was liable (Ahern v. McCarthy, 107 Cal. 386, 40 Pac. 482; Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169); that no fixed price was specified as a consideration for the repurchase, but the amount was to be as much as would reimburse R. H. Myers for one-half of such sums as he might advance and which might remain unpaid, including one-half of the amount due from the company to George R. Myers; that Keifer was chargeable with interest and to be credited with dividends—all are circumstances which tend, some of them very strongly, to prove that the transfer was a pledge, and not a sale of the stock.

Respondent lays much stress upon the words used in the agreement, but the use of the words "sold, transferred, and assigned," and the recital that Myers is the owner of the stock, cannot change the character of the transaction. For the purpose of ascertaining the real contract made by the parties, the court looks beyond the terms of the instrument. Hodgkins v. Wright, 127 Cal. 688, 60 Pac. 431.

The judgment is reversed.

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — CONTRACTS—ENFORCEABLE — CERTAINTY — DESCRIPTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

To warrant the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, the agreement to convey must not only be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, but the writing must contain such a description of the property, either in terms or by reference, that it can be ascertained without resort to parol evidence.

Under Civ. Code, § 1741, providing that a contract for the sale of land must be in writing, where the description in a contract for the sale of land was definite, certain, and complete, parol evidence was inadmissible to show that the subject of the contract was entirely a different piece of land from that described therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by J. C. Willmon against George H. Peck and others for specific performance of a contract to purchase real estate. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. M. McDonald and Harris & Harris, for appellant. Frank Karr, and Wellington Clark, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment rendered in favor of defendants in an action for the specific performance of a contract to purchase real estate. At the time of the transaction, George H. Peck was the owner of the east ½ of the only block numbered 61 located in the city of San Pedro, which east ½ of said block comprised lots 7 to 12, both inclusive. Neither defendant had or claimed any interest in the west ½ of said block, which comprised lots 1 to 6, both inclusive. It appears from parol testimony that some time prior to February 3, 1903, the date of the alleged purchase, a real estate broker, as the agent of said George H. Peck, and at his request, made a rough pencil sketch of said east ½ of said block 61, showing the same to be divided into lots numbered 1 to 14, both inclusive, which sketch was shown to said George H. Peck and posted in his office. This sketch or subdivision of the east ½ of said block was exhibited to the plaintiff by said agent, who pointed out to him upon the ground that portion of said east ½ of said block corresponding to lots designated as 5 and 6 upon said rough pencil sketch so made by said agent. This sketch was never filed for record, nor was it produced at the trial, though the said agent then made and exhibited a copy of said sketch as nearly as he could reproduce the same, which, like all of the foregoing parol testimony, was received in evidence over the objections of the defendants. No survey was ever made of the east ½ of said block for the purpose of subdividing it. It was agreed between plaintiff and said agent acting for defendant George H. Peck that plaintiff would purchase lots 5 and 6, as designated on said pencil sketch, whereupon plaintiff gave to said agent his check, payable to said George H. Peck, for $100, as a deposit upon the purchase price of said lots, which check said Peck received and cashed, and thereupon delivered to said plaintiff a receipt reading as follows: "San Pedro, February 3, 1903. Received from J. C. Willmon one hundred dollars part payment on lot 5 and 6, block 61, San Pedro. Full price $1,500.00. Geo. H. Peck." Plaintiff thereafter tendered the balance of the purchase price and demanded a conveyance of lots 5 and 6, as designated upon said so-called subdivision of the east ½ of block 61, which deed also described said lots by metes and bounds, and upon a refusal of said demand brought this action.

Both the check and the receipt describe the property sold as being "lots 5 and 6, block 61, city of San Pedro," both of which lots are in the west ½ of said block, and neither of which was owned by either of the defendants. The lots involved in this action are admittedly not the ones so described, but are lots 5 and 6 as delineated upon the alleged pencil sketch of what was represented to plaintiff as being Peck's subdivision of the east ½ of block 61; and, while the trial court permitted parol evidence tending to prove that the lots sold were other than those so described in the writing, it, in effect, found that such evidence was valueless; and as a conclusion of law the court found, inasmuch as parol testimony could not be received for the purpose of supplying the description of real estate in the contract for the sale thereof, that said contract was fatally defective for want of description of the lands claimed to be covered thereby, and that said defects could not be supplied by parol evidence. In making this finding the court arrived at the same result, though in a roundabout way, as though it had excluded the testimony in the first instance. The evidence was improperly admitted, and, having been admitted, "it was entitled to no weight whatever, and should be given none in arriving at a conclusion as to the sufficiency of the evidence." Hoult v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 410, 20 Pac. 864.

The conclusion of the trial court was undoubtedly correct. The land described in the receipt, lots 5 and 6, block 61, in the city of San Pedro, is situated in the west ½ of said block; but it was not these lots, the conveyance of which the plaintiff sought to enforce, but other lots situated in the east ½ of said block, and which he sought to identify and describe by parol testimony. The law seems well settled that, in order to warrant the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of real property, the agreement to convey must not only be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, but the writing must also contain such a description of the property agreed to be sold, either in terms or by reference, that it can be ascertained without resort to parol evidence. Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 208, 20 Pac. 386; Craig v. Zelian, 137 Cal. 106, 69 Pac. 853. Where there is an incomplete description, parol evidence not inconsistent therewith may be offered in aid thereof, not, however, for the purpose of introducing a new description. Thus, where the subject of a contract of sale was a certain quantity of fruit from sundry orchards in Ontario and Cucamonga, parol evidence was held admissible to identify the orchards. Ontario, etc., Ass'n v. Cutting F. P. Co., 134 Cal. 21, 66 Pac. 28, 53 L. R. A. 681, 86 Am. St. Rep. 231. Here the description in the contract is definite, certain, and complete, and it is sought by parol evidence to show that the subject of the contract was entirely a different piece of land. This would be in violation of express statutory provision. Section 1741, Civ. Code. "It must, of course, appear from the memorandum what is the subject-matter of the defendant's engagement. Land, for instance, which is purported to be bargained for, must be so described that it may be identified." Browne on Stat. of Frauds, § 385; Ferguson v. Blackwell, 58 Pac. 649, 8 Okl. 489.

The judgment is affirmed.

3. SAME.

A written instrument, reciting that the owner of certain premises had received a certain sum on account of the premises at a monthly rental from October 1st, for the first six months, and at a certain other sum per month for the remainder of the year closing the first of the next October, constituted a lease for a year.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Fred Dodd against H. C. Pasch and another. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Johnston & Jones and W. P. Thompson, for appellants. Lewis H. Smith, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeal from judgment and order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover the possession of certain premises rented of plaintiff by defendants. The complaint was framed upon the theory that the defendants were tenants from month to month and were holding over after one month's notice terminating their tenancy. Defendants pleaded that they leased the premises for one year ending October 1, 1906, and at the trial introduced in evidence in support thereof a writing signed and delivered to defendants by plaintiff in the words following, to wit:

"Fresno, Cal., Sep. 25, 1905.

"Received of Pasch Bros. Twenty and $^{no}/_{100}$ dollars on a/c of old Schien store at a monthly rental from Oct. 1, of $125.00 per month for first 6 months, i. e. to April 1st; of $75.00 per month for the remainder of the year closing Oct. 1, 1906. $105 (one hundred and five) due and payable.

"$20 $^{no}/_{100}$ Fred Dodd."

Defendants went into possession October 1, 1905, and paid all rent up to March 1, 1906, at which time they tendered the rent for March, which was refused by plaintiff; he having on February 28th given defendants a notice to surrender possession March 1, 1906. The trial court, over the objection and exception of defendants, permitted the plaintiff to give testimony of an oral agreement to the effect that he leased the premises sued for, known as the old Schien store, to defendants from month to month, although he admitted that he executed and delivered to defendants the writing above set forth, and that the money specified had been paid. The court made findings in accord with the theory of plaintiff, and gave judgment accordingly.

Defendants contend that the writing above set forth constituted a written contract of lease for the term of one year ending October 1, 1906, and that no evidence of any oral agreement contrary to the terms thereof was admissible. Of the correctness of this contention we have no doubt. The instrument clearly shows the contracting parties, the premises leased, the rent, and the term, which is clearly one year, ending October 1, 1906. These are all the essential requisites of a lease that need be specified in the contract of lease. Other conditions usually contained in leases are nonessential. The time of payment even need not be specified, for when not stated in the lease, nor governed by usage, it is fixed by the law. Civ. Code, § 1947. "To constitute a lease no particular form of words is necessary. Whatever words show an intention on the part of the lessor to dispossess himself of the premises, and on the part of the lessee to enter and hold in subordination to the lessor's title, are sufficient." 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 605. Munson v. Wray, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 403, was an action against Mrs. Munson for holding over her term as tenant, brought on the theory that she was a tenant at will or at sufferance.

Defendant (Mrs. Munson) gave in evidence an instrument in writing signed by the complainant as follows: "Rec'd of Mrs. Munson $3.50 for rent of my brick house in Covington for one month, with privilege of keeping it six months at the same rate. No. 91 or 95. Dec'r 1st, 1843"—and proved that it had reference to the premises sued for. The court held it a good lease, and that the lessee could not be dispossessed, if she paid the rent, until the expiration of the six months. In Eastman v. Perkins, 111 Mass. 30, a writing at the foot of a receipted bill for hay in these words: "Left at stable on Oak street, where Andrew J. Perkins takes possession. Rent to begin October 1, 1870, for one year at $150. John C. Hoadley"—was held to be a good lease. The court said: "The memorandum affixed to the bill of parcels expresses the consent of the owner that the defendant should have immediate possession of the stable, and should continue to occupy it at a specified rent and for a definite time. Although brief and informal, therefore, it had all the essential elements of a present demise [citing cases]. Being accepted by the defendant, it gave him all the rights of a lessee."

In the case at bar, defendants, by paying the rent and entering into possession of the premises, accepted the lease. It was not necessary for the lessee to sign the lease. Johnson, Landlord & Tenant, § 77; Taylor on Landlord & Tenant, § 147; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 606; Castro v. Gaffey, 96 Cal. 421, 31 Pac. 363; Scott v. Glenn, 97 Cal. 513, 32 Pac. 573. The instrument in question being a valid lease, and unambiguous as to the term of the tenancy, it was error to allow oral evidence that the tenancy was from month to month. Civ. Code, § 1625; McDonald v. Poole, 113 Cal. 437, 45 Pac. 702.

The cases relied on by respondents on this question are not in point. In Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 109, the writing relied on was a mere memorandum so vague and uncertain as not to constitute a contract at all.

The case at bar was not an attempt to explain a clause or term susceptible of two different interpretations (Williams v. Ashurst, 144 Cal. 619, 78 Pac. 28), or to prove a collateral parol agreement not inconsistent with the writing (Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 518, 32 Pac. 571; Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786), but a bald attempt to contradict the terms of the written contract.

Neither can the action of the trial court be sustained on the theory that the writing was a receipt, for, while it is a receipt, it is also something more. It is a contract of lease of the premises described for the term of one year.

The judgment and order are reversed.

PEOPLE v. MEYERS. (Cr. 83.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 4, 1907.)

1. LARCENY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

On a trial for larceny, evidence examined, and held to support a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, §§ 164–169.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW — VERDICT — CONCLUSIVENESS.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, as amended November 8, 1903, conferring on District Courts of Appeal jurisdiction of questions of law alone in criminal cases, a verdict in a criminal case, supported by legal evidence, is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3074–3076.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

George Meyers was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Rowland and J. J. Earle, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was charged with the crime of grand larceny, and upon the trial was found guilty. His motion for a new trial was denied, and appeal is taken from the judgment and from the order denying such motion. The sole point made by the appellant is that the verdict of the jury is entirely unsupported by the evidence.

Briefly, the testimony is as follows:

Mrs. Grace Hopkins testified: "On the evening of November 23, 1905, at about midnight, in front of a hotel on Mason street in San Francisco, I saw Arnold, Noelke, and defendant, Meyers, all strangers to me. There three men and myself, at the invitation of Arnold, went into a saloon nearby, and had several drinks of whisky, the last of which looked smoky. At that time I had $48 in a purse in my stocking, and on my fingers three diamond rings worth $125, $90, and $60, respectively. While in the saloon, in attempting to remove my glove, Arnold saw my rings and made a grab for my hand. I withdrew my hand and replaced my glove." She further testified: "I remember nothing that happened for several hours after my drinking that smoky liquor. The next thing that I recollect is awakening in a filthy room in which I had never been before. I was in bed, and not entirely dressed, but my clothes had been loosened. My dress was open. My corset strings had been cut, and the corset removed and thoroughly searched. My shoes and stockings were on the floor and had been carefully examined; even the soles of the shoes having been inspected. My rings were not to be found, and on the dresser I discovered my purse inverted and empty."

The defendant, George Meyers, testified: "I am one of the defendants charged jointly with Arnold and Noelke. I have known Noelke for some time. I first met Arnold on the night of November 23, 1905. Noelke introduced us. About half-past 1 in the morning of November 24, 1905, the three of us were standing on Mason street in front of the Alturas, where Noelke lived, when Mrs. Hopkins passed by. She was intoxicated, and asked us: 'Which of you is going to buy me a drink?' Arnold said that he would do so, and started down the street with her. Noelke and I followed, and the four of us went into a saloon near the Linwood. Arnold sat next to Mrs. Hopkins at the table. We had several drinks, but I did not notice any that appeared cloudy or smoky. We left the saloon about 2:30 a. m. and went into the Linwood; Arnold and Mrs. Hopkins leading the way. Arnold went to the desk and engaged a room, and the night clerk took him and Mrs. Hopkins up in the elevator. Arnold motioned to Noelke and me to remain in the office, and we did so. Later I took Noelke home to the Alturas. He was quite drunk. When I left him there he said to me: 'Arnold has a good job at the Park, and I'd hate to see him lose it on account of a woman. Don't let him oversleep, but send him out to work. I returned to the Linwood, inquired of the clerk the number of the room occupied by Arnold and Mrs. Hopkins, and having been refused the key went upstairs and pounded on the door to arouse Arnold. This I was doing as an accommodation to my friend Noelke, as I had no interest in Arnold, having only met him the night before. Before I had received any response from Arnold, I was compelled to desist by the night clerk, who told me that I was disturbing the whole house. I returned to the office, but presently went upstairs again hoping that I might awaken Arnold, renewed the knocking at the door less violently than before, and was asked by Arnold what I wanted. I told him to get up, that it was time for him to go to work, and he said: 'All right, I'll be out in a minute.' I waited for him. Presently he came out and asked me to go with him and have a drink, and we left the Linwood together. I had not entered the room occupied by Arnold and Mrs. Hopkins since she went up with Arnold in the elevator. I did not take or assist in taking any property from her person. On leaving the Linwood, Arnold and I had a drink together, and he then asked me if I was acquainted at any pawnshop in the city. I said that I knew a clerk at a place on Kearny street, and Arnold asked me to take him there, and said that his girl had given him some things to pawn for her. So I went with him to Jacobs', and there he pawned three rings for $100. I had never seen the rings before that moment, and had no idea where he obtained them, except from his statement that his girl had given him some articles to pawn. We left the pawnshop together and had another drink. We then separated, and I do not know what Arnold did during the rest of the day. After that I saw Arnold nearly every day until we were arrested, about a week later. We were arrested by Officer Ryan, with whom I subsequently talked once or twice about the case. His account of our conversations was in the main correct. I never received any money from Arnold on account of the deal between him and the pawnbroker, nor on any other account; and I never said that I did."

Charles Clark testified: "I was on duty as night clerk at the Linwood Hotel on Mason street at about 2 o'clock November 24, 1905, when Mrs. Hopkins, Arnold, Noelke, and defendant, Meyers, arrived. Arnold came to the desk and engaged a room. I asked him his name, and he replied: 'Any old name, say Burke.' The room I assigned them was on the second floor. I entered the elevator to take the party up. Arnold and Mrs. Hopkins stepped in, and Noelke and Meyers started to follow, when Arnold motioned them to stay back, and they retired. They remained in the office while I took the others upstairs. Mrs. Hopkins remarked while in the elevator that the place was 'dirty' and 'a pretty poor looking dump.' I showed them to the room, and saw them enter and shut the door. The door locked with a snap lock. I then returned to the office, where Noelke and Meyers were waiting. They remained for some time, then went out, and returned. Noelke was quite drunk. At about 5:30 o'clock Meyers and he went outside, and Noelke did not return. Meyers returned in a few minutes. He said something about getting Arnold up and sending him to work. He learned which was his room, and then ran upstairs. He asked me for the key to the room, which I refused to give him, as Arnold had given me particular instructions not to allow any one to enter the room. Presently I heard a terrible racket upstairs. I went up and found Meyers in the hall outside of the door of the room which I had given to Arnold and Mrs. Hopkins. He was pounding and kicking on the door. I forced him to stop and to go down to the office with me as he was creating a sufficient disturbance to arouse the whole house. Presently Meyers went up again and made a good deal of noise, but was not quite so boisterous as on the former occasion, so I did not disturb him this time. I do not know whether he was in the room on these several trips or not. Presently he and Arnold came down together and left the hotel at about half-past 7."

H. Wilkins and A. E. Trimple testified that they were clerks at the Jacobs' pawnshop; that they knew Meyers; that on November 24, 1905, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, Meyers and another man, whose name was given as Burke, called at the pawnshop, and Burke pawned three diamond rings for $100. It is conceded that it was Arnold, under the name of Burke, who pledged the diamond rings.

James L. Ryan, a member of the detective force of the city and county of San Francisco, testified that Meyers told him that he (Meyers) had received from Arnold a commission of $15 out of the $100 in the pawnshop transaction.

If there was no legal evidence to support the verdict of the jury in this case, as is contended by appellant, then there would be presented a question of law upon which, of course, this court would have jurisdiction to pass. The record, however, shows clearly there was legal evidence to prove all the facts constituting the crime alleged. In such a case the decision of a jury, in so far as this tribunal is concerned, is absolutely final. Article 6, § 4, Const. Cal. amended November 8, 1903; People v. Maroney, 109 Cal. 279, 41 Pac. 1097; People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 41, 70 Pac. 1014; People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 398, 77 Pac. 177; People v. Gonzales, 143 Cal. 606, 77 Pac. 448. In People v. Maroney, supra, it is said: "The power of a jury in determining the weight to be given to testimony is, within the rules of evidence, exclusive and supreme, and appeals to this court in criminal cases do not lie from the verdict of the jury upon controverted questions of fact, but solely upon propositions of law." In People v. Fitzgerald, supra, it is said: "By the Constitution appellate jurisdiction is conferred upon this court in 'criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or information in a court of record on questions of law alone.' Where there is evidence therefor to sustain the verdict, a question of law cannot arise, but only in a case where there is in effect an entire lack of evidence."

The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re LONG'S ESTATE. (Civ. 367.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 5, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 3, 1907.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—JUDICIAL SALE—ORDERING RESALE—DISCRETION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1554, provides that if, after the confirmation of the sale of decedent's estate, the purchaser neglects or refuses to comply with the terms of sale, the court may order a resale. Decedent's property was bid in March 6th, on condition that the bidder be furnished a certificate showing clear title, and the bid was confirmed. On July 20th, motion was made to set aside the sale and order a resale for the bidder's neglect to pay the balance; the hearing of the motion being continued to August 10th at the bidder's request, and he stating that he could not then raise the money. Title had been accepted in June, and a tender of the deed and a demand for the balance of the purchase price were admitted. Held, that there was no abuse of discretion in ordering a resale.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 1517.]

2. APPEAL — REVIEW — APPEAL FROM FINAL ORDER—REVIEW OF SUBSEQUENT ORDER.

Where, after an order was made August 10th, setting aside a sale of decedent's property and ordering a resale, the bidder filed an affidavit purporting to embody his objection to granting the order, and October 12th the affidavit was ordered stricken from the files, no appeal being taken from that order, neither the affidavit nor the ruling in striking it may be considered on an appeal from the order setting aside the sale taken three weeks before October 12th.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Louisiana R. Long, deceased. E. R. Fox appeals from an order setting aside a sale of real estate of the estate to him and ordering a resale. Affirmed.

L. M. Fall and E. R. Fox, for appellant. Frank James, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order of the court setting aside a sale of certain real estate belonging to the estate of Louisiana R. Long, deceased, and ordering a resale of the property.

The only facts material to the case are that on March 6, 1906, appellant in open court bid $15,400 cash for certain real estate belonging to the estate of deceased, upon condition that he should be furnished an unlimited certificate of title showing the property entirely clear of all liens or clouds. The bid was accepted, appellant paid $1,550 on account of the purchase price, and thereupon the court made its order confirming the same. Thereafter, on July 20, 1906, pursuant to notice duly given, respondents moved the court to set aside the sale so made to appellant and order a resale of the property; the grounds of the motion being that said appellant had neglected and refused to pay the balance of the agreed purchase price of the property. The hearing of this motion was, at the request of appellant, continued from July 20th to August 10th, on which last-mentioned date the court made the order setting aside the sale, and from which this appeal is prosecuted.

Some time in June, 1906, there was delivered to appellant a certificate of title executed by the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles, and appellant then accepted the title to the property as shown by this certificate, provided the respondents, who were the executors of the estate of said deceased, would credit him on his bid with the sum of $63 paid on a street improvement bond, to all of which the executors consented and agreed. A tender of the deed and a demand for the balance of the purchase price was admitted. The only objection urged against granting this motion was the condition of the money market; Fox stating that he was not able at that time to raise the balance of the purchase price. Whereupon the court, at his request, continued the hearing to August 10, 1906, at which time the order granting the motion was made. Section 1554, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "If, after the confirmation, the purchaser neglects or refuses to comply with the terms of the sale, the court may, on motion of the executor or administrator, and after notice to the purchaser, order a re-sale to be made of the property." Under this provision of the statute, the making of the order was a matter solely within the discretion of the court. The record discloses no abuse of discretion. Indeed, the circumstances would seem to permit no other course than that pursued. After the order was made, appellant filed an affidavit, which purported to embody his objections to the granting of the motion. This affidavit was, by an order of the court made October 12, 1906, stricken from the files. No appeal was taken from this order, and neither the affidavit nor the ruling of the court in striking it from the files can be considered on this appeal, which was taken some three weeks prior to said October 12th.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

WHITTLE v. WHITTLE. (Civ. 275.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 6, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Record—Review.

The record is not in condition for review of the overruling of defendant's objection to proceeding with the case till the original pleadings were produced or other papers were substituted therefor; the pleadings being in the record on appeal, and it not appearing that they are not the original papers, nor that they were not found and used on the trial.

2. Witnesses — Examination — Refreshing Memory—Writings Admissible.

The complaint, in an action for money had and received, having alleged the money was received from C., plaintiff may introduce a note executed by C. to plaintiff and defendant, preliminary to asking defendant, who was being examined as a witness for plaintiff, if she collected part of the note.

3. Limitation of Actions—Money Received.

The statute commences to run against an action for money had and received from the time the money was received, and not from the time the note, in payment of which the money was received, was due.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 268, 269.]

4. Judgment—Res Judicata.

The judgment of defendants, in an action on a note by one of the joint payees against the maker and the other payee, the latter being made a defendant because she would not consent to become a plaintiff, and the judgment being because of the maker having paid the note to the defendant payee, is not a bar to an action by the former payee against the latter payee, for money had and received of the maker in payment of the note.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 1092-1097.]

5. Money Received — Defenses — Husband and Wife.

To an action for money had and received it is a good defense that defendant is the wife of plaintiff, and that, after he had deserted and left her without means, she received the money in payment of a note, of which they were the joint payees, and used it for the necessaries of life.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by Robert Whittle against Annie Whittle, sued as Anne Whittle. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. P. J. Mogan and M. S. Eisner, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff and defendant are husband and wife, but that they have been living separate and apart since August, 1893; that in November, 1893, the defendant received $1,097.60 to and for the use of plaintiff; that said money was partly the separate property of plaintiff and partly community property; and that defendant has not paid the same nor any part thereof. The answer alleges that all the money received by the defendant was received by her as the wife of the plaintiff, and was necessarily used by her for the necessaries of life for her board and maintenance after plaintiff had willfully deserted and separated from her without just cause. The cause was tried, findings filed, and judgment thereupon entered for plaintiff. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Several errors are assigned and argued in appellant's brief, which we will notice in the order in which they are discussed. It is claimed that error was committed in trying the case without the pleadings being before the court. It appears from the bill of exceptions that the plaintiff's attorney stated to the court that the papers in the case were missing from the files, but that he had copies that he could supply in case the originals were not found. Defendant's attorney objected to proceeding with the case until the original papers were produced or other papers substituted in lieu thereof. The court overruled the objection, and the trial proceeded. The correct practice would have been to find the originals or supply copies before the trial of the case, but that may have been done. The pleadings are now here as a part of the record, and it does not appear that they are not the original documents, nor does it appear that they were not found and used during the trial. No further question appears to have been raised concerning them, and no injury to defendant is made to appear.

The plaintiff offered in evidence a note for $924.60, dated February 19, 1891, made by Mary D. Carpenter and payable to plaintiff and defendant. To this the defendant objected upon several grounds, among others that it was not admissible under the pleadings, and that it appeared to be barred by the statute of limitations. The court overruled the objection. The ruling of the court was not erroneous. The complaint alleges that the money was received from Mary D. Carpenter. The note was only used to refresh the memory of defendant, who was being examined as a witness for plaintiff. She was asked if she collected any part of the said note, and she answered that she did collect one-half of it, $462.30, about November 3, 1893. This was the basis of the judgment entered up for plaintiff. The question under investigation was as to the fact of defendant receiving the money, and the date when it was received.

The defendant, by way of estoppel, offered in evidence the judgment and judgment roll in a former suit in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, in which the present plaintiff was plaintiff, and the present defendant and Mary D. Carpenter were defendants; the action being to recover judgment upon the promissory note hereinbefore referred to. The court sustained the plaintiff's objection to said judgment roll, to which ruling the defendant excepted, and now claims that the court erred in so doing. Without regard to the question, discussed in the briefs, as to the estoppel not having been pleaded in the answer, we are of opinion that the judgment was not admissible. The former suit was between the same parties, but the question involved and the issue under investigation was not the same. That was an action to recover the amount of the promissory note against Mary D. Carpenter, the maker thereof. The present defendant was made a defendant in the former action because, as alleged, she would not consent to become plaintiff. She was one of the parties to whom the note was payable, and no judgment was asked against her. The court in the former suit found that defendant Mary D. Carpenter had paid the said note to this defendant. Judgment was accordingly entered for the defendants in such former suit. The fact that it was adjudged and declared in such former suit that the plaintiff could not recover upon the note, for the reason that the maker of the note had paid it to one of the payees, was not an adjudication that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the joint payee who had received the money. Upon discovering that the note had been paid to defendant, he had the right to bring an action for money had and received to his use. The statute of limitations in such case would not begin to run until the money was received by defendant. In order to constitute an estoppel, the former judgment must have been between the same parties, in the same right, in regard to the same subject-matter, and must necessarily have involved the determination of the same fact, to prove or disprove which it is introduced in evidence. Laguna Drainage Dist. v. Charles Martin Co. (Cal. App. 1st. Dist.) 89 Pac. 993.

We come now to the important question in the case, and the one which in our view necessitates a reversal. The answer, as has been shown, alleges that the money was received by the defendant as the wife of the plaintiff, and had been used by her for the necessaries of life after the plaintiff had deserted her and left her without means. In receiving the money defendant was guilty of no wrong. The note by its terms was payable to her as one of the payees. She received it as lawfully as if she had received it from the hands of her husband. She had the right to use it, because she was the wife of the plaintiff, and he was liable for her support and maintenance, and had left her without means. While the defendant was upon the stand as plaintiff's witness, and after she had testified to receiving the money, her counsel asked her in cross-examination what she did with it. Counsel for plaintiff objected to the question on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not cross-examination. The court sustained the objection, to which defendant's counsel duly excepted. After the plaintiff rested, the defendant took the witness stand in her own behalf, and was again asked by her counsel the same question. The same objection was made as to the competency, relevancy, and materiality of the question, followed by the same ruling. She was then asked if she was living with plaintiff, and if plaintiff had contributed anything to her support for the past eight years These questions were objected to by the plaintiff as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and the objections were sustained. The ruling was thus clearly made that the defendant could not show that she had used the money for the necessaries of life after the plaintiff had willfully deserted and abandoned her, leaving her without means. It appears clear to us that if the money had come into the hands of the defendant while plaintiff and defendant were living together as husband and wife, and that the plaintiff, during the time they were so living together, necessarily used the money for the family, or for the necessaries of life, the plaintiff could not recover. There is no difference in principle between the facts of the present case as alleged in the answer. The defendant, although deserted, was still the wife of plaintiff. In law she was part of his family. He had not been released from the legal obligations resting upon him. He could not, by wrongfully deserting the defendant, take advantage of his own wrong. He certainly ought not to be in a better legal position by reason of his desertion than he would be if still living with defendant. By the marriage plaintiff contracted the obligation of supporting defendant. Civ. Code, §§ 155, 174. It was said by the Supreme Court, in Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 266: "Amongst other rights secured to the wife is the right to be suitably supported and maintained by the husband according to his means and station. If he fails or refuses to provide such support for her, the law authorizes her to purchase from others, on the credit of her husband, whatever is necessary for her maintenance and suitable to her station in life. There can be no diversity of opinion on this point, which is thoroughly well settled." If the law authorizes the wife, in case of the failure of the husband to provide for her, to purchase from others, and holds him responsible, is there any reason in law or morals why she could not use the money in her hands for the same purpose? Can it be said that the husband in such case may recover the money from the wife, and then in turn the merchant who furnishes her with the necessaries recover from the husband? In Livingston v. Superior Court, 117 Cal. 633,[1] it was held that, under section 155 of the Civil Code, where a husband has no separate property, and there is no community property, and the husband is unable, by reason of infirmity, to support himself, an action would lie to compel the wife to support him out of her separate property. In that case Galland v. Galland is approved and followed, and the statutory liability of the husband and wife discussed. It thus appears beyond question that if the answer is true the plaintiff was liable for the support of the defendant. The action for money had and received lies to recover money to which plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which defendant cannot with a good conscience retain. Bouvier's Law Dictionary, under heading "Money Had and Received" and authorities cited; Sacramento County v. Southern Pac. Co., 127 Cal. 217, 59 Pac. 568, 825. It was held in the latter case that the plaintiff could not recover money which had been paid to defendant in good faith but upon a void contract. That in equity and good conscience the plaintiff was not entitled to the money, although the defendant could not in law have recovered the money upon the illegal contract. The general principle is that in this kind of action the defendant may show any facts that entitle him to retain the money, either upon legal or equitable grounds. The right of the defendant need not necessarily be better than that of the plaintiff. If it is equal thereto, the defendant must prevail. Wait's Actions & Defenses, vol. 4, p. 511, and cases cited; Boone on Code Pleading, § 171. Our conclusion is that the defendant had the right to show by way of defense that she was the wife of the plaintiff; that plaintiff had deserted her, leaving her without means; that the money came lawfully into her possession, and was necessarily used by her for her support and maintenance. In such case equity and good conscience will not permit the plaintiff to recover.

The views herein expressed make it unnecessary to pass upon other questions argued in the briefs.

The judgment and order are reversed.

GAFFEY v. MANN. (Civ. 354.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 11, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, Aug. 8, 1907.)

1. COSTS—JUDGMENT AFTER APPEAL—NECESSITY FOR NOTICE.

Where plaintiff filed objections to defendant's cost bill filed after plaintiff dismissed a slander action, and the Court of Appeal reversed in part an order striking out all the items of the cost bill, and after the filing of the remittitur in the lower court defendant filed his memorandum of costs on appeal, after the time for plaintiff's objection thereto had expired, without objections filed, it was proper to enter judgment against plaintiff for defendant's costs in both courts, in his absence and without notice to him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Costs, § 765.]

2. APPEAL—LAW OF THE CASE.

Where, after plaintiff dismissed a slander action, defendant appealed from an order striking out all the items of his cost bill, and the Court of Appeal determined that defendant was entitled to an item of $100 for counsel fees, the determination became the law of the case on a subsequent appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4358.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by W. V. Gaffey against Samuel Mann. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment against plaintiff upon the going down of remittitur of the Court of Appeal, reversing in part an order of the superior court, striking out all the items of a cost bill filed by defendant after the dismissal of the action. Affirmed.

Wyckoff & Gardner, for appellant. Chas. B. Younger, Jr., for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered against plaintiff upon the going down of the remittitur from this court, reversing in part an order of the superior court striking out all the items of a cost bill filed by defendant after the dismissal of an action for slander. Gaffey v. Mann, 84 Pac. 424, 3 Cal. App. ——. In due time after the filing of the remittitur from this court in the lower court, the defendant filed his memorandum of costs on appeal, and thereafter, and after the expiration of the time for plaintiff to object or except thereto, and plaintiff having filed no objections thereto, the court, without notice to plaintiff and in his absence, entered judgment against plaintiff for the sum of $100, as and for defendant's costs in said court, and the further sum of $32, for his costs incurred on the former appeal.

Appellant now insists that this judgment must be reversed for the reason that it was taken against him in his absence and without notice. But we do not think that this contention is sound. Plaintiff brought the action for slander, and thereafter dismissed it, and caused the clerk to enter a dismissal thereof after defendant had incurred costs in taking steps to procure a dismissal thereof. Gaffey v. Mann, supra. Thereupon defendant filed his cost bill, containing two items, to wit, $2 for clerk's fees for his appearance, and $100 for counsel fees. Plaintiff thereupon moved to strike out each and every item thereof upon various grounds, in which were presented questions of fact as to the necessity for incurring such costs, and the validity thereof as matter of law. The court granted his motion, but upon the appeal to this court the order was reversed so far as it struck out the item in defendant's cost bill of $100 for counsel fees, upon the ground, as clearly appears from the opinion, that upon the facts and the law defendant was entitled to such costs. This left the cost bill intact as originally filed, save as to the item of $2 for clerk's fees, and there was nothing to do but enter judgment accordingly for the costs thus allowed. Costs are but an incident to the judgment. In this case judgment of dismissal had been entered, which carried with it a right to defendant to recover costs. He filed his cost bill. Plaintiff filed his objections thereto, which having been passed upon by the trial court and this court, he has had his day in court, and is not entitled to be further heard as to the amount or validity of the costs. The judgment of dismissal, to which the costs are but incidental, was entered at appellant's request.

[1] 49 Pac. 836, 38 L. R. A. 175.

Plaintiff further urged at the oral argument that the statute allowing attorneys' fees in slander and libel cases is unconstitutional, and that for that reason the judgment should be reversed, and cites Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor (Cal.) 88 Pac. 982, in which it was held that the mechanic's lien law, so far as it allowed attorney's fees to a plaintiff was void. But the libel and slander law differs in several respects from the lien law. The slander and libel law allows attorney's fees to the prevailing party, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, while the lien law allows such costs only to the plaintiff. The lien law was passed after the adoption of the present Constitution, while the slander and libel act was passed before the adoption of the present Constitution. For these reasons the slander and libel act has been held constitutional in so far as it requires a plaintiff to give a bond for costs. Smith v. McDermott, 93 Cal. 421, 29 Pac. 34. But without passing upon the constitutionality of the slander and libel act in allowing attorneys' fees to the prevailing party, it is sufficient to say that the order made upon the former appeal has become the law of the case. It was then determined that defendant was entitled to be allowed as a part of his costs $100 for attorney fees, and this decision has become final. Heinlen v. Martin, 59 Cal. 182; Donner v. Palmer, 51 Cal. 637; Russell v. Harris, 44 Cal. 489.

Judgment is affirmed.

BEKINS v. DIETERLE et al. (Civ. 372.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 5, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court August 3, 1907.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE—PRESUMPTION—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The presumption created by Civ. Code, § 164, declaring that, where property is conveyed to a married woman, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property, is not conclusive, and may be overcome by proof that the consideration therefor was paid out of community funds.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE AS TO OWNERSHIP—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a finding that property levied on was purchased with community funds, and hence to rebut the presumption created by Civ. Code, § 164, declaring that, where property is conveyed to a married woman, the presumption is that title is thereby vested in her as her separate property.

3. SAME—EARNINGS OF WIFE.

The services of the wife as "the man of the family" in the active management of her husband's business are a part of the earning power of the community, and the earnings due to her services constitute community property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Husband and Wife, § 911.]

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY—FRAUDULENT INTENT.

Evidence that a husband, on the day a judgment was rendered against him, executed a deed of property valued at $34,500 for an expressed consideration of $10 to his wife, unknown to her, and that such property was all he owned, warranted a finding of his intent to defraud the judgment creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 894.]

5. SAME—VOID CONVEYANCE—EFFECT AS TO CREDITORS.

Where a conveyance is void under Civ. Code, § 3439, declaring every transfer of property, with intent to delay or defraud creditors, to be void against such creditors, a creditor may levy on and sell the property as if no conveyance had been made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 660.]

6. SAME.

Under Civ. Code, § 3439, declaring every transfer of property with intent to delay or defraud creditors to be void against such creditors, where the fraudulent intent is established, the conveyance is void, notwithstanding the debtor has other property sufficient to satisfy his creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 138, 159.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by Kate Bekins against Minnie Dieterle and another to enjoin the sale under execution of certain real estate, and to have her title thereto quieted. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See 91 Pac. 105.

J. Marion Brooks and F. B. Guthrie (Henry E. Wills, of counsel), for appellant. E. W. Freeman and A. D. Laughlin, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Appeal from judgment in favor of the defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The appellant, Kate Bekins, is the wife of M. Bekins. On December 29, 1896, Minnie and William Dieterle commenced an action against M. Bekins to recover damages for the conversion of certain personal property alleged to have been delivered to him for storage in his warehouse, and which property he refused to redeliver to the plaintiffs in said suit on demand therefor. The judgment rendered in favor of M. Bekins on the first trial was reversed (Dieterle v. Bekins, 143 Cal. 683, 77 Pac. 664), and upon a second trial, had on December 23, 1904, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs therein. Execution was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, who duly levied upon certain real estate as belonging to M. Bekins, the judgment debtor, and proceeded to advertise the same for sale. Whereupon Kate Bekins, the appellant, who claimed ownership of the property, instituted this action to enjoin the sheriff from selling the same and have her alleged title thereto quieted as against Minnie and William Dieterle. It appears that the real estate, which is of the value of $34,500, was conveyed to M. Bekins on October 31, 1904, and stood in his name until December 23, 1904, when, for a stated consideration of $10, he executed a deed therefor to his wife, Kate Bekins, and without other delivery to her filed the same for record at 1:40 p. m. of said day. The consideration paid for the property when conveyed to M. Bekins was $34,500. This amount was paid by checks drawn upon money on deposit to the credit of Kate Bekins, who testified that she "drew it from the moneys of the Bekins Van & Storage Company." At the date of the conveyance from M. Bekins to his wife, he had no other property out of which the judgment could be made. During all of the times covered by these several transactions M. Bekins was engaged in the van and storage business, and Kate Bekins, in addition to caring for her household duties, assisted him in the active management and conduct of said business. At the date of her marriage appellant had only $100, which, she says, was long ago expended. The business was incorporated subsequently to the date of the commencement of respondents' suit against M. Bekins, and the husband placed some of the stock in the name of appellant; the reason for his doing so being unknown to her. There was other testimony to show that M. Bekins, after the commencement of suit by respondents, turned his property over to his wife when he was sick, and, as her attorney testified: "She has been the man of the family." The court found that the property levied on was community property; that the consideration for the purchase thereof, $34,500, was paid out of community funds; that the deed dated December 23, 1904, whereby M. Bekins, in consideration of $10, conveyed the property to his wife, Kate Bekins, was intended by M. Bekins to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, and especially the respondents herein; that at the time of making said conveyance M. Bekins had no other property out of which respondents' judgment could be made.

Appellant attacks all of these findings, asserting that they are not justified by the evidence. Section 162, Civ. Code, defines the separate property of the wife as being "all property owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues and profits therefrom." Section 163, Civ. Code, likewise defines the separate property of the husband. All other property than that designated in said sections 162 and 163, acquired after marriage "by either husband or wife, or both, is community property." Section 164, Civ. Code. As this last section stood prior to the amendment of 1889, property conveyed to the wife during coverture was presumed to be community property. Morgan v. Lones, 78 Cal. 58, 20 Pac. 248; Davis v. Green, 122 Cal. 364, 59 Pac. 9. As such it was under the control of the husband, and might be mortgaged by him or subjected to the payment of his debts, regardless of the fact that it stood of record in the name of the wife. Davis v. Green, supra; Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. 719. This presumption could be overcome by evidence that the consideration paid for the property was the separate funds of the wife. The amendment of 1889 changed this presumption by adding the following provision to section 164: "But whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property." This presumption, like the one existing before the amendment, is not conclusive, but may be overcome by extrinsic evidence showing the consideration for the property to have been paid out of the community funds; and when such fact is established the property, notwithstanding it stands in the name of the wife, is subject to the control of the husband and is liable for the community debts. The presumption of a separate estate created in Kate Bekins by the conveyance from M. Bekins is overcome by the evidence, which clearly shows the property to have been purchased with community funds. She testifies: "I drew it [the $34,500 paid for the lots] from the moneys of the Bekins Van & Storage Company."

"It was taken out of the business of the van and storage company." The consideration paid for the property did not represent the earnings of the wife, but of the community business. The fact that she, as the "man of the family," had active charge of the business did not affect its character as community property. Besides, her services and earning power were as much a part of the marital community capital as that of the husband. "The services of the wife are a part of the earning power of the community, and the earnings received for her services constitute community property as much as do the earnings received for the services of the husband." Martin v. So. Pac. Co., 130 Cal. 285, 62 Pac. 515; Smith v. Furnish, 70 Cal. 424, 12 Pac. 392. The evidence justified the court in finding that the real estate levied on was community property.

The evidence in support of the finding that the conveyance was made with intent to defraud Minnie and William Dieterle is likewise sufficient. The uncontradicted facts are that judgment was rendered against M. Bekins on December 23, 1904, on the afternoon of which day he, unknown to his wife, voluntarily and without consideration therefor (other than $10) executed and filed for record a deed which purported to convey property of the value of $34,500, and which appellant testified was all the property he owned. Is not the inference from these facts irresistible that he intended to place the property beyond the reach of respondents' judgment? No rational mind could reach any other conclusion than that found by the court. Judson v. Lyford, 84 Cal. 505, 24 Pac. 286. Section 3439, Civ. Code, provides: "Every transfer of property or charge thereon made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken, with intent to delay or defraud any creditor or other person of his demands, is void against all creditors of the debtor, and their successors in interest, and against any person upon whom the estate of the debtor devolves in trust for the benefit of others than the debtor." The court found that prior to the execution of the deed in question respondents were creditors of M. Bekins, and that the transfer of his property to his wife was made with the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud them in the collection of their claim. Under these findings, the conveyance was void as against respondents, and as to their judgment the title and ownership of the property remained in M. Bekins as fully as though no transfer had been attempted. "A void thing is as nothing." The deed was a nullity. "As against the fraudulent transferee, the creditor may seize the property, whether real or personal, as that of the fraudulent vendor, and may proceed to sell it under execution." 1 Freeman on Executions, § 136. In Bull v. Ford, 66 Cal. 176, 4 Pac. 1175, the court, in discussing a transfer made with fraudulent intent, said: "The conveyance to defendant being void, as against Alvarado's creditors, the creditors were authorized to levy upon and sell the property as if no conveyance had ever been made by their debtor." Judson v. Lyford, supra; First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 55 Pac. 580, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64; Hemenway v. Thaxter (Cal. Sup.) 90 Pac. 116; Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 300, 26 Pac. 873, 13 L. R. A. 576.

The intent to defraud existing creditors being established, the question as to the debtor having other property becomes immaterial for the reason that the attempted transfer as to such creditors is void. "Indeed, it matters not, where personal intent to defraud is shown, that the fraudulent conveyance, if allowed to stand, would not harm any one, by reason of the fact that the debtor has other property ample in amount within the reach of his creditors." Bigelow on Fraud, vol. 2, p. 393. "A rich man may make a fraudulent deed as well as one who is insolvent." Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 60. It therefore follows that the ruling of the court in permitting respondents to file an amendment to their answer pending trial, whereby they alleged the insolvency of M. Bekins, was at most harmless error. Adopting appellant's view of its importance, it was clearly within the discretion of the court and no abuse of discretion appears. In support of her contention that it must be shown that the debtor had no other property, not only at the time of the transfer, but at the time of the levy of execution thereon, appellant cites Albertoli v. Branham, 80 Cal. 631, 22 Pac. 404, 13 Am. St. Rep. 200, which seems to support her contention. The point involved there, however, was the sufficiency of the allegations of an answer which did not allege the transfer to have been made without consideration, nor that the debtor did not have other property sufficient to satisfy his debts. The learned judge who wrote that opinion made no reference to section 3439, Civ. Code. In our judgment, it is opposed to direct statutory provision contained in section 3439, Civ. Code, and contrary to later judicial expression of the Supreme Court wherein it is held, in substance (First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, supra): If the fraudulent intent is found to exist, the conveyance is void, notwithstanding the debtor has other property ample in amount to satisfy his creditors.

ROBINSON et al. v. BLOOD et al.

(L. A. 1,807.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 12, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—BY DEFAULT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—WANT OF JURISDICTION.

Where, in an action by a judgment creditor of a corporation to subject to his judgment the amount due from a stockholder on his stock subscription, it appeared that the complaint in which the judgment was rendered sufficiently stated a cause of action to give jurisdiction of the subject-matter, that the summons was served on the president of the corporation, and that default and judgment were duly entered, the judgment was not to be held void because of want of jurisdiction.

2. CORPORATIONS—EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

The president of a corporation, under an authority given at a meeting of the directors, employed an attorney to defend a suit brought against the corporation. The resolution authorizing the employment was regularly entered in the minutes of the corporation, which recited that the meeting was called by the president. Held, that a presumption that due notice was given to the directors was raised, rendering the employment valid, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 1300.]

3. SAME—DE FACTO OFFICERS.

A director of a corporation, who has ceased to be a stockholder, may continue to act as a de facto director, and his acts are not void as to third persons.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 1241, 1242.]

4. SAME—TERMINATION OF CORPORATE EXISTENCE.

Civ. Code, § 358, as amended in 1901, provides that, where a corporation after its organization shall lose its property and shall fail for two years to elect officers and transact its business, its corporate powers shall cease. A corporation was engaged in defending a foreclosure suit on its property, which was the only business it had. The last act in the defense was had within 30 days after October 12, 1901. The attorney conducting the defense sued the corporation for its services in August, 1903, and recovered judgment in September. The corporation did not lose all of its property until June 28, 1903, at which time its right of redemption under the sale in the foreclosure suit expired. Held, that the corporation was in existence at the commencement of the suit and at the rendition of a judgment against it for the attorney's fees, rendering the judgment valid.

5. SAME — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY — ENFORCEMENT.

The right of a judgment creditor of a corporation to pursue the stockholders thereof to compel payment of the judgment is not defeated by the subsequent termination of the corporation by reason of Civ. Code, § 358, as amended in 1901, providing that, where a corporation shall dispose of all of its property and shall fail for two years to elect officers and transact its business, its corporate powers shall cease.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 892.]

6. SAME—CORPORATE EXISTENCE.

Civ. Code, § 358, as amended in 1901, provides that the incorporation of a corporation claiming in good faith to be a corporation and doing business as such shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which it may be a party, and where a company claiming in good faith to be incorporated has been doing business for 10 consecutive years as a corporation no such inquiry shall be made by any person. A corporation was organized in 1887, and it claimed in good faith to be a corporation and did business as such until 1901. Thereafter a creditor obtained judgment against it and sought to pursue a stockholder to compel payment of the judgment. Held, that the stockholder could not question the existence of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 77.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by Martha A. Robinson and another against James A. Blood and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant James A. Blood appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Day, for appellant. Richards & Carrier, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action by the plaintiffs, as judgment creditors of La Serena Land & Water Company, a corporation, against James A. Blood, a stockholder of the corporation, in the nature of a creditors' bill, to subject to the payment of the plaintiffs' judgment the amount due from Blood to the corporation upon his subscription to the capital stock thereof. Judgment was entered in the court below against Blood, from which he appeals.

The defenses set up by Blood are that the previous judgment in favor of the plaintiffs against the corporation is void, both for lack of jurisdiction and because of fraud and collusion between plaintiffs and the president of the corporation in obtaining it; that the corporation, at the time the former suit was begun, and for a long time prior thereto, had ceased to have a legal existence; and that plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. The evidence is contained in a bill of exceptions printed in the record. The judgment against the corporation is not void upon its face. The complaint therein sufficiently states a cause of action to give the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter. The summons was duly served on the president of the corporation, and the default and judgment were duly entered. No irregularity appears on the face of the record.

On the question of fraud in procuring the judgment, the findings are against the defendant, and they are sufficiently supported by the evidence. The corporation was sued by Blood, the present defendant, to foreclose a mortgage he held against all of its property. McNulta, the assignor of plaintiffs, was employed as an attorney to defend the action for a stipulated fee. The contract with McNulta on behalf of the corporation was made by Barker, its president, in pursuance of an authority given him in that behalf at a special meeting of the directors. The suit of the plaintiffs was for the fees of McNulta for his services in defending the foreclosure suit. The services were performed by him in accordance with his agreement, and there is nothing in the evidence which indicates fraud, bad faith, or collusion on his part. It is urged that the directors were not given notice of the special meeting at which Barker was authorized to employ McNulta. Conceding, for the purposes of this case, that his would be a good defense, either to the present action or to the action against the corporation to recover the attorney's fees, it is sufficient to say that the resolution authorizing the contract with McNulta was regularly entered in the minutes of the corporation, which recite that the meeting was called by the president, and that this raises a presumption that due notice was given thereof. Granger v. O. E. M. & M. Co., 59 Cal. 681; Balfour-Guthrie Co. v. Woodworth, 124 Cal. 172, 56 Pac. 891. The evidence given does not, as a matter of law, overcome this presumption. The court below gave credit to the presumption as against the testimony. We cannot interfere with its decision upon this conflict.

The evidence that one of the directors had ceased to be a stockholder at the time of this meeting did not prevent his continuing to act as a de facto director, nor make such action void as to third persons. San Jose Sav. Bank v. Sierra Lumber Co., 63 Cal. 179.

The claim that the action was barred by the statute of limitations is not urged, and it is not supported by the evidence.

The principal defense appears to be the claim that the corporation had ceased to exist before McNulta began or performed the services, and never thereafter became a legal corporation. This claim is founded upon that part of section 358 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1901, which reads as follows: "If a corporation does not organize and commence the transaction of its business, or the construction of its works, within one year from the date of its incorporation, or if, after its organization and commencement of its business, it shall lose or dispose of all of its property, and shall fail for a period of two years to elect officers, and transact, in regular order, the business of said corporation, its corporate powers shall cease." The claim is unfounded. Before the amendment of 1901, the part of the section corresponding to the above was as follows: "If a corporation does not organize and commence the transaction of its business, or the construction of its works, within one year from the date of its incorporation, its corporate powers cease." There was no failure to organize the corporation, or to begin the transaction of its business, within the year after its incorporation. The corporation, therefore, has had a legal existence from the time of its incorporation until the present time, unless it ceased to exist after the amendment of 1901, under the provisions of that amendment.

The action against the corporation to recover the attorney's fees was begun on August 22, 1903. The corporation did not lose all of its property until June 28, 1903, at which time its right of redemption under the sale in the foreclosure suit expired. The conditions on which the corporate powers would cease, under the part of the amendment above quoted, did not occur until after the latter date, at all events. The corporation was engaged in defending the foreclosure suit upon its property, which appears to have been the only business it had. While so engaged it cannot be said that it was failing to transact its business in regular order. The last act in this defense was the filing of a petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court, within 30 days after October 12, 1901. Consequently there was not, either at the time the action for attorney's fees was begun or on September 2, 1903, when the judgment therein was rendered, a failure for 2 years to transact the business of the corporation. The subsequent expiration of the 2-year period could not affect the right of the judgment creditors to pursue the stockholders to compel payment of the judgment.

Another sufficient ground for holding that the corporation still has a corporate existence is found in the terms of the concluding clause of section 358, as amended in 1901. This clause is not included in the part above quoted. It is as follows: "The due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which such de facto corporation may be a party; but such inquiry may be had at the suit of the state on information of the Attorney General; provided, however, as to any company claiming in good faith to be, and which has been doing business for ten consecutive years as a corporation, no such inquiry shall be made either by the state or by any person whatsoever." This corporation was organized in 1887, and, so far as appears, it claimed in good faith to be a corporation and did business as such from that time until the passage of this amendment in 1901. Under this clause no inquiry as to its corporate powers can be made in this action. Furthermore, immediately after the part of the section first above quoted occurs this clause, "and the said corporation may be dissolved at the instance of any creditor of the said corporation, at the suit of the state, on the information of the Attorney General." In San Diego Gas Co. v. Frame, 137 Cal. 441, 70 Pac. 295, under a law similar in all respects to this part of section 358, it was held that the corporation continues to exist until, in a suit for that purpose, its corporate franchise is declared forfeited.

This disposes of all the points presented by the appellant in support of his appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN HORN v. VAN HORN. (Civ. 347.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 13, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court August 12, 1907.)

1. DIVORCE—EVIDENCE—WIFE'S CHARACTER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2053, providing evidence of the good character of a party is not admissible in a civil action, until his character has been impeached, or the issue involves it, in a divorce action against a wife for adultery, evidence as to her good character was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, §§ 365, 372.]

2. SAME—CO-RESPONDENT'S CHARACTER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2053, providing evidence of a witness' good character is not admissible until the character has been impeached, etc., where, in a divorce action against a wife for adultery, the co-respondent was not a party, and had not been impeached as a witness under section 2051, authorizing impeachment, evidence as to the excellence of his character was properly rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, §§ 365, 372, 374.]

3. SAME.

Though the custody of a minor child was involved in a divorce action against the wife for adultery, it was not error to exclude evidence as to her good character; the minor being a boy 15 years old, the wife having been adjudged guilty of adultery, and the disposition of the minor being within the sound discretion of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, §§ 365, 372, 784.]

4. APPEAL — REVIEW — EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—GROUNDS.

The trial court's ruling in rejecting evidence will be upheld on appeal, if correct, whether the ground upon which it was based was stated in the objection or not.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3406.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Divorce action by Ross H. Van Horn against Marion V. Van Horn. Defendant appeals from a judgment awarding plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce, and from an order denying a motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Alfred B. Weiler, for appellant. Johnson & Shaw, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment, awarding plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges that the appellant committed adultery with one Adolph Knopf, and prays for a judgment of divorce, and that the whole of the community property and the custody of the two minor children be awarded to the respondent. During the pendency of the action one of the children reached majority. The action was tried, and an interlocutory decree was entered awarding respondent a divorce and the custody of the remaining minor child. The question of the property rights was reserved.

Among the assigned errors was the action of the trial court in refusing to permit appellant to introduce evidence of the good character of herself and the co-respondent. The general rule is that in civil actions evidence of character of neither party thereto is admissible. 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 861, 862; 1 Wigmore on Ev. § 64. There are exceptions to this rule. In actions for slander and libel, character is necessarily put in issue, as injury to character is the gist of such actions. 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 865. There are a few other exceptions, and by some authorities different conclusions are reached as to whether the charge of adultery in an action for divorce is one of the exceptions. In this state, however, the question is controlled by section 2053, Code Civ. Proc., which reads: "Evidence of the good character of a party is not admissible in a civil action, nor of a witness in any action, until the character of such party or witness has been impeached, or unless the issue involves his character." By the allegation of adultery appellant's character was not put in issue, and evidence concerning it, under this section, was properly excluded. The co-respondent was not a party to the action, nor had he, as a witness, been impeached (section 2051, Code Civ. Proc.), so evidence of the excellence of his character was properly rejected (section 2053, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Bush, 65 Cal. 134, 3 Pac. 590, concurring opinion).

In this connection it is further contended by appellant that the custody of the minor children was involved, and for this reason testimony of the character of the appellant was admissible. The disposition of minors, in a proceeding of this kind, is always one within the control, and subject to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. The court may modify its decree as to their custody at any time. Section 138, Civ. Code; Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 635, 67 Pac. 1049. "Its jurisdiction does not depend upon specific allegations as to the fitness of the respective parties, or their ability or willingness to care for their offspring, nor upon a specific prayer for the custody." Ex parte Gordon, 95 Cal. 377, 30 Pac. 561. In matters of this kind much must be left to the sound discretion of the court in accepting or rejecting evidence. We can readily conceive of instances in which the excluded evidence might very properly be admitted. In this case, however, the minor being a boy now about 15 years of age, and the appellant having been adjudged guilty of adultery, we think the contention has but little merit.

Appellant complains that the objections to the excluded evidence just considered, and to at least one other question, were too general, and not directed to defects now urged. The ruling of the trial court in rejecting evidence will be upheld on appeal, if correct, whether the ground upon which it is based was stated in the objection or not. Davey v. Southern Pac. Co., 116 Cal. 325, 48 Pac. 117.

This disposes of all the grounds urged for reversal which merit consideration.

No error appearing in the record, the judgment and order are affirmed.

MONTIJO et al. v. ROBERT SHERER & CO. et al. (Civ. 359.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 18, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court August 17, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT — VACATION — NEGLIGENCE OF PARTY.

On a motion by one of the defendants in an action for forcible entry to set aside a default judgment against him, on the ground of excusable neglect, etc., it appeared that the moving party was a laborer in the employ of his codefendants, and as such entered on the premises, and that on being served with process he called his employer's attention to the matter and was informed that a defense would be made for him. Held, that he had a right to rely upon such statement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 280.]

2. SAME—DISCRETION OF COURT.

On a motion to set aside a default judgment on the ground of excusable neglect, etc., the discretion of the court should be exercised liberally with a view to a trial on the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 265.]

3. SAME—AFFIDAVITS.

On a motion to set aside a default judgment on the ground of excusable neglect, etc., a verified answer denying all the material allegations of the complaint is sufficient in lieu of an affidavit of merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Manuel Montijo and others against Robert Sherer and others. Appeal by plaintiffs from an order setting aside a default and granting leave to answer to defendant, Mark Ryan. Affirmed.

Hugh J. Crawford and Wm. Crawford, for appellants. Bicknell, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher (Edward E. Bacon, of counsel), for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from an order setting aside default and granting leave to answer.

Defendant Ryan was an employé of Robert Sherer & Co. and was joined with the members of that copartnership in an action for damages for forcible entry upon premises, of which plaintiffs allege themselves to have been the owners and in the actual possession, at the time of such entry, to wit, on February 2, 1906, and to and until February 14, 1906, and at divers times between said dates. Ryan was served with summons February 20, 1906, and the members of Sherer & Co. served on February 21st and 23d, respectively. Sherer & Co. answered, but Ryan failed to do so, and on March 5, 1906, the default of Ryan for not answering was regularly entered, and thereafter, on March 13, 1906, judgment was taken against him as prayed for in the complaint, to wit, for the sum of $1,500 (the same to be trebled) and for costs. On March, 17, 1906, he served notice on plaintiffs' attorney of his intention to move the court to set aside the said default and to permit him to answer the complaint filed in the action. The motion was noticed to be made on the records and files in said action and the affidavits of himself and attorney and his verified answer to the complaint, a copy of which was served with the notice. The grounds specified were that "said defendant failed to answer in time through inadvertence, mistake, and excusable neglect."

Appellants claim the order granting the motion was error for two reasons: (1) The grounds of the motion are stated conjunctively in the notice and both affidavits filed, and the showing made fails to support the conjoined reasons of inadvertence, mistake, and excusable neglect; (2) the affidavit of merits is insufficient.

The affidavits are not to be construed with the strictness applied to a pleading in matters of form, and if they show facts to justify the action of the court on the ground of inadvertence, mistake, or excusable neglect, it will be sufficient. By the affidavits and verified answer the following facts are made to appear: That the Los Angeles Interurban Railway Company was the owner and in the peaceable possession of the premises described in plaintiffs' complaint at the time of the alleged entry thereon by defendants, or, at least, that Ryan so believed. That Ryan was a laborer in the employ of his codefendants and it was in such employment he went upon said lands. That upon being served he called the attention of his employers to the service of summons upon him and was told by them that he need not bother about the matter, as the suit would be taken care of by the Los Angeles Interurban Railway Company. That he relied upon such statement and filed no answer. Under the circumstances, he had a right to rely upon the statement that the corporation whom he believed to be the real party in interest would protect him. The showing by the affidavit of Attorney Crutcher as to the reasons why he did not answer for defendant Ryan before his appearance to make the motion we do not think material.

The "records and files" upon which the motion was also based are not before us, but it does appear from the affidavit of Albert Crutcher that an answer had been filed on behalf of the defendants Sherer & Co. This was a circumstance that the court should have, and no doubt did, consider in the exercise of its discretion in the matter. That there were other pleadings before the court raising the same issues of fact as those which the defendant in default asked to have tried in his behalf might well and properly have influenced the court in case of doubt. It was authorized to examine them for the purpose of determining the motion. Lakeshore Co. v. Modoc Co., 108 Cal. 263, 41 Pac. 472. The discretion of the court in vacating the default and setting aside the judgment thereon appears to have been liberally exercised with a view to the trial of the case on its merits. This was in accordance with the universal rule. Merchants' Co. v. Los Angeles Co., 128 Cal. 621, 61 Pac. 277.

Neither of the affidavits filed contains a showing that alone would be sufficient as an affidavit of merits, but the verified answer denies every material allegation of the complaint. This has been held sufficient too often by the Supreme Court to be considered an open question. Fulweiler v. Mining Co., 83 Cal. 129, 23 Pac. 65; Merchants' Co. v. Los Angeles Co., supra; Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 314, 61 Pac. 932.

Order appealed from affirmed.

STIMSON MILL CO. v. NOLAN et al. BERG et al. v. SAME. TILDEN v. SAME. FRICK-FLEMING HARDWARE CO. et al. v. SAME. (Civ. 355.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 19, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1907.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—CONTRACT FOR IMPROVEMENT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS — TIME OF FILING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that, when the price for a building exceeds

$1,000, the contract shall be in writing subscribed by the parties thereto and shall, before the work is commenced, be filed with the county recorder, otherwise it shall be void as to the parties, and the labor and materials furnished by the persons other than the contractor shall be deemed to have been done or furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof, where work was commenced on a building under an oral agreement for an amount exceeding $1,000, and subsequently a written contract embodying the terms of the oral agreement was signed and filed, the contract was void, and the laborers and materialmen were entitled to a lien on the property for the full value of the labor or material furnished.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 289.]

2. SAME—TIME OF FINAL PAYMENT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, provides that, where the contract price for a building exceeds $1,000, it shall in the contract be made payable in installments, etc., provided that at least 25 per cent. of the price shall be made payable at least 35 days after the completion of the contract; that as to all liens except that of the contractor the contract price shall not be diminished by any prior or subsequent indebtedness, offset, or counterclaim, in favor of the reputed owner against the contractor; and that, if the contract does not conform substantially to the provisions of the section, labor and materials furnished by persons other than the contractor shall be deemed to have been done or furnished at the request of the person letting the contract, and they shall have a lien for the full value thereof. A building contract exceeding $1,000 provided that the final payment should be made when the building was completed and receipts in full were shown to the owner, but did not provide for payment within 35 days from completion of the building. The contractor abandoned the contract, and nearly all the unpaid balance was consumed in completing the building. Held, that the laborers and materialmen were entitled to a lien for the full value of their services of material furnished.

3. SAME—EFFECT—PRIORITIES.

The constitutional provision, which gives to mechanics, materialmen, and laborers of every class a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished material, places all such parties in the same class, and the Legislature cannot give preference to one performing labor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 336–339.]

4. SAME—ENFORCEMENT—ATTORNEY'S FEE.

In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, an allowance of attorneys' fees to a claimant is erroneous.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — DUE PROCESS OF LAW—MECHANICS' LIENS.

If Const. art. 20, § 15, providing for a mechanic's lien, were subordinate to article 1, § 1, thereof, in relation to the inalienable right to acquire, possess, and protect property, and to article 1, § 13, thereof, prohibiting depriving owners of property without due process of law, it would not affect the validity of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1184, relating to contracts for the construction of buildings and to mechanics' liens, since the lien is primarily upon the building which the laborers or materialmen have contributed to, and, the owner having made the building a part of the realty, the whole becomes charged with the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 940.]

6. SAME—RIGHT TO CONTRACT.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1184, providing the terms of valid contracts for more than $1,000 for the construction of improvements on land and for mechanics' liens thereon, are not unconstitutional as limiting the right to contract, since Const. art. 20, § 15, provides for a lien which without the statutes would be for the full value of the labor or material furnished, and the statutes merely curtail the liability under certain conditions.

7. SAME—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1184, relating to contracts for the construction of improvements and mechanics' liens thereon, do not take property without due process of law, since the owner makes his contract with the Constitution and laws in mind, and they form part of his contract, and they do not increase the contract price, since their effect is to protect the contractor when he honestly discharges his obligations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 940.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Actions by the Stimson Mill Company, a corporation, against M. J. Nolan and others; by C. G. Berg and others against M. J. Nolan and others, in which N. S. Wakefield and L. N. ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county.

It appears from the record that on or before June 22, 1903, defendant Nolan, the owner of the premises involved, and one Culver, a contractor, had concluded oral negotiations through which Culver had agreed to furnish materials and construct a house on said premises for the consideration of $3,100. That on said last-named date Culver, with Nolan's consent, commenced the work of such construction, and certain lien claimants delivered upon the premises the brick necessary for the foundation, while others delivered upon the premises the lumber necessary for the construction. Thereafter, on June 26th, Nolan and Culver entered into a written contract for the construction of a house, which was in all respects the same as the oral agreement. In this written contract the construction price of $3,100 was made payable in four equal installments, of which three were to be paid during the construction, and the last "when the house was completed and receipts in full shown to the owner." After this contract had been executed, and such contract and an accompanying bond filed in the recorder's office, other lien claimants furnished materials and performed labor upon said building. The aggregate value of all materials and labor furnished by all claimants, on October 26, 1903, amounted to $1,770. On this date the contractor abandoned the work. The court finds that on and before the abandonment the value of the work and materials furnished under the contract upon the house, estimated as nearly as may be by the standard of the whole contract price here involved, amounted to $2,520, and that the contractor had been previously paid by the owner $2,325, leaving a balance of $195 due, which the court found was the whole amount due from the owner to the contractor. The whole amount of expenditure required upon the part of the owner to complete the building is not made to appear. It appears that there was unpaid to the lien claimants on the 26th of October, 1903, on account of the materials furnished and labor performed by them, the aggregate sum of $1,062.94. It further appears that the building was completed December 1, 1903, and that thereafter and within due time all of these claimants duly perfected their liens. Various suits were instituted by these claimants upon their liens, all of which were consolidated and heard in this action. Upon the trial, the court found the contract between Nolan and Culver a valid one as to all parties furnishing materials or performing labor after its filing, but inoperative as to those who furnished labor and materials before such filing; and, further, that the omission to reserve 25 per cent. of the contract price 35 days after completion did not invalidate the contract. Judgment was accordingly rendered in favor of the lien claimants who furnished labor and materials after the filing of the contract to the full extent of their claims; that Wakefield, one of the claimants. being a laborer, and his claim being for labor, had preference and priority over the other claimants who furnished materials after the filing of the contract, and that claim, amounting to $144.25, with costs for filing the lien and attorney's fees, was adjudged a preferred claim and the full amount thereof ordered paid, which payment exhausted all the money so found in the hands of the owner, and accordingly no relief was granted any of the remaining claimants.

The judgment of the trial court is erroneous for several reasons: First, because the court erred in holding the contract between the owner and contractor valid as affecting the rights of lien claimants. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "All such contracts shall be in writing when the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeds one thousand dollars, and shall be subscribed by the parties thereto, and the said contract, or a memorandum thereof, setting forth * * * the total amount to be paid thereunder, and the amounts of all partial payments, together with the times when such payments shall be due and payable, shall, before the work is commenced, be filed in the office of the county recorder of the county or city and county, where the property is situated; * * * otherwise they shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto; and in such case, the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." No surreptitious commencement of work is involved. Hence we have a deliberate violation of the provisions of this section, the effect of which is declared by the statute. To hold such a contract valid, under the circumstances of this case, is to ignore the plain provisions of a statute. The contract being void, those entitled to liens under the Constitution are unrestricted in their rights to have a lien for the full value of materials and labor furnished. Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 174, 65 Pac. 391.

Again, section 1184, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "No part of the contract price shall, by the terms of any such contract, be made payable, nor shall the same or any part thereof be paid in advance of the commencement of the work, but the contract price shall, by the terms of the contract, be made payable in installments at specified times after the commencement of the work, or on the completion of specified portions of the work, or on the completion of the whole work; provided, that at least twenty-five per cent. of the whole contract price shall be made payable at least thirty-five days after the final completion of the contract. * * * In case such contracts and alterations thereof do not conform substantially to the provisions of this section, the labor done and materials furnished by all persons except the contractor shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance and request of the person who contracted with the contractor, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." In this contract so executed and filed after the commencement of the work there is an entire omission to provide for the final payment of 25 per cent. 35 days after completion, which is intended for the benefit of lien claimants, and the mere statement in the contract, inserted for the benefit of the contractor, that the owner might pay the whole amount when receipts were produced, cannot be construed as a substantial compliance with the statute, or even an attempt in that direction. The whole contract price was made payable upon completion, and the last payment was treated by all parties to the contract as the completion payment; for the amount of such payment was depleted by the expenses of completion made necessary by abandonment. In Hampton v. Christensen, 84 Pac. 203, 148

Cal. 729, Mr. Justice Henshaw, speaking for the court, says: "Whatever may be said of other payments, this amount of money (35-day payment) cannot lawfully be depleted or reduced to the injury of any such claimant"—that out of the completion payment the necessary cost to the owner on completion, in case of abandonment, must be taken. "If such completion payment be more than exhausted by the demands of the owner, * * * the excess of such demand cannot be carried over and made a charge against the 25 per cent. final payment, to the injury of any lien claimant thereon. * * * This final payment is the only fund which the Legislature has sequestered to meet the demand of the lien claimants. To permit this (its depletion) would be to deprive them of their constitutional right to a lien." The court erred in refusing to award a lien for the full value of the material and labor to those who bestowed the same after the contract was filed.

The court erred in awarding Wakefield preference over other lien claimants furnishing materials and performing labor. The constitutional provision which gives to mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, places such parties in the same class. Their equality is established by the Constitution and cannot be impaired or destroyed by the Legislature. Miltimore v. Nofziger Bros. L. Co. (Cal.) 90 Pac. 114. The allowance of an attorney's fee to the various claimants is also erroneous. Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor (Cal.) 88 Pac. 982.

Respondent Nolan, in a supplemental brief, contends for the validity of the contract and urges in support thereof that section 15, art. 20, of our state Constitution, which guaranties to every laborer and materialman a lien upon a structure for the value of labor bestowed or materials furnished in its construction, is subordinate to section 1, art. 1, of the same Constitution, which declares that "all men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of * * * acquiring, possessing and protecting property"; and that it is subordinate, also, to section 13, art. 1, which declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law."

Respondent properly insists that the inalienable right to acquire and possess property includes the right of contracting with reference thereto. Were we to concede the subordinate character of section 15, still we are unable to appreciate the conflict, one with the other, which is suggested by respondent. The constitutional lien to the laborer and materialman is given upon the structure as the principal thing. Humboldt Lumber Co. v. Crisp, 146 Cal. 686, 81 Pac. 30, 106 Am. St. Rep. 75. The right to declare such lien is based upon the theory that the materialman and laborer produce the thing upon which the lien is declared. Tuttle v. Montford, 7 Cal. 359. In Jones v. Hotel Company, 30 C. C. A. 108, 86 Fed. 370, it is said by the court, in relation to statutes creating similar rights of lien: "But the validity of the statutes need not be rested upon mere authority. They find sanction in the dictates of natural justice, and most often administer an equity which has recognition under every system of law. That principle is that every one who by his labor or materials has contributed to the preservation or enhancement of the property of another thereby acquires a right to compensation." It is no infringement upon an existing right of property to require one who has procured another to create a structure to pay for the work and materials involved in such creation. When the owner of land makes such structure a part of the land previously owned by him, it is not inequitable or destructive of his rights to say that, having by his own act made this labor and material of another an inseparable portion of his land, the lien upon the building should extend to the land necessary for its use. Having made the building a part of his land, it became as such charged with the lien upon the structure. Linck v. Meikeljohn, 2 Cal. App. 508, 84 Pac. 309.

It is next contended that sections 1183 and 1184, Code Civ. Proc., which provide the terms of valid contracts as affecting those in excess of $1,000, are unconstitutional as an attempt to circumscribe the right of private contract within the usual pursuits of business, and are an unreasonable restriction upon the owner of his rights in regard to its use and upon his power to make contracts concerning the same; this contention being based largely upon the decisions of our own Supreme Court in Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 123, 68 Pac. 481, 57 L. R. A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116, and Gibbs v. Tally, 133 Cal. 373, 65 Pac. 970.[1] We do not accept either of these decisions as determinative of the questions here involved. Assuming, as we do, the validity of section 15, art. 20, of the Constitution, which guaranties the lien, we find that this constitutional right of the laborer and materialman extends to the full value of all labor and materials bestowed or furnished; and, without legislation, such value is the measure of recovery. The Legislature has seen fit, under the authority given it by the Constitution, to provide by the sections complained of certain conditions, upon the observance of which the constitutional measure of lien and recovery is restricted to the sum specified in the contract between the owner and contractor. There is no attempt to enlarge the rights of lien claimants under any circumstances, for under the sections mentioned, where a valid contract is made, the value of the thing furnished measures the extent to which any claim can be found. The effect, therefore, of these sections is not to impair any existing right of the owner, but, in effect, to confer a right not previously existing by which his liability may, under certain circumstances, be curtailed. The owner's liberty of action in relation to this property is not invaded by the statute. He need not employ an intermediary to erect his building; but, if he does the law ingrafts upon his act certain consequences. Henry v. Evans, 10 S. W. 872, 97 Mo. 47, 3 L. R. A. 332. There is no taking of property without due process of law. The contract by the owner is made voluntarily and with the Constitution and laws in mind, and they form part of such contract, and he must be taken to have consented to the effect of such enactments. That similar rights are not conferred by the sections upon those who make improvements of nominal value and under $1,000 is a matter of which respondent cannot complain. Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 451, 58 Pac. 920. Nor can it be said that this statute can have the effect to increase the necessary cost of the structure simply because the contractor who bids thereon does so under provisions of the law which require reasonable restrictions as to the time and manner of his payment, for this same law insures to him a lien for his contract price which he otherwise would not have. Hence it would be unreasonable to say that because of such a statute a contractor is injured when the only effect thereof can be to afford him security, when he honestly discharges the obligations imposed upon him by its terms.

1. Insurance — Life Insurance — Stipulations—Payments of Premiums in Arrears.

A stipulation in a life policy that no premiums in arrears shall be received, except by agreement in writing signed by either the president, vice president, secretary, or actuary of the insurer whose authority will not be delegated, is valid.

2. Same—Contract of Insurance—Knowledge of Insured.

An insured in a life policy is charged with knowledge of the stipulations therein.

3. Same—Nonpayment of Premiums—Waiver.

A life policy stipulated that no premiums in arrears should be received except by agreement signed by either of designated officers of the insurer. An agent with authority to collect premiums called to collect the premium on a policy two days before it fell due. On being informed by the beneficiary that payment could not be made, he stated that he would call on a date after the premium became due. On that day he again called, and the beneficiary, not having all the money, asked him to call later in the same day, when she expected to have it all; but he replied that he would call again four days later. Before he called again, the insured died. The agent had the insurer's premium receipt containing no limitation with respect to its validity if delivered after the due date. The beneficiary did not know that fact. No knowledge of the extensions of time to pay the premium was brought home to the insurer. Held, that the insurer did not waive a forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of the premium when due.

4. Same — Agent — Authority to Collect Premiums — Authority to Extend Time for Payment of Premiums.

An agent of an insurer, with authority to collect premiums, has no authority to extend the time for the payment of premiums or to waive a forfeiture resulting from nonpayment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Hannah Cayford against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action brought to recover upon a policy of life insurance. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered. The defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and from the judgment and order denying its motion for a new trial the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

This case has once been before the Supreme Court upon an appeal taken from an order sustaining a demurrer. 144 Cal. 763, 78 Pac. 258.

The policy in question was issued on the life of Richard N. Cayford, plaintiff's husband, payable to plaintiff as beneficiary. It was issued March 20, 1902, and called for the payment of a semiannual premium on the 20th of March and September in each year. The policy provided that the failure to pay any premium when due would render the policy void. The second semiannual premium fell due September 20, 1902, and was not paid. On October 5, 1902, the insured died. The testimony disclosed that J. N. Pittman had solicited the insurance, and had collected the first premium. On the 18th of September, two days before the second premium fell due, he called to collect this premium. Mrs. Cayford told him that they were not prepared to pay it. Pittman said that that would be all right; that he would call again on October 4th. On that day he accordingly called and saw Mrs. Cayford. She said she did not then have all the money, and asked him to call later in the afternoon, when she expected to have it; but he replied that he would call again on the 8th of the month. On the 5th of October the insured died. Pittman had with him on his visits of September 18th and October 4th the company's premium receipt for the second annual premium, executed as therein required by both the secretary of the company and its superintendent. One of the provisions of the policy declares: "The contract between the parties hereto is completely set forth in this policy and the application therefor taken together, and none of its terms can be varied or modified, nor any forfeiture waived or premiums in arrears received except by agreement in writing signed by either the president, vice-president, secretary or actuary, whose authority for this purpose will not be delegated; no other person has or will be given any authority."

Respondent claims that the events just narrated bring this case within the doctrine laid down in the case of Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 124 Cal. 74, 56 Pac. 773, and Id., 140 Cal. 57, 73 Pac. 740. In that case a certain premium became due November 15, 1895. On that day and the next day the general manager of the company sent its collector to the insured to collect the premium. It was not paid. Through the efforts of one Gilmore, representing Knarston, the insured, two extensions of time within which to make payment were granted by the general manager. Within the extended time Knarston was killed in a railroad accident. The policy contained the usual forfeiture clause. The Supreme Court, in the two appeals in that case, held that an attempt by the company to collect a premium after default is a waiver of the forfeiture which might have otherwise been claimed; that, where the insured died while the company was still trying to collect the premium, the policy would be treated as still in force. The decision turned expressly on the fact that the waiver was the act of a general agent of the insurance company, and that the insured had no notice of any limitation on his authority.

There is no doubt that this case, as claimed by the respondent, would be within the doctrine of the Knarston Case if the acts of Pittman were the acts of the company. Counsel for the respondent argues that the possession of the receipt after its due date by Pittman, the collector of the company, implied the power to deliver it after that date; that there appeared on the face of the receipt no limitation of its validity if delivered after the due date of the premium; that accordingly, if it had been in fact delivered by Pittman, though after the due date, his act would have been the act of the company, and the forfeiture would have been waived. We cannot agree with this view. Mrs. Cayford did not know that Pittman had the premium receipt, and she knew nothing of its contents. No knowledge of the extensions of time to pay the premium, granted by Pittman to the insured, was brought home to the company. The limitation, in the conditions of the policy, on the authority of subordinate agents to waive forfeitures, or collect overdue premiums is valid. Shuggart v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co., 55 Cal. 408; Enos v. Sun Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 621, 8 Pac. 379; Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 77, 5 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667. The assured knew of this provision, or what is the same thing, is charged with knowledge of it. Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., supra. Under the circumstances of this case, it cannot be held that the company waived the forfeiture caused by the failure to pay the premium when due. Authority to collect premiums does not imply authority to extend the time for the payment of such premiums, or to waive a forfeiture resulting from nonpayment. Bryan v. National Life Ins. Ass'n, 21 R. I. 149, 42 Atl. 513; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Abbey, 88 S. W. 950, 76 Ark. 328; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. McGrath, 52 N. J. Law, 358, 19 Atl. 386.

In the case of Iowa Life Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. 126, 47 L. Ed. 204, the policy contained a clause similar to the one referred to in the policy in this case, restricting the power of the agents of the company in the matter of waiving forfeitures. In that case it was claimed that, conceding the validity of such a clause, the clause itself had nevertheless been waived by the company. A premium note had been placed in the hands of an agent for collection. He had extended the time for its payment, and it was allowed to remain in his hands after maturity. It was held, nevertheless, that his act was unauthorized, and that the company was not estopped from relying on the forfeiture.

In the case of Bank of Commerce v. New York Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 643, 125 Ga. 552, it was held that the acceptance of money by a collecting agent upon an overdue premium note did not bind the company as a waiver of the forfeiture resulting from nonpayment of the note at maturity.

The following cases tend more or less to support the conclusion we have reached in this case: Collins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 32 Mont. 329, 80 Pac. 609, 1092, 108 Am. St. Rep. 578; Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Bussell, 86 S. W. 814, 75 Ark. 25.

The judgment and order are reversed.

ARWINE v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(L. A. 2,009.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 8, 1907.)

1. Physicians and Surgeons — License to Practice—Certificates of Foreign Medical Boards.

St. 1901, pp. 57, 59, c. 51, §§ 5, 6, authorize the board of medical examiners to license an applicant to practice after examination, or without examination on presentation of a certificate from the medical examining board of the District of Columbia or any state or territory whose legal requirements at the time of issuing the certificate were not less than those of California at the time such certificate was presented for registration to the California board. Held, that certificates or licenses to practice medicine and surgery granted by the board of examiners of the District of Columbia and the state of Indiana, in the absence of proof that the requirements of such boards were not less than those of California at the time the certificates were presented for registration, were insufficient to entitle the applicant to a license in California.

2. Mandamus—Burden of Proof.

On an application for mandamus against a medical board to compel petitioner's registration as a physician and surgeon within the state, the burden is on the petitioner to prove such material allegations on behalf of his claim as are denied by the answer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 372.]

3. Constitutional Law — Delegation of Legislative Power.

St. 1901, p. 56, c. 51, authorizes the state medical board to accept from an applicant for registration as a physician and surgeon only such a diploma as is issued by some legally chartered medical school, the requirements of which shall have been at the time of granting the diploma in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year, was not void as an improper delegation of legislative power.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 99.]

4. Physicians and Surgeons — License —Qualifications—Proof.

St. 1901, p. 56, c. 51, authorizing issuance of licenses to practice medicine within the state, declares that, when any applicant has shown himself possessed of the qualifications required "and" has successfully passed the examination by the board, the certificate must be issued, etc.; and section 5 (page 57) requires the production of the diploma issued by some legally chartered medical school, the requirements of which shall have been in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges of that year, or satisfactory evidence of having possessed such diploma or a license from a legally constituted institution granting medical and surgical licenses only on actual examination or satisfactory evidence as having possessed such a license. Held, that such act required both a diploma or license and an examination by the board.

In Bank. Application by James T. Arwine for writ of mandamus against the board of medical examiners of the state of California and the members of the board, etc. An order was entered granting the relief prayed by the District Court of Appeal, and the case was transferred to the Supreme Court for hearing in bank. Writ denied.

Wallace W. Wideman and Benjamin P. Welch, for plaintiff. William C. Tait, George B. Becke, and Charles S. Wheeler (J. F. Bowie, of counsel), for defendants.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an application for a writ of mandamus directed to the defendants requiring them to issue to the plaintiff a certificate to practice medicine and surgery in the state of California. The application was originally made to the District Court of Appeal for the Second District. The matter was submitted for decision to that court upon the affidavits filed by plaintiff at the institution of the proceeding and the verified answer of the defendants thereto. That court gave judgment for plaintiff, directing the issuance of the writ as prayed. In its opinion that court found as a fact that plaintiff had successfully passed the examination required by the provisions of the act for the regulation of the practice of medicine and surgery. St. 1901, p. 56, c. 51. On petition for a hearing in this court, an order was made by us vacating such judgment and directing that the proceeding be heard and determined by this court. The matter has now been submitted to us for decision, as it was to the District Court of Appeal, upon the affidavits and answer, and the stipulation of counsel for defendants, made upon the oral argument, that as to the facts of the case the opinion of the District Court of Appeal may be accepted as correct.

The right of the plaintiff to the certificate sought by him was dependent upon his compliance with the provisions of the act already referred to. That act required that, in order to procure such certificate, he must produce before the board of medical examiners, in addition to satisfactory testimonials of good moral character, a "diploma issued by some legally chartered medical school, the requirements of which medical school shall have been at the time of granting such diploma, in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year, or satisfactory evidence of having possessed such a diploma, or a license from some legally constituted institution which grants medical and surgical licenses only upon actual examination, or satisfactory evidence of having possessed such a license." It further required that, in addition to the presentation of such credentials, the applicant must be personally examined by such board of medical examiners and successfully pass such examination. It further provided that such board might, in its discretion, accept and register, without examination of the applicant, any certificate which shall have been issued to the applicant by the medical examining board of the District of Columbia or any state or territory of the United States, provided that the legal requirements of such medical examining board shall have been, at the time of issuing such certificate, in no degree or particular less than those of California at the time when such certificate shall be presented for registration to the board created by this act. Sections 5, 6, pp. 57, 59, of said act. The affidavits filed by plaintiff in instituting this proceeding contained allegations showing a sufficient compliance with these provisions to entitle him to a certificate. These allegations were denied by the answer in two material matters, viz.: As to the sufficiency of the credentials presented by him with his application for a certificate, and as to the satisfactory character of his examination as to qualifications.

Upon the question as to the satisfactory character of the examination, we shall assume that the issue must be determined in favor of plaintiff under the stipulation of defendants' counsel as to the effect to be given to the opinion of the District Court of Appeal relating to the facts of the case. In this regard, the ultimate fact was as to whether or not the plaintiff had successfully passed the examination, and the District Court of Appeal explicitly found "that the plaintiff's examination was successful."

In the matter of credentials, the only documents alleged by the affidavits to have been produced to the board of medical examiners were, first, a diploma issued to plaintiff from the medical department of the University of the South at Sewannee, Tenn., which was alleged to be a legally chartered medical school, the requirements of which at the time of granting the diploma were in no material particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year; and, second, certificates or licenses to practice medicine and surgery granted by the boards of examiners of the District of Columbia and the state of Indiana. As to the latter, it was not alleged nor does it otherwise appear that either of such boards granted licenses "only upon actual examination," or that the legal requirements of either of said boards were, at the time it issued the certificate, in no degree or particular less than those of California at the time when such certificates were presented for registration. So far as the record before us shows, these certificates were, therefore, insufficient under the requirements of the act, and could not authorize the granting of a license by defendants.

Concerning the diploma from the medical department of the University of the South, the allegations as to the requirements of the school were such, as we have seen, as to require acceptance of the diploma issued to plaintiff as satisfactory, viz., that those requirements were in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year. This allegation is, however, denied by defendants in their answer. The issue of fact thus made was not determined by the District Court of Appeals; that court saying in its opinion that upon the evidence before it that question of fact could not be determined. That opinion does not state any evidence which enables us to determine this question, and no evidence was introduced before us upon the issue. The burden is, of course, upon the plaintiff, in a proceeding of this character, to prove such material allegations in behalf of his claim as are denied by the answer.

The finding upon this issue must, therefore, be against plaintiff, and it follows that, upon the case made before us, the diploma must be held insufficient under the requirements of the act.

It is suggested that the provision of the act authorizing the acceptance of only such a diploma as is issued by some legally chartered medical school, "the requirements of which medical school shall have been at the time of granting such diploma, in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year," is void, because the effect thereof is to delegate to this association a power which, it is claimed, can be exercised only by the Legislature itself. This court has recently decided to the contrary, in a case where a similar contention was made and fully considered. Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412, 417, 419, 77 Pac. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249. It is urged that what was said upon this point in that case was dictum. We do not so consider it; but, even if it were, we see no reason for receding from or modifying the views there expressed, and we adhere thereto.

It is further urged that the act should be construed as rendering an applicant entitled to a certificate upon his passing a satisfactory examination, even though he fails to produce the required diploma or license; in other words, that the act entitles him to a certificate either upon the production of a proper diploma or license, or upon passing a satisfactory examination. Clearly the act will bear no such construction. The language of the provision as to production of diploma or license is such as to necessarily make it applicable to every case, and no exception thereto is declared in any other part of the act. This provision is immediately followed by the provision as to examination, which declares: "In addition to the requirements above set forth, each applicant for a certificate must be personally examined as to his qualifications to practice medicine and surgery," etc. The next section (6) provides: "When any applicant has shown himself to be possessed of the qualifications herein required, and has successfully passed the said examination, a certificate must be issued," etc. In the face of such clear and unambiguous language, there can be no doubt as to the proper construction of the act in this regard. A diploma or license coming up to the requirements of the act is essential in every case to the right to a certificate, however well qualified the applicant may be in other respects.

We are forced to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the long experience of plaintiff as a practicing physician and surgeon, extending over a period of more than 10 years, and notwithstanding that he may have successfully passed the examination as to his qualifications to practice, it must be here held that he has failed to comply with the provisions of the act in the matter of producing a proper diploma or license, and, therefore, that he must fail in this proceeding.

The application for a writ of mandamus is denied.

LITTLE v. THATCHER. (L. A. 2,005.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—INSUFFICIENT UNDERTAKING.

A notice of appeal from an order denying a new trial is not supported by an undertaking reciting only the judgment, stating that it was rendered on the date when the motion for a new trial was overruled, the judgment having been rendered several months before, and reciting a desire to appeal therefrom, the surety only undertaking that appellant will pay such costs and damages as may be awarded against her on "said appeal."

2. SAME—RIGHT TO CURE ERROR.

The recitals in an undertaking on appeal must identify the appeal it is intended to support, and, if they do not do so, the error is not curable under Code Civ. Proc. § 954, prohibiting the dismissal of an appeal for insufficiency of the undertaking, if a good one be filed before the hearing of the motion to dismiss.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by W. E. Little against Catherine M. Thatcher. From an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals, and plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Hahn & Hahn and Gavin McNab, for appellant. James P. Clark, M. M. Meyers, Borden & Carhart, Chas. L. Batcheller, E. E. Mellette, J. R. Wilder, Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, A. L. & J. E. Stephens, and John W. Shenk, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal based upon the grounds, first, that the transcript was not served on the respondents; second, that no sufficient transcript was filed; and, third, that the notice of appeal is not supported by an undertaking. As to the first ground, it is now admitted that the printed transcripts were duly served. As to the second, the objection is obviated by the filing of a supplemental transcript by leave of the court. The only question remaining relates to the $300 undertaking on appeal. The judgment in the action was rendered and entered February 20, 1906. A motion for a new trial was denied October 12, 1906, after the time for appealing from the judgment had expired. On the 22d of October two of the defendants gave notice of an appeal from that order, and within the time allowed by law filed the following undertaking: "Whereas, in an action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, judgment was on the 12th day of October, 1906, rendered by the said court in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiffs for the sum of $1700 principal; and, whereas, the said defendants are dissatisfied with the said judgment and desirous of appealing therefrom to the District Court of Appeals of California: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, and of such appeal, the National Surety Company of New York, a corporation having its principal place of business in the city of New York, state of New York, and having complied with all the requirements of the laws of the state of California respecting such corporations, does hereby undertake in the sum of three hundred dollars ($300) and promises on the part of the appellant that said appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against them on said appeal, or on a dismissal thereof not exceeding the aforesaid sum of three hundred dollars $300.00, to which amount it acknowledges itself bound."

The undertaking, it will be observed, recites only the judgment, and states that it was rendered on the date when the motion for a new trial was overruled. It recites the desire of the said defendants to appeal therefrom, and the surety only undertakes that the appellants will pay such costs and damages as may be awarded against them on "said appeal." Clearly it is insufficient in terms to support the appeal from the order; but, since an undertaking in proper form, approved by one of the justices of this court, was filed before the hearing of the motion to dismiss, the question to be decided is whether the undertaking originally filed was merely insufficient within the meaning of section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the fault curable by the approval and filing of a new one, or whether with respect to the appeal from the order it was in effect no undertaking at all. In a number of cases heretofore decided this court has held that the recitals in an undertaking on appeal must identify the appeal which it is intended to support, and that if they fail to do so the error is incurable. See Estate of Heydenfeldt, 119 Cal. 347, 51 Pac. 543, and cases there cited. See, also, Pac. Pav. Co. v. Bolton, 89 Cal. 154, 26 Pac. 650, Schurtz v. Romer, 81 Cal. 244, 22 Pac. 657, and cases cited under this case in the notes to California Decisions. I have never yielded a willing assent to this strict construction of the statute, but the rule is settled, and there does not seem to be any ground upon which this case can be distinguished from those in which the undertaking has been held to be fatally defective. The fact that when the undertaking was executed the time for appealing from the judgment had expired and that the only appeal by which the judgment might be set aside was an appeal from the order, the fact that the date of the judgment as recited shows that the surety confused the judgment and the order, and all the extraneous facts in the case amount to nothing in the face of the doctrine upon which the rule is founded; the doctrine, that is to say, that the recitals in the undertaking must identify the particular appeal which it is intended to perfect.

The appeal is dismissed.

BELL v. STAACKE et al. (L. A. 1,852.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 22, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—DISMISSAL—NEW TRIAL—EFFECT ON JUDGMENT.

Where an appeal from a judgment is dismissed, the judgment is vacated by a subsequent order granting a new trial on appeal from an order denying the same.

2. SAME—SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS—FORM.

Appellant's motion for a new trial contained 285 specifications of errors of law occurring at the trial as to which appellant's brief contained only a reference to pages "685–703" of the transcript, making such pages and each and all of the specifications of errors of law therein set forth a part of its specifications, designating each of the errors as grounds for reversal of the order denying a new trial. The transcript merely contained bare specifications of alleged errors, and there was neither in the transcript nor brief any reference to the page or folio of the transcript where any ruling complained of was shown nor any argument in support of the alleged errors appeared. Held, that such specifications were fatally defective.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by John S. Bell against George Staacke and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appealed. Appeal from judgment dismissed. Order affirmed.

See 83 Pac. 245.

Richards & Currier and J. L. Crittenden, for appellant. T. Z. Blakeman, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff brought this action against defendant Staacke, and the representatives of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, to obtain a decree declaring that a tract of land in Santa Barbara county containing 10,000 acres, the title to which stands of record in the name of said Staacke, is held by him in trust for plaintiff, and requiring a conveyance thereof to him by Staacke. The defendants, by answer and cross-complaint, alleged that, while the title to the land was held by Staacke in trust for plaintiff, it was also held by him as security for certain advances made by Thomas Bell in his lifetime, at the instance and for the benefit of plaintiff, and asked that the claim of the estate against the land be enforced by a sale thereof. Upon a former trial the trial court, while finding that plaintiff was indebted to the estate of Thomas Bell in the sum of $52,120.15 for money advanced and loaned him by Thomas Bell, also found that the land was held by Staacke in trust solely for plaintiff, and not as security for any indebtedness due from him to the estate. It therefore gave personal judgment only in favor of the estate against plaintiff for the said amount, and directed a conveyance of the land by Staacke to plaintiff. The defendants appealed from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The appeal from the judgment was dismissed on the ground that the same had been prematurely taken. Bell v. Staacke, 137 Cal. 307, 70 Pac. 171. On the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, which was subsequently heard, it was decided by this court that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the conclusion of the trial court that the land was not held as security for the payment of the indebtedness due Thomas Bell from plaintiff; it being declared after a careful view of the evidence contained in the record that such evidence showed without substantial conflict that the land was conveyed to Staacke to be held by him as security for the payment by plaintiff to Thomas Bell of all sums of money theretofore advanced or thereafter to be advanced to plaintiff by said Thomas Bell. The order denying defendants' motion for a new trial was reversed, except as to the issues relative to the amount of indebtedness due the estate from plaintiff, and the cause remanded for a new trial except as to the issues last referred to. Bell v. Staacke, 141 Cal. 186, 74 Pac. 774. Upon the new trial, which was had on the same pleadings, without change or amendment of any kind therein, the court found in favor of defendants upon the issues tendered by the answer and cross-complaint, and determined that Staacke holds the land in trust, first, as security for the payment of the sums due the estate, amounting with interest accrued on the $52,120.15 indebtedness to $95,101.07; and, second, in trust for the use and benefit of plaintiff. Judgment was given for the sale of the land for the payment of the indebtedness, together with costs and accruing interest. Plaintiff appealed from such judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, but the appeal from the judgment has heretofore been dismissed.

It is contended that the evidence on the retrial was insufficient to sustain any of the material findings in favor of defendant. An examination of the 466 pages of the printed transcript containing the evidence given on the retrial shows that the evidence before the court was practically the same as that given on the former trial. Most of the testimony given consisted, by stipulation, of transcriptions of the reporter's notes taken at the former trial, and the additional evidence introduced did not materially affect the situation. The evidence was amply sufficient to support all the material allegations.

The brief of counsel for plaintiff contains a statement of facts which they claim were admitted by the pleadings, and which, they further claim, are in some respects contrary to the findings. This matter was available to plaintiff on the former appeal in support of the decision on the facts there under review; there having been no change in the pleadings. We have examined the record in the light of this statement of counsel, and find no admission in the pleadings contrary to any finding of fact, unless the pleadings show an admission that on or about March 6, 1889, the plaintiff and Thomas Bell by consent rescinded the agreement relating to the holding by said Thomas Bell, as security for plaintiff's indebtedness, of the Grover notes and mortgages, which agreement is described in the former opinion. 141 Cal. 197. The allegation to this effect was made in one of plaintiff's amendments to plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint, and it is claimed that the allegation was not denied. It was apparently treated at the trial as denied, and evidence was received thereon, the trial court finding against the allegation. This matter is, however, of no importance on this appeal. It may be assumed that the rescission of this agreement as to the Grover notes and mortgages was made as alleged, and there is still ample evidence to support the material findings of the court as to the terms and conditions upon which the land in dispute was placed in the name of Staacke. If the court had found in accord with such allegation of rescission, instead of against it, such finding would have been simply a finding as to a specific fact not necessarily inconsistent with the findings as to the agreement and understanding upon which the land was placed in the name of Staacke. What we have said on this point sufficiently disposes also of the claim that, by reason of said alleged admission, the decision is against law, and the claim that, for the same reason, the findings do not support the judgment. It should be observed, however, that questions as to the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment cannot be considered on an appeal from an order granting or denying a motion for a new trial.

A claim that the superior court had no jurisdiction to retry this case, notwithstanding that it was remanded by this court for a new trial, is based on the fact that the appeal from the former judgment in favor of plaintiff was dismissed. This, it is said, constituted an affirmance of the judgment, preventing the subsequent giving of any other judgment. But a judgment, even although expressly affirmed on appeal, is vacated by an order granting a new trial. See Swett v. Grey, 141 Cal. 83, 88, 74 Pac. 551.

There are 285 specifications of errors in law occurring at the trial made in the statement on motion for a new trial. As to these all that is said in their brief by counsel for plaintiff is that they "hereby specially and respectfully refer to pages 685 to 703 of the transcript as to the specification of errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the plaintiff, and hereby make said pages of the transcript, and each and all of the specifications of errors of law therein set forth a part of this point and of these points and authorities as if set forth at length herein, and we hereby point out and designate each of said errors so specified as one of the grounds upon which appellants claim the right to a reversal of said order denying a new trial." The portions of the transcript thus referred to contain simply the bare specifications of alleged errors. There is neither in transcript nor brief any reference to the page or folio of the 723-page transcript where any ruling complained of is shown, or any argument in support of the claim that the trial court erred to plaintiff's prejudice in any of these rulings. Under such circumstances we are justified in disregarding such claim altogether. See People v. Wo, 120 Cal. 294, 297, 52 Pac. 833; Whyte v. Rosencrantz, 123 Cal. 634, 642, 56 Pac. 436, 69 Am. St. Rep. 90; People v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 458, 475, 39 Pac. 864; People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 264, 38 Pac. 720; Wheelock v. Godfrey, 100 Cal. 578, 589, 35 Pac. 317; Neylan v. Green, 82 Cal. 128, 23 Pac. 42; West v. Crawford, 80 Cal. 19, 33, 21 Pac. 1123. It is proper to say, however, that in our examination of the evidence contained in the record we have discovered no erroneous ruling on the part of the trial court.

The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

CHAPMAN v. MOORE et al. (L. A. 1,881.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 16, 1907.)

1. Abatement and Revival—Other Action Pending.

Evidence that a prior suit to quiet title to the same lot against the same parties had been brought by plaintiff's predecessor in interest, and was pending as to defendants S. when the present action for the same relief was brought against them and others, was sufficient to entitle them to the abatement of the present action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Abatement and Revival, §§ 73, 76.]

2. Process—Publication — Summons — Affidavit.

An affidavit for publication of a summons against nonresidents recited that they had been sought for to obtain service, but after diligent search and inquiry could not be found within the state. It then proceeded to show the kind of search and inquiry that had been made; that the affiant had made inquiry of all persons from whom he could expect to obtain information as to the residence of the defendants, together with the names of the persons of whom he made inquiries, and why he expected them to know of the defendants' whereabouts. Held, that the affidavit constituted a substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 412, authorizing service by publication where the person sought to be served "cannot after due diligence be found within the state," though the affidavit failed to expressly state the result of the affiant's inquiries.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Process, § 118.]

3. Judgment — Quieting Title — Effect as Evidence.

Where a judgment in a suit to quiet title determined that a party to the action was the owner of the property in controversy, such judgment was admissible in evidence in behalf of a party claiming under the judgment and subsequently asserting a claim to the property affected by it, as a link in his chain of title as against persons not parties nor privies claiming an interest in the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1233.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by William Chapman against O. A. Moore and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed as to defendants Strohm and reversed as to defendant Moore.

Charles Lantz, for appellant. William Chambers, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action was originally commenced by M. M. Davis as plaintiff, and subsequent to its commencement the present plaintiff, William Chapman, was substituted in the superior court for said Davis as plaintiff. The action was brought to quiet title to lot 4 in block C of the Sunset tract, in the city of Los Angeles; the plaintiff making the usual allegations of ownership of the property, and the defendants asserting claims thereto adverse to him. The defendant O. A. Moore, in her answer, denied the alleged ownership of plaintiff, and asserted ownership of the lot to be in herself. The defendants Strohm, in a separate answer, also denied the ownership of plaintiff, and asserted that the defendant Susan Strohm was the owner of the property. These latter defendants also pleaded in abatement of the present action the pendency of a prior action brought against them by M. M. Davis to quiet title to this same lot. Upon the trial the court found in favor of the defendants Strohm on their plea of abatement, found also that plaintiff was not the owner of the property, and entered judgment that the action abate as to the Strohms, and in favor of O. A. Moore for her costs. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and an order denying a motion made by him for a new trial. On the trial of the cause the only evidence presented upon the issue of ownership of the property was that offered by the plaintiff. No evidence was offered by the defendants at all save by the Strohms in support of their plea in abatement.

As grounds for a reversal it is insisted by appellant that the court erred in sustaining the plea of abatement interposed by the Strohms, that it erred also in rejecting certain evidence offered by plaintiff, and that the finding of the court that plaintiff was not the owner of the property in dispute was not justified by the evidence.

As to the plea in abatement: This was the first issue tried by the court. In support of it the Strohms offered in evidence the record in the suit of M. M. Davis v. B. E. Ninde, Samuel Strohm, Susan Strohm, William Patterson et al., which showed that a suit to quiet title to the same lot involved in the action then on trial was commenced February 3, 1903 (the complaint in this action was filed August 27, 1904), and was then pending as to the said defendants Strohm. This was the only evidence offered, and at its conclusion a motion was made on behalf of said defendants Strohm, on such showing, to have this action as to them dismissed, which was granted. The showing was sufficient to sustain the plea and upon it the Strohms were entitled to have the subsequent action against them abated. Section 430, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc., and section 433, Code Civ. Proc. The Strohms by this order of the court having been dismissed from the case, the trial then proceeded between the plaintiff and the defendant Moore. To sustain his title against her, plaintiff offered in evidence, among other documents, a certificate of sale of said property made July 3, 1895, to the state of California for state and county taxes for the year 1894, a deed of said property, dated July 6, 1900, from the county tax collector to the state of California for said taxes, also a deed of said property from said tax collector to plaintiff dated September 21, 1901, made pursuant to an authorization of the State Controller to sell said land. The court refused, upon defendants' objection, to admit such instruments in evidence, and this ruling is assigned as error. In the briefs of respondent no grounds are suggested in support of the ruling and no specific objections are urged against the validity of these several tax-sale instruments. Counsel for respondent simply says: "The questions as to the validity of this state deed involved in this action are the same as those now before the Supreme Court in the case of Barrett (which should have been Baird) versus Munroe, Los Angeles No. 1623 * * *." The case of Baird v. Munroe, 89 Pac. 352, had not been decided by this court, when the briefs in this present appeal were filed, but it has been since, and the various grounds urged against the validity of a tax deed there involved, similar to the one in question here, were deemed untenable, and the validity of the deed sustained. It is unnecessary to refer here to the objections urged against the deed considered in that case, or to restate the grounds upon which the court sustained its validity, as they will fully appear from an examination of the decision rendered. Baird v. Munroe, 89 Pac. 352. See, also, Carter v. Osborn, 89 Pac. 608. It follows, therefore, that the trial court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the tax deed offered by plaintiff.

The only other questions presented upon this appeal involve the validity of a certain judgment and its effect, if valid. It was stipulated on the trial that a certain deed dated and recorded in October, 1887, conveyed title in fee to the lot of land in controversy here to one Walter Patterson. Such admission being made, the plaintiff offered in evidence a judgment roll in a suit brought by M. M. Davis, the predecessor of plaintiff, versus B. E. Linde, Samuel Strohm, Susan Strohm, and Walter Patterson (the same action heretofore referred to as pleaded in bar by the Strohms), which showed that an action to quiet title to this same property was commenced by Davis against the defendants by complaint filed February 3, 1903; that an affidavit and order for publication of summons on one of the defendants—Walter Patterson—were subsequently made and filed and service of the summons made upon said Patterson by publication; that the default of Patterson was subsequently entered and thereafter on April 4, 1904, a decree was entered quieting the title of said Davis to said lot against the said defendant Patterson. No objection was offered to the admission of the judgment roll, and it was received in evidence. The plaintiff supplemented this offer by proof of a conveyance of the lot in controversy from M. M. Davis to himself, and rested his case.

It is insisted by appellant that this showing—the admission of title in Patterson at a given date, the decree quieting title subsequently obtained against Patterson by plaintiff's predecessor Davis, and the conveyance of Davis to himself—sustained his claim of ownership to the property against the defendant Moore, and the finding of the court that he was not such owner was not justified by the evidence. This claim of appellant is in our judgment unquestionably true, unless, as insisted by respondent, the decree quieting title to the lot in question against Patterson in the case just referred to is void, or unless there is some merit in the position of respondent, that, even if valid, the decree was not available to plaintiff as a muniment of title against her.
